The shorter 100 backstroke again found Mann and Southern Cal's Bob Bennett battling each other for the title. For the second time in as many weeks Bennett hit the wall a split second before Mann—53.6 and 53.7. This is a bit slower than 53.1, the NCAA winning time also by Bennett.

Worthen qualified tenth in the 100 freestyle with a 49.2. For some strange reason all 100 times were extremely slow. Two factors slowed the sprinters especially while they presented no substantial handicap to the other events.

First the AAU ruling calls for a touch turn at each wall. This means the freestyler has to gauge his speed to be certain his hand will touch. In collegiate swimming an instantaneous surg surge with the feet coming out of the flip turn is all that is necessary. Then too, the bulkhead had continuous gutters allowing water to flow through the regulation 25-yard swimming area into a practice pool which unnerved several qualifiers who smacked into the divided full force.

Each 100 man was at least a full second off his best mark. Yale's Steve Clark recorded a 47.3 to win. He has consistently been down close to 46.0. In the face of these facts, Worthen's 49.2 represents quite a sizeable accomplishment indeed.

Two NC State freshmen, Ron Wirth and John White, joined Mann and Worthen for both relay teams. The medley posted a fine 3:40.0 mark and just missed making the top six for the finals. The freestyle relay finished eighth at 3:19.1.

Worthen swam 48.8 and 48.5 freestyle anchor legs on the relays. Certainly the most valuable ingredient of the trip for Worthen was the tremendous experience swimming against, meeting and talking with the likes of Roy Saari, Don Schollander, and Steve Clark—all three sure-fire Olympians and possible gold medal winners.

For about a month now Mann, Worthen, and Harrison Merrill will take a break from the water except for an occasional water polo bout. Then later in the spring these three will begin an intensive training campaign geared to the national summer circuit and a possible Olympic berth.

Did you know that baseball starts every year on ". . . April the somethingth"? That's what three fourth graders told their teacher, a sports enthusiast named Harold Dunn.

Dunn took this and other quotes on sports from the young trio and published them in The Legion magazine, and they covered all the activities.

On baseball: "A good thing to remember about striking out is don't . . . before batters actually bat, they stand around and swing two bats at once for the reason of search me . . . baseball is actually called 'National Pastime,' but I still hear a lot of people forget it and call it baseball. . . ."

Football drew several comments, like, "On muddy fields, pigskins are used in place of footballs . . . the rules for playing football are easier to say than what the mean."

Hockey, the kids felt, was a wild game: "One thing I don't know about hockey is quite a bit . . . the object of hockey is to get a puck in a goal. It is a crazily purposed game . . . hockey is my favorite sport, and I hope to see a game of it someday."

And then they talked about sports in general, and came up with, "In golf, the lower the score the better. It is a tricky backwards game . . . one of the mainest rules about basketball is you are usually always allowed to dribble without bouncing the ball . . . until we decide whether cricket is bowling or basketball, we must continue to call it cricket . . . go to see a cricket game. Are the players kicking the ball? Then it is not cricket . . . I know almost everthing about rugby except what it is . . . when you have a basketball the size of a baseball then you can play tennis . . . a tennis player would be called a 'tennister' if it did not look so funny . . . Squash is a game when it isn't a vegetable, and actually, Squash is not as dangerous as its name sounds . . ."

To close the discussion, one girl came up with a way to play ping pong, even if you forget what you're doing: "Table tennis is a spare name in case somebody forgets how to say ping pong." And that's enough from the peanut gallery.

Shortstop Jim Speight upped his batting average to .308 with his 3 for 4 performance against Cornell Saturday.

Two catchers, Bob Hundley and Merle Kruer, lead the Tar Heels in hitting among players with 10 or more at-bats. Hundley is hitting .400 and Kruer .333.

With his seven RBI's against Cornell, big Ken Willard took over the lead in this department with 11 in nine games. Dickie Prindle is second with 7.

Co-captain Bill Haywood has been the Heels' leading pitcher. Haywood has compiled a 2-0 won-lost record with an 0.77 ERA.

Dale White Paces Cindermen

By DENNIS SANDERS

Dale White clipped off a 9.6 in the 100-yard dash Saturday to win that event and highlight Carolina's performance in the South Carolina State-Record Relays in Columbia, S. C.

White's time tied the school record for the 100. Tommy Clark leaped 6-2 to place first in the high jump and finish as Carolina's only other winner.

Although no team scores were kept, Coach Joe Hilton was pleased with the Tar Heels' overall performance.

Distance star Art Maillet finished second in the two-mile run and Nick Street hurled the javelin 208' to rank No. 2. Tom Hendley took fifth in the discus and Richie Ambrose was fourth in the 330 hurdles.

The Heels finished fourth in the mile relay and second in both the two-mile relay and the distance medley.

In the freshman division, Carolina's thinclads placed second in all events, the mile relay, sprint medley and distance medley. Bo Wood's 146'6" discus toss took second honors for the frosh.

Fat Jack Made Favorite

AUGUSTA, Ga. (U P I) — Heavy rains inundated the Augusta National golf course Monday and installed power hitter Jack Nicklaus an even more formidable favorite for the Masters tournament opening Thursday.

"He's got to be three to four shots better than anybody in the field on this kind of a track," said temperamental Tommy Bolt as he looked out at the sodden, emerald-green course for which rain is promised through Friday's second round.

Nicklaus, and his chief rival, Arnold Palmer, both arrived Monday and each instantly picked the other as the man to beat.

Burned-Out Kappa Sigma To Rebuild

By TEX HARRINGTON

Kappa Sigma Fraternity may start rebuilding its fire ravaged house within two weeks.

Neil Thomas, president of the fraternity, said Monday the national organization of Kappa Sigma has pledged financial support to the project along with "many of our alumni."

Fraternity representatives have met with contractors and insurance adjusters during the past five days, but damage and repair costs have not yet been decided.

The house was extensively damaged last Thursday night by a fire which started in basement. The flames spread to the living room on the first floor and to parts of the second floor. The fire raged for almost three hours, destroying the basement and first floor completely. The rooms on second and third floors were severely damaged by smoke and heat. Everyone in the house escaped without injury.

The gutted house will be extensively remodeled.

"Although nothing is definite yet, we have drawn plans which call for expanding the basement, an entirely new first floor and complete replacement of the second and third floors," said house treasurer Dick Johnson.

Alumni advisor Frank Umstead said, "The general architecture of the building will remain the same."

"We definitely will not build somewhere else," he added.

Umstead praised Thomas and the fraternity's members for their "tireless efforts and anticipation of problems."

"We hope to be in the new house by September," said Thomas.

The fraternity has rented apartments for its displaced members.

Smoke damage to clothes and other personal property is much higher than first estimated.

"I don't have anything left," said Lee Lokey. "Everything I own was ruined by the smoke."

"I sent everything to the dry cleaners, but it still smells like smoke," said Terry Kerr.

"All of us have lost a lot," said Elbert Jackson, holding out a blackened radio.

Most of the members do not have personal insurance to cover their loss.

Shubert Fellowship Is Worth $2500

A $2500 fellowship in playwriting will be awarded next year to a graduate student in the Department of Dramatic Art, it was announced this week.

The new grant, established recently by the Sam S. Shubert Foundation, Inc., will be known as the Shubert Fellowship in Playwriting, and will be awarded for the autumn and spring semesters of the 1964-65 academic year.

Dr. Harry E. Davis, chairman of the Department of Dramatic Art and director of the Carolina Playmakers, stated that inquiries concerning applications are now being accepted and that they should be accompanied by examples of the playwrights' previous work.

Davis further pointed out that although the holder of the fellowship will give primary attention to the original writing of full-length plays, he will be expected to enroll in the Master of Arts program with the Department of Dramatic Art.

JOSH WHITE

Josh White Here Friday

By JOE EXUM

Phi Mu Alpha will present Josh White in concert at Memorial Hall Friday. Twice before White has delighted standing-room-only audiences at Carolina with his collection of spirituals, blues and folk songs.

Thirty years of experience have won the guitarist universal acclamation. He is respected throughout the western world as a perceptive artist and versatile craftsman who can electrify an audience while retaining the power and simplicity of traditional singing.

Born in the South, White's road to the spotlight of the world's finest concert stages has been long and hard. From his Southern environment he is able to infuse the ancient art of ballad singing with genuine pathos and fresh vitality. However, no one taught him how to sing and no one taught him how to play the guitar.

Accompanied by his guitar, White's voice has been described as having a caressing liquid quality, that enables him to create a spectrum of moods. The fact that he has reached a degree of perfection has not made him forget that he is a man of the people, and his songs are still the people's songs.

Tickets went on sale Monday. Balcony seats are $1.75, orchestra seats $2.00. They will be on sale through Friday in Graham Memorial Lounge.

Brinkley Denies News Management

By JEFFREY DICK

The nightly new commentator for NBC told a Carolina Symposium audience that "news is freer now in Washington than at any other time since I have been in the business, and that goes back to Roosevelt.

"The news, readily available in more easily than news from any Washington today, comes to us other capital city in the world, and we get more of it.

"In my opinion, the whole phrase 'news management' and all that goes with it is a hoax," Brinkley said.

Brinkley traced the origin of the phrase "news management" back to the function it served in fulfilling a need and a purpose.

"The need," he said, "is to deny a fact which exists or one which a party doesn't wish to hear. For example, if a particular group doesn't want to hear a fact stated, or given credence, they can discount that fact by saying the person who released the fact is guilty of news management, and only released the fact to manage the news.

"The only time I can recall the news being managed," Brinkley said, "was when Preisdent Kennedy was shot. President Johnson has said that at the time he and those around him did not know if the assassination was part of a plot not only against Kennedy, but against all those around him, including the Vice President and the Cabinet.

"For this reason," he continued, "they suppressed the news of Kennedy's death for 20 minutes, while they got Johnson into a plane, where nobody could get to him.

"This, he said, "was completely justified at the time."

Brinkley attacked the Speaker Ban Law in response to a question from the audience, saying, "I think it is preposterous. You have trustees to run the University. Under their predecessors, the University has become the finest State University there is.

"Aside from that," Brinkley said, "the law is nonsense."

'Adds To Cold War'

Graham, Knight Blast Gag Law To Symposium Crowd

By DENNIS SANDERS

A pair of educators, one with years of experience and the other on the threshold of what has been termed a "brilliant future", lashed out at the Speaker Ban Law Tuesday as adding to the impact of the Cold War.

Former Consolidated University President Frank Graham and Dr. Douglas Knight, youthful President of Duke University, spoke to a Symposium audience in Memorial Hall and labeled the law a "padlock on the quest for ideals".

Graham, the United Nations representative for India and Pakistan, said, "The Gag Law is the impact we've felt here in North Carolina. A patriotic North Carolina, fearing that its youth might become infected with alien ideas, rushed through that law."

He also noted that "when I was president here, there was a Communist cell at the university. But," he added, "It was above-board and students could see it in open forums." He emphasized that "open forums are an important part of the educational process."

"A university must be free to hear any ideas," Graham stated. "This Gag Law is a violation of the tradition of Duke, UNC, the state itself and the Bill of Rights."

The former U.N. mediator also made it known that he felt it was ironic that North Carolina was the first state to ratify the Bill of Rights.

"The Gag Law," Graham concluded, "will certainly come to its own end."

Dr. Knight emphasized that the rise of atomic and nuclear power and the developments in medicine, science and technology have placed education and the university in the spotlight of the Cold War.

"The major university today," Knight said, "is stronger than ever before, and it is more central to its society.

"Equally, the university is

Cathey Sets Up Procedure For Mentally Ill Students

By KERRY SIPE

A uniform procedure for the handling of students suffering from acute emotional disturbances was established recently in a memorandum from Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey.

"Up to this time, the University has initiated no procedure for dealing with those people obviously in need of medical help," Cathey said. "While the management of each case must be individualized, the following suggestions are offered as a possible guide to instructors in such circumstances:

"When it becomes apparent that a person is behaving in such a way as to suggest that he is psychotic or that he represents a threat to himself or others, the Dean of Men or the Dean of Women will be notified immediately. That officer, accompanied by another such administrative officer or member of the Campus Police, will go and tactfully, but firmly, request that the person accompany them to the Infirmary for medical evaluation.

"It is advisable that we not request a fellow student to prevail upon a disturbed student to go to the Infirmary," he said.

"If the disturbed person steadfastly refuses to go to the Infirmary, and the situation seems to demand medical care, someone should remain with the person while the Infirmary is contacted.

"A University physician or psychiatrist will come and evaluate the situation. If necessary, this physician can arrange an emergency commitment to a hospital.

Scabbard And Blade Initiates Fourteen

Scabbard and Blade, a national honorary military society of outstanding ROTC cadets, has recently nominated 14 new pledges.

The pledges are K. B. Massie, H. E. "Cass" Peele, M. S. Doctor, G. H. Hawkins, W. T. Eliot, F. A. Hall, J. P. Riek, S. L. Blate, R. P. Lukens, L. F. Curtis, W. A. Davidson, C. W. Gooding, R. P. Rambo and R. E. Simmons.

They were selected on the basis of outstanding leadership ability and proficiency in military discipline and organization.

The pledge class will be initiated into the society after a training period on the history and ideals of Scabbard and Blade.

Aycock Names Blalock To Professorship

Dr. Hubert Morse Blalock has been appointed a professor in the Department of Sociology - Anthropology beginning Sept. 1.

Chancellor William B. Aycock also announced the promotion of Dr. Herbert Aron David to Professor in the School of Public Health. David, a native of Germany, has been at the University for a year.

Blalock received his PhD here in 1954, was an instructor and assistant professor from 1954 to 1961 at the University of Michigan and was an associate professor at Yale from 1961 to 1964. He has been a visiting professor here since February.

He has written two books and 22 articles in professional journals.

Chessmen Take One, Help In Another

By BILL STROUPE

UNC's chess team won a match in Chapel Hill and helped win one in Raleigh last Sunday.

At Raleigh the top three UNC players—Vernon Robinson, Ron Simpson and Fronoff — teamed up with Duke and State players to put down a team from Virginia, 13½-11½.

For the North Carolina team, it was a case of getting there first with the most, as Virginia forfeited six games. Robinson chipped in a victory, but Simpson and Fornoff lost.

Meanwhile, the "B" team held down the fort at Chapel Hill by beating Durham High School, 3-1. Hardy Batchelor, John Brooks and Dalton Smith won for UNC before Keywood Cheves lost to Durham High's top player.

This year's record for the chess team now includes Contributing roles in this state's wins over teams from South Carolina and Virginia, a victory over Durham High and a tie with Duke.

Girls Try Again To Have A Ball

The Powder Puff Football game, rained out last month, will be played Friday at 3 p.m. in Kenan Stadium, weather permitting.

Blocking is allowed but the girls may not leave their feet. Each player carries a handkerchief. A player may be tackled by pulling the handkerchief from her pocket.

Girl grabs by fans on the sidelines are illegal. Spectators are warned to stay away from the girls' hankies.

Former Bruiser Coach Billy Cunningham was dismissed because of dissension on the squad. It is rumored that Tailback Kay Hoyle and Scatback Carole Miller were battling over his vote for Senior Class secretary. Galantai has solved the problem by promising to vote for Susan Zehmer, Stray Greek washerwoman.

Paul Chused has charged Merrill with a political power grab by having the game so close to elections and has decided to be referee. Merrill insists that's not what he's trying to grab at all.

"I'm just looking for someone to take back to the swimming pool to run relays with me," Merrill said.

"The Bruisers will beat Merrill's Rompers so bad, they'll all be back in the pool for good," Chused said. He has warned the girls against unnecessary roughness.

The UNC Pep Band will play Dixie before kickoff time. Phatsy Lefler will model tennis skirts at half-time.

Karen Nelson, chairman of the WAA, is at the pivot spot in the Romper line and is a tough competitor. She will face off against Sis Craver who learned her tricks from All-ACC cousin Joe.

The formation of a UNC Students for Goldwater Committee has been announced by Tom Kemp and Warren Williams, co-chairmen of the group.

The primary purpose of the organization will be to consolidate Senator Goldwater's support on the Carolina campus and to coordinate the Goldwater campaign at the Mock Convention on April 16-18. In addition, the committee plans to form a group of "Goldwater Girls" to assist it in its activities.

Anyone interested in joining the committee or in receiving further information should contact either one of the co-chairmen or call Warren Williams at 942-6271.

Bulldozer Kills Rights Demonstrator In Cleveland

CLEVELAND, Ohio (UPI)—A young white minister was killed by a bulldozer Tuesday as civil rights demonstrators tried to stop construction of a school building.

The Rev. Bruce William Klunder, 27, a civil rights leader and adviser to college students, was crushed trying to stop a bulldozer during a wild demonstration in a tension-packed day.

Police said four demonstrators tried to immobilize the bulldozer. Three threw themselves on the ground in front of it to stop the huge machine. The driver, to avoid hitting them, backed up and ran over the minister, who had thrown himself on the ground behind the bulldozer to keep it from changing course.

Klunder's death touched off the second wild demonstration at the scene during the afternoon. Many of the 1,000 people on hand threw stones, bottles and other objects at police. Mounted police marched in a cavalry style phalanx to disperse the rioters.

A few minutes before, police had pulled four screaming demonstrators from under construction equipment and put them into a police van under arrest.

The demonstration was the second big one here in recent weeks in the school controversy and was on the site where 20 persons were arrested Monday.

The state's first civil rights death came as the local integration controversy spilled onto the floor of the U.S. Senate where Sen. Jack Miller (R.-Iowa) demanded the Justice Department investigate reports Negro civil rights leaders in Cleveland were forming a rifle club.

Downtown city officials had mapped plans for handling violence and had decided to build a barbed wire fence around the school. The demonstrators claimed building it in a predominantly Negro area would guarantee segregation would continue.

The morning was peaceful, with the action in conferences and in the courts. Municipal Judge James T. Cassidy, arraigning the 20 arrested Monday, sparked a dispute when he said angrily, "It's about time some intelligent judge has the guts to take a stand in this matter."

BULLETIN

The demonstrator killed yesterday in Cleveland by a bulldozer was the brother of Mrs. Norman Weatherly, 206 Hunter Place. Mrs. Weatherly could not be reached for comment.

Gag A Disgrace—Brinkley

David Brinkley walked into his press conference at the Carolina Inn yesterday and turned to face the cameras and lights as one well used to their glare.

His first crack: "I don't know why I'm having a press conference, I'm not running for anything."

Brinkley spoke out on topics ranging from a public accommodations law to the Speaker Ban law, never deviating from the abrupt delivery characteristic of his nightly newscasts.

When asked if he had seen the State's Speaker Ban law, he answered: "I have seen it. It's a disgrace. It is embarrassing to the University. I don't know why it was passed. The trustees are here to run the University and should be allowed to do so. The whole thing is unworthy of the State and the University."

Several questions were directed toward Brinkley in reference to the Civil Rights Bill now before Congress. Brinkley reflected that if the filibuster in the Senate were to continue on into the summer, there will probably be

Daughters, Monkeys, Money & Governors

If liberals in North Carolina are having trouble understanding the inability of any gubernatorial candidate to declare himself for the outright repeal of the Communist speaker-ban law, then they need only consider the case of Gov. Cameron Morrison.

Although nicknamed 'The Good Roads Governor," he was chief executive of the state from 1921 to 1925, a period which also saw North Carolina heavily commit itself toward furthering higher education. It was during this period that the University moved toward the forefront of Southern universities.

Morrison, for whom the campus's new 10-story dormitory — the largest such structure in the state — will be named, played no small role in the increased appropriations which the school received.

Yet Morrison is also remembered in educational circles for a remark he made over a proposed school textbook at the height of the anti-evolution teaching battle:

"I don't want my daughter or anybody's daughter to have to study a book that prints pictures of a monkey and a man on the same page."

Which just goes to prove, among other things, that a good head isn't the necessary companion to a good heart, but it's best to have both.

Riesman As Social Prophet

The Naitonal Observer

A distinguished analyst of American culture, David Riesman has been elevated into a sort of culture-hero whose ideas have become cocktail party chitchat. Probably the country's best-known sociologist, he is himself a sociological phenomenon; his major work, "The Lonely Crowd," was one of the most influential books of the postwar period.

In that work Mr. Riesman argued that American society had undergone a decisive shift from a production-oriented economy to a consumption-oriented one. And the terms inner-directed and other-directed, which he contributed to our vocabulary of self-recognition, almost became household words. (Inner-directed applies to people whose behavior is motivated by deeply rooted convictions; other-directed refers to the new breed of American who gets most of his cues and clues from the social environment around him.)

Interestingly enough, Mr. Riesman is not a trained sociologist. Schooled in law, he has an amateur's passion for sociological exploration—really a kind of rarefied gossip—and he has shown a marked affinity for the buzz and hum of everyday life. He is far above the unimaginative and dogged fact-grubbing of lesser sociologists who go to great pains to prove what everyone already knows. Neither is he another Vance Packard, who merely popularizes what social scientists have already described in their journals. Mr. Riesman's function has been to synthesize what the empirical sociologists have researched, but he always adds a creative increment of his own interpretations. He has given us a way of understanding our time as Thorstein Veblen and Max Weber did for theirs around the turn of the century. He is clearly a major figure.

Mr. Riesman's "Abundance for What?" (Doubleday; 610 pages; $6.50) is a collection of essays written during the past nine years. As such it exhibits the broad range of his interests, his lively social concerns, the shrewdness and relevance of his insights. But it also demonstrates the distance he has traveled since "The Lonely Crowd" was published in 1950. At that time, while most intellectuals were moaning about conformity, Mr. Riesman was expressing his satisfaction with American society. In fact, he was often cited as evidence of that reconciliation between the intellectual and society that allegedly was taking place. In this volume, however, Mr. Riesman does not often purr with pleasure at what he sees. Though he is still the fascinated observer of American life, he has become something of a social prophet and moralist, not unlike the Veblen who so impressed him.

In the title essay, for example, Mr. Riesman confronts what he calls the real challenge of the age of affluence. Though generally he is intrigued by new consumption patterns, in this essay he proposes that we may have come to the end of the line in our new role as consumers. "The basic stockpile," he writes, "of new and exhilarating wants seems to be badly depleted." Moreover, he says, the wants that we have are often fulfilled with reckless disregard of the amenities of civilized living—the defacing of our cities by our cars being a case in point.

But the real horror, he argues, is that what we face is "more than total destruction from nuclear war; it is total meaninglessness." And this disease of meaninglessness, he goes on, may itself lead to nuclear destruction, since in such a moral and intellectual climate we can hardly find other alternatives when faced with international conflict.

In his new role as social activist, Mr. Riesman makes some specific proposals, some of them original.

One, advanced some years ago, is for a variation of the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) camps in which young people will do socially useful work. (This is similar to recommendations made by President Kennedy and Johnson.) Another is for a new version of the GI Bill of Rights, to be made available to all adults so that they can make a fresh start in life. And in his new guise, too, Mr. Riesman provides one of those stubborn voices asserting there must be some viable alternative to the nuclear arms race.

But there is also much of the "old" Riesman in this volume—the wise, amused observer of American life in its jolly consumer phase. And his great talent is to bring together into a coherent pattern many different aspects of American life—suburbia and academia, businessman and unskilled worker.

More Nuts For Congress

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD
(Of House Proceedings)

Mr. MATTHEWS. There are 1,560,000 acres of peanuts that are planted under the acreage allotment provisions, but these 3,000 acres are planted by boys in school and by small farmers and are sold as a vegetable at football games and baseball games and so on.

They are sold green on the market, in the chainstores, and there are two or three small industrial plants that have been developed as a result of canning these peanuts to sell in the grocery stores.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MATTHEWS. I am delighted to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GROSS).

Mr. GROSS. The last time our distinguished friend had this bill on the floor of the House he had some free samples. Did the gentleman bring any free samples today?

Mr. MATTHEWS. Sir, if one of the pages will get my black briefcase, I have them here. The reason I did not offer these samples is because some of my friends said after tasting them that they did not like them.

I am going to ask one of the pages if they will, please, to distribute these peanuts. I certainly hope, Mr. Chairman, we can pass this legislation because I am about out of free sample peanuts.

I have here, Mr. Chairman, a can. They are already open this time. The last time you had to get a can opener.

Mr. GROSS. If my friend will yield further—

Mr. MATTHEWS. Yes, sir, but just 1 minute, if you will let me get these ready for distribution in the cloakroom.

Mr. GROSS. I would suggest that they be eaten over there.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Is it proper, sir, to suggest that the Members go in the cloakroom and sample them?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida will proceed.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. Chairman, may I say to my colleagues if you will go in the cloakroom we will be delighted to furnish you these samples.

Mr. HAGEN of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MATTHEWS. I yield to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. HAGEN).

Mr. HAGEN of California. I will say to the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. MATTHEWS) that I want to stipulate that these peanuts are not Yankee approved. In fact, the pigeons on Capitol Hill would not eat them. I threw some of them out to the pigeons and they would not eat them.

Mr. MATTHEWS. The only consolation I can get from the gentleman is to say that since there will be no competition with the wonderful vegetables which come from the State of California, I know the gentleman will support my bill.

Mr. Chairman, the taste of a boiled peanut is unique. If the peanut were air conditioned, it would taste like an artichoke. It tastes like a dehumidified artichoke.

Mr. Chairman, during the depression days many of us remember having eaten swamp cabbage. I do not know whether the Members of the Committee are familiar with these huge palm trees, but when you cut them down you take out the heart of the palm tree, that is the cabbage. If a boiled peanut were dehumidified, you would have that swamp cabbage taste, a crunchy, delightful taste.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, in my district you can get this delightful swamp cabbage. And, if you go there you can get them at the Sea Island Hotel in Cedar Key, Fla. If you spend some money there, tell them that Congressman BILLY MATTHEWS sent you.

'These Were Two Boys . . .'

By CLYDE WILSON

Larry grew up in a medium-sized city in North Carolina. It was not Paris or New York City or even Fort Lauderdale. But among the places a boy may grow up it was not a bad place.

Larry hated it. He hated the church where he had to go every Sunday. He hated the school which was old and a little ugly. He hated the blank walls of the mill. He hated the tired middle-aged men who sat around his father's store drinking Coca-Cola. He did not know he hated.

Larry went away to the state university. He began to realize that he hated. He discovered a book by a man named Marx. Then he realized why he hated the preacher and the teachers and the mill-owner and the tired middle-aged men who sat around his father's store drinking Coca-Cola. He understood everything. They understood nothing.

Larry found new friends who hated and did not know that they hated. He showed them why. Then he discovered others, men in New York and Chicago, who hated just as he hated. It was exciting. He began to hear talk of a new project, the biggest defiance of all. He would go to Cuba. He would defy them all, the preacher, the teachers, the mill-owner, and the others.

Larry went to Cuba. He played pingpong with the Leader, who was the greatest hater of all. Everywhere they went people noticed.

Once they showed films of U. S. helicopters being shot down in Vietnam. Larry cheered. "I don't think the United States ought to make war for governments which don't have the support of their people," he said later.

Robert grew up in a small town in North Carolina. In high school he was an average student. Except in baseball season he pumped gas and cleaned windshields after school. On Saturday night he would drive to the next town for a beer or take a girl to the drive-in. During vacations he pulled tobacco or cut timber.

Some of his friends were going to college. Robert did not like the thought of four more years in a classroom. The day after graduation, a friend came over: "Let's join the Army," he said.

Basic training was rough. Afterward he went into paratroop training. Robert found he liked the excitement of the jump. An officer called him a good recruit and said why didn't he go to Ranger School.

South Vietnam was not too bad. Nights in Saigon. The mutual loyalty with your buddies. The funny little brown men you taught to set up a machine gun, to fix a radio, and to kill a man without making a sound. They weren't bad guys when you got to know them.

Of course there were some rough missions. Like this morning. Flying in and out of stinking jungles and steaming rice fields.

Somehow the mist hanging over the fields just before the daybreak made him think of home when you were out hunting with your father early in the morning with your first shotgun. Of course that clump of trees up there might be sheltering a Viet Cong ambush instead of a rabbit.

Suddenly the world was fire and sound. Robert could not tell if the noise was inside his head or outside. He thought of how a girl's neck looked on a North Carolina porch in the dark and then of a cool breeze blowing across a baseball field.

The trees flew up to meet him.

Candidates Are Opposing Sanford Administration

By ARTHUR JOHNSEY

Two of the major Democratic candidates for governor are engaged in trying to prove they're running more against the Sanford administration than against L. Richardson Preyer.

Trying to discredit the administration, they apparently believe, will tend to discredit Preyer, whom they're trying to depict as a "cardboard candidate" —a front man for the governor.

This preference for running against the governor was emphasized a week ago when Dr. I. Beverly Lake launched an attack on Sanford's attitude toward the Communist speaker ban law.

This week the Raleigh lawyer appeared to criticize by inference the administration's method of going after new industry by making a sales pitch to the large corporate enterprises.

Dr. Lake told how he'd do it.

"I shall not stand in awe before the executives of any big business corporation of this state or any other state, for I shall remember that I represent a bigger group than theirs — the people of North Carolina."

Poor Timing

The insinuation that this administration's industry-hunting representatives have somehow bowed in supplication before big corporate executives came with poor timing.

As it happened, Governor Sanford, who makes it a rule not to be drawn into the crossfire of campaigning, didn't have to answer.

That same day, in New York Claude O. Stephens, president of Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., announced that his company will move ahead with phosphate mining at a site along the Pamlico River near Aurora.

Few sections of North Carolina have more severe need for industry and industrial jobs.

Stephens said the production of phosphate rock was expected to employ 300 persons by 1966 and the company would make an initial investment of around $45 million in mining, warehousing, and transportation equipment.

It was a long-awaited major industrial development in which at least three major producers of chemicals and fertilizers were interested.

Texas Gulf decided to go ahead after running a pilot project to test whether the chemicals in its phosphate deposits could be separated from the ore at a cost low enough to be profitable.

Begun Under Hodges

Competing mining interests began looking at the phosphate lands during the administration of Luther Hodges as governor. The State Department of Conservation and Development under Hargrove Bowles of Greensboro co-operated with various mining interests, after Bowles was made director of the C&D Department by Sanford.

State Geologist J. L. Stuckey has said phosphates can become the state's largest mining industry.

The initial employment of 300 in the mining operation will make no major dent in the region's unemployment problem. But C&D board officials expect allied industries to be attracted to the region.

Jobs — Major Issue

All of this is of added significance now that it appears jobs and their availability may become a major issue in the primary and general elections.

Under-employment, rather than joblessness, is the problem in many of the sparsely settled counties that lack industry.

Ironically, they blame Sanford, although the truth is the $1 an hour minimum in the 1963 legislature had the backing of the administration. It went down in defeat because of the influence of legislators from these same counties where there's no industry and where the workers don't know how their senator voted on the measure.

Republican critics of Democratic policy on jobs are ready to make under-employment a major talking point in the general election campaign.

When GOP Candidate Charles W. Strong told his campaign workers "Jobs will be the greatest issue," he may have been passing along some very accurate information gleaned from keeping an ear tuned to people who don't always make themselves heard.

"The greatest issue facing the next governor," Strong said, "wil not be road bonds or speaker bans, but rather it will be jobs."

One good thing can be said for George Wallace's entrance into the Wisconsin primary — it gets him out of the South for a few days.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Cone Memorial And Nathaniel

Editors, The Tar Heel:

It is not, and never has been, the policy of this hospital to refuse any patient in need of immediate emergency treatment. This evaluation is left to the judgment of competent registered nurses who are experienced in the handling of emergency cases.

If the nurses had felt that Mr. Nathaniel was in serious condition (He had a nose injury from a cricket match) when he came to the hospital last Sunday, they would have summoned a doctor to examine him rather than referring him to another hospital.

This has been the case on many occasions in the past when patients of various races and nationalities have been treated at our hospital. If the nurses erred in their judgment (and none of us is infallible) they were doing their best under the circumstances to carry out instructions from the hospital's board of trustees for the handling of such cases in a manner which the trustees conscientiously have felt to be in the best interest of the community as a whole.

We sincerely regret that the incident occurred, and the nurses have been quite upset about it. We particularly regret that it was not made known to the nurses at the time that the patient was an exchange student from India. This could cause some people to overlook or forget much of the good that this hospital has done in a voluntary way for Negro patients, physicians and employees ever since it was opened in 1953, and which it is continuing to do under a voluntary basis.

Concerning the Federal Court order for desegregation, all we know about this is what we have learned through the press. No court order has been issued to us as yet. When it is received, we will, of course, comply with the order.

Judge Stanley has scheduled a hearing with the attorney to discuss the order on April 16, and we suppose the order will be forthcoming shortly thereafter.

Demonstrators And Mr. Wilson

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Mr. Clyde Wilson's article in the April 4 edition of The Daily Tar Heel is the best condensation of the basic moral and legal arguments used by segregationists that I have read in many years. Being such, it is the best collection of incorrect, not to mention bigoted, arguments, also. Your article, Mr. Wilson, began by saying that "The moral pretentions of the professors and students who are sprawling in the streets of Chapel Hill and forcing their way onto business premises against the will of the owners need to be looked at more closely."

You've got quite a nerve, buddy! You've stated that none of these people believe in what they are doing! I'm sure some of the doctors at Memorial Hospital would be greatly interested in your wonderous psychic powers.

I would hardly call a peaceful sit-down demonstration "sprawling in the streets." Do you use this derogatory term because your conscience bothers you that these people are forced to go to such lengths to protest? I know I'd be embarrassed and annoyed to have the dirty laundry of my bias washed in public.

You said they 'forced' their way onto a man's property, "invaded his place of business," and interfered with his livelihood. In the demonstrations I've seen, the 'invaders' have merely walked in and asked to be served. I can see that it might not be in one's best interest to serve Negroes. One might lose some white patrons who are somehow offended and degraded to eat or sleep in the same building with members of an inferior race. (I do hope you'll excuse me for mentioning whites and Negroes in the same sentence?)

This is a "useful public service?" "Useful" and "public" to whites you should have added!

You further stated that these people "are not protesting a segregation law," but only "the law of trespass, a time-honored rule which defends the freedom of every citizen alike." (I am, of course, tremendously inspired by this wonderful sounding patriotic phrase.) Granted, though, the law of segregation is not a written law. But tell that to Dennis Nathaniel when he breaks his nose again and is refused medical aid because his skin is several shades darker than most of ours.

This unwritten code is difficult to crack because its adherents are able to hide behind twisted interpretations of legitimate laws. That's precisely why this law must be violated—to be tested in the courts and, I fervently hope, amended to eliminate this misuse. I'm sure that in drafting this law, our forefathers never dreamed that it would be so grossly twisted. Excluding an individual because he is objectionable in some way is the purpose of the trespass law, granted. But how can a man justify excluding an entire race? Is every Negro so objectionable simply because his skin isa different color? Hardly! Are well-educated and neat Negro doctors or lawyers still so objectionable? No!! There is no logical defense which can rationalize such behavior. But of course there's always the good old trespass law to fall back on!

Last semester I took a logic course. One of the few rules for detecting fallacious arguments that's stuck is called Argumentum ad Hominem—arguing against the character of a man in order to discredit his views. You're arguing ad hominem when you try to discredit the integrationists by saying many of them "have never done a useful thing for themselves or society." Even conceding such a preposterous statement, I'd say attempting to gain fair treatment for a mistreated minority is useful to both themselves and to society. (Oh, I'm sorry. Somehow I must have failed to realize that Negroes are not a subjugated race. Please excuse my ignorance.)

It's also ad hominem to argue that these integration groups are "gangs led by people who are not citizens of the community and some of whom are little better than vagrants and professional agitators." You don't get out of it that easily! It's not where people are from that matters, it's what the say that counts! Even though I don't agree at times with some of their actions, I still agree with their basic beliefs in the dignity and equality of all men.

If in the future you would persist, Mr. Wilson, in arguing for segregation, try and remember to argue over ideas—not personalities. I am, of course, basing my argument on the idea that there is at least one Negro who is not a gangleader or vagrant.

P. S. I'm very pleased that The Daily Tar Heel has practiced what it preaches and given people with views different from those of the paper a chance to express themselves. Such a practice can only lead to a much more interesting and informative paper.

WRAL And Its Editorializing

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Your relish over WRAL-TV's plight is only too evident. I also oppose many of the station's views, but the vindictive approach only obscures the real issues.

In your haste to get at WRAL, you use the concept of "equal time" as if it were a set standard. The opposite is true. You mention that limits on editorializing are "vague." Then you blame WRAL form ot abiding by these "ill-defined" limits!

If "the nation needs such increased comment," the standards for this comment are of primary importance. What are the grounds for unfairness and one-sidedness? On the other side, when does the FCC abridge freedom of speech by limiting comment? (The government has changed its position several times.) In short, what are the different points of view on this? Dialogue must precede definition. And you have an obligation to engage in this dialogue.

The problem is not WRAL alone. Indeed, stations that have simply PRESENTED (not endorsed) different controversial viewpoints have found themselves under the FCC gun. At least WRAL-TV is admirable for standing for something more than the sale of soapsuds and cigarettes.

A newspaper, such as the DTH, has a duty to rise above partisan squabbling when the occasion demands it. While the editors are chuckling over a conservative defeat, civil liberties may be receiving another setback.

Fulbright: The Cold War In American Life

Address by Sen. J. W. Fulbright (D-Ark.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, to the opening session of the Carolina Symposium, April 5, 1964.

The Constitution of the United States, in the words of its preamble, was established, among other reasons in order to "provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty . . ." During the past 20 years the emphasis of our public policy has been heavily weighed on measures for the common defense to the considerable neglect of programs for promoting the liberty and welfare of our people. The reason for this, of course, has been the exacting demands of two world wars and an intractable cold war, which have wrought vast changes in the character of American life.

Of all the changes in American life wrought by the cold war, the most important by far, in my opinion, has been the massive diversion of energy and resources from the creative pursuits of civilized society to the conduct of a costly and interminable struggle for world power or to put it more precisely to negate the efforts of others to acquire world dominion. We have been compelled, or have felt ourselves compelled, to reverse the traditional order of our national priorities, relegating individual and community life to places on the scale below the enormously expensive military and space activities that constitute our program of national security.

This of course is not the only change in American life brought about by the cold war. There have been many others, some most welcome and constructive. Directly or indirectly, the world struggle with communism has stimulated economic and industrial expansion, accelerated the pace of intellectual inquiry and scientific discovery, broken the shell of American isolation and greatly increased public knowledge and awareness of the world outside the United States. At the same time, the continuing world conflict has cast a shadow on the tone of American life by introducing a strand of apprehension and tension into a national style which has traditionally been one of buoyant optimism. The continuing and inconclusive struggle, new in American experience, has in Walt Rostow's words, "imposed a sense of limitation on the nation's old image of itself, a limitation which has been accepted with greater or less maturity and which has touched the nation's domestic life at many points with elements of escapism, with a tendency to search for scapegoats, with simple worry, and with much thoughtful, responsive effort as well."

Overriding all these changes, however, good and bad, has been the massive diversion of wealth and talent from individual and community life to the increasingly complex and costly effort to maintain a minimum level of national security in a world in which no nation can be immune from the threat of sudden catastrophe. We have had to turn away from our hopes in order to concentrate in our fears and the result has been accumulating neglect of those things which bring happiness and beauty and fulfillment into our lives. The "public happiness," in August Heckscher's term, has become a luxury to be postponed to some distant day when the dangers that now beset us will have disappeared.

This, I think, is the real meaning of the cold war in American life. It has consumed money and time and talent that could otherwise be used to build schools and homes and hospitals, to remove the blight of ugliness that is spreading over the cities and highways of America, and to overcome the poverty and hopelessness that afflict the lives of one-fifth of the people in an otherwise affluent society. It has put a high premium on avoiding innovation at home because new programs involve controversy as well as expense and it is felt that we cannot afford domestic divisions at a time when external challenges require us to maintain the highest possible degree of national unity. Far more pervasively than the United Nations or the "Atlantic community" could ever do, the cold war has encroached upon our sovereignty; it has given the Russians the major voice in determining what proportion of our federal budget must be allocated to the military and what proportion, therefore, cannot be made available for domestic, social, and economic projects. This is the price that we have been paying for the cold war and it has been a high price indeed.

At least as striking as the inversion of priorities which the cold war has enforced upon American life is the readiness with which the American people have consented to defer programs for their welfare and happiness in favor of costly military and extravagant space programs. Indeed, if the Congress accurately reflects the temper of the country, then the American people are not only willing, they are eager, to sacrifice education and urban renewal, and public health programs —to say nothing of foreign aid—to the requirements of the armed forces and the space agency. There is indeed a most striking paradox in the fact that military budgets of over $50 billion are adopted by the Congress after only perfunctory debate, while domestic education and welfare programs involving sums which are mere fractions of the military budget are painstakingly examined and then either considerably reduced or rejected outright. I sometimes suspect, that in its zeal for armaments at the expense of education and welfare, the Congress tends to overrepresent those of our citizens who are extraordinarily vigorous about making the agitation known.

It may be that the people and their representatives are making a carefully reasoned sacrifice of welfare and security. It may be, but I doubt it.. The sacrifice is made so eagerly as to cause one to suspect that it is fairly painless, that indeed the American people prefer military rockets to public schools and flights to the moon to urban renewal. In a perverse way, we have grown rather attached to the cold war. It occupies us with a stirring and seemingly clear and simple challenge from outside and diverts us from problems here at home which many Americans would rather not try to solve, some because they find domestic problems tedious and pedestrian, others because they genuinely believe these problems to be personal rather than public, others because they are unwilling to be drawn into an abrasive national debate as to whether poverty, unemployment, and inadequate education are in fact national rather than local or individual concerns.

The cold war, it seems clear, is an excuse as well as a genuine cause for the diversion of our energies from domestic well-being to external security. We have been preoccupied with foreign affairs for twenty-five years, and while striking progress has been made in certain areas of our national life, the agenda of neglect has grown steadily longer. We can no longer afford to defer problems of slums and crime and poverty and inadequate education until some more tranquil time in the future. These problems have become urgent if not intolerable in an affluent society. It is entirely reasonable to defer domestic programs in time of an all-out national effort such as World War II, but in the present cold war it is not reasonable to defer our domestic needs until more tranquil times, for the simple reason that there may be no more tranquil times in this generation or in this country.

In the long run, the solution of our solution of our domestic problems has as vital a bearing on the success of our foreign policies as on the public happiness at home. We must therefore reassess the priorities of our public policy, with a view to redressing the disproporation between our military and space efforts on the one hand, and our education and human welfare programs on the other. We must distinguish between necessity and preference in our preoccupation with national security, judging our military needs by a standard which takes due account of the fact that armaments are only one aspect of national security, that military power, as Kenneth Thompson has written, "is like the fist whose force depends on the health and vitality of the body politic and the whole society."

The single-minded dedication with which we Americans have committeed ourselves to the struggle with communism is a manifestation of a national tendency to interpret problems in moral and absolutist terms. We are, as Louis Hartz has pointed out, a nation which was "born free." Having experienced almost none of the anguished conflict between radicalism and reaction that has characterized European politics, we have been virtually unanimous in our adherence to the basic values with the institutional forms which they take in American society and have regarded both as having moral validity not only for ourselves but for the entire world. We have therefore been greatly shocked since our emergence as a world power to find ourselves confronted with revolutionary ideologies which reject the faith in individual liberty and limited government that has served our own society so well.

Because of these predilections; the cold war has seemed to represent a profound challenge to our moral principles as well as to our security and other national interests. We have responded by treating communist ideology itself, as distinguished from the physical power and expanionist policies of communist states as a grave threat to the free world. The cold war, as a result, has been a more dangerous, costly, and irreconcilable conflict than it would be if we, and the communist states, confined it to those issues that involve the security and vital interests of the rival power blocks.

The ideological element in the cold war, reinforced by the moralist tendencies of the American people, has also had the effect of making the world conflict a much more disruptive element in American life than it would be if it were regarded primarily in terms of its effect on our national security. To an extent, the issue between the Communist and the free world is moral and ideological, but ideas and principles in themselves threaten no nation's vital interests except insofar as they are implemented in national policies. It is the latter, therefore, that are our proper concern. To the extent that we are able to remove the crusading spirit and the passions of ideology from the cold war, we can reduce its danger and intensity and relax its powerful hold on the minds and hearts of our people.

The fears and passions of ideological conflict have diverted the minds and energies of our people from the constructive tasks of a free society to a morbid preoccupation with the dangers of Communist aggression abroad and subversion and disloyality at home. The problem did not end with the McCarthy era of a decade ago nor is it confined to the neurotic fantasies of today's fanatic extremists. The cold war malady affects a much broader spectrum of American society. It affects millions of sensible and intelligent citizens whose genuine concern with national security has persuaded them that the prosecution of the cold war is our only truly essential national responsibility, that missiles and nuclear armaments and space flights are not vital to the safety of the nation that it is almost unpatriotic to question their cost and their proliferation, and that in the face of these necessities the internal requirements of the country—with respect to its schools and cities and public services—must be left for action at some remote time in the future —as if these requirements were not themselves vital to the national security; and as if, indeed, our generation is likely to know more tranquil days.

In the 1830's Alexis de Tocqueville saw America as a nation with a passion for peace, one in which the "principle of equality," which made it possible for a man to improve his status rapidly in civilian life, made it most unlikely that many Americans, would ever be drawn to form a professional military caste. In 161, President Eisenhower warned the nation of the pervasive and growing power of a "military-industrial complex." Tocqueville was quite right in his judgment that the United States was unlikely to become a militarist society. We have, however, as a result of world wide involvements and responsibilities, become a great military power, with a vast military establishment that absorbs over half of our federal budget, profoundly influences the nation's economy and exercises a gradually expanding influence on public attitudes and policies.

Without becoming militarist in the sense of committing themselves to the military virtues as standards of personal behavior, the American people have nonetheless come to place great—and, in my opinion, excessive—faith in military solutions to political problems. Many Americans have come to regard our defense establishment as the heart and soul of our foreign policy whose effectiveness depends not only on its size and variety but also on the skill, and restraint, with which it is used.

Our faith in the military is akin to our faith in technology. We are a people more comfortable with machines than intellectual abstractions. The military establishment is a vast and enormously complex machine, a tribute to the technological genius of the American people; foreign policy is an abstract and esoteric art, widely regarded as a highly specialized occupation of "Eastern intellectuals," but not truly an "American" occupation. Our easy reliance on the military establishment as the foundation of our foreign policy is not unlike the reliance which we place on automobiles, televisions, and refrigerators: they work in a predictable and controllable manner, and on the rare occasions when they break down, any good mechanic can put them back in working order.

The trouble with the American technological bias is that it can conceal but not eliminate the ultimate importance of human judgment. Like any other piece of machinery, our military establishment can be no better than the judgment of those who control it. In a democracy, control is intended to be exercised by the people and their elected representatives. To a very considerable extent the American people are not now exercising effective control over the armed forces; nor indeed is the Congress, despite its primary constitutional responsibility in this field. Partly because of anxieties about the cold war, partly because of our natural technological bias, which leads us to place extraordinary faith in the ability of "technicians" to deal with matters that we ourselves find incomprehensible, and partly because of the vested interests of the "military-industrial complex," we are permitting the vast military establishment largely to run itself, to determine its own needs and to tell us what sacrifices are expected of us to sustain the national arsenal of weapons.

David Lloyd George once declared that "there is no greater fatuity than a political judgment dressed in a military uniform." To the extent that the American people and the Congress shrink from questioning the size and cost of our defense establishment, they are permitting military men, with their highly specialized viewpoints, to make political judgments of the greatest importance regarding the priorities of public policy and the allocation of public funds.

The abnegation of responsibility by the Congress in this field is strikingly illustrated by its debates — or, more accurately, "nondebates" — on the defense budget. When, for example, Senator McGovern of South Dakota suggested last September that defense spending might be reduced by 5%, the Senate, with virtually no discussion, voted the McGovern amendment down by a vote of 70 to 2 and proceeded, after an afternoon of desultory discussion, to enact the whole defense appropriation bill. When later in the fall I had the dubious honor of managing the foreign aid bill on the Senate floor through three weeks of extremely contentious debate, I could not help noting how astonishingly the forces of "economy" had picked up strength between the debate on the $50 billion defense appropriation and the $4 billion foreign aid bill (reduced to $3 billion upon final passage).

Again this year, the Congress is speeding the enactment of the defense budget with splendid indifference to its size and content. By the end of February both Houses had enacted a military procurement authorization bill of over $17 billion. The only controversial item in the bill was an amendment authorizing $52 million to begin the development of a new strategic manned bomber, which was adopted by both Houses despite the firm opposition of the Secretary of Defense. In the course of this debate, Senator Nelson of Wisconsin posed a most pertinent question. "I am questioning," he said, "what is apparently an established tradition—perhaps a national attitude —which holds that a bill to spend billions of dollars for the machinery of war must be rushed through the House and the Senate in a matter of hours, while a treaty to advance the cause of peace, or a program to help underdeveloped nations of the world, or a bill to guarantee the rights of all our citizens, or a bill to advance the interests of the poor, must be scrutinized and debated and amended and thrashed over for weeks and perhaps months."

"Like most other Americans . . .," writes Julius Duscha of The Washington Post, "Members of Congress believe that the bigger the defense budget, the safer the country. And in today's world there is no question that the United States must spend billions to keep up its defenses. But record-breaking budgets year after year do Not necessarily mean a stronger nation. The bigger any government program gets, the greater are the dangers that funds will be wasted and that goals of the program will become entangled in a morass of vested interests, venal political considerations, and the rivalries that inevitably evolve from them. And there is no better catharsis for huge government expenditures than informed, skeptical, and continued questioning of them."

The ease with which defense budgets are enacted by Congress, as Mr. Duscha points out, is in no small degree due to the enormous importance of defense spending for the economy. Defense contractors and great numbers of workers (who are also voters) all over the country have a vested interest in a high level of defense spending. It is the beneficiaries of the jobs and profits that defense spending creates, along with the generals and admirals, who constitute the formidable "military-industrial complex." And because of the jobs and profits stimulated by defense, Members of Congress have taken a benign attitude toward waste and duplication in the defense budget that is nothing less than amazing by contrast with the deeply held convictions about economy that influence their attitudes toward education, urban renewal, or foreign aid.

SENATOR WILLIAM FULBRIGHT

The truly astonishing thing about the uncritical support which the American people and their representatives give the military establishment is the apparent enthusiasm with which the sacrifice of personal and community interests is made. Goldsworthy Lowes Dickinson was, if anything, understating the matter when he wrote that "Nations are quite capable of starving every other side of life —education, sanitation, housing, public health, everything that contributes to life, physical, intellectual, moral, and spiritual— in order to maintain their armaments."

While the cold war and our enormously costly national security programs preempt so much of our time and attention and national wealth, the most important resources of our country—its human resources—are being extravagantly wasted and neglected. As the President's recently issued Manpower Report points out, unemployment in 1963 increased to 5.7% of the labor force despite major advances in production and employment; unemployment of young workers, between the ages of 16 and 19, reached 17% in 1963 while unemployment among nonwhite Americans stood at 11 %; despite an unemployment rate twice as high for school dropouts as for high school graduates, 30% of all young people continue to end their education before completing high school; despite the decline in unskilled jobs and the expanding demand for professional, technical, clerical and service workers — for workers, that is, with at least high school education and specialized training — nearly a million young people are leaving school every year without having completed elementary or secondary school.

The statistics of poverty, though striking, are antiseptic compared to the actual misery and hopelessness of being poor. The real meaning of poverty is not just losses of learning and productivity, but thousands of angry and dispossessed teen-agers who make our city streets dangerous for "respectable" citizens; 350,000 youngsters across the nation who form what the Secretary of Labor has described as an "outlaw pack" because they have stopped looking for work, are unemployed today, and will remain so for the rest of their lives; children in a blighted mining town in eastern Kentucky who are pot-bellied and anemic from lack of food; sharecroppers, white as well as black, living in squalid shacks and working for a few dollars a day —when they can find work at all —anywhere in a crescent of rural poverty that extends from southern Virginia along the coastal plain across Georgia and Alabama into the Mississippi Delta and the Ozarks.

Poverty in America has a radically different moral connotation from poverty in underdeveloped nations. The poor countries of the world have the excuse, for what it is worth, that means of feeding, housing, and educating their people simply do not exist. In America the means do exist; the failure is essentially one of distribution. The children who go to bed hungry in a Harlem slum or a West Virginia mining town are not being deprived because no food can be found to give them; they are going to bed hungry because, despite all our miracles of invention and production, we have not yet found a way to make the necessities of life available to all of our citizens—including those whose failure is not a lack of personal industry or initiative but only an unwise choice of parents.

What is to be done? In his poverty message to the Congress, the President made proposals for a constructive start—although only a start — toward meeting the problem of poverty in America. Under the proposed Economic Opportunity Act, National Jobs Corps would undertake the social rehabilitation, through basic education, job training, and work experience, of 100,000 young men "whose background, health, and education makes them least fit for useful work;" a work-training program would provide vocational education and part-time jobs for 200,000 young men and women in projects to be developed by state and local government and nonprofit agencies; a national work-study program would provide Federal funds for part-time jobs for 140,000 young Americans who, though qualified, would otherwise be unable to afford to afford to go to college. In addition, the President's program would encourage and help finance local antipoverty programs, would enlist volunteers in the war against poverty, and would undertake other financial and educational programs all to be coordinated under a new Office of Economy Opportunity.

President Johnson's program program can serve as point of departure for a full-scale national program to eliminate poverty and unemployment from American life. Such a program must be mounted through government fiscal policy, public works, and expansive economic policies, but primarily through programs of education and training. Education is not the whole solution but it is, by all available evidence, the key stone of the arch. As John Kenneth Galbraith recently wrote, "To the best of knowledge there is no place in the world where a well-educated population is really poor."

Building on this premise, Professor Galbraith proposes that the hundred lowest income communities in the country be designated as "special educational districts" to be equipped with primary and secondary schools and recreational and transportation facilities of the high quality. The schools would be staffed by an elite corps of highly qualified, highly trained, and well - paid teachers. Grants would be provided for food and clothing for the pupils when needed as well as counseling and medical and psychiatric services.

After one year the program would be extended to another 150 or 200 areas and eventually cover all areas of great need. As income rises in the recipient school districts, the schools would be turned back to the localities.

The Galbraith plan is an excellent one and I, for one, would welcome the submission of such a plan to the Congress, although there can be no doubt that it would generate great controversy. I think that we must face up to the need for major new legislation in the field of education regardless of the partisan divisions which it may provoke. We must do so if we truly mean to alleviate the scourge of poverty in American life. And although it is clear that there is no simple dollar for dollar relationship between savings in the defense and space budgets and Congressional willingness to appropriate money for education, it seems to me quite possible that the elimination of superfluous defense and space funds would in fact help overcome the reluctance to support education legislation of certain Members of Congress whose concern with economy is genuine and strong.

As a result of the rapidly spreading automation of the American economy the traditional mechanism of distributing purchasing power through employment and income is breaking down. In essence, our ability to generate economic demand is falling steadily behind our ability to increase the supply of purchaseable goods and services. It may be that the growing disequilibrium is so profound as to be irreversible by government policies designed to stimulate economic growth and full employment. If so, we shall eventually have to devise new ways of providing income to those who cannot be put to gainful work.

Whether truly radical measures will be required or not, there is no question that if our national war on poverty is to come anywhere near the goal of "total victory" proclaimed by President Johnson, it will require enormous public effort and a great deal of public money. To those who shrink from such a commitment in the name of economy, I would emphasize that the elimination of poverty and inadequate education are at least as important to the security of our country in the long run as the maintenance of a strong defense establishment and a good deal more important than a voyage to the moon. I commend to them the words of Edmund Burke, that "Economy is a distributive virture, and consists not in saving but in selection. Parsimony requires no providence, no sagacity, no powers of combination, no comparison, no judgment."

The cold war has diverted us from problems both quantitative and qualitative. The quantitative problem is essentially to devise ways of elevating the one-fifth of our people who live in poverty to the level of the four-fifths who live in greater material abundance than any other society in human history. The qualitative problem is to find ways of bringing meaning and purpose and standards of excellence into the lives of a people who, because of their material affluence, are free as no people have ever seen before, to shape a spiritual and intellectual environment of their own choice.

While the attention and energy of our public policy have been focused through these postwar years on crises in Berlin and Cuba and the Far East, America, almost behind our backs, has been more and more taking on the physical appearance, and the cultural atmosphere, of a honky-tonk of continental proportions. This is not to suggest that the quest for intellectual, artistic, and scientific excellence has been abandoned in our country. On the contrary, it is being pursued by more people with more energy and more striking results than at any time in our history. But the pursuit of excellence and creativity remains the occupation of an elite segment of our society, a large and brilliant elite, to be sure, but one which is still largely isolated from the nation as a whole. The creative elements of American society are probably growing larger and are constantly reaching new levels of achievement, but they are not yet successfully communicating their standards to the generality of their countrymen .

I do not think we can avoid the conclusion that despite a broadening interest in the arts, the level of popular taste in America remains far below what it can be and ought to be. The evidences are all around us: in the mindless trivia that fill the television channels and occupy the leisure hours of tens of millions of Americans; in the paperback pornography that has become a major national industry; in the gaudy and chaotic architecture that clutters the central areas of our great cities from Manhattan to Miami and Los Angeles and in the festering slums that surround them.

It can be pointed out, and rightly, that all this is mitigated by the growing popularity of good music and good art, of the serious theater and of quality films. But this, I fear, is confined to the "other America," to the large but isolated elite who are supposed to set, or at least suggest, popular standards of taste and style but who somehow are failing to do so.

Nowhere is the vulgarization of standards more conspicuous than in the after affects of urban America. It is difficult to judge what is the most depressing sights in New York City: the jungle of anti-septic glass towers that have taken over and humanity out of the midtown area, the sprawling slums that are never far away, or the dreary acres of identical brick housing, devoid of any charm or individuality, that constitute "urban renewal." It is equally difficult to understand how Washington, the nation's beautiful, monumental city, the living symbol of what is valued and emulated in America, should have permitted itself to be marred by stark, prison-like new Federal office buildings that suggest arid, dehumanized activities within them, or by the elephantine Rayburn House Office building, built in what has been described as the "Early Mussolini" style of architecture, a building so ugly that one can only regard it as the product of an organized effort in tastelessness and vulgarity.

I feel certain that this debasement of standards is not inevitable in contemporary America. About a half mile from the new prison-like office buildings in Washington stands the new National Geographic building, an elegant example of contemporary architecture, a structure of grace and dignity and human warmth. A half mile in another direction stands the Old Senate Office Building, a model of dignity and beauty in the classic style. This contrast symbolizes the polarization of standards between "two Americas" that constitutes a growing problem of our national life. Somehow we must strive to bring the two alienated cultures of our country together again, to make the quest for beauty and excellence, a truly national endeavor.

In a recently published book of incisive text and brilliant photographs illustrating "the planned deterioration of America's landscape" Peter Blake offers the following bleak prognosis for American cities:

"With a very, very few exceptions, our cities seem to be headed for a grim future indeed — unless we determine to make some radical changes. That future looks something like this: first, our cities will be inhabited solely by the very poor (generally colored) and the very rich (generally white) —plus a few divisions of police to protect the latter from the former. Second, they will become primarily places to work in—places for office buildings and for light industry. Third, they will become totally ghettofied—not merely in terms of racial segregation, but also in terms of usage: there will be office ghettos, industrial ghettos, apartment ghettos, amusement or culture ghettos (like Manhattan's gold-plated Rockefeller ghetto, Lincoln Center), bureaucratic ghettos, shopping ghettos, medical-center ghettos. In other words, there will be virtually no mixed uses of streets or of neighborhoods, so that most areas of the city will be alive for mere fractions of each day or weeks, and as deserted as Wall Street on a weekend for the rest of the time."

One can hope that it will not come to this, that before our cities are lost to glass palaces and slums, then suburbs to housing projects and automobile junkyards, the highways to gaudy motels, and the countryside to a solid wall of billboards, the vulgarizing trend will be arrested and reversed. If it is to be reversed, we must begin by recognizing that private property rights cannot extend to the debauching of America's landscape. An ugly city is not like a bad painting, which can be shut up in a museum out of the sight of anyone who does not wish to see it. Our cities and highways and countryside are part of our common legacy. They either enrich or impoverish our lives and it cannot be left to the sole discretion of promoters and developers to determine which it will be. There is so much in the American environment that is good, so much that is both beautiful and efficient, that the widespread prevalence of disorder and decay is beyond excuse or understanding.

Obviously, we cannot impose high standards by force, as, in certain respects the Russians have—by the simple, puritanical expedient of withdrawing from their people those forms of art and recreation that are deemed to be vulgar and decadent. Only important — means can we use the law to combat ugliness and bad taste: by establishing and enforcing high architectural standards for urban construction and urban renewal; by restricting the placements of billboards on our highways; by preserving our shrinking areas of natural beauty in national parks; by revising the practice of rewarding slum landlords who allow their property to deteriorate with low tax assessments; by imposing some order on the planning of schools and housing and parks and expressways.

Beyond these limited measures of community action we must strive as individuals to bring together the "two Americas," to restore the lines of communication between the minority that value excellence and the majority that settle for mediocrity. I do not know how this is to be accomplished, but I think there is a clue in what seems to me to be one of the major sources of the postwar vulgarization of American life: The combination of widespread affluence with the intense anxieties generated by the cold war, resulting both in a fixation on foreign problems and in an almost compulsive search for release from anxiety through trivial and tasteless, but convenient and diverting, channels of popular amusement. The cold war, writes David Riseman, "is a distraction from serious thought about man's condition on the planet."

If there is any validity in this analysis, then it follows that the first thing we must do toward raising the quality of American life is to turn some part of our thoughts and our creative energies away from the cold war that has engaged them for so long back in on America itself. If we do this, and then let nature take its course, we may find that the most vital resources of our nation, for its public happiness and its security as well, remain locked within our own frontiers, in our cities and in our countryside, in our work and in our leisure, in the hearts and minds of our people.

'The Role Of A Free Press In A Free Society'

An address delivered at International Student Day at Duke University on April 4. Mr. Lassiter is editor of the semi-weekly Smithfield Herald.

By THOMAS J. LASSITER

Any discussion of the role of the press in a democratic society must begin with elementary consideration of the citizen's responsibility in self-government.

The citizen has basic political rights safeguarded by the Constitution—freedom of expression, the right to assemble peaceably, the right of petition, the right to vote. It is his responsibility to use these rights intelligently. He cannot act responsibly unless he knows what goes on in society and government. The right of the people to know also must be safeguarded as a basic right in a democracy.

The press stands as guardian of the right of the people to know. Its true role in a democratic society is to help the citizen fulfill his responsibility in self-government. The press fills this role not only by reporting facts about social and political affairs, but also by serving as critic of society and government.

Sometimes the responsibility of the press to report and criticize is misunderstood.

The newspapers, contrary to a prevailing view, publish much information that could be classed as "good news." Their columns carry an abundance of news about the successes of people and institutions. But newspapers that fulfill their responsibility are under moral compulsion to publish "bad news" as well as good news, and the bad news sometimes reflects adversely upon the reputation of citizens.

Why, some readers ask, do you newspaper editors print so much news about the bad things people do? Why, they ask, do you hurt people?

The purpose of publishing news about the mistakes of public officials or the wrongdoings of plain citizens who violate laws is not to punish the wayward. A responsible press is no penal institution. Nor does it seek to sell papers by preying upon the curiosity of readers about the sins of others. It seeks only to give citizens the information they need for intelligent self-government. A citizen cannot use his vote and influence effectively unless he is aware of the evil as well as the good in society.

Facts are not enough to undergird intelligent self-government. Facts need evaluation. Readers who insist that newspapers should be "boosters"—that is, praisers only—rather than critics overlook the vitality that democracy receives from criticism.

To play the role of responsible critic is to place an estimate on life's values; to discriminate between what seems to be good and what seems to be evil; to make significant comment on the manners, customs, attitudes, and actions of the people; to analyze and pass judgment on the policies and practices of government.

The strong editorial page is a page of criticism. It interprets the news and stimulates thought about the social and political issues—sometimes by taking unpopular positions and prodding the conscience of the community. The responsible editorial page does not flinch from a fight against injustice—racial, religious, economic, social, political injustice. It exposes fraud and hypocrisy, and it sounds the tocsin when democratic freedom is threatened.

Only people who understand the news and think through the issues critically will use their rights of citizenship intelligently. Sober thought and understanding come only through a free exchange of ideas. The press cannot fulfill its role in a democratic society unless it expresses ideas in an atmosphere of freedom. In a society that looks to freedom for salvation, censorship is the Anti-Christ.

"I think that if a poll were conducted among men on the street as to the average citizen's conception of the meaning of freedom of the press, the answer would reflect their impression that freedom of the press is somehow the property of the newspapers under which newspapers are permitted to do things that nobody else can do—such things, for example, as inquiring into other people's business; printing facts which are obnoxious to many of those who read them; photographing men and women in trouble—in fact a freedom for newspapers under which they do many things which people resent."

Mr. McKelway went on to say:

"It is the possibility that some day the people, under the wrong sort of leadership, may feel moved to curb or restrict the freedom of the press in belief that by doing so they may punish the newspapers for pursuing courses with which the majority may disagree."

I would like to think that Mr. McKelway is wrong about the average citizen's concept of what a free press means. But I fear he may be right. Forty per cent of 2,500 American students questioned in a poll conducted by Purdue University either favored curbs on freedom of the press or were indifferent toward preservation of the press freedom.

If Mr. McKelway is right and if Purdue University's survey is a dependable indication of student thinking, this generation somehow has missed a vital point about the way democratic government operates.

Curb freedom of the press and you curb fundamental rights of the people. Freedom of the press is not the property of the newspapers. It belongs to the people.

When the Constitution guarantees freedom of the press, it does not confer a special privilege upon newspaper owners and editors. I happen to be an editor of a newspaper. But I have no constitutional rights or privileges as editor that the people in other vocational positions do not have as citizens.

The editor has the right to know what goes on in democratic government. He has the right to ferret out the facts about public affairs. The citizen has the same right.

The editor has the right to comment freely on the actions and attitudes of public officials. The citizen has the same right.

The editor is subject to laws of libel which place upon him the burden of reporting the truth and making fair comment. The citizen is subject to laws of slander—or laws of libel if he expresses himself in public print.

The governing body of my home county—Johnston County, North Carolina—is the County Board of Commissioners. This board holds a regular monthly meeting and additional sessions as necessary to transact the business of county government. The press has a right to sit in on these board meetings. But the right is not primarily the right of the press. A reporter from my newspaper, The Smithfield Herald, has no right of access to a meeting of the County Commissioners that citizens generally do not have. The basic right is not the right of the newspaper reporter to cover the news of the board meeting, but the right of the citizen to observe and listen while his elected representatives discuss and transact public business.

Regular meetings of the County Commissioners last all day. Usually it is not convenient for the citizen to attend these meetings. But the citizen's right to know what the commissioners think and do is not nullified by inconvenience when the press fulfills its responsibility. The news reporter attends the meetings of the governing body, acting as the representative of the citizens. He observes and listens for the citizen—and reports. The reporter and his newspaper accept the responsibility to give the people the information they need to guide them in responsible exercise of citizenship.

When newspapers cover state legislatures and their committees, Congress and its committees, courts, and all kinds of public agencies from county courthouses to Capitol Hill in Washington, their reporters are acting in behalf of citizens who have democratic responsibilities to perform and cannot perform them without information.

The editorial as well as the news story is the citizen's servant, even when it expresses opinion contrary to that held by the citizen. Not only does the editorial stimulate thought and help the citizen clarify his own particular view; when an editor expresses opinions on social and political issues, he is exercising the right of free expression that belongs to the citizen. Every exercise of free expression, whether by press or people, strengthens the citizen's right of free expression. Freedom of the press can be lost by failure of newspapers to exercise it, and citizens can lose freedom of speech by keeping silent on public issues. Official censorship is not the only threat to freedom of expression.

I am well aware that the press is subjected to a great deal of criticism from some of our political leaders and also from some plain citizens who feel offended by material that appears in print.

Some of the criticism is justified. Newspapers, like politicians and voters, are fallible. Some newspapers abuse freedom of the press. All newspapers at times fall short of ideal fulfillment of their role in a democratic society.

Some of the criticism of the press is not justified. It comes from misunderstanding of how the press helps the citizen fulfill his responsibility in self-government.

Even if it stings and seems unwarranted, criticism of the press should be welcomed by newspapers. It should be encouraged. If the press has the right, even the duty, to play the role of society's critic, the members of society have the right and the duty to serve as critics of the press.

A responsible press will give fair publicity to what critics of the press say.

A responsible press will go further than that. It will engage in self-criticism.

No responsible newspaper can condone:

Failure to ferret out all the pertinent facts of a story.

Inaccuracies that occur when reporters are lazy or careless or unduly pressed for time.

Sensational journalism that seeks only to sell papers.

Indiscriminate reporting of police speculation and hearsay evidence against persons suspected but not yet convicted of crimes.

Expression of editorial opinion not based upon sound knowledge; the failure of editorial writers to prepare themselves for their jobs by general reading, research, and close association with the people, both of high and low estate.

The lack of courage in publishing socially or politically significant stories that reflect adversely upon the influential.

Failure to take forthright positions on controversial issues.

A few newspapers may be guilty of all these faults. Some may be guilty of some of these faults. No newspaper should become so complacent that it considers itself immune to any of these faults.

Fortunately, there is self-criticism in American Journalism.

At national, regional, and state levels, editors often come together to discuss ways of improving their news reports and strengthening their editorial pages. They criticize one another's work round-table conferences.

Many an editor has attend press institutes or editorial c ferences year after year, retu ing to his post charged and charged with a sense of resp sibility that is reflected in news and editorial columns his paper.

Schools of journalism w constantly at the task of inst ing in future newspaper repo ers and editors a sense of responsibility which the press assumed in democratic life.

In each generation, editors publishers of U. S. newspap have adopted statements setti forth the ethical principles t ought to guide a responsi press. In North Carolina a f years ago, the State Press A sociation commissioned a gro of editors to draft a "Statem of Principles" to guide No Carolina newspapers. The Sta ment was adopted by the Pr Association. Although it is an enforceable code (that wou be censorship), the Statement Principles hangs on newspap walls across the state and is pu lished annually on some editor pages to remind publishers, e tors, reporters, and readers the newspaper's public respon bility.

There is room for more a deeper soul-searching in t ranks of American journalis The press should never becon complacent. Nor should t press, imperfect as it may b surrender to its critics who wou welcome censorship as a che against newspaper irrespon bility.

In a free society, censorsh cannot be the answer to abus of freedom of the press. Censo ship nullifies freedom—freedo of citizens as well as freedom newspapers. It leads to evil f worse than the evil it seeks correct.

When there is temptation put shackles on the press, th we should remember: The gre est heritage we have in Ameri is freedom to express what w know and think. That freedo is what really distinguishes o system from systems of com munism and fascism, in whi the press and other agencies information are under gover ment censorship and in whi there is utter disregard of t right of the people to know.

1. I've decided on the kind of job I want when I graduate.

Knowing you, I'd guess it to be something modest—like Secretary of State or President of GE.

2. I hadn't thought of those specifically. What I had in mind was a job where they give you a lot of assistants. I think that would be nice.

3. Well, I did run an extremely successful Nickel-a-Pickle sale.

Don't forget to demand plenty of stock options.

4. You think maybe I should lower my sights a little.

I'm afraid to tell you what I think.

5. I'd be willing to settle for a vice-presidency.

Look—why don't you see if you can qualify for one of Equitable's executive training programs. The work is interesting, the pay is good. And if you prove you have the ability, you may very well end up with a title and a couple of assistants.

6. You really have a way of seeing through a problem.

Rooming with you has taught me a lot.

"Which," he asked, "will we choose, distraction or progress?"

Dr. Knight, considered by many the most promising man in his field, warned against complacency in the university. "It's easy for a university to forget to judge itself—to forget to ask if it stands for its original central ideals," he said.

Both Graham and Knight took pride in the privilege of cooperation between institutions as "one we cherish," and both agreed that the aspirations and ambitions of today's youth are higher than ever before.

Graham, introduced as "a native son who's come home again," received a standing ovation prior to his televised (WUNC) speech.

Extra Time Given For Volunteers

DURHAM (UPI) — College students will be given an extra two weeks to file applications to join the N. C. Volunteers, it was announced today.

The deadline to join the Volunteers, who will help fight poverty in 10 projects this summer sponsored by the N. C. Fund, had been set at April 5. The deadline was extended today until April 22.

The Volunteers will be composed of 100 college students who will be headed by Jim Beatty, former University of North Carolina track star and Olympic performer.

Beatty said the deadline was extended "at the request of several college officials who are finding students haven't had enough time to think it over and want to talk it over with their parents."

He said that 250 applications had been received so far to join the Volunteers, an organization patterned after the Peace Corps.

Theater Arts Students Eligible For Grant

A new $1000 scholarship for the 1964-65 academic year will be awarded to a "deserving student" in the theatre arts field by the William Morris Agency Foundation.

Chairman of the UNC Dramatic Art Department Dr. Harry Davis said any student in the Department will be eligible for consideration by the scholarship committee, but the majority of scholarships of this type are awarded to promising playwrights.

Information may be obtained by writing to the chairman, Department of Dramatic Art, 307 Bynum Hall, Chapel Hill.

Why NORTHWESTERN MUTUAL ?

ANSWER:

1. BECAUSE Northwestern's results from selection of contract owners are remarkably good.
2. BECAUSE Northwestern's interest earnings are among the highest consistent with safety.
3. BECAUSE Northwestern's operating expenses are the lowest of all major companies.

(1) Low mortality, (2) favorable interest earnings, and (3) extremely low operating expenses means maximum dividends to policy holders. Specifically, Northwestern Mutual dividends in 1963 amounted to $29.65 for each $100 of gross premium income. This was higher than any major company.

DTH Says Mets Won't Win NL Pennant

The DTH selection staff has done it again! They have gone out on a limb and predicted the Los Angeles Dodgers to become the first National League team since the 1958 Milwaukee Braves to win consecutive league pennants.

The infallible 10-man staff gave the Dodgers 94 out of a possible 100 votes. The Phillies made a surprising showing in the balloting thanks to the influence of "Brotherly Love" Montague and finished second with 82 votes.

Last year the Dodgers decided that Walter Alston was going to manage and Leo Durocher was going to be third-base coach —if they won. Everything turned out rosey and Alston hasn't been fired since last July.

Alston will be depending on his "big four", starters Sandy Koufax (25-5), Don Drysdale (19-17), and Johnny Podres (15-13) and reliefer Ron Perranoski (16-3), to once again save his managerial job. However Alston must find more pitching depth from border-line performers Bob Miller, Pete Richert, Ken Rowe, Jim Brewer and Nick Willhite or young sensations Joe Moeller and Phil Ortega.

As always, the problem for the Dodgers is "who's on third!" Former Southern Cal slugger Johnny Werhas is getting first shot at the hot corner job following a great year at Spokane. If he flunks his exam, Alston will probably move "old pro" Jim Gilliam to third and install flashy Dick Tracewski at second. Secretly, National League opponents are hoping that Alston will once again play Ken McMullen at third.

Frank Howard has decided that money is more important than family harmony and will again wander around in right field. Howard is due for a big year at the plate and should supply the Dodgers with needed long-ball power.

The Phillies, with possibly the best manager in baseball in Gene Mauch, are the "sleeper" team in the league. They added even more pitching depth when they acquired Jim Bunning, who was known in the American League for his "gopher ball" and beanball antics.

They'll Finish Like This

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Los Angeles | 6. Milwaukee |
| 2. Philadelphia | 7. Pittsburgh |
| 3. San Francisco | 8. Chicago |
| 4. St. Louis | 9. Houston |
| 5. Cincinnati | 10. New York |

The Phillies are counting on rookie slugger Richie Allen to fill their gap at third. Allen has been the Phillies' leading slugger in the exhibition games, but his fielding is the big question mark.

The Giants have Jesus on their side this year (Alou, we mean) but they could finish virtually anywhere on the ladder. Alvin Dark has the most powerful hitting squad in the league, but he and Horace Stoneham have several question marks on the team.

They are counting on two rookies, Jay Alou and Jim Ray Hart, to return them to the lofty perch they occupied in 1962. Hart has been installed as the regular third baseman, but the young North Carolinian must learn to duck at the plate. If Hart flops, or gets beaned again, Jim Davenport, who has moved to second base will be returned to third and Chuck Hiller will once again ineptly play second base.

Last year all the Cardinals had big years and they could only finish second. This year it is doubtful that Groat, White, Flood, Boyer and Co. can come up with repeat performances.

For the Cardinals to match their second place finish of last year, Ray Washburn, who won his first five starts last year before shelved for the season with a sore arm, and Roger Craig, whose bad luck may be attributed to the way he pitches, must come up with big years to solidify the weak Cardinal pitching staff.

In contrast with the Cardinals, all of Cincinnati's hitters with the exception of Vada Pinson had bad years. The list of Reds who must come through this year is so long that it will take columnist Earl Lawson a month to criticize them all.

Joey Jay and Bob Purkey may not get as many chances to be the "humpty-dumpties" of the Red pitching staff this year since they were the worst 1-2 starters in the league last year after having been the best in 1962.

Bobby Bragan has stashed away his umbrella and soda pop and has become a top-flight manager. However, the Braves need more than a good manager to advance in the NL standings. For instance, they must get 20 wins from "Old Folks" Warren Spahn and good seasons from their young pitchers.

Danny Murtaugh, the genius of 1960, found out last year that you can't trade away leadership and power and replace one of them with "Ducky" Schofield. He now faces the problem of awaking the dormant talents of Bob Bailey, Willie Stargell, Don Schwall and Joe Gibbon if he expects to keep his job.

Rookie Gene Alley may supply more power to the Pirate lineup if he can push someone out of a starting job. He hit four home runs in the first two exhibition games and has been the team's leading run producer in the practice games.

Chicago head coach , or whatever he is, Bob Kennedy's biggest headache is the second base position left vacant by the tragic death of Ken Hubbs. He has four candidates, for the job, Jim Stewart, Leo Burke, Joey Amalfitano and Paul Popovich, but none of them have satisfied Kennedy thus far. Popovich could be the sleeper.

George Sokol—A Winning Tradition

By BOB BETTIS

Most people in and around Chapel Hill are aware that UNC possesses one of the finest players in collegiate tennis today—namely, George Sokol.

On the other hand, few people are aware of the technical side of Sokol. What, for example, is his strategy before a match? What does he think his strong and weak points are? And whom does he consider his toughest opponent?

"The strategy you use depends upon your opponent," explained Sokol. "If you've played him before or have seen him play, then you generally know what to expect.

"If not, you can get some idea about his style in warm-ups before each match. Just by hitting the ball back and forth you can tell how strong his strokes are . . . and whether his forehand is considerably better than his backhand. You simply have to feel it out."

Sokol, who stands 5-foot-9, frequently meets opponents who are physically bigger and stronger than he is. But lack of height is not a handicap, according to the two-time ACC singles champ.

"Height doesn't mean a thing. There's no real advantage to it in tennis. Look at Ken Rosewall and Lew Hoad. They were great players, but they were also small.

"I'm not saying being tall will hurt you . . . it helps in many instances. But on the average a tall man can't get around as fast as a short man. The idea is to be accurate, not necessarily overpowering."

When it comes to his roughest match, George says that "all close matches are the toughest, but I suppose Rafael Osuna is the best player I have ever met."

The Sokol-Osuna battle occurred last summer in the NCAA Nationals at Princeton. Sokol had just beaten an old nemesis, Rod Mandelstram of Miami, 7-5, 7-5, and now he was paired against the fifth best tennis player in the world. (Sokol is seeded 38th in the U.S.)

Osuna, a Mexican star and present U.S. National champion, got off to a quick 6-2 lead before Sokol found his game. "I was nervous and shaky at the start," said George.

But in the second set Sokol rallied brilliantly and completely baffled Osuna. Nevertheless, the Southern California netter came back in the third set to win, 6-2, 1-6, 6-3.

"Rafael broke my serve at 3-3 in that third set," remarked Sokol, "and it cost me the match. I thought I played well, but I guess it wasn't enough."

Contrary to popular opinion, Sokol does have a weakness, and he freely admits it.

"I've got to learn to charge the net more. Last year I didn't come up as much as I should have." His reluctance to do so, believes George, had to do with the quality of competition last spring.

"I didn't rush the net because I really wasn't pushed very hard. So I just took the attitude that if I wasn't forced, why should I do it?"

Sokol realizes the dangers of not correcting such a philosophy. "In bigtime tennis you can't afford to be lazy. You must play with the idea of coming up to the net."

Anyone who watches Sokol play can easily figure out his biggest asset—he wins. But the Tar Heel performer explains it more specifically.

"I've got a strong and accurate forehand, and my backhand has improved very much. I've got confidence in either stroke, which means I don't have to worry if and where I'm going to hit the ball."

Rain Slows Murals Action

By PETE GAMMONS

For the second straight day, rain put a halt to all softball, horseshoes, and tennis intramural activity. All will be rescheduled for either Friday or a date next week.

Softball action had been in full swing, with twenty or more games each day. One game last week gave Al Moran and the Mets some consolation, and the Ehringhaus B Governors took the inside track for the booby prize, dropping a three inning seat-squirmer to the Alexander Poobahs, 25-1. Gene Faircloth fired a no-hitter despite seven walks, and helped his own cause by clouting two homers and a double. Bobby Cornwell hit three homers, the last one clearing the Navy field fence, some 320 feet away, while Lewis Hooks had two homers and a single. The Poobahs struck for 15 runs in the first inning, eight of them before the Governors could retire a man. The game was called at the end of three innings for time reasons.

MED APPLICATIONS

Final Symposium Session Will Hear George S. Ball

George S. Ball

By HARRY DeLUNG

George Ball, undersecretary of state, will speak at the Carolina Symposium tonight at 8 p.m.

The topic will be "Values and the Individual; implications for the individual in a state organized for war."

Reports yesterday said there was a possibility that James Reston of the New York Times would accompany Ball, in anticipation of a major speech.

Ball, who is the second-ranking State Department official, was appointed by President Kennedy in November, 1962. Immediately before, he served as undersecretary for economic affairs, and wrote the late president's report on balance of payments and the gold drain.

This report exposed to national publicity the serious loss of gold to European nations which formed a principal part of Kennedy's campaign platform in international affairs.

Ball was the State Department's chief spokesman for the sale of U. S. wheat to Russia. In testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, he vigorously defended the extension of credit to communist countries.

The Undersecretary is credited with shaping the major part of U. S. policy towards the Diem regime in South Viet Nam.

In January, Ball argued a major reorientation of American foreign aid. He attacked the use of aid as a cold war "weapon," and urged support for undeveloped nations on a more positive basis.

Proposing that foreign aid be directly taken over by the State Department, he stressed the need for more "altruistic motives" in the administration of these funds.

Mannes Attacks 'Arts Climate'

By PETE WALES

Marya Mannes, well-known New York television and theatre critic, jolted a fourth-night Symposium audience with a scathing speech on the old War climate and its effect on American letters.

Miss Mannes led off a panel of four writers moderated by former UNC instructor of English William Coles.

"The Cold War has forced us into a rigidity of thinking," Miss Mannes said. "We live under a doctrine of 'our way is the only way.' "

Miss Mannes described the root of this false doctrine as being "predominantly a fear of economic loss."

The result is that "most writers have become either exploiters or evadors."

She said that modern-day Americans were afraid to consider social, economic and political systems as being possibly acceptable.

Irving Howe, author, professor, critic and contributor to many magazines, followed with a description of "the new fiction."

Graham Hall Social Room Has Opened

Don Carson, chairman of the Residence Hall Improvement Committee of Student Legislature, has officially announced the opening of the new Lower Quad study and social room in the basement of Graham Hall.

A joint appropriation by the Administration and Student Legislature of $2500 was used to cover pipes, tile the floor, improve the lighting and purchase new furniture and drapes.

A similar project involving $3000 will be completed within the next three or four weeks in Joyner Hall, according to Carson.

"It is significant," Carson said, "that Student Government and the Administration have cooperated in this area. All we need show now is that the rooms are used and properly cared for.

"Top Administration officials have stated that they will back residence hall improvement to the limit if these pilot projects prove successful," Carson said.

"It is essential," he said, "that the residence halls have adequate facilities to accommodate social programs."

Shaw Chorus To Sing Here

The Shaw University Chorus will present a concert at the First Baptist Church April 17 at 8 p.m.

The chorus, which has performed before the United Nations, will be making an appearance in order to raise funds for the University, which is presently in financial trouble.

Shaw, the first Negro institution of higher learning in North Carolina, will observe its 100th anniversary next year. Organized as a religious training school, the University was later turned over to the state.

There will be no admission charge for the concert, and a patron list is being compiled. The minimum charge for the list is $1, and those wishing to add their name are requested to call Rev. J. R. Manley at 942-2509 or 942-2185.

Legislature May Delete References To Review Board

Student Legislature will consider an amendment to delete references to the defunct Student-Faculty Review Board from the Student Constitution tonight at 8 p.m. in New East.

Student members were ousted from the Board last October in the wake of the Ann Carter Case, touching off a vigorous protest by Student Government officials and President Mike Lawler.

The Administration was criticized for nullifying an entire section of the Constitution without mentioning the matter to either student legislative or executive branches .

Bills concerning clarification of elections dealing with campaign expense accounts, the establishment of a permanent Editor's Roundtable and appropriation of funds for various projects will also be considered, including a resolution for the construction of a basketball court in the Ram's Head parking lot.

Moses Cone Case Heard In Senate

The story of Dennis Nathaniel, UNC graduate student from India, being turned away from the emergency room of Greensboro's Moses H. Cone Hospital two weeks ago because of his skin color received national attention on the floor of the Senate Tuesday.

The story, which first appeared in the DTH, was told by Sen. John Pastore, D.-R.I., to demonstrate why the civil rights bill must have a section that insures that financial resources of the federal government can no longer be used to subsidize racial discrimination.

Nathaniel had been playing in a cricket exhibition match in Greensboro when he broke his nose. He was rushed to the hospital where he waited 20 minutes before being told he would have to go to the Negro hospital.

It was another 20 minutes before he could get treatment. During this time, his nose was bleeding profusely.

Pastore, who is one of the most able speakers in the Senate, was not challenged as he pointed up the U. S. Supreme Court action which in effect prevents two hospitals in Greensboro from refusing to treat patients or to admit doctors to their staffs strictly for racial reasons.

"It was natural that such a

Editorship Hopefuls Announce Candidacy

A committee of five student leaders yesterday announced the formation of a "Write-In Blackwell and Kirkpatrick Campaign," initiated to elect Mickey Blackwell and Curry Kirkpatrick co-editors of the Daily Tar Heel in the campus election next Tuesday.

The committee is composed of Bruce Cooper, president of the YMCA; Dave Rendleman, president of Ehringhaus Residence Hall; Arthur Hays, chairman of the Student Legislature Finance Committee; Art Pearce, Daily Tar Heel business manager; and Donna Fagg, president UNC Press Club.

The committee said, "We are supporting these candidates because they represent proven ability, competence, and experience. Of the editorial candidates none can match the records of Blackwell and Kirkpatrick.

"In the interest of a better Daily Tar Heel, we call on all students to write in the names Blackwell and Kirkpatrick for the editorship."

Kirkpatrick, a junior journalism major, is a native of St. Louis, Mo. He is a double-award winner in the National William Randolph Hearst collegiate writing contest. He won a $750-first place award in the Hearst feature writing contest last fall and added a $400-third-place in a recent feature writing contest. Last year he took a second place in the Charlottee Observer Carolinas Collegiate Sports Writing Contest.

He is the former holder of the Jake Wade Memorial Journalism Scholarship and has served as assistant sports editor and editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

Presently working for the Chapel Hill Weekly, Kirkpatrick will be an intern on the Buffalo Evening News this summer.

Blackwell, a native of Gastonia, has been an administrative reporter, feature writer and news editor on the Daily Tar Heel. He worked for radio stations WGNC in Gastonia and WCHL in Chapel Hill for two years. He won an award in last year's Charlotte Observer contest and added another in a Hearst Foundation news writing contest in February.

He also worked for the Charlotte Observer during the past two summers and is now a special reporter for the Raleigh Times and Chapel Hill correspondent for the Observer.

Panel Discusses Sciences, Security

By KERRY SIPE

The effects of National Security and the demands of the state of scientific research were discussed yesterday at an afternoon presentation of the Carolina Symposium by Dr. Harold Orlans and Dr. Paul M. Gross.

Gross, of Duke University, president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, pointed out that the influence of national politics and public feeling in government subsidized research cannot be denied.

"Our pool of basic research funds is heavily depleted by our habit of capitalizing on our fundamental knowledge rather than doing further research," said Gross.

"What is called R and D (Research and Development) money is actually about 90 per cent development and ten per cent research," he said.

Gross said this was due to fear that the public would become alarmed at a tendency to favor military research.

Orlans, of the Senior Staff at the Brookings Institution studying the effects of federal programs on higher education, said that government subsidy should be determined by the ongress and by the need. "Society," he said, "cannot possibly understand the situation as well as the government."

Harold Orlans

Paul Gross

Both scientists agreed that Science should accept none of the blame for the necessity to advance military strength through research.

"Only a very small percentage of the time," said Gross, "does a scientist even realize the applicability of a project he is working on before it is finished, especially in the pure sciences."

"If we could blame science for discovering bigger and better ways to kill people, then Albert Einstein would be the biggest villian of the century."

University Entries Win Exhibit Prizes

Art entries from the UNC have won three of the five top painting prizes at the Sixth Carolinas College Art Annual exhibition at the Columbia Museum of Art, Columbia, S. C.

At an award presentation and preview April 5, L .V. Huggins' "Dwarf Man," Roberta Johnson's "Impressions of New York," and James Ness' "The Last Run," received Honor Awards. Of the 48 paintings comprising the exhibi-

Thompson, Adler Voice Approval Of Government Support For Arts

By KERRY SIPE

An American artist and an American legislator met yesterday at the afternoon session of the Carolina Symposium to discuss the part that government should play in development of the arts in this country.

"I am very much in favor of the government taking an active interest in the development of talent," said New Jersey congressman Frank Thompson, Jr., who was chosen for the discussion because of the legislation he introduced in the House of Representatives authorizing the building of the National Cultural Center in Washington.

"North Carolina is one of the most cultural-minded states in the union," said lyricist, composer and producer Richard Adler in discussion of the issue. "I wish the federal government would imitate what is being done in North Carolina fifty times over."

Both the composer and the congressman were in agreement that the federal government owed a responsibility to the nation's artists.

"Eevry artist must have his sustinence, in order to live," said Adler. "It is becoming increasingly more difficult for him to get it."

Adler pointed out that the number of theatres on the American scene was on the decrease.

"If I were just graduating from UNC today, I would think twice before I started off to New York to write songs for a living. It would be far more practical for me to start 'Adler's Elevator Shoe Company.'

"It takes over a half a million dollars to produce a Broadway musical play today. When I went

Lenski To Get Honorary Degree

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio—Dr. Gerhard Lenski, Jr., professor of sociology at the University of North Carolina, will be awarded an honorary degree June 8 at Wittenberg University's annual commencement exercises.

Dr. Lenski will receive an honorary doctor of laws degree.

He joined the faculty of the University of North Carolina last autumn, after teaching for 13 years in the sociology department at the University of Michigan.

Before making the jaunt to Wittenberg for the commencement exercises, Dr. Lenski will be traveling to Heidelberg, Germany, where he will take part this spring in the centennial observance of the birth of Max Weber, Germany's foremost sociologist. He was invited to take part by the German Sociological Society.

His book, "The Religious Factor," published in 1961, was printed in a revised paper back edition in 1963 and is now being translated into Spanish and German.

The book was one of those selected last summer for inclusion in the new White House Library.

He is also co-author of the book, "Principles of Sociology," published in 1956.

In addition to these books Dr. Lenski has published a number of works in scholarly journals here and abroad and is working on a third book, "Power and Privilege," scheduled for publication sometime in 1965.

Dr. Lenski was born in Washington, D. C., in 1924, where his father was for many years pastor of Grace Lutheran Church.

At Yale University Dr. Lenski earned Phi Beta Kappa honors in his senior year, 1947. He went on to earn the doctor of philosophy degree at Yale in 1950. During World War II he served with the U. S. Air Force in England, France and the Azores.

During his 13 years on the Michigan faculty Dr. Lenski was promoted from instructor to professor. In 1959 he was presented the university's annual award for teaching excellence.

At present Dr. Lenski is serving as a consultant for a study of Catholic schools that is being conducted by the National Opinions Research Center of the University of Chicago. On several occasions he has served as a consultant to the secretary for urban church planning of the National Lutheran Council.

A Misunderstanding With Paul Dickson

In an editorial in Tuesday's DTH, we stated that we felt Presidential candidate Paul Dickson had been somewhat contradictory and inconsistent in his statements concerning a public accommodations law. We stated that Dickson had earlier said he felt an accommodations law was necessary, but was now saying that he was not in favor of it. We took Dickson's avowal of the necessity of the law to mean that he favored its passage.

Apparently we have done candidate Dickson a disservice. He, and others, now tell us that what he originally said was that a public accommodations law might be necessary barring productive community action in the situation. He says that he does not favor the law, and never has favored it, but that communities which refuse to act to solve their own racial problems leave little or no choice.

He says that it is now, and always has been, his opinion that local community action is much the best way to eliminate discriminatory practices. Dickson also makes quite clear that he is firmly committed to the elimination of those practices and strongly backs the student boycott as a means to that end.

We apologize to Mr. Dickson for the misunderstanding, and we now believe that his position has been consistent.

However . . .

Over A False Issue

There really is no point in finding out what the various candidates think about public accommodations in the first place. And not all of them have anything to do with the boycott either.

There is no question but that students should find out what candidates for president, vice-president, DTH editor and legislative seats think on the boycott. All of these officers may have some influence on this issue as it pertains to students during the coming year.

However, asking candidates for secretary, treasurer and Honor Council seats this question is irrelevant to the campaign. The offices of secretary and treasurer are set up so that they have little or no say in administration policy other than in their specific areas of concern. It is already a policy for Student Government funds not to go to segregated establishments, so that the boycott can not affect the treasurer. And heaven knows what students think the secretary can do about it.

Even more irrelevant are the questions on public accommodations. Not one of the candidates running can possibly do anything about a public accommodations law either in Chapel Hill or in Washington. They're not running for the Board of Aldermen and they don't plan a Washington lobby as a Student Government function. Their opinions on this bill are of no importance to their campaigns.

The only candidates who will have a chance to express their views on this issue other than DTH editor, are the candidates for NSA delegate. The civil rights bill before Congress came up last summer at NSA without the FEPC provision and was passed. It is likely to come up again in one form or another.

Students should try to get to the issues that will affect the campus while they still have a chance to query the candidates.

Pete Ivey, Manatees And Drift Theories

Greensboro Daily News

U.N.C. news bureau chief Pete Ivey, who fortunately enjoys a good prank, was victimized the other day by a hoax that tells us more about science than about gullibility.

It seems that as Mr. Ivey and his crew were preparing releases on a conference on evolution at the Chapel Hill botany department they received what purported to be a jazzed-up popularization of a paper which Prof. Thomas Barr, Jr., of the University of Kentucky, was to read to the conference. It was entitled "Alpine Speciation of Trucheus (Coleoptera Trichechidae) in the Southern Appalachians." The gist was as follows:

. . . The Coleoptera, popularly known as the manatee or sea cow, spend most of their lives under rocks, since cosmic radiation is fatal to those large beasts. During the mating season, however, it is necessary for these primitive coleoptera to emerge from their retreats.

This proves the correctness of the continental drift theory. The Alps and the Appalachians must once have been parts of a single mountain chain, perhaps continuous with Mount Ararat. The story of Noah's flood is a distorted version of the disruption of this mountain chain.

The "release" went on to compare the behavior of the "sea-cow" to the now-mythic behavior of the lemmings and to the behavior of college students flocking each spring to Daytona and St. Augustine.

Pete Ivey and his staff obligingly (and innocently) sent out a news release which was widely printed around the country, only to discover too late that the sea-cow story was a hoax perpetrated at Professor Barr's expense.

Well, as a mattter of fact we remember reading about the sea-cow and its peregrinations and about the possible continuity between Mount Mitchell and Ararat, and the telling thing is that with eyebrows arched in only slight surprise we thought: "Possibly true for the moment, but sure to be overthrown in five years." For the truth is, as Jacques Barzun tells us in his stimulating new book on science, that scientific hypothesis has been in rapid flight from the world of ordinary common sense for half a century.

Two things, in our world bombarded by accelerated scientific discovery, have become nearly commonplace: The way the scientist sees the universe has little or nothing to do with the universe as reflected in the everyday eye; and for every new theory there is an equal (and equally surprising) counter-theory.

It is nothing new to read, as we did the other day, of the sighting from Mount Palomar of a retreating galaxy whose speed breaks every yardstick of age and distance in the universe. We read, we shrug, we move on to Little Orphan Annie.

If the sea-cow hoax duped the public, it is difficult to say whom the laugh is on—if there really is a laugh involved.

Statements Of UP Candidates

Bob Spearman - President -

The year 1964-65 is one of both unprecedented challenge and unprecedented opportunity for student government at Carolina. In September, the University will have a new chancellor and a new administration. Many of the old stereotypes of student government-administration relations will no longer be applicable. The working relationship which SG sets up with this new administration next year will in a large part determine our effectiveness and strength in the years ahead. The broad lines of policy which I feel we need to follow in this area include; effort to work in close cooperation with the faculty and administration on matters of mutual concern, insistence on the integrity of the student judiciary, and pressure for student positions on faculty committees. Such a program will not only maximize our own authority, but it will also enable us to best serve the interests of the student body. But such policies can only be successful with a student government which is clear in its goals, and experienced both in dealing with the faculty and administration and in the running of student government itself.

The most important challenge which we face is to remodel and redirect student government so that it better serves the academic, social and cultural needs of the student body in mens and womens residence halls, in fraternities, and in sororities. In the past student government has centered too much upon its internal mechanics and perfection. A consistent and coherent set of laws and better internal organization are important only as a means and not as an end themselves. The end or purpose of student government, as of any government, must be to promote the welfare of those whom it governs.

In the area of residence hall life, the work of the Residence Hall Improvements Committee, initiated by Don Carson, will be of prime importance. This committee will receive strong student government support as it works jointly with the University Administration to improve the living conditions and social facilities of residence halls.

The further investigation of the Residence College System will also be a top priority program. Such a program would promote residence hall life not only within each hall, but also within groups of residence halls such as the upper and lower quads. It might entail the division of the MRC into smaller governmental units. These local units would be in close touch with the needs of their constituents to provide suitable social and academic programming.

Another phase of the redirection, involves an increased concern with the student's academic life. Essential here are the creation of a Fine Arts Festival, the publication of a course booklet describing elective courses from a student viewpoint, and work with the administration and faculty to secure more seminar sections and decrease the use of mass lecture classes.

In the area of fraternity and sorority life, there is need for student government support for stronger self government through the IFC and Pan Hellenic Councils. In addition, extensive efforts will be needed to help fraternities meet the demands of deferred rush.

Finally, Student government must take greater cognizance of the increasing problem of relations between the state and the University exemplified by the gag law enacted by the last N. C. General Assembly. It is essential to the long run best interests of both our school and the state that student government play a large role in communicating the nature and goals of this institution to the state at large. This can be done through press releases, student personal appearances, and the use of TV and radio.

If student government is to continue to play the large role which it has traditionally held in this university, it must emancipate itself from trivia and attend to these real and important concerns of the student community.

Don Carson - Vice-President -

Each year, as spring elections get into high gear, we naturally begin to think about the real meaning and purpose of Student Government. At the present time it costs in excess of $180,000 per year to operate Student Government. This sum, of course, comes from our own pockets through student fees. I firmly believe that Student Government must put greater emphasis on those things which are of real and direct benefit to the students.

Needless to say, the philosophical aspects of Student Government have their place, and certainly the judiciary is the backbone of Student Government. These areas, however, rarely if ever directly affect a large part of the student body. There is a very real danger that Student Government could reach a point where it would just manufacture committee reports and revise its own by-laws.

Most of our residence halls are almost devoid of social facilities and social programs. Over the years, the University Administration has failed to face this problem. Last fall, through the work of the Residence Hall Improvements Committee, Student Government initiated a social room "pilot project" which is now under construction in Joyner Residence Hall. More important, however, is the fact that the University Administration has agreed that it will finance other such improvements in other residence halls throughout the campus if the "pilot project" is successful. In the future the work of the Residence Hall Improvements Committee should be greatly expanded. This could be done by assigning a committee vice-chairman to be in charge of the various geographical areas of campus.

The Vice President of the Student Body is, of course, the speaker of the Legislature and is directly responsible for the conduct of that body. In the past, the Legislature has not had optimum effectiveness because of a mere lack of communication. This problem could certainly be alleviated by publishing copies of the legislation which could be posted in the residence halls and in the fraternity and sorority houses, and through more adequate coverage of legislative sessions and committee hearings in the Daily Tar Heel.

There are many other areas to which Student Government must direct its attention in the coming months. One of these is certainly deferred rush, which is going to effect the residence halls as well as the fraternities. This system is going to cause overcrowding in the residence halls and financial problems in many fraternity houses. It will be an important function of Student Government to study and make suggestions for the alteration of the system.

The University Party has presented a consise platform of specific suggestions for a more effective Student Government. I believe that we must commit ourselves to programs of direct action rather than mere idealism and high - sounding philosophy; and ever more important, Student Government must represent as it leads.

Priscilla Patterson - Secretary -

The backbone of any office is the secretary. This is true not only in industry but also here on our campus in Student Government.

But during the past year, the secretary and the secretariat have been unusually inefficient. As a result of this inefficiency, Student Government has been hampered in its progress.

My platform would revamp the secretariat and make Student Government an efficient, worthwhile organization. I would combat Student Government's inefficiency by the introduction of three procedural changes. The first of these changes would be a new filing system.

At present there is no systematic method for finding letters, bills, or other relevant matter as everyone who has access to the files uses a different method of filing. I would establish a new system where correspondence, research material, and Student Government material would have separate files, each of which would have a standard topic index and thus alleviate many of the present method's shortcomings.

Another area of concern has been the lack of interest among the secretariat members. Here, too, I believe my platform would solve this problem by assigning each member of the secretariat to a specific department or executive member of Student Government. In this way there would be more interest built up as each person would only have one area of responsibility and concern. I would also ask Student Legislature for funds so that the secretariat's members could be paid without resorting to the sub rosa methods used by the present administration.

I would also change the present mailing system. Here I feel a new routing procedure could cure many of the present ills. At present mail is redirected to the appropriate persons but this may take several weeks. I propose a regular schedule with the committee heads or secretaries so that they might get their correspondence at regular intervals and not have to wait for it. In this way, the various branches of Student Government could react to important issues without waiting for a long time before hearing about them.

My last area of concern is shouldering some of the President's work. Instead of directing all correspondence to him, I would answer all letters that did not require his attention and time.

Thus, I believe I have a very sensible and workable platform to revamp the inefficiency of Student Government. I will devote the necessary time to this program and am willing to take full responsibility for it. I hope that you will consider my platform and vote for me as Student Government Secretary.

Statements Of SP Candidates

Paul Dickson - President -

With the arrival of a new Chancellor, next year will be vitally important for Student Government.

It is mandatory that Student Government show strength, and at the same time, a willingness to work with the new administration.

Therefore, we propose a 3-day conference with the Chancellor and members of his new administration and with Student leaders, past and present. We feel this gesture will establish a good working relationship upon which we can build this year and in the future.

As President of Everett this year, I am more than aware of pressing problems facing the residence halls and will offer a program to alleviate these needs. establish a speaker bureau to bring outstanding campus speakers into the residence halls.

We advocate strengthening the Editor's Roundtable so that each residence hall might have a newspaper, with advertising, which would establish a closer relationship between students and their government. We have found the Daily Tar Heel lacking in this area.

In the past, the Student Party has worked for physical improvement of residence hall facilities. It was the Student Party that established social rooms and the television sets in those rooms. This year, we shall continue efforts in this area.

We would like to see students on faculty and administrative committees such as the Faculty Committee on Curriculum.

This year, we began work on a free course evaluation booklet for which the Academic Affairs Committee has been compiling information for publication in the near future.

We are seeking to re-establish University reading day (s) before examination periods. We now have faculty support and we feel this program will be a success.

Through my work on the Men's Honor Council, and the Attorney General's staff this summer, I definitely see a need for redefinition of the campus code so that it applies to the students in conduct directly relatable to the University and not at all times, as it is now.

We will work in cooperation with the Consolidated University Student Council to bring more girls to the campus from Raleigh and Woman's College on CU Day and the Jubilee weekend. This program was started this year, but more girls and better organization are needed.

We will work with the Women's Residence Council to grant Senior women open hours and the right to live in apartments with parental permission.

I want to establish an international students' director and an international students' house. I have seen a similar program in action in Viet-Nam, and I know it can be successful. It is important that we be concerned with the image of our University in countries abroad.

As the executive of Student Government, I would feel obligated to seek free and equal service for all students. I would not pretend to represent the entire student community, however I would ask you on a personal basis not to patronize those businesses that do not serve all of our students.

Jeff Davis - Vice-President -

Student Government must benefit the Student Body. There are two categories of action by which it can achieve this. One category is improvement in its own internal machinery—rewriting, if necessary, its bylaws, electiin laws, and statutes to insure that it represents the students more fairly and more effectively.

There are (other) areas within or related to Student Government which warrant thorough investigation and reevaluation in the coming years, such as the Resident Advisor Program and the Campus Code.

The other field of action in which Student Government can benefit the Student Body is the field of direct action on specific problems facing students at our growing university. Such direct confrontation of problems has produced in the past the Coed Visiting agreement, the Television Loan Fund, and other beneficial programs. But this field is practically inexhaustible in providing opportunities for strong action. The increase in enrollment and the changes precipitated in the academic and social context of the student by that increase alone have created manifold problems—and opportunities—in this area, especially in the fields of 1) communication between the students and their student government, 2) social opportunities for all students, and 3) academic programming and student representation.

In the first of these fields, the Editors Roundtable is the best potential solution. A bill presently before Student Legislature would make the Roundtable a permanent committee of all dormitory newspaper editors. Reorganization of the Roundtable could provide a News Service to all dorm papers and also stablize and expand the role of dorm papers in university life.

To improve available social outlets Student Government must support more projects like Consolidated University Day. Not only are physical facilities for dating unfortunately inadequate, due to past oversight of the administration and the state, but the ratio of men to women students makes dating difficult. Pending long range solution of this situation, Student Government can alleviate the problem by bringing women students from area colleges to our campus for selected social functions, such as Jubilee, throughout the year.

In the area of academics, Student Government must this year take a more active role in seeking representation on faculty committees on Curriculum and Planning. We might investigate the feasibility of establishing a Student Advisory Committee to the Chancellor on Academics, such as exists at UCLA, the University of Minnesota, Sarah Lawrence, and other colleges and universities.

The office of Vice-President is centrally important in the complex operations of Student Government; experience in administration and leadership is essential. Insights gained through direct experience in Student Government will be of vital importance this coming year. For this reason I ask your support for Vice-President on April 4.

Madeline Gray - Secretary -

The duties of the Secretary of the Student Body are often misunderstood. The Secretary does not take minutes in the Student Legislature nor does she occupy merely a figurehead position. Rather, the Secretary of the Student Body is in charge of establishing and coordinating a secretariat which is responsible for the typing and filing of Student Government correspondence and records.

A well organized and efficient secretariat would contribute directly to o more efficient executive and would be indespensible for more effective student government. This would be my overall objective as Secretary of the Student Body.

Having worked directly in the Student Government office and with the secretariat this semester, I am completely familiar with the problems still confronting the office and the procedures which should be changed. However, because we are students administering a student government, we are limited by several factors such as the length of the daily office hours, the budget, and the secretarial experience of members of the secretariat. Therefore, I would advocate simple and direct office procedures. I would establish a secretariat with more ability resulting from selection based on office work experience and knowledge of Student Government. There must be a well organized and proficient secretariat which I would effect by means of an initial orientation of general office procedures and a delegation of secretarial duties so that through familiarity with their job the girls would increase their skills and remain interested in their positions.

The position of Student Body Secretary is directly involved with the executive branch of Student Government. However, all branches depend on the Secretary to help with lengthy and complex projects. Therefore the Secretary must have a practical knowledge of all aspects of Student Government, a knowledge which can only come from working directly in the Student Government office. It will also be essential to have a Secretary who has had specific experience in the Secretariat and can help orient the new Executive Secretary who will be hired on a permanent basis next year.

Since I know the technical responsibilities of the position of Secretary of the Student Body, I would be able to extend the position into the field of creative contributions to Student Government —contributions of permanent and practical value.

It is true that I have served as Student Executive Secretary this semester. But in order to reorganize the office procedures and establish a secretariat which would be a more valuable asset to Student Government, I must have the authority that will come through the campus-wide election on April 14.

Notice

The statements appearing today are those of the University Party and Student Party candidates for President, Vice-President, and Secretary of the Student Body. Space limitations prohibited the statements of the candidates for Treasurer from appearing today. They will appear in the DTH tomorrow.

All candidates for Big Four offices, DTH Editor(s) and NSA are reminded that endorsement letters are due this afternoon at 3 p.m. They are subject to the following restrictions:

1. Two letters may be submitted for each candidate for President, with the total number of signatures on both letters not to exceed 30 names.

2. One letter may be submitted for each candidate for the remaining offices listed above. Candidates for Big Four offices shall be allowed 15 signatures, NSA candidates 10 signatures, and Daily Tar Heel editor(s) 20 signatures.

There are no specific restrictions on length for endorsement letters, but conciseness will aid handling and speed publication. No letters will be accepted for publication after today.

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel encourages its readers to express their views on any subject of interest, but reminds them that space requirements place certain restrictions on length.

Letters should be typed, double-space, and not longer than two pages in length. As the editorial page is made up one or two days in advance, and the volume of correspondence is often quite large, letters may not appear until several days after they are submitted. We will make every effort, however, to print ALL letters that do not violate standards of good taste, and which bear the name and address of the sender. Names can be withheld only under most unusual circumstances.

Library Building Won't Reduce Space

The concern of students and library employees over the reduction of the Graduate Reserve Reading Room of Wilson Library by the addition of new library offices was termed "unfounded" here by library administrator John H. Gribbon.

Construction is not expected to reduce the size of the room to inconvient proportions, he said.

Gribbon was informed of some student employe dissatisfaction at the decision to reduce the size of the room.

Building is to begin soon after the spring semester ends. The new offices will house the chief bibliographer and his staff.

"Only a small percentage of the present shelving space will be involved." Gribbon said. Currently, the Reserve Reading Room has over 11,000 volumes covering 325 different courses.

"If conditions become too crowded, we will make other arrangements but we don't anticipate any difficulty," he said.

Gribbon suggested that reserve books could be moved to another room in the library if conditions became croweded.

"All reserve books will be moved to the new Undergraduate Library after its construction in one or two years, anyway," he said.

These Fellas . . .

NOT GOING WELL.—Basketball Coach Dean Smith and assistant coach Kenny Rosemond watch glumly as the Tar Heels fall prey to Duke in the regular season's final game. The two have already hit the trails of high school basketball prospects in hopes of landing another Brown or Rosenbluth.

Huge Guard Signs Here

Jimmy Sheehan, a 6-3, 210-pound guard from Wilmington, Del., has signed a grant-in-aid at the University of North Carolina.

Sheehan also played two years of varsity basketball at the Salesianum School at Wilmington and was the district champion in the discus as a junior.

"Jimmy is a linebacking specialist and a good one," commented UNC Assistant Coach Vito Ragazzo. "He has the earmarks of a fine college prospect. His high school coach, Dim Montero, praises him as the perfect boy to coach."

Sheehan, who was a starter at the highly regarded Salesianum School for two seasons, was considered by his teammates the Mr. Clutch of the squad. He had a knack of coming up with the big play, the fumble, the interception.

Spring is here and the cry of the hunter is heard in the land. Armed with promises of free education, dreams of fame and glory, and—sometimes—cash, he stalks his prey, an exotic and comparatively rare species of homo sapiens known as the star schoolboy athlete.

Because of its rarity the quarry has great value. And to the hunter, who also spends part of his time coaching football and basketball in college, it is the source of all that is good and beautiful. Consequently, the pursuit is not haphazard as is the approach to bagging duck, say, or pheasant. No, the hunt is organized with the care and precision of a major sales campaign, which is probably a more apt analogy at that.

Tom Nugent, the head football coach at the University of Maryland, is a typical hunter. His grounds include Maryland, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and parts of New York and New England. During the off season he spends a great deal of time cultivating the high school coaches, star players, parents, and Maryland alumni associations in this area; he speaks at nearly 100 banquets, mostly those honoring high school lettermen, and during the late winter he generally spends more time on the road than not.

There is little danger that he'll get lost. Coach Nugent knows the territory well. It is carefully divided into segments with his seven assistant coaches assigned responsibility for each. Their first responsibility is sifting out the top players in the area, which contains about 900 high schools and 100,000 young players.

They use newspapers, tips from alumni and well-wishers and lists of all-states, all-county, and all-league teams. Most professional teams keep track of the best players in their area and provide their names to college coaches in return for help when it's their turn to draft college players. The chief original source, however, is in questionnaires, sent out to all the high school coaches, asking the names of their outstanding players plus those they've competed against.

The Maryland coaches will view game films of the top 100 or so. Those who demonstrate the potential for playing college ball will be visited by coaches and helpful alumni. The boys will be dined and treated to films of Maryland games. The interested ones will be invited to visit the Maryland campus.

Sometime during the late winter and early spring, about 30 will sign "tenders," which are, in effect, contracts by which they agree not to accept scholarships from any other school in Maryland's league, the Atlantic Coast Conference. The time for signing tenders varies from league to league; the signing already has taken place in the Southwest Conference, but it may not begin in the Big Ten until after April 1.

Under National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) rules, a boy may sign tenders in as many conferences as he wishes. On May 20, however, they will sign national letters of intent. These are binding on most NCAA schools, with the exception of the six-team Athletic Association of Western Universities (California, Stanford, UCLA, etc.) and some major independents, including the service academies.

Despite the organization and system, there are many factors the coaches can't control. One is the constant upgrading of college entrance requirements for all students, including athletes. This has resulted partly from the increased numbers of students demanding entrance to colleges and universities, partly from pressures on college administrators to bar athletes whose entrance exams and high school grades indicate they have no business pursuing higher education.

"As soon as we find a boy who can play for us, we have to learn if he can do college work," says Nugent. "About one-fourth of the students at Maryland flunk out each year; we can't afford for many of those to be football players." Moans one Big Ten line coach: "When I think of the kids we have to turn down, I could cry."

There are other factors that recruiting can't control. A prospect may be swayed by a parent or high school counselor. He may decide that another school better meets his educational needs. Nearness to home often makes a difference. Chris Dill is a 6-foot-5, 220-pound tackle at St. John's College High School in Washington, D. C. Dill has signed a tender with Maryland because: "I like the idea of going to school close to home and my girl friend. And, I want to settle here. Going to Maryland will give me good contacts in the area after I graduate."

The competition for those who qualify athletically and academically is spirited and sometimes brutal. Brendan McCarthy, a high school all-American fullback at DeMartha High School in Hyattsville, Md., has been approached by nearly 100 colleges and hasn't decided on one yet. "Sometimes my mother almost goes crazy trying to keep track of all the coaches and alumni who call on us," he says.

David Brinkley's Speech

By DAVID BRINKLEY

DAVID BRINKLEY

About two years ago Washingington was able to enrich and broaden the American language, again.

I say again because it had already introduced (or dragged) into common usage such horrors as finalize, optimize, extrapolate, and other ugly, cumbersome words and phrases that fell from the tongue not trippingly but soggily.

This military and bureaucratic distortion of the language is one of the minor problems of our day, offering no serious threat to the health of the Republic, and not likely to bring down the temple.

Finalize simply means to finish. Optimize means to perfect. Extrapolate means to project. I don't know why the government likes to use these ugly and cumbersome words instead of their clear, simple and familiar synonyms.

But it may be that it sounds more important to say something is finalized than to say it is finished, and of course everyone wants to be important, or to appear so. These words may also sound more expensive. If whatever project is being described cost 12 billion dollars of the taxpayers' money, when it is said to be finalized, it sounds as if we're getting a little more for the money than if it is simply said to be finished.

The result is a vocabulary so damp and muddy you feel if you walked through it it would stick to your shoes.

It is, of course, distressing to English professors, and to other members of our small, ragged band who care both about what is said and about how it is said. But our numbers are small, and much as I hate to admit it, we probably are not very important anyway. And so all this is not really dangerous to the republic. However, as I say, about two years ago Washington again contributed to the American language, this time by developing an entirely new phrase and formally introducing it to a waiting and hungry world.

The phrase was, and is, news management.

A lot of people who had never been heard to say finalize, optimize, or extrapolate, did find it necessary and desirable to clutch at that phrase and to keep it alive—in the newspapers, on the air, in political speeches, in reflectorized bumper stickers, and in those cozy little printed pamphlets politicians are so fond of passing out at ladies' club meetings.

The phrase was brought into existence—unwisely — by Arthur Sylvester, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Public Affairs, who now wishes he hadn't.

It was seized on and kept alive because it met a need and served a purpose.

The purpose was to furnish a weapon to the enemies of the Kennedy administration, and they used it in an attack that lasted as long as he lived, and longer.

They attacked with the charge his administration was managing the news—that is, controlling and distorting it—so as to make him look good, managing it so the bad features were concealed and the good ones magnified.

One example of how the weapon was used:

A man named Victor Lasky wrote a book, (or something that looked like a book,) called J. F. K. The Man and the Myth . . and it was unrelentingly and stupidly critical from first page to last.

I describe it in these harsh terms not because it attacked Kennedy. There was nothing wrong in doing that, and there were several areas that invited attack. I speak of the book disparagingly not because it was critical but because it was so crude, coarse, poisonously biased, and so badly done. Though in my opinion it was an artistic flop, it was and is a great commercial success, on the best seller list for months.

And one of the book's principal charges is that Kennedy managed the news so as to conceal his failures.

Lasky, nevertheless, managed to run on for 700 pages describing his failures. So in that respect the book was its own denial of its own charge. If Kennedy managed the news to conceal his failures, he certainly did not conceal them from Lasky.

Nevertheless, the phrase "news management" has been taken seriously by a lot of intelligent people. Proof of that is the fact that when I was invited here to speak, I was asked to discuss the subject: Moulding of the Public Mind—The Control of Information.

If it is worthy of being talked about at a Symposium like this, it must have impressed a number of serious people, and it must have caused some concern about what is being done to us by manipulation of the facts about public affairs.

Well, I think the phrase—and the fears that go with it—achieved such common currency because—(again)—it serves a purpose and meets a need.

The purpose was to furnish a weapon for attacks on the Kennedy administration, and while it has not been heard so much since he died, I assume it will reappear on the editorial pages, in the columns, the broadcasts, and the magazines, and be used against the Johnson administration and others to follow.

It is a useful device because it can be used to deny a fact the critic does not like and does not want to hear. If the Government reports something is going well, its political opposition can say it is not going well at all, that this is only news management.

If an editorial writer or broadcaster wants to make a point that is a little difficult to support, he can state what he thinks is the fact (or what he wishes were the fact) and that anything to the contrary is news management.

People who tune in a news program and hear, or see, something that upsets their comfortable political views, or challenges their prejudices, then can write—and do write—nasty letters saying that is a lie and you are only managing the news.

A fact, an event, a report, a comment, a picture that does not fit the popular conception, the conventional wisdom, can be (and now is) dismissed as news management.

The phrase was first heard in reference to a particular circumstance, and has since been repeated and popularized to refer to all circumstances.

It is heard most from newspaper and broadcast editors who are a long way from Washington and who in this case don't really know what they are talking about. In Washington, among reporters and writers and editors who do know, the term is almost never heard, except as a joke.

In my opinion, the phrase itself (and the whole cobweb of thinking that goes with it) is a hoax.

A newspaper in New Orleans, Louisiana, buys (and occasionally prints) the Walter Lippmann column. But when Lippmann writes something that does not square with the paper's own editorial line, the column is dropped for that day. But the same paper accuses the Government of news management.

There's a chain of extreme right-wing newspapers in the Southwest that gives its readers only those news items that happen to fit its own political slant, playing down (or leaving out) those that don't fit, while the editorial page accuses Washington of news management.

There are others in other states doing the same thing, and somehow failing to see their hypocrisy.

During the crisis over the Russian missiles in Cuba, the White House and the Pentagon announced certain military movements to Florida and other places, they announced this or that ICBM unit had been alerted and this or that military preparation was being made.

The purpose in making these announcements was, (first,) to let the Russians know that we were serious and were ready, if necessary, to fight. The second purpose was to let the American people know we had a dangerous crisis.

Now you could call that news management. You could say in that case the Government was using news as a weapon, even as a propaganda device.

But it was using it not to make itself look good, but to serve a national purpose. And in those particular circumstances, it is hard to see what is wrong with it.

And in circumstances like that, Arthur Sylvester started the talk about using the news as a weapon.

Since then it has been picked up and repeated and applied to all occasions.

The Federal Government is composed largely of human beings who would rather have favorable notices than unfavorable. So, they can be expected to put out news about their successes more readily, and in richer detail, than news about their failures.

And when they are forced to report a failure ,they can be expected to put on it the best face they can.

But that any failure of any magnitude, (in a society as open as ours,) can be concealed for any length of time is just hard to believe, and I don't believe it.

Most failures—(in the economy, the military, in international affairs)—are so obvious they can't be concealed, however much those at fault might like to.

And my own opinion is that even private and less obvious failures (if they are important) —cannot be concealed for long.

There is political opposition within the executive branch that is always anxious to leak them. There is a political opposition in Congress anxious to investigate them. And there is an active and energetic press willing and anxious to report them.

So, (again), my own opinion is that the charge of news management in Washington is a hoax.

News management, (or control of information,) on the part of local newspapers or broadcasters is another matter. It is difficult to generalize about it, because it varies from city to city.

Some local media are unwilling to antagonize their local leaders and local prejudice. Some are unwilling to antagonize their advertisers.

But even where the local media are timid, or biased, or addicted to managing the news, it seems to me to be less dangerous than it used to be, because now they have competitors.

A local newspaper or broadcaster can no longer be the only source of information in town. There are national magazines of news, comment and opinion, radio and television broadcasts, all of them available to anyone anywhere who cares to read a book or look or listen.

So it is impossible any longer for a local news medium to report things entirely its own way with no competitor to report them another way. Because the competitors are there — every day, every night, every week, every month.

People still go around staggering under a load of misinformation, but if they do it is their own fault. It is because they are are unwilling to take the time or make the effort to read, or look, or listen. It is because in our complex society so many people are so busy with so many other things they simply haven't got, (or won't take,) the time to keep up with what's happening in Viet Nam, or Brazil, or Harlem, or Cuba.

For those who want to know, the information is there and easily available. If some of it is biased one way, some will also be biased another way, and much of it or most of it is not biased at all.

To conclude, the specific subject assigned to me by the Carolina Symposium was: "The moulding of the public mind . . . control of information . . . how free are the press and other publishing media, radio and television."

My answer would be that those who see, (or pretend to see,) a vast national conspiracy, beginning in Washington, to mould the public mind by controlling information are misled, or neurotic, or in extreme cases, as in the case of the right wing crackpots, paranoiac. And a paranoiac cannot be cured simply by proving to him that his phone is not tapped, his mail is not being opened, and that he is not being spied on. His trouble goes deeper than that.

I would further answer that information about the doings of the Government is freely available and easier to get now than it used to be, and easier to get in Washington than in any other capital in the world. Once it is got, it is up to publishers and broadcasters to decide what to do with it.

There certainly are some left in publishing and broadcasting who would like to mould the public mind by distortion and suppression, but it is not easy for them, because now they have competitors. And the press and the broadcasters are just as free as they want to be, and the only limitations are their own energy, economic strength, and courage.

And, finally, if anyone is not informed, it is his own fault.

American Association Of Colleges To Support Massive Federal Aid

WASHINGTON (CPS) — One of the nation's largest college organizations has dramatically reversed its field to support a massive federal aid program for U. S. college students.

The surprise came in testimony by the Association of American Colleges (AAC) before a Senate Subcommittee holding hearings on a bill proposed by Sen. Vance Hartke, D.-Ind.

The bill being considered would liberalize the National Defense Education Act (NDEA) for loans, federal scholarships and government insurance of private loans to students. It would also provide a work-study program, similar to the one proposed by President Johnson in his poverty message.

ACC officials had previously opposed the Hartke program.

But the group's president, the Very Rev. Edward B. Bunn, S. J., told the subcommittee that his organization solidly supported the basic features of the Hartke bill.

The national organization represents 848 colleges offering four-year degree programs. Bunn is president of Georgetown University.

Bunn said many members of his organization have reluctantly concluded that a federal scholarship program "is indispensible to realization of the principle of unrestricted educational opportunity."

Bunn said members were polled recently and an overwhelming majority voted for the four provisions. He described the Hartke bill as "an imaginative and comprehensive attack on the problem of student aid."

The AAC's traditional view, Bunn said, has been that federal aid is justified only when needed to attain a goal of national importance not satisfactorily reachable by state, local and private action.

However, Bunn warned that there is a real danger that state governments might be tempted to cut back their own provisions for scholarships and ultimately throw the whole burden on the federal government.

Bunn said the AAC still had some misgivings about the bill. He said one section of the bill providing a cost of education allowance for colleges admitting federal scholarship holders. Bunn noted that the $350 payment would be a "bounty" that would tempt admissions to give first consideration to scholarship students.

The AAC was also apprehensive, Bunn said, over the proposed extension of the NDEA student loan program to two-year colleges. The extension, he said, would bring under the program 700 to 800 additional schools and reduce the money available to four-year colleges.

Bunn said the work-study program for students received the least favorable response from members of his association. He said they expressed fears that the measure might foster sterile "make-work" activities.

However, Bunn said many members hadn't read details of the plan. He applauded the intention of the bill to limit the work-study programs to activities of "genuine educational value."

Are You Funny As You Think? Look!

By CHUCKLES CLOTFELTER

An open invitation has been extended to collegiate "comedy teams" to yuk it up at the first annual Humor Bowl Championship to be held in New York City during the World's Fair months of July and August.

The invitation is being presented by Claude Wolfe, of Westminster College, Pa., national chairman of the newly forming Intercollegiate Laugh League.

Comedy teams, consisting of five to seven collegians, will present a full hour of competition against each other. They will be scored in events such as monologues, pantomimes, sketch material, improvisations and comedy-team presentations on the basis of a point score for each event.

Each participating college will share in the income from the competition which will be presented in a public place in New York City.

George Q. Lewis, founder of the National Laugh Foundation which sponsored the formation of the Intercollegiate Laugh League, will help co-ordinate activities with the help of the New York Gag Writers Comedy Workshop, the Gagwriters-Roundtable membership and the National Humor Exchange membership.

Jack, Arnie Float Off First At 3-1

By OSCAR FRALEY

AUGUSTA, Ga. (UPI) — It was a confident Jack Nicklaus and an "optimistic" Arnold Palmer against the field Wednesday on the eve of the coveted Masters golf Championship with everyone in the 96-man field hopeful of springing an upset.

The tournament will be televised over CBS-TV on Saturday from 5 to 6 p.m., EST, and Sunday's final round from 4 to 5:30 p.m. In event of a playoff, 18 holes on Monday, it would be televised from 5 to 6 p.m.

Nicklaus, "playing better than ever", and a 3-1 favorite along with Palmer, hoped to become the first man in history to score back-to-back triumphs. But Palmer, who has not won a tournament in six months, said he figured his short game was back to where he could hit the victory trail again.

Every man on the water-soaked scene—56 pros, 14 amateurs and 26 foreigners — thought privately that he might catch lightning in a bottle by winning the four-day grind over the 6,980-yard Augusta National golf club course.

Furgol Speaks Out

Ed Furgol, a former U.S. Open champion, was one of those willing to speak out when he declared that "no man living has a lock on any golf tournament today."

"Nicklaus and Palmer have to control their emotions as much as the most lightly regarded entrant in the field," said Furgol. "It's the good putter who will win and not the long hitter, no matter what they say. Proof is the fact that in the last decade such fellows as Gary Player, Jackie Burke, Doug Ford, Jimmy Demaret, Art Wall and Cary Middlecoff have won."

"This is the greatest putting tournament in golf," Furgol added. "My chances are as good as anybody else and don't overlook Billy Casper, Mason Rudolph, Sam Snead and even Ben Hogan. That Hogan isn't here for fun. He doesn't commit himself unless he has a 60-40 chance going for him."

May Regain Touch

Furgol was one of those who analyzed that Palmer might regain the touch which for a half dozen years has made him "the king" of the fairways. Palmer agreed with a big smile.

"It's been rough," he acknowledged. "But I feel that I've got my putting and short game back and that's all that's been wrong."

Chances were that they would tee off on a soggy golf course. The rolling layout studded with pines, bright colored azalea and white dogwood, has been inundated by torrential rains for the last three days and twice has been closed. This meant that some players would tee off with only one practice round under their belts, and others did not get a tuneup at all.

The weather forecast was for partly cloudy skies, no rain and temperatures in the upper 60's for Thursday. But a "heavy" track was promised, and under those conditions nobody was expected to approach Hogan's winning total of 274 established in 1953.

The tournament "line" listed Player, the 1961 winner; Casper and Tony Lema, last year's runnerup, at 6-1; Snead and amateur Charlie Coe at 8-1, and at 10—such as Hogan, U.S. Amateur king Deane Beman and big Mike Souchak.

Eighty-one-year-old Fred McLeod and 79-year-old Jock Hutchinson, both former U.S. Open champions, will drive off the first tee to open the tournament.

Top pairings include Boros and Beman at 11 a.m., EST; Dow Finsterwald and Player at 11:30 a.m.; Palmer and Labron Harris Jr. at noon; Nicklaus and amateur Downing Gray at 12:30 p.m.; Snead and Coe at 1 p.m.; Lema and British Open champion Bob Charles at 1:30 p.m., and Hogan and amateur Billy Joe Patton at 2 p.m.

Marines Land At Emerson!!

By LARRY TARLETON

Coach Walt Rabb's Tar Heels hope to get back into action today with a scheduled three o'clock game with Camp Lejeune at Emerson Stadium.

The monsoon season has already rained out Monday's freshman game, but unless more rain comes this morning, this afternoon's game will go as scheduled on the soggy playing field.

The Heels have racked up a 6-3 record so far including four straight since their return from their Florida trip. They are now 6-0 at Emerson Stadium and 0-3 on the road.

NC State will be the Heels' opponent tomorrow as they open their ACC season. Carolina has played three practice games against ACC opposition, winning twice against Duke and losing to Wake Forest. Duke and Wake meet today in their ACC opener.

Jack Stallings' Deacons have been made the ACC favorites again this year. They lost only one starter from last year's championship team, and the returnees include sluggers Bill Scripture and catcher Wayne Martin. Scripture hit .360 last year and led the nation with 13 homers and 54 RBI's. Martin hit .382 with 12 home runs and 50 runs batted in.

Despite this, the Tar Heels feel they have a good chance to dethrone the Baptists. They defeated the Deacons in two straight games at the end of last season while on the way to a second place finish. Actually, the Tar Heels lost the fewest games of any ACC team last year while compiling their 20-9 mark.

Ken Willard, Jim Speight, Bill Brown and Co. have begun to rap the ball in the last few games. They have collected 11, 10 and 9 hits in the last three games after being about as explosive as a cap pistol in the early games.

Willard really broke loose in the last game with two homers and seven RBI's. His first blast, a grand slam in the first inning, was one of the longest blows ever hit at Emerson. Rabb said, "I've been coaching here since 1947 and I've seen some good hits. That one earns the blue ribbon."

Mike McLaughlin will probably be the Heels' starter against the Marines this afternoon with either co-captain Bil Haywood or Spence Willard facing the Wolfpack tomorrow.

FCA MEETING TONIGHT

There will be a special meeting of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes tonight at 8 o'clock in 304 Woollen Gym.

Rev. Edgar Williams of Pope Prison in Raleigh will be the guest speaker.

Baseball Pitcher Umbricht Dead At 33 — Cancer

HOUSTON (UPI) — Jim Umbricht, big, courageous right-handed pitcher for the Houston Colts of the National League, died Wednesday of cancer he could not shake off despite a comeback last year.

He was 33.

Death came to the likeable 6-4 215-pound pitcher shortly before 9 a.m. CST Wednesday at the Houston Hospital at which he had undergone surgery in March. "Black mole" cancer that had started in his leg near the groin had spread to other areas and he had had a steady decline since March 16 surgery.

The Colts canceled Friday's exhibition game with Milwaukee in Cocoa, Fla., in memory of Umbricht. Six Colts will be pallbearers at the funeral.

Baseball Commissioner Ford C. Frick said Umbricht was "a fine young man whose life was a credit to the game he loved. But even more, his was a courage that made all his friends better people for having known him."

National League President Warren Giles said, "it is distressing to see death bring an untimely end to what seemed to be a promising career."

Funeral services were scheduled for 2 p.m. Friday in the Settegast-Kopf Funeral Home chapel in Houston. Rev. Harral Dunham of Bethany Methodist Church will officiate. A former teammate of Umbricht, Russ Kemmerer, a Methodist minister, will deliver a eulogy. The body will be cremated following the service.

Umbricht is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Umbricht of Houston, and a brother, Edward Jr., also of Houston. He was a bachelor.

A native of Chicago, Jim Umbricht was a baseball and basketball star at the University of Georgia, from which he got a Bachelor of Science degree in 1953. He played shortstop in his college days but switched to pitcher and broke into professional baseball with the Milwaukee organization in 1953. He developed a good overhead curve and fast ball mixed with a change-up and slider.

Six years later, he was traded to Pittsburgh by the Milwaukee farm system for outfielder Emil Panko.

The Houston organization bought him for $50,000 from Pittsburgh Oct. 10, 1961.

Favorite Sons

By PETE GAMMONS

Fifteen of North Carolina's favorite sons will open on major league rosters when the season gets underway Monday. Six of them may be in the starting lineups for their respective clubs.

The Giants had three ex-Tar Heels in camp, and will start one of them next Tuesday in their opener. Jim Ray Hart of Lenoir has won the third base job, and is expected to give the Giants a big lift. Gaylord Perry of Williamston will be seated in the bullpen, while rookie infielder Hal Lanier was sent to Tacoma last week.

The Orioles also had three local heroes on thier roster, and although two of them, Herm Starrette (Statesville) and Ron Davis (Roanoke Rapids) were sent down, rookie outfielder Sam Bowens may start. The Wilmington native is considered a prime candidate for rookie of the year honors by Oriole manager Hank Bauer.

Jack Horner's Durham hero, Roger Craig is counted on by the Cardinals to bolster their weak staff. They will be disappointed if he doesn't improve upon his last year's record (5-22). Earlier they farmed out pitcher Jerry Wild of Franklin.

The Phillies sent down NC State's Joel Gibson, but still have veteran Laurinburg outfielder Wes Covington.

The Twins are counting on two Tar Heel pitchers to keep them up with the Yankees. Former Needham-Broughton star Jim Roland, who posted a 4-1 record last summer before being sidelined with a bad arm, has apparently shaken the trouble and could be a big help. Veteran Jim Perry, brother of the Giants' Gaylord, will also be in the starting rotation.

The Senators are counting on a repeat of the 1962 performance from Chuck Hinton. The Rocky Mount outfielder hit .314 in '62, but dipped to .269 last year. Another near star saddled with a terrible team is George Altman of Goldsboro. He went to the Mets in the Roger Craig trade. Hoyt Wilhelm (Huntersville) and Ted Abernathy (Stanley) are the mainstays of the bullpen for Chicago and Cleveland. Houston has Skinny Brown, ex-UNC pitcher, as a spot starter and reliever.

North Carolina is well represented in the majors, and is considered a prime area for scouts. Connie Mack used to say it was his favorite hunting ground—"The area crawls with strong-armed kids . . . who could be lured North for $100 and all the water they can drink."

'Big 4 Sports Day' Set For May 5 Here

By FELIPE TOLIVAR

The Eighteenth Annual Big Four Sports Day will take place on May 5 on the campus of the University of North Carolina. The Sports Day, sponsored by the Intramural Departments of the Big Four scholos (Wake Forest, Duke, N. C. State, and Carolina), includes competition in nine different sports and four outing activities, and provides competition for approximately 50 students in each of the schools.

The list of activities includes: Golf, Handball, Horseshoes, Softball, Table Tennis, Tennis, Volleyball, Badminton, and Bowling; and four outing activities of Target Rifle, Bait Casting, Trap, and Archery.

The Big Four Sports Day began in the spring of 1947 when the four schools met on the Carolina campus in a softball tournament. In 1948, Duke hosted a similar tournament, the success of which prompted the Intramural Directors of the Four Schools to expand the competition into several other activities. In 1949, the Sports Day came back to Carolina. Badminton, handball, horseshoes, table tennis and volleyball were added to softball, allowing for competition in six separate areas. In 1950, with State college hosting the event, handball was dropped due to lack of facilities, while golf and tennis were added.

1951 had the Sports Day back at Duke where handball was reinstated and badminton dropped.

No changes were made in the areas of competition until 1955 when badminton was again included.

The rapid growing popularity of bowling as a team sport in the late 50's resulted in its being added to the Sports Day in 1961.

Presently, UNC holds the edge on wins with seven, and a tie with N. C. State. State is close behind with six wins and a tie. Duke has two wins, and Wake Forest one. N. C. State has won the last three Sports Days, and five of the last seven.

The Big Four Rod & Gun meet, held in conjunction with the Big Four Sports Day, began in 1957 when N. C. State hosted the event. The four field activities: archery, bait casting, traget rifle, and trap shooting, were all instituted in 1957.

UNC and State have tied for first place three times in the seven year history of the event, State has been undisputed winner twice, Carolina once, and Wake Forest once.

All activities are open to all students in the Big Four schools except to those earning a Varsity letter in a given sport or related sport.

Peacocks Capture Soccer Title

By PETE GAMMONS

The Peacocks added the campus soccer championship to their list of triumphs this year by defeating DU, 2-0. Barry Pitt and Moose Mustafo scored first period goals and DU was thwarted for three periods to preserve the win. The Peacocks were saved throughout the tournament by five players: Pitt, Mustafo, George Beim (who did not play against DU), Bill Killen, and Bill Schiefflin. In only one game, against the St. A's were they seriously threatened, and in that semi-final match they took advantage of some missing players and pulled the victory out, 1-0.

One hundred and ten softball, horseshoes, and tennis matches have been called off in the past three days due to the rain. Golf also has run into difficulties, and the deadlines have been moved ahead to Wednesday, April 15.

Intramural director Walt Tuthill announced at last week's managers' meeting that dormitory participation had gone up from 28 per cent to 47.56 in the fall figures. He called this "amazing" and said "It exceeded all expectations." The dorm participation had been a key project this year.

The Grail-Mural Banquet will be held April 21. Highlighting the program will be the presentation of all the winners in the different events, and of course the overall winning teams, Phi Kappa Sig and Avery. The Jamboree was held March 23, and consisted of events in a wide variety of sports from half-court basketball to archery.

Panel Agrees Military Costs Hurt Country

Sen. McGovern, Dr. Yarmolinsky Tell Symposium

By KERRY SIPE

"Far from strengthening us, an excess military outlay weakens the country and weakens the economy," said Senator George McGovern yesterday in a Carolina Symposium Panel discussion entitled "Are We Psychologically Prepared For Peace?"

Featured with the recently elected Democratic Senator from South Dakota was Dr. Adam Yarmolinsky, former special assistant to the Secretary of Defense.

Yarmolinsky, presently connected with the President's Special Poverty Program, agreed that there is no point in spending 50 million a year to protect security unless non-military projects at home make that securify worth protecting."

Money currently being spent on military defense should be diverted to other internal needs such as the Johnson poverty program, said McGovern.

"Both sides of the Iron Curtain have already stockpiled enough bombs and missiles to destroy the world several times over," he said. "Of course we must maintain defense forces, but if we are to meet the equally important demands of projects at home, we must use our money more wisely."

McGovern said that the military gap that once exisited between the United States and Russia has been closed for several years.

"It is time we took our emphasis from the military and placed it on those problems closer to home," he said.

Yarmolinsky disagreed that the defense program had grown much larger than it needed to be.

"We're not adding overkill," he said. "We're merely replacing out-dated, unreliable weapons wiht newer, modern, more dependable ones."

On the cold war, McGovern said, "We are neglecting certain aspects of the international contest that cannot be won in the military arena.

"Khrushchev seeks to bury us, not on the battlefield, but on ideological and moral playing grounds. We must be willing to lead this battle into a field where we can show our greatest and most effective power," he said.

"A nation's security may well be shrinking even as its arms increase."

Intercollegiate Seminar Conducted By Symposium

A program to bring the benefits of the Carolina Symposium to students from other schools and universities was the Intercollegiate Seminar conducted Monday through Wednesday in conjunction with the Symposium speeches.

The Seminar, started in 1962, invited students from several eastern schools to be their guests tended the seminar sessions this year. Representatives of Salem College, Hollins, Randolph-Macon, Kenyon, Dartmouth, Sweetbriar, City College of New York and UNC participated.

The Seminar meetings, held in the mornings, were moderated by Dr. David Brown of the Economics Department and Dr.

A combined group of members of the Men's Glee Club and the University Chorus will participate in a festival today and tomorrow at Woman's College in Greensboro.

Some 50 singers from 16 colleges will take part in the program which will have its climax in a concert in Aycock Auditorium tomorrow at 8 p.m.

Tickets for the concert will be available to the public. Richard Cox of the UNC Graduate School of Music is coordinator.

Court Fines Man

Judge William S. Stewart of the Chapel Hill Recorder's Court levied the penalty against Milford Cordell Hill, who was found guilty of striking and knocking off the glasses of Shelby senior Louis S. Calhoun Jr.

Police officers who had seen the incident swore out complaints against Hill, who had come to the Chapel Hill area to attend a rally of the Ku Klux Klan and see the fasters.

Student Pleads Guilty, Placed On Probation

One student received a two-semester probation and another an official reprimand in Men's Council trials Tuesday night.

In the first case, a student had stolen several sets of keys from the library at different times to have duplicates made. He then returned the keys unnoticed.

He used the keys to get into various seminar rooms and the stacks to find a quiet place to study. He did not allow anyone else to use the keys and did not use them to steal anything from the library.

He was apprehended by Campus Police Chief Arthur J. Beaumont who had been looking for suspects in several thefts at the library this year.

The defendant cooperated after being caught and pleaded guilty. The Council sentenced him to two semester definite probation.

In the second case, a student was charged with lying when he represented a friend as being his aunt so that he might buy a car. His "aunt" signed the sales slip for him since he was under age.

The defendant pleaded guilty and was sentenced to official reprimand.

The same student had also been charged with stealing small amounts of food from his place of employment. The case was postponed until next week to hear more witnesses.

New Budget Is $184,000, Hays Reports

An increase of $8,700 over last year's student budget will bring the new budget's total to $184,000, according to Arthur Hays, chairman of the Student Legislature Finance Committee.

Hays said the Appropriations Committee had originally given the new budget $17,000 in unappropriated funds, which the Finance Committee reduced to $6,000.

Changes in the budget involved cuts and additions to the salaries of the staff of the Daily Tar Heel and appropriations for a six-page edition once a week.

A sum of $1260 was allotted for the publication of a campus humor magazine which will come out four times per year for $.25 an issue.

The Carolina Quarterly's appropriation was restored to the budget and increased by $500, giving it a total of $2,430.

The Majors Handbook, compiled by the Sophomore Class to serve as a guide for those students who desire information about the various fields of specialization at the University, will be included in next fall's Carolina Handbook. Extra funds were appropriated for printing.

Hays estimated the time spent on the budget as totaling 40 hours and commended the members of the Budget Committee for their work.

George Ball Ends The 1964 Carolina Symposium

Reorient Policies, Ball Says

By JOHN GREENBACKER

"We have talked enough about the structural relations between the world's industrial nations and those nations which have in 20 years passed from colonialism to independence," Under secretary of State George Ball said last night in Memorial Hall.

Calling for a continuation of the open trade policy on an international level, Ball said, "The creation of 48 new nations has caused a complete reoperation of our foreign policy."

Ball, who recently returned from an international trade conference of the United Nations in Geneva, called undeveloped nations, "pervaded with a sense of urgency and impatience.

"What unites them," he said, "is a common bond of poverty or an awareness of poverty. They form an amalgamation of resentments."

Citing the undeveloped nations' frequent indifference to East-West relations, Ball said the Northern industrial nations must begin "a redressing of advantages."

Ball defined the two major trade systems in operation in the world today as being the Open System and the Closed System.

"The Open System shows a concern of industrial nations for all countries," Ball said. "The Closed System establishes special discriminatory arrangements between an industrial nation and selected states."

Ball praised the United States' use of this open policy in the past, but criticized the Closed System used by some Western industrial nations today.

"Many Western nations have organized relations for national interests," he said. "Most undeveloped nations dread this 'Neo-Colonialism.' "

Ball said that although our allies have taken a larger responsibility in foreign aid since their recovery from World War Two, the United States' responsibility is still great.

Citing the United States' leading role in international affairs, Ball said, "We must seek a more equitable balance in trade and development."

"We should prefer the industrial nations bind together to aid undeveloped nations," he said. "It must be a wholeheared effort."

After paraphrasing President Johnson on the advantage of the Open System, Ball predicted that soon relations between underdeveloped nations and industrial nations wil be as important as East-West relations.

Sen. Church Is Top Speaker At Mock Convention Here

FRANK CHURCH

Senator Frank Church, Democrat from Idaho and the keynote speaker and temporary chairman of the 1960 Democratic National Convention, will be a featured speaker at the UNC bipartisan Mock Political Convention April 17.

The Mock Convention, held in election years, will select a Presidential and Vice - Presidential candidate from among the national contenders and will choose a model platform.

"It is the views of the students of this campus that we wish to represent," said Convention Public Relations Chairman Charles Heatherly.

In addition to Church, another senator will speak during the three-day Convention. His name will be released at a later time.

Church, named in 1962 by Life Magazine as one of the 100 up-and-coming young leaders in the United States, is the first Democratic senator ever to be re-elected in Idaho.

He is a liberal, and has been strongly identified with conservation, civil rights, public power and foreign relations.

The Idaho senator has spearheaded an economy campaign in foreign aid, successfully reducing military assistance appropriations, especially to prosperous NATO members.

Powder Puff Game Today!

Unless it rains, which never happens in Chapel Hill, the long-awaited battle will take place at 3 p.m. in Kenan Stadium.

Harrison Merrill, who claims he hates rain, is busy thinking up strategy to fool the referee who happens to be his political opponent, Paul Chused. The two Billys, Galantai and Cunningham, on the other hand, are said to be more concerned with getting the phone numbers of their players.

Despite the long layoff for spring vacation and monsoons, both coaching staffs say they are amazed at the girls' great physical condition. Billy Galantai says it is unbelievable. "My tongue hangs out just from watching them," he said. "My eyes pop out," commented Merrill.

Referree Chused warned that he would call penalties if any illegal plays are used. "I'll be watching every girl very closely," he said. "I will follow their

Efforts To Combat Chilean Illiteracy Described

Editor's Note: Cecilia Garjardo of Chile is attending UNC this year on the Foreign Student Leadership Project of the National Student Association. The Chilean literacy campaign described in this article has long been backed by NSA and other American student groups.

The Stray Greeks are holding a car wash tomorrow at Barclay's Texaco on the corner of Franklin and Columbia Streets to raise money for the project. Proceeds will go to the University of Concepcion, Miss Gajardo's school, where it will be used to finance the campaign.

By CECELIA GAJARDO

As a Chilean student attending this University, I have been pleasantly surprised by the interest shown by many American students in our problems. One of the groups on campus, The Stray Greeks, has shown such a special interest that its members have even decided to participate in one of our major projects—a literacy campaign.

One of the worst Latin American diseases is illiteracy. Unfortunately my country is not an exception and still 20 per cent illiterate. This cold number has a much deeper meaning when we think of it as representing about one and a half million men and women who live in ignorance and misery because they never had the chance to enter a school.

My country has an amazing shortage of schools which prevents about 500,000 children from entering school every year. These chlidren, usually belonging to poor families, are absolute illiterates.

In addition, the high cost of living and ow salaries cause about 70 per cent of the pupils to drop out of school before they complete the seventh grade. These forced dropouts are potential illiterates. They will very soon forget the mechanisms of reading and writing due to lack of practice.

This is the reason why we students, who have had the great privilege to get an education, feel that our debt to the rest of our people is great. Although students had always been aware of this debt, not many concrete steps had been taken to diminish it.

This general apathy changed into full activity when a literacy campaign was started formally in March 1963. On every campus, students from different fields were trained in special courses in teaching adults to read and write.

Essentially the purpose of the campaign is to fight illiteracy. But this aspect of education is so closely connected with others that this project is actually one of fundamental education. It includes practical courses such as seinwg carpentry, hygiene and also a complete program of recreational activities.

While students were being trained, an intense propaganda campaign took place in the slums to encourage adults to participate with students in this common effort. Living conditions in these slums have sunk to such incredible levels of poverty that only after being in one of these homes one can understand why some of them show the so-called 'apathy to improvement.'

Basically they are eager to learn; thus the task is not impossible to achieve. Moreover once classes start, they realize that actually they are not too old to learn, and it is much easier to continue.

Two 'teacher-students' are in charge of teaching a group of four or five adults. Each one meets his class twice a week in order that these 'old pupils' can have at least four classes a week.

This way it is possible to complete the course before university exams.

One of the tools is a primer book especially written for adults. Classes take place in their own homes in the slum because there are no schools nor buildings that could be used.

Classes dealing with other aspects are given in the form of lectures to bigger groups. The recreational programs are held in the street. No vehicle can interrupt these performances because these slums are usually built on hills, so streets are only foot paths.

The first part of the campaign has already been completed and we are very proud to be able to say that many Chilean adults will not feel the shame of being illiterates. For us, the students, to participate in it has been one of our most worthwhile experiences, and we too have learned very much. The success already attained has encouraged new groups of students to continue again this March.

The fact that some of my fellow students here want to help us in this task has a beautiful meaning, and I publicly thank them in the name of my fellow students at home and my whole country.

The Obsessed Versus The Convinced

What with the campus in full political swing, it might not be a bad idea to pass on a little observation about trying to understand other people's positions. We have been working at gaining such an understanding for some time now, and all we've learned is that the task is often hopeless. But we have at least learned why it's often hopeless: some people's political ideas simply aren't grounded on reason. Therefore, using reason to try and understand such ideas is like using an axe to shoot down an airplane.

Still, we are convinced that there is a basic difference in the positions different people hold, whether such people be radical, liberal, moderate, conservative or reactionary. And that is the difference between being obsessed by an idea and being convinced of its correctness. The person who is obsessed with an idea can't be reasoned out of it because he never reasoned himself into it. Usually what few ideas he has are compounds of ignorance and emotionalism, with a dash of wishful, short-sighted thinking thrown in. Many otherwise intelligent people fall into this category when it comes to thinking about fundamental ethical and social problems.

The other type of person is the one who promotes an idea or philosophy because he is convinced of its correctness. Unlike his obsessed counterpart, he can usually give a rational summary of points of view other than his own, and evaluate them. In the final analysis, his position is far superior than the obsessed fellow's is. He knows why he believes as he does, can defend his position honorably and consistently, and—because he has used reason to get to his present position—knows his opponent's position too, especially its weak points.

We think that this difference in intelligence of conviction, rather than the fuzzy categories of liberal and conservative, is what really separates the men from the boys, in politics as in everything else.

The Question Of 'Falling Standards'

When answering a question about "falling standards" among today's college students, in Graham Memorial Tuesday afternoon, Dr. Frank Porter Graham said he wasn't worried.

Dr. Frank said he thought too many people judged today's college students by the crowds in Ft. Lauderdale and Daytona Beach, without looking at the positive side of the picture.

The former President of UNC said he had travelled through some 42 states and had been impressed with the large number of students working with NSA (National Student Association), CCUN (Collegiate Council for the United Nations) and students governments.

He also said today's college sudents could be judged by those they pick as their leaders. The former senator said it was not just coincidence that the same name kept coming up in all those states in which he had travelled. It was also the same young man's name that kept reappearing in the United Nations, lauded by African and Asian delegates for his courage and character.

Graham praised this young man and said he was proud to say he was a graduate of this University and now a popular assistant professor at North Carolina State.

Graham was talking about Al Lowenstein, who has recently come under fire from State Sen. Clarence Stone, "the father of the Gag Law," and some of his comrades, for engaging in civil rights protests in Raleigh and Mississippi.

Lowenstein seems to be in an ideal position. He has the respect of Dr. Graham and other men working for world peace and harmony, and the enmity of men who try to defeat an idea by trying to pretend it isn't there.

Sen. Fulbright As Crusader

By MAX FRANKEL
New York Times

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., April 6—If youth counts for anything in American politics, and if this aroused campus town is at all typical, then the Fulbright phenomenon is something to be reckoned with.

Somewhat to his own surprise, Senator J. W. Fulbright has suddenly been cast as a courageous knight slashing away at the myths that govern American politics, and daring to utter the unutterable. The mail response to his foreign-policy speech March 25 was overwhelming. The response to his domestic journey away from the capital last night was even more so.

A capacity crowd of more than 1,700 students, teachers and townspeople turned out on a rainy Sunday night to hear a speech that they might have watched on television.

When the Arkansas Democrat had concluded his hour-long appeal for a more rational division of resources between military and human welfare programs, the audience rose to its feet in an unusally fervent demonstration.

The odd thing about this was that many in the crowd clearly did not agree with everything the Senator had to say in his two big speeches of the last two weeks. And, as some of them noticed, he had said some of it before—when no one was listening.

The response, therefore, is thought here to be an integral part of the sudden Fulbright phenomenon. Some believe that the death of President Kennedy has left a vacuum that young people, especially, are eager to fill with their cheers and their trust. Some contend that the appeal lied less in the novelty of the Senator's assertions than in his effort to make political heresy respectable again.

The chairman of the Senate Foeign Relations Committee is being hailed most of all for his courage, even by those who simultaneously bewail his "tragic" inability to speak out on the greatest issue agitating young people—civil rights.

Before a statewide television audience Sunday night, William C. Friday, 43-year-old president of the University of North Carolina, presented Mr. Fulbright as a man of "proven courage as well as intelligence" whose attack on myths in loreign policy had "justified again the highest expectations of his admiring and trusting national constituency."

The Daily Tar Heel, the university's student newspaper, greeted him as a man of "political guts" whose Southern constituents must now "liberate" him and others from the "dogma of discrimination."

Southern legislators, the paper wrote, "are chained to a role they must act out" on civil rights until ordinary Americans take the Fulbright message to heart, cut loose from established myths on racial questions also, and "release" them from this bond."

As students crowded around Mr. Fulbright they sadly accepted his explanation that he "wouldn't be here" if he spoke and voted as they wished on civil rights. And otherwise, they remarked again and again, he was the "ideal Senator," "if only there were 20 others like you" and "thank you for saying what needs to be said so urgently."

Of 60 questions passed in writing to the Senator after his address, 10 urged him to deal candidly with race relations, a problem he had referred to only as "so far insoluble."

Ten others were impatient with generalities and asked him to begin carving up the military and space budgets right there, or at least to tell mere individuals what they could do to bring reason into politics.

The 40 other questions, some skeptical, some admiring, wanted to know more about everything, foreign aid, the private thoughts of Senators and Presidents, Vietnam, Brazil, Cuba and when will the United States end the military draft?

There was time for only four replies, but Mr. Fulbright's theme was constant: Have confidence in the ultimate value of searching public inquiry and, abroad as at home, minimize the hatreds that divide people by showing generosity in times of crisis. Again the applause was fervent.

At a news conference before his speech the Senator was asked about Cuba—"as always," he noted sadly. He had obviously failed, he said, to put the problem back in perspective because the press and the politicians had seized on the very issue that he had meant to describe as grossly exaggerated.

He was annoyed when asked whether he would accept the office of Secretary of State. No, he replied. Then he asked that the newsmen not stress the answer because it would wrongly imply that he might conceivably be offered the job. He had been in the Senate too long to change, he said, and he was merely trying to talk to his colleagues and to the people.

Treasurer Candidates Issue Statements

Jim Light (UP)

The principal concern of the Treasurer of the Student Body should be the efficient handling of the $180,000 of students' money which flows into Student Government. I feel that the Treasurer can best fulfill his responsibilities in the following ways: (1) by preventing his office from becoming political in character; (2) by organization and better communication between the Treasurer and groups receiving money from SG; (3) by more extensive use of monthly reports; (4) by expansion of the role of the Budget Committee; and (5) by striving to meet the needs of the "mass university".

Some candidates for treasurer in the past have talked of making the office into a political position. In doing so, they would be likely to neglect the primary role of the Treasurer—the efficient handling of the $18 which every student contributes to SG. If these funds are not handled preperly, SG will fall apart for obvious reasons and the student will get little for his money.

The purpose of the office of Treasurer is not to save money, but rather to see that the available funds are used in the best interest of the students. This can be accomplished by not overspending foolishly and by providing a more effective budget for the following year. For these reasons, the Treasurer's job is not one which requires political experience so much as is one which demands technical competence. Finally, the position of Treasurer should not serve as a steppingstone to higher office; the Treasurer should be willing to devote all of his time in SG to that job alone.

Secondly, the Treasurer should attempt to better the communications between himself and the organizations receiving money from SG. This can be done in two ways, depending upon the organization involved. The treaurers of the larger organizations should be in regular contact with the Treasurer of the Student Body so that the organization will not overspend its budget appropriation. For some of the smaller groups, a similar communication could be set up between the Student Body Treasurer and the chairman of the organization.

Third, more extensive use should be made of the monthly reports made by organizations to the Treasurer. These reports serve a twofold purpose: (1) as a check on expenditures of the organizations, and (2) as an aid to the Budget Committee in formulating the budget for the following year.

Fourth, the role of the Budget Committee should be expanded. This would make the Committee more active in working with groups receiving money from SG and would encourage the Finance Committee of SL (which sometimes has relied primarily on its own judgments rather than on those of the Budget Committee) to take the word of the Budget Committee more often than is the case now.

Finally, the Treasurer should do all that he can to see that his job is adequately meeting the needs of the "mass university". The Treasurer should concern himself with such things as residence improvements and the residence college system. He should consult with the administration on these and other, similar projects—not on their financing, but rather on the terms of the projects and the future effects which they might have on SG finances.

Lanny Shuff (SP)

The Student Body Treasurer has the demanding responsibility of drawing up and administering the Student Government Budget. To do this effectively, he must have a working knowledge of Student Government and the various organizations which it finances. Our income this year of $183,889.72 is the largest one ever, thus compounding the responsibility of the Treasurer's position. In composing the Budget, the Treasurer must also make a large number of policy decisions. This makes it even more imperative that he have a broad, working knowledge of student finances.

I have gained valuable insight into the complexity and scope of the Treasure's duties while serving on the Finance Committee of Student Legislature. I have already participated in hearings on two complete budgets as well as reviewing the finance bills in Legislature. As a member of the Audit Board, I have help supervise the Student Activities Fund Office, which is the bookkeeping center for student finances. This experience will help me carry out the following program:

1) Continue the policy begun this year of having organizations receiving money from Student Government submit monthly reports to the Budget Committee to insure proper handling of funds.

2) Inform the small organizations on campus of the procedures involved in obtaining money from the Unappropriated Balance of Student Government.

3) Initiate action in matters where legislation could facilitate more efficient financial policy. The bill I introduced to establish a Revolving Television Fund so that a residence hall now spreads the cost of a new television over a four year period instead of paying the complete cost out of one semester's social fund is an example.

4) Appear before Legislature to explain the Treasurer's position on financial bills, which I have found as a legislator absolutely necessary in many cases.

SP Senior Class Candidates' Statements

Paul Chused (SP) President

Having served as Treasurer of the Sophomore Class and Vice-President of the Junior Class, I have seen both the weak and strong points of class officers. Class officers are not embodied with the powers of student government offices; therefore, for them to be successful, they must be able to develop a high degree of unification. This unity hinges on three main points. First, the class must have an Action President, one who can lead, co-ordinate, and take the time to see that the activity is being carried out successfully. Second, the class must have Action Officers, ones who can work with the President and with their respective committees to see that the class is aware of and able to participate in the planned projects and activities. If these first two points are carried out successfully, then the third points, class support and participation, can enter into and complete the cycle of unity.

With this type of class unity, all activities, whether it be cake sale, Powder Puff football game, combo party, variety show, or Senior Day, will be successful and fun for all.

I only hope you will let Me Serve You to make our Senior year a most noteworthy one and to achieve for the Class of '65 a place in the memory of UNC alumni as one of the greater classes.

Clay Moore (SP) Vice-President

Can class officers bring unity to a class? Realistically speaking the answer is no, for with classes as large and dispersed as we have here at Carolina, complete unity is impossible. But most assuredly, unity to a certain degree is not only possible but also necessary for any class. It is to this unity and to such annual senior functions as Senior Day, the Senior gift, and the efficient financing of such functions that if elected, I pledge my attention in the coming year.

The highest degree of unity possible for a class can be obtained only through an efficiently run Women's and Men's Communications System. Through this system over eighty per cent of the seniors should be able to be contacted for their personal views on such subjects as the controversial merchants boycott. Only through such a system can any class be united whether it be for a cake sale, a varsity show, or a public opinion poll.

Class unity, a voice when necessary in student government, a successful Senior Day and an appropriate senior gift are a must for the senior class. If elected these activities for the senior class shall receive my utmost attention and service in the coming year.

Susan Powell (SP) Treasurer

Having served as this year's Treasurer of the Class of 1965, I feel oriented into the nature of this office and what responsibilities it entails. The Finance Committee, which is selected by the treasurer as soon as the new cabinet takes office, has the responsibility of organizing money-making projects for the class. Ideas which I would like to see continued are those of the bake sale and the powder puff football game. The money we make will compose the finances for combo parties, charity and the annual Senior Class gift. Not only are these fund-raising projects, but they also serve to unify our class.

Next year I should like to see the Senior Class of 1965 strive to become one well-remembered at the University of North Carolina. This can be accomplished by electing willing and competent officers who can organize the class effectively through activities in which every member can participate. I would like to serve as Treasurer of the Senior Class and am willing to give my time and interest in other areas besides this office in order to unify our class effectively. Thank you.

Roxanne Kalb (SP) Social Chm.

Anticipation of our senior year brings with it a natural concern for the years thereafter. But we as seniors will have the last, and best chance, to make this year of university life a truly memorable one. Having been vice president of my freshman class at Hanover College in Indiana, and social chairman for sophomores, I realize the potentialities of a social program, as well as the responsibilities of the social chairman and the individual class members to make the program a successful one.

Talking to various members of our class reinforces my concern for, and desire to have an active social committee, one which is represented by members from all sectors of the campus, and one which will work with me toward a constructive, —and fun—senior program.

I'd like to see the greater potentials of senior day utilized. I'd like to see an all-senior function before graduation that will be remembered by each of us. I'd like to see a program instituted which will be supported by and participated in by all class members, one which we can be proud to back. Most of all, I'd like to do what I feel most qualified to do, to help make our senior year the most successful year for the class of '65.

Kay Hoyle (SP) Secretarty

Besides various technical secretarial duties, a class secretary is chiefly in charge of the Publicity Committee. It is her job to see that members of the class are informed about class activities and functions. With a class the size of ours, the secretary's job becomes even more important in order to bring about class unity and participation. An effective communications committee was set up this year among the girls and plans have been made for such a system among the boys next year.

Having served as secretary of the Junior Class this year, I am well aware of the duties involved in this office and the improvements that need to be made. If I am reelected, I pledge my continued interest and service to the class and its projects.

UP Senior Class Candidates' Statements

Harrison Merrill (UP) President

Harrison Merrill is an All-American swimmer from Atlanta, Georgia. He is presently serving as President of the Junior Class and was formerly Treasurer of the Freshman Class. He is a member of the Order of the Grail and was a member of the Freshman-Sophomore Honors program.

In running for reelection as President of the Class of 1965, I believe I have developed a workable and formidable platform for all members of that class.

My first aim is to provide better communication through extensive use of the secretariat, not only for next year, but also for the years ahead so that our class might hold periodic reunions.

I would also like to make our Senior Week a worthwhile and useful project. It wiuld be the last opportunity many of us will have to see one another for several years and I feel a program of increased group activities, parties, and other group functiins would serve to unite us before we leave the University.

This year our class has had several worthwhile projects such as our cake sale and powder puff football game. These projects have greatly increased our class funds. I feel that we could put these funds to great use by using them for more class functions next year and, if we have any surplus, to leave a momento of our class here such as a class tree or bench as many classes in the past have done.

I feel my experience as a class officer in the past has given me a great deal to work with. I would very much like to lead the class of 1965 next year and in the future. I would appreciate your vote. Thank you very much.

Gene Barrier (UP) Vice-President

Gene Barrier is a Morehead Scholar from Statesville, N. C. He was a member of the freshman tennis team and has served on the Communications Committee, Junior Class Cabinet, as an Orientation Counselor.

To all members of the Junior Class. Because of the present All-Campus elections and the various other activities now going on, I have been unable to talk to as many of you as I would have liked to. Therefore I would like to take this opportunity to give you my platform.

This year I have served as a member of the Junior Class cabinet, one of the most successful class governments Carolina has had in several years. We have been able to initiate and undertake several worthwhile projects, such as the powder puff football game, which greatly increased our class funds.

We plan to continue fund-raising projects next year to build up enough money to leave a good Senior Class gift to the University. We will also use the money for several all-class activities, such as a picnic at Hogan's Lake or a class outing, in order to bring the class closer together and increase its sense of unity.

Perhaps the most worthwhile project I plan is to use the cabinet as a medium for conducting class polls on major issues confronting students and for keeping the class informed of Student Government activities. One of the possibilities for class officers is to step in to fill a job left undone by Student Government. Communication is one of these neglected jobs. I feel that the cabinet can perform a vital function in this area.

Lastly, I feel that our class is in dire need of good leadership if we are to achieve anything as a class. I believe I can provide that leadership. I urge you to vote for me, Gene Barrier, for Senior Class Vice-President.

Pam Hooper (UP) Social Chairman

Pam Hooper is a member of the Junior Class Finance Committee and the YWCA Orphanage Committee. She formerly went to Sullius Junior College and lives in Winston-Salem, N. C.

In my year at the University, I have come to realize that if any class is to be a successful one, it must be because of its social programs. I say this because most of the student activities are in the hands of Student Government.

But class cabinets have not been highly successful in the past because their social functions have been few and far between, and improperly planned thus resulting in confusion.

However, I believe our class is capable of more unification through increased social activities. But these social activities must be thoroughly planned, well-announced, and publicized. I feel that I can institute a solid workable program to alleviate many of the present shortcomings by working closely with the other members of the class cabinet and thus prepare better social functions.

Among my proposals is a series of dances which would be held in such places as the tennis courts, or the basement of Cobb. I have investigated the possibility of inviting girls from other schools and have found that it is comparatively easy to hold dances with other schools but only if these activities are well planned and organized.

In addition, I believe other social functions such as a class carnival, picnic or get-to-gether would be highly successful but here again they must be planned and organized.

I have had extensive talks with Judy Allen, the present social chairman of our class and she has given me many useful and worthwhile ideas. I believe that I can do a good job as social chairman of the class of 1965 and I hope you will give me the opportunity to prove my worthiness.

Carole Miller (UP) Secretary

Among the problems which confront any student at a large and complex university such as Carolina, the most acute is a lack if identity. But this problem can be solved by strong class government whereby all students can have a sense of identification.

But to achieve this in our class, we must have communication between our class government and the members of our class. In communication, the role of the secretary finds its highest ideal.

My platform for secretary of the Senior Class is based primarily upon communications. If any of our programs such as a bake sales or parties must be well-publicized. I believe that this would be one of my most important tasks. I would contact the various news media of our campus and Chapel Hill so that all of our class members might be informed if the various class activities and thus insure the success of these activities.

I would also work to establish an efficient secretariat so that any paperwork or other such tasks could be taken care of immediately. In addition, I would use these secretariat to communicate with other schools so that we might find out what class government does at other institutions.

I would also like to establish a personal system of communication through a newsletter so that the members of our class are well-informed of the developments of our class government.

I realize that I have not had much experience in class government but I am willing to work hard to insure that our class develops into a tight-knit group. I hope that you will vote for me next Tuesday. Thank you.

Dave Wiles (UP) Treasurer

Dave Wiles is a varsity wrestler from North Wilkesboro, N. C. He has served as an orientation counselor and is presently a member of the Attorney-General's Staff. In addition, he is an NROTC regular.

The office of Treasurer is one of the most important offices in any class cabinet. If a class' finances are mishandled, no class, regardless of its quality or the quality of its leaders, can achieve any worthwhile objectives.

This year we are fortunate in that our class has a financial surplus gained through the bake sale and other activities. But if we are to hold any all-class activities, we must secure more funds through any of several methods.

These methods include another bake sale, various promotion events such as a Junior Class day in town whereby portions of the sales of a particular day be given to our class if our members work as salesmen in the various stores. In addition, another girls football game could crtainly be expected to provide another source of funds.

But even more important is the management of these funds. I believe my experience in various positions has given me vital knowledge which any treasurer must have. I believe that under my direction the class can make the best use of its funds and thus enable us to actually achieve something.

I also feel that our class should leave a lasting reminder of our days here at Carolina in the form of a class tree or bench. With proper financial management our class can accomplish its other goals and still have some money left over for something of this nature.

Thus, I feel my platform for Senior Class Treasurer is a sound and workable one. I hope that you will give me your support next Tuesday, April 14.

BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

Here are a few facts concerning scratchy, non-catchy Erythema solare—better known as sunburn. A leading dermatologist had this to say.

"Sun ages the skin. Too much of it over long peroids destroys the elastic fibers, or connective tissues, and they become degenerated.

"These fibers are like rubber bands and hold the skin taut. If you overdo it, even with a tan, the rays get down into the connective tissues."

Forgetting skin and sun for the moment, let's speak of your hair. Is it a problem — a lank, limp, spiritless problem? Actually, you don't have a great problem at all. # Marines Stop Rabbmen, 4-3

By LARRY TARLETON

Camp Lejeune's veteran Marines ended the four game winning streak of the Tar Heels yesterday by squeezing out a 4-3 win.

The Marines capitalized on sophomore righthander Mike McLaughlin's wildness in the first inning to push across three runs on only two hits. Ken Willard dropped a wind-swept fly off the bat of leadoff batter Bud Simpson and after striking out the next batter, McLaughlin walked Hal Norton, who is playing his 11th year for the Marines, and gave up a line single to Jim Hall to fill the bases.

The young righthander then lost all his composure and walked the next two batters, forcing in two runs. Rabb then the call to his bullpen and brought in junior southpaw Jerry Davis. After giving up a single to left to score one run, Davis got Tom McHenry to pop to Jim Speight and struck out pitcher Ralph McIntire.

The Marines scored what proved to be the winning run off Davis in the eighth on two singles and a wild pitch.

A walk to Ken Bokin and a triple by Dickie Prindle produced the final Heel run, but it wasn't quite enough.

The bright spot of the day for the Tar Heels was the fine pitching of lefthander Davis. After being blasted in his first two appearances Davis came on and pitched 7 2/3 innings giving up only one run and walking none.

Arnie, Four Others In Lead At Augusta

AUGUSTA, Ga. (UPI) — Arnold Palmer, regaining the magic touch which deserted him six months ago, fired a three-under-par 35-34—69 Thursday to forge into a five-way tie for the first round lead in the Masters golf tournament.

There was a gang rush for the lead and when the crisp, sun-flooded day ended Palmer was tied with handsome Bob Goalby, club pro Davis Love Jr. of Charlotte, N. C., little Gary Player of South Africa and Australia's Kel Nagle.

Defending champion Jack Nicklaus, hoping to become the first back-to-back winner in Masters history, shot a 36-35—71.

FOOTBALL? — It was a wild afternoon in Kenan Stadium yesterday afternoon as the girls went to it in their Powder Puff football game. Here, number 74 on the Blue Bruisers moves in for a tackle.

Powder Puff Game: At Least Unique

By EVE HIGGINS

The final score was 6-0 and Kenan Stadium has never seen anything like it before!

200 fans and one St. Bernard watched as the Bruisers, led by Shirley "Punchy" Patterson, Nancy "Rampage" Rammage, Sally "Cement" Nixon and "Zip Top" Canby raced down the field—chasing their coaches. Those who wondered why the Bruisers took so much tilme in the huddle discovered that with two coaches, Galanti and Richie Zarro, it took twice as long to write down telephone numbers.

In the first quarter, Sis Craver and Kay "Swivel Hips" Hoyle battled for possession of the penalty flag. Carol "High Life" Miller was penalized for failure to yield and "Rampage" Ramage was offsides.

At the half, Bruiser coach Zarro said, "The game has been slow, but I expect better things in the second half. We'll start sending 'em around the end!"

Statistics at the end of the first half were Bruisers, no yardage, Rompers, 10 yards rushing and three 15 yard penalties for a net gain of minus 35 yards; coaches, no luck yet.

Romper Sis Craver, termed "really fast" by Coach Merrill, was tackled by Carol "Moose" Holt as she swept around left end. In defense, according to Coach Galanti, it's what's up front that counts, and the Bruisers have got it.

Referee Paul Chused was loudly booed when he attempted to throw Harrison Merrill out of the game for offensive holding. His "Red Rompers" came to his defense and chased Chused across the field. A bribe to Referee Dwight reinstated him, however.

It was third down in the third quarter when Sis Craver, tremendous on passing, was tripped by "Rampage" Rammage. Her pass was almost intercepted by Barbara "Fender Bender" Lencler.

Later in the quarter, Sally "Zip Top" Canby intercepted Roxanne "Skyscraper" Kalb's pass and ran a 35-yard touchdown. The attempt to kick the extra point, permitted by the referees in spite of all rules to the contrary, was no good.

Team spirit was tremendous and coaches stood behind their teams all the way—staring!

As the Bruisers kicked off to the Rompers, Madeline "Tattletale" Gray downed the ball. Catherine "Choo-Choo" Lane ran the ball to the 45 yard line of the Bruisers. Craver then sent "Swivel Hips" Hoyle around left end. Time was called when Hoyle was injured on the play, so that the referees could thoroughly investigate the injury. They emphasized the danger of playing the game without padding.

The Red Rompers were penalized later for roughing the referees. The "Statue of Liberty" play was used often and successfully by the Rompers, though they never seemed to get anywhere with it.

Referees repeatedly warned each other against unnecessary roughness in handling players, but the coaches kept a zealous eye on the action.

The winning coaches were carried and dragged off the field by the proud Bruisers. They were delighted.

Coach Merrill's comment at the end of the game was "What can I say, we lost! But what a team!"

The coaches are happy, the teams are tired, the spectators are sunburned and the Junior Class is richer. What more can you ask?

And what it was, was football?

Chilean Literacy Project: Stray Greeks Wash Cars

Want to see girls wash in public?

The Stray Greeks, led by head washerwoman Susan Zehmer, will conduct a car wash today at Barclay's Texaco gas station on the corner of Franklin and Columbia Streets.

Benefits from the big washup will go to the University of Conception in Chile to help finance the Chilean student literacy campaign. This campaign has been backed by the United States National Student Association.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

MacArthur On View

The old soldier, a combat general in three great wars, will be buried with full military honors Saturday in the marble rotunda of a century-old building, selected in 1960 as the "General Douglas MacArthur Memorial."

Friday was designated by Norfolk Mayor Roy B. Martin as a day of mourning. All day under a bright sun, as they had through the night, mourners trooped along City Hall Ave., and past the open casket in the memorial.

By late afternoon, more than 25,000 persons had entered the rotunda where the gray coffin lay on a raised catafalque over the circular crypt that will be the tomb of MacArthur and his widow, Jean.

The memorial was opened to the public shortly after 6 p.m. (EST) Thursday and remained opened through the night. Only in the hours just before dawn did the line of mourners diminish and by mid-morning it again extended for about four blocks, with people standing four abreast.

Senator Attacked

BALTIMORE (UPI) — A would-be assassin shot Maryland's only Negro state senator, Mrs. Verda Welcome, 48, from ambush early Friday and police launched a dragnet for a Negro who tried to break into her house earlier in the week.

Two of the five 32-caliber bullets grazed Mrs. Welcome's foot and hip. The three others shattered the windows of her automobile.

She said that although the would-be killer fired at almost point-blank range she did not see him as he walked up to her automobile as she was returning home, nor when he fled after the shooting.

Mrs. Welcome had returned to her home from a religious meeting in downtown Baltimore. She reached into the back seat to get some papers as the first bullet smashed through a window. It missed her. So did the second.

The third and fourth bullets grazed her, and the fifth missed.

She said it was not until the second bullet was fired that she realized someone was trying to kill her.

"At first I thought it was just something else going on and I just happened to be in the way," she said. "When the second bullet fired I realized it was happening to me."

Policies Attacked

CHICAGO (UPI)—Sen. Barry Goldwater said Friday night the United States under administration policies is risking defeat in the cold war and a future with "no choice but surrender or holocaust."

He said the nation has no clear goal nor understandable course in foreign relations and is reaping "the fruits of a policy that has tried to buy friends rather than stick to principles."

Goldwater attacked what he called a "laggard leadership" in an address prepared for delivery at a Youth for Goldwater rally four days before the Illinois presidential primary. His speech was to be telecast live throughout the state by stations in six cities.

The Arizona senator and Sen. Margaret Chase Smith, (R.-Maine), were the only candidates on the ballot in the Illinois presidential preference primary. Write-in campaigns for former Vice President Richard M. Nixon and Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge were scrapped on orders from Nixon and from Lodge's campaign managers.

Goldwater was regarded an overwhelming favorite in Illinois, which was termed "Goldwater country" by both major contenders for the Republican governor nomination —Charles H. Percy, chairman of the 1960 GOP National Convention platform committee, and state Treasurer William J. Scott.

Troops Withdraw

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States announced Friday it will withdraw 7,500 front-line combat troops—the first yet—from German soil starting next month.

The Defense Department said these troops include nearly the last of the reinforcements rushed in for the 1961 Berlin crisis, now no longer needed. The pullout still will leave 233,500 men in Germany, or the six combat divisions the United States has promised its NATO Allies it will keep there.

"The West German government was fully informed and made no objections," one official said. In Bonn, Chancellor Ludwig Erhard's government said it "fully supports the decision" and that "we feel the action will not harm Wsetern defenses here."

Indications here, however, were that West Germany, which has vigorously opposed any planned U.S. troop withdrawals in the past, reluctantly agreed this time not to raise any objections.

The pullout was expected to ease the U.S. balance of payments deficit slightly by eliminating an estimated $10 million a year in gold losses.

The Defense Department stressed that the pullout next month of three artillery battalions, an armored battalion and an armored cavalry regiment involves 5,100 men "in excess of the U.S. commitment to NATO."

Rules Suspension Is Beaten By Straight Party Voting

(Ed. Note: Due to the political implications of the event described below, the Daily Tar Heel requests that each party floor leader submit a statement of their party's position on the matter for Sunday's paper.)

A surprise motion to suspend the rules Thursday night to consider a resolution for a referendum on the student boycott of segregated businesses in Chapel Hill brought on one of the hottest debates in Student Legislature this year.

The Student Party said it was a political move and a "dirty trick."

The University Party, which introduced it, said it was necessary for students to air their views on the controversial topic and bring it out in the open.

The motion to suspend the rules was killed on a strictly party vote: SP, 14—UP, 12.

The move, in effect, represented a defeat for the bill itself.

A Resolution directing the Elections Board to submit to the Student Body a referendum on the issue of the student boycott.

Whereas: The civil rights situation in the Chapel Hill community is of pressing concern to the entire community, and

Whereas: The president of the Student Body and the Student Legislature have called for a boycott of segregated establishments, and

Now therefore be it resolved by the Student Legislature of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill that:

Article I: The Elections Board is hereby directed to submit to the Student Body in the all-campus elections on April 14, 1964 a referendum to read as follows:

( ) Yes ( ) No

After stormy debate, the bill was finally read out to Legislature, but the ensuing motion to suspend the rules to consider it was defeated by a roll-call vote.

Prior to the vote, Ingram told the representatives: "For this referendum to be presented to the Student Body on the election day of April 14, 1964, this reso-

Nathaniel Fight Opens Up Again

By GARY BLANCHARD

Controversy has been rekindled in the case of Dennis Nathaniel, dark-skinned UNC graduate student from India who was denied treatment at Moses Cone Hospital on Easter Sunday after he injured his nose in an athletic match there.

A nurse who said she was on duty at the time has written a letter to the editors of several newspapers challenging Nathaniel's account of the facts surrounding the incident, which received widespread attention.

Queried about the matter, Nathaniel said the nurse's facts "are not correct."

Hospital employes contacted about the matter, including the nurse who has challenged Nathaniel's account, were highly reluctant to discuss it with a reporter. The nurse, whose letter asked that only her initials be printed, refused to discuss it.

Nathaniel was turned away from the hospital with the suggestion that he go to the Negro hospital, L. Richardson, for treatment.

After receiving emergency treatment for a fractured nose at the Negro institution, Nathaniel returned to Chapel Hill and was admitted to the Student Infirmary for several days. He has since been released and is reported mending well.

Benjamin Cone, president of the Cone Hospital Board of Trustees, and Harold L. Bettis, director of the hospital, have publicly apologized for the incident, ascribing it to a possible error on the part of the nurses.

"They were doing their best under the circumstances to carry out instructions from the hospital's board of trustees for the handling of such cases in a manner which the trustees conscientiously have felt to be in the best interest of the comcunity as a whole," their statement said. Cone personally apologized in a visit here Thursday.

The nurse's letter, which contained an apology to Nathaniel, said:

"Since Moses H. Cone Hospital has been so widely criticized on the treatment of Dennis Nathaniel, I feel it is time that the true facts are told. I am the nurse who was on duty in the Emergency Room and I feel justly qualified to state them.

"When this man entered the emergency room . . . he was walking and came immediately to the desk. He was covering his nose with a cloth on which there was some blood, but when I removed the cloth his nose was not bleeding; it was swollen. The pupils of both eyes were equal. The patient was asked if the blow had knocked him unconscious and he stated it had not."

Nathaniel said, "The facts stated are not correct. I did not walk up to the desk, my friend B. K. Ishrish (also a UNC graduate student from India) helped me walk into the room.

"I was not attended at all. No one looked at my nose or even spoke to me."

The nurse's letter continued: "I was not informed of Mr. Nathaniel's nationality, and since the hospital policy has always been to refer patients of the negro race who were not seriously injured to L. Richardson Hospital, I explained the policy to him and suggested that he go there for treatment."

Nathaniel said he went to the hospital with two white women and his friend Ishrish. He said one of the white women went into the hospital with Ishrish while he waited with the driver, Mrs. Judy Madry, in the car.

"Mr. Ishrish came back in a few minutes and helped me into the emergency room," Nathaniel said. "My nose was still bleeding and I kept the cloth to my nose.

"The white lady who had gone inside was talking with several nurses when we came in. The nurses were explaining to the white lady how to get to the Negro hospital. I was feeling a little dizzy.

"The white lady came to us and said very politely, 'Let's go back to the car.' We got back in the car and Mr. Ishrish asked the lady if I was refused treatment because of the color of my skin.

"She said, 'We are trying to do away with this problem.'"

Nathaniel said they returned to the playing field to get someone who knew the way to the Negro hospital, then went there and was treated.

"The Negro doctor asked me if I had gone to Moses Cone Hospital. I said yes, but I was directed here for treatment. He said he was sorry this happened to me. He said he would talk to the people at Cone Hospital about the matter."

Mallard Returns

Trial of almost a thousand cases stemming from racial demonstrations is scheduled to resume in Orange County Superior Court Monday as Judge Raymond Mallard returns to the bench.

All respondents must be in court Monday morning when their cases are called, according to the Sheriff's Office.

In a three-week session ending March 20, only three cases had been completed. Each was a jury trial.

Orange County's criminal court dockets are sparse. By law, the county holds four one-week regular terms of criminal court a year.

Under ideal conditions, a Superior Court can get through about ten jury trials a week, District Solicitor Thomas D. Cooper said.

If the civil rights cases went along at this pace and followed the Orange regular court schedule, it would take years to try all the Chapel Hill cases, he said.

The debate that is slowing up the cases revolves around the entire philosophical question of civil disobedience which is being brought up in most demonstration cases in the South.

ROSS IS INSTALLED

Dr. Robert A. Ross of the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology of the UNC School of Medicine was recently installed as president of the North Carolina Chapter of the American College of Surgeons.

The chapter is conducting a two-day spring meeting this week in Chapel Hill.

HEY, DAD, LOOK . . .

Want to know the latest on "cool" styles for men?

Ask IFC President Ned Martin.

Martin, a junior from Chapel Hill, participated recently in a four-day Dupont College/Career Fashion Conference in New York City. He met with other college students in panel discussions on style trends.

The outcome of the discussions will be the basis for campus styles next fall.

Campus Code Hearing Set For Monday

Students who feel that the Campus Code should be changed are invited to attend hearings by the Honor System Study Commission Monday from 3 to 4:30 p.m. in the Woodhouse Room.

The discussion will center on two topics:

1) How far should the Campus Code extend? Should it remain in effect over vacations and when the student is at home?

2) What types of offenses should the Code cover, and should it be more specific?

The Commission was set up last February by President Mike Lawler at the request of Whitney Durand, then Men's Council chairman, to study honor system problems and specifically to re-evaluate the Campus Code.

The Commission has been studying appeals procedures and penalties over the past month. Monday will mark the first of a series of hearings for students interested in airing their views on the Campus Code.

Several students have expressed interest in coming to the hearings. Dean William G. Long will also be invited to attend.

The Commission is composed of the attorney general and his assistant, the chairman and vice-chairman of the Men's Council, the chairman of the Women's Council anud the chairman of the legislative Judiciary Committee.

'Good To Know About Sam And Everett'

It may well be that the true significance for North Carolinians in Senator J. William Fulbright's speech here this past week will not be what was said, but rather who said it.

Here, for once was a Southern senator who could talk of something other than what the late actor Paul Douglas termed "sourbelly and segregation."

His speech was not the meandering harangue on the usurpation of state's rights by a monolithic central government that has become axiomatic with many a Southern politican.

No, his was both a cogent and scholarly discourse on a pressing national problem. It was illustrative of a rare foresight found in few Senators, north or south.

J. William Fulbright knows who won the Civil War. Yet constituent pressures on the senstive civil rights issue holds him back from the statesmanship he so apparently would otherwise attain.

Even so his thoughts are illustrative of the creative role in the national government that Southern congressmen can play. On a man such as Fulbright the seeming handicaps of the Congress's archaic seniority system and the South's often-decadent one-party system can indeed become richly rewarding for the South—and for the nation.

It is the tragedy of the contemporary South that he is one of a handful of Southern congressmen who has seen fit to use his powerful positions for more than personal aggrandizement.

For years North Carolina's senatorial representation has suffered from a myopia that denies it so much as the eminence that has been attained by the leaders of state government. Men of the calibre of Senator Frank Graham have been the exception, not the rule of our Senators.

It was only a few days before Fulbright's warning on the growing predominance of the nation's defense establishment that the Senator from North Carolina addressed himself to the same issue.

Sam J. Ervin told his colleagues on a committee chaired by another distinguished Arkansas Senator, John McClellan, that he was not disturbed by the profits being accumulated by missile contractors.

No, Ervin earnestly felt the hazards and the uncertainties of such defense systems justified the high profit ratio the committee had discovered.

In the case in question, a contractor had pyramided a profit of more than $1,211,700 dollars, securing a return of 36,531 per cent on his initial investment.

Ervin, it should be noted, likes to consider himself a "conservative" in fiscal matters.

Not to be forgotten is North Carolina's junior Senator, B. Everett Jordan, who, like Ervin, went to Washington as a political appointee and has since accumulated enough seniority to become chairman of the Senate Rules Committee.

Notable among the committee's recent activities has been the recent, abortive Bobby Baker "investigation," an inquiry so poorly managed that not even Baker himself could know his current status.

Like the owner of that small country store outside of Chapel Hill said the other day: "It's just good to know that Sam and Everett are up there representing our interest."

The Right Versus The Practical

There is another fundamental cleavage of importance, besides the one mentioned yesterday. It also relates to politics, but it relates much more directly to just plain living. This is the age-old cleavage between what is "right" and what is "practical." Almost, you might say, a case of the heart versus the head.

In almost any activity, rightness and practicality are both involved. And in any decision involving the real world, a balance must be struck between what is best and what will work. If the balance is too lop-sided in either direction, the result usually is either ineffective idealism or sterile calculation.

What makes this perennial problem of striking a balance more difficult, however, is that what's ethically and morally right can be determined if an honest inquiry is conducted. But what is "practical" and "workable" varies with the problem under consideration and the men who are considering it, because it is a matter of judgment.

Although this may appear to be a lot of needless nit-picking, we are convinced of the importance of recognizing that these are considerations basic to every important decision we make. Unless they are clearly identified and borne in mind, then one's decision is less than rational, and to that extent it is an inferior decision.

Berkeley & Greek Bias

The National Observer

BERKELEY, Calif.—Fraternities and sororities at the University of California here have less than six months in which to sign a nondiscrimination pledge or lose university recognition. And while it looks as if most fraternities on the campus will meet the Sept. 1 deadline, there is much less certainty about the women's groups.

So far, 40 of the 48 fraternities have signed the pledge, but only 6 of the 25 sororities have done so. Katherine Towle, dean of students, ascribes sorority reluctance to closer direction and control from national organizations. In addition, some sorority members believe the pledge will give the university more control over sorority membership selection.

Essentially the pledge was an outgrowth of a battle in the Legislature to outlaw fraternity discrimination. The movement failed, but as protection against future legislative moves the university's Board of Regents demanded that all Greek-letter groups sign the pledge. It states that they must be "free to choose and accept new members without discrimination as to race, religion, or national origin."

Since the policy was announced, both alumni and members of the Greek organizations have questioned what the policy means and how it will be enforced. The university has strategically avoided answering any question on the theory that the school can be more lenient if it isn't tied down to written interpretations of the pledge.

But the university means to enforce it. The dean of students' office will accept and investigate complaints of discrimination and recommend loss of privileges for the group, if the case warrants it. To be sure, fraternities and sororities not signing the pledge will not be banned from the campus as at some other universities. Instead they will be denied many campus privileges.

For example, they will not be able to enter intramural programs paid for by the school and held in school facilities. Also, membership in the Interfraternity Council and Pan-Hellenic Association will be banned since both operate out of university facilities. Rush programs cannot be held on university property; the university will deny approved housing status and this status is especially important for women's residences; parents are reluctant to house their daughters in living quarters not approved by the school.

Still, Berkeley campus officials hope these punitive steps will not be necessary, since the fraternities and sororities contribute heavily to campus life. The groups provide housing for 3,400 students who would otherwise need rooms and apartments in an already crowded city. Too, at a campus with 27,000 students, the fraternities and sororities provide needed informality and friendships.

When the deadline approaches this fall, the University expects some picketing, agitation, and test cases, but on the whole a smooth acceptance of the new policy.

DTH Candidates Endorsed

Fred Seely And Hugh Stevens

Editors, The Tar Heel:

We, the undersigned, wish to take this opportunity to express our wholehearted support of Fred Seely and Hugh Stevens for Co-Editors of the Daily Tar Heel.

Both have demonstrated outstanding journalistic ability and experience in the diligent performance of their duties with the Daily Tar Heel, Fred as Managing Editor and Hugh as Associate Editor. In addition, their active participation in Student Government activities has given them a keen awareness of campus affairs and issues. We feel that their sound ability, experience, and enthusiastic devotion to the Daily Tar Heel and to the campus will enable them to provide Carolina with an outstanding student newspaper.

We urge the members of the student body to support Fred and Hugh at the polls on April 14.

Mickey Blackwell, Curry Kirkpatrick

Editors, The Tar Heel:

We, the undersigned, pledge our support to Mickey Blackwell and Curry Kirkpatrick as write-in candidates for editors of The Daily Tar Heel.

It is our unanimous feeling that they are the most qualified for this important position. Their journalism experience and sincere desire to serve the campus as editors, and their first-hand experience with the problems of the Tar Heel, gives them an insight into the news media of this campus.

Both have served the Tar Heel previously, Mickey as news editor and Curry as sports editor. Moreover, Mickey has worked on the Charlotte Observer and with several radio stations, including WCHL. He plans to work again with the Observer this summer, while Curry will work with the Buffalo Evening News in Buffalo, New York.

Even more important, Curry is presently the top-ranking college journalist in the nation today, according to the William Randolph Hearst Foundation, having won first place nationally in news writing and third in editorial writing. Mickey won an eighth-place national award for spot news reporting.

Collectively, they have won $1,250 both for themselves adn for the School of Journalism, and it is because of them that the UNC School of Journalism ranks first nationally.

We feel that they can best serve their campus in the position of editors of the Tar Heel.

We believe their running independently of campus political organizations will insure a more effective editorial policy of the DTH.

Endorsements For Spearman, Dickson

Bob Spearman
University Party

Editors, The Tar Heel:

When it is time to cast your vote for the President of the Student Body, there are two factors that we consider important in making a final decision between the candidates. There two factors are: 1) qualifications and 2) past performance. Of the candidates for Student Body President, Bob Spearman is clearly unequaled in both areas.

Bob began working with Student Government as soon as he arrived at Carolina when he was elected Freshman Class President. It was in that position that he did one of the finest jobs that a class officer has done in many years. Later in his freshman year he was elected to Student Legislature where he served on the Finance Committee and as Chairman of The Co-op Committee, an idea and project he has continued to support. During his sophomore year Bob served as Floorleader of the University Party in Student Legislature and as Chairman of the Communications Committee. This past summer he was chosen by the Political Science Department as one of the five UNC students to work in Washington on their Internship Program, an honor not often given to a sophomore. Further, this past year he has ably filled the position of vice-President of State Student Legislature; so well, in fact, that SSL recently chose him as their new President for the coming year. As Vice-President of the Student Body and Speaker of Student Legislature, Bob has continued to produce his usual performance—nothing short of excellence.

Along with these qualifications, Bob has best demonstrated his past performance on many special projects that have had important consequences for the entire student body. This year Bob initiated the Fine Arts Festival for Carolina, which will organize a week long Festival dealing with the arts in alternating years with the Symposium. Bob was the key figure in getting the Carolina Political Union refounded. It was through his efforts that the interested people were brought together and the necessary work done. As a result, this group will again arouse extensive political discussion on campus and bring well known and interesting speakers to Chapel Hill. Finally, Bob provided the push that will allow the Paid Intramural Managers Program to continue next year. When the Administration announced that they were not going to pay for their half of the Program next year, Bob was responsible for the report and presentation that persuaded the Administration to change their decision and put the item on their priority budget.

We think that the combination of such qualifications and past performance make Bob Spearman the best man for the job of President of the Student Body.

Paul Dickson
Student Party

Editors, The Tar Heel:

As residents of Everett Dorm, we were happy to see that Paul Dickson has decided to run for the Presidency of the Student Body.

It's about time that someone who has something to say is running for this office. Paul is one of the few fellows on this campus who has actually done something when elected to an office and Everett Dorm is the best example of his leadership.

As dorm president, he helped put us in first place and we appreciate his work. Now we are ready to give him more responsibility and wish him the best in the campaign.

Candidates For NSA Issue Statements

Pete Wales

There are three things to look for when selecting delegates to attend NSA's annual summer congress:

1) Experience with NSA. The Association is so complex and the congress so fast-moving, that delegates must know what's going on at all times and must have a good idea of how to get things done to be effective.

2) Experience in Student Government and student activities. This enables the delegates to be familiar with campus problems for which he may seek solutions through legislation at the congress.

3) Speaking ability and a knowledge of national and international affairs. Many national and international issues are debated with their relation to students.

I am the only candidate running this year who attended the congress in Indiana last summer as a delegate. I also have attended two regional NSA conferences and am quite familiar with its operations.

I was recently elected chairman of the Men's Honor Council and will be concerned with the problems of the Honor System and possible changes in it next year.

I have been news editor of the DTH this year and have the opportunity to communicate the work of NSA and the problems of other students through this medium.

I am a member of the Carolina Political Union and was chairman of the UNC delegation to State Student Legislature this winter. I have a great deal of speaking experience through this and previous NSA experience.

This summer, I will be working for a member of the U. S. Congress on a political science internship. In this work, I will be very close to the national issues as they develop prior to the NSA meeting in August.

I urge you all to vote Tuesday and to give careful consideration to your choices for NSA delegates.

Bill Lucas

As the original purpose of the U. S. National Student Association grew out of the international events of the post-World War II period, and as NSA is now seriously involved in relations with nation student groups all over the world, it seems imperative that the NSA Congress be a forum for informed and careful debate on international issues. It has not always been the case in the past, and southern delegations have been particularly inarticulate and unprepared in this field of discussion. Yet the NSA has continued to pass policies which purportedly represent student views throughout the United States. Coming from Fayetteville, N. C., and having represented the University in the past at State Student Legislature, I feel that I could adequately represent this student body at the next NSA Congress.

A graduate student specializing in political science and international relations, I have also spent well over four years living abroad and traveling across Europe, the Middle East, and Eastern Asia. This January, I returned from a NSA trip to Southeast Asia, where for over a month I met and discussed issues with national, local, and student leaders, including such people as the Prime Minister of Malaysia, the President of Indonesia, as well as the heads of the Indonesian and Filipino student unions. As a consequence, I am familiar with the issues and I can debate them.

The Student Party has presented a balanced slate of specialists in different areas, and I would ask you to consider our ticket as a team that could represent the University of North Carolina with great effect. We would appreciate your vote and your support.

Thank you for your consideration.

Neal Jackson

Attending the NSA Congress is a two way street. On the one hand a delegate is expected to be able to contribute to the continual dialogue of student discussion at the Congress. On the other hand he must be able to benefit from the discussion and return to his campus and contribute these ideas to the groups which would benefit the most. I feel capable and willing to take on both these tasks.

I had the opportunity to attend the congress last year as an alternate and am familiar with the procedures. I am also familiar with the personalities which will be at the congress. Therefore I feel that I can be effective as a speaker, and also as a behind the scenes manipulator. Last year the Congress took a much more moderate tone than it had in the past, much of this due to the backroom influence wielded by the delegation from UNC.

I have had extensive experience with Student Government this past year, having served in the Student Legislature, the State Student Legislature, the Consolidated University Student Council, the Carolina Forum, the Carolina Political Union, and several other positions. Since I have this familiarity with the workings of Student Government and student problems in general, I feel that I can effectively program the materials that I pick up at the congress.

Therefore, I feel that by electing me to the position of NSA delegate, I can assure you of your money's worth, both in representation at the Congress and from campus programming next year.

Karen Rawling

The delegates whom you select to represent you next August at the National Student Association Congress have three responsibilities: (1) to represent accurately the views of the Southern student, especially the Carolina student; (2) to be active, able, and vocal participants on the Congress floor when the policies and programs of NSA for the coming year are formulated and debated; and (3) to return to UNC, willing to report on the Congress and to assist in campus NSA programming.

NSA's basic commitment is to represent the United States student community—the entire community, not just segments of it. The responsibility of the UNC voters, then, is to select a delegation representative of their entire student body—a delegation composed not only of undergraduates, but also of graduate students, a delegation composed not only of men, but also of women.

As a North Carolina resident and a participant in numerous state and national student activities (activities which have included winning the Best Speaker Award at the State Student Legislature as well as winning the Best Delegate Award at the U.N. Model General Assembly for two consecutive years, and heading the UNC delegation which was named Best Delegation at this year's assembly), I should hope to take to the Congress an understanding of the needs and concerns of the Southern student as they are reflected on this campus.

As a political science graduate student in international relations, I should hope to assist competently in formulating the NSA international affairs policy, a program which is supported by a major percentage of the budget and which heretofore, has involved only a handful of Southern students.

The entire Student Party slate of NSA candidates, including myself, is willing and eager to return from the Congress to the campus — reporting, programming, and implementing the policies and plans of NSA during the next school year.

Dr. Archibald Henderson Is Recalled By Old Friend

By T. F. HICKERSON

The death of Dr. Archibald Henderson (1877-1963) in December marked the end of a brilliant career unsurpassed by any other North Carolinian to my knowledge. In 1948, a complete portrait of the versatile Archibald Henderson, mathematician, biographer, historian, critic, and philosopher — commemorating his 50 years on the staff of the University of North Carolina was presented by 30-odd contributors in a 252-page volume entitled "Archibald Henderson the New Crichton." (Archibald has been called "The New Crichton" by friends and scholars who see him as a reincarnation of the 16th century virtuoso in scholarship and literature, James "The Admirable" Crichton, whose name has become a synonym for versatility.)

After retirement from teaching and administrative duties, this output of noteworthy achievements continued until the last two or three years of his life when illness and impaired eyesight prevented further productivity.

Along with praise for his accomplishments, all who knew Henderson agree that he was far from being an intellectual recluse; on the contrary he possessed all the attributes of a polished gentleman and well informed scholar, always friendly and courteous, never seemingly in a bad humor, paying courteous attention to what others might have to say, a dutiful family man, fond of sports, in great demand as a speaker both off and on campus, generous with his time at all manner of ceremonial occasions, and an energetic and inspiring teacher with ability to dramatize his subject matter thus catching (and holding) the attention of his admiring students.

Henderson was an indefatigable worker. In former years some people were slow about accepting him for his true worth. They didn't understand how a man could be so versatile. This notion was reflected by the audacious Thomas Wolfe when a student at the University. As toastmaster at a sophomore banquet, Wolfe presented Archibald Henderson, guest speaker, in the following "sophomoric" terms, intended to be in fun: "Fellow classmates I have the honor of introducing a man whom the mathematicians call a literateur, and whom the literateurs call a mathematician!" Henderson laughed heartily and responded in his unfailing good fellowship. (I am reminded of a remark ex-President Taft made when here on the campus to deliver a series of three lectures: said Mr. Taft, with a chuckle, I can get along with my traducers better than my introducers!") In those days there was no Carolina Inn; the University President entertained most of the visiting celebrities. The best representative of the faculty to meet Mr. Taft at the railroad station and escort him to the home of the president (E. K. Graham) was none other than Archibald Henderson.

Dr. Henderson was blessed with two wonderful wives: (1) the brilliant Minna Curtis Bynum, (2) the popular UNC Dean of Library Science, Lucile Kelling. The first marriage (to Minna Curtis Bynum, AM graduate of UNC, class of 1902) occurred in 1903. Their five children are Mary Curtis (Mrs. Claude Ramsay of Spartanburg, S. C.); Elizabeth Browning (Mrs. Graham Ramsey, now living in Chapel Hill since the death of Dr. Ramsey of Washington, N. C.); Barbara Gray (Mrs. James Webb of Chapel Hill); Archibald, Professor of English, University of Houston; John Steele Professor of Economics, University of Alabama.

Archibald Henderson has two sisters and one brother: Elizabeta Brownrigg Henderson, widow of Captain Lyman A. Cotten (1874-1926) U. S. Navy, whose two sons are Dr. Lyman A. Cotten, Professor of English, University of North Carolina, and Captain John Henderson Cotten of the U. S. Navy; Miss Mary Ferrand Henderson, youngest of the four children now living in Chapel Hill with her equally charming and gracious sister, Mrs. Cotten; John Steele Henderson formerly electrical engineer of distinction with Westinghouse of Pittsburgh, now president and active promotor of "The Power Curbers, Inc.," Salisbury, N. C., a highly successful machine for laying concrete curb and gutter without the use of forms.

At their home "Fordell", in Chapel Hill, Archibald and Barbara were charming host and hostess, until entertainment had to be curtailed because of Mrs. Henderson's long continued illness and death. She was herself a distinguished writer and poetess, and, incidentally an outspoken champion of women rights. I recall the time a group of people, including Mrs. Henderson, were seated at a boarding house table, when the topic of conversation dealt with the role of women in politics. A young instructor spoke his mind very emphatically, saying "the average man considers women's clubs a joke." "A very average man" retorted Mrs. Henderson! This instructor confided to me later that he was completely squelched!

She could match wits with any man in the faculty, including Bully Bernard, and I admired her tremendously for her courageous integrity. Once Bernard said to me "She'll butt you!" He bided his time to get even with her, but doubtless never did! They were always on friendly speaking terms, however.

When there was a writers' convention of some kind in Charlottesville, Va., Archibald, Paul Green, William Faulkner, and many others were in attendance. One night Archibald came to his hotel room to find Faulkner in his bed, shoes and coat on, fast alsleep (that sobering sleep). I don't know what Archibald did about it, but my guess is that he sought another room, and said nothing in the way of protest, only adding the incident to his vast repertory of amusing experiences and anecdotes.

Archibald and Lucile Kelling were married in June, 1957, at the home of his sister, Mrs. Cotten. I felt greatly honored to be invited with a small group outside of the immediate family. Shortly after the ceremony, he remarked, "A DEAN has been converted into a QUEEN!"

Indeed she was truly a faithful and loving companion to the very end. The last night, after a hearty supper, Lucile said to him, "What about ice cream?" He replied, "I'll take some later!" Then he closed his eyes and departed this life! What a peaceful ending of a wonderful personage!

Junior AFROTC Cadets In Mock Training

Approximately 30 Air Force ROTC junior cadets are spending this weekend in the Institute of Government while undergoing a Mock Summer Training Program.

This three-day program is designed to ready the cadets for a four-week summer encampment later this year. Each AFROTC cadet must attend a Summer Training Unit between his junior and senior years.

The mock training program began yesterday afternoon at 3:30 when the cadets checked in. The juniors will be kept in the general area of the Institute, but will be on campus for reveille and retreat ceremonies at the Polk Place flag pole each day, and for meals in Lenoir Hall.

A "normal" day starts early (4:25 a.m.), and ends early (9:30 p.m.). In between are such activities as classroom academics, drill, physical exercise, demonstrations of barracks procedure and time to clean and polish rooms, floors and uniforms.

Cadets will be "tested" during two formal inspections and numerous informal inspections.

Mock training programs such as the one being conducted this weekend have been held for rising senior cadets for the past two years. "I credit my high rating at Summer Camp last summer mostly to the knowledge of strict military procedures I learned last year at this time," one senior cadet remarked yesterday. "It gave me a good idea of what to expect and how to react."

— Legislative Fight —

lution must be passed by this body tonight. A vote against this resolution to suspend the rules is in effect a vote against presenting the referendum to the students."

The Student Party, as a block, voted against it. The University Party, as a block, voted for it.

"I and my party voted the way we did," he said, "not because we are against the referendum, but because we are opposed to the manner in which it was presented."

"Not only will you not represent the students," he said, "you will not even let them represent themselves."

As soon as the meeting opened, Ingram called for a suspension of the rules to allow Spearman, speaker of the Legislature, to present the bill.

There was immediate objection from members of the Student Party, and a loud exchange followed between Arthur Hays (SP) and Don Carson (UP).

Hays contended that "Robert's Rules of Order" did not permit the speaker to step down and appoint someone who was not in immediate order of ascendency to the chair.

Carson argued that Spearman's action was valid.

Legislator Betty Meade (UP) indicated portions of the legislative bylaws which, she said, permit passage of the chair to anyone appointed by the Speaker.

Mal King (UP) who had been appointed by Spearman, remained in the chair.

Carson then called for "privileges of the floor" for Spearman to speak.

King overruled an objection by Hays, and the move was appealed by Phil Baddour.

King's decision was upheld in a roll-call vote.

Spearman then presented the bill to the legislature, saying that it "provides the mechanism for the students on campus to express their opinion on the boycott issue."

The vote to suspend the rules, however, still needed to be carrie dout, and was called for at once. This was the motion that was defeated.

"I regret very deeply that what I feel could have been a most meaningful and important expression of opinion by the Student Body was treated by representatives of both parties as just another item of party politics."

Five At Air Conclave

Five UNC juniors, John P. Hoybach, Carl G. Pruitt, Frank A. Hall, Glenda Lee and Sally Laws, are in Denver, Col., attending the Arnold Air Society National Conclave.

The conclave is the general governing body for all Arnold Air Society Squadrons. At present there are over 170 squadrons at colleges and universities which have AFROTC units.

Frank Hall, 24, is serving as the AAS delegate to the convention from UNC.

Glenda Lee, a nursing major from Kannapolis, is the Little Colonel representative from the UNC Angel Flight. She is entered in this year's Little General contest. Miss Lee is the reigning Miss Kannapolis.

Tar Heels Turn Back Wolfpack Behind Haywood's Four-Hitter

Tar Babies Win Opener Over State

By BILL LEE

UNC's freshman baseball team defeated NC State yesterday, 2-1, as Charlie Turner clouted a single down the right field line to score Danny Talbott, and then scored himself on Randy Prindle's sacrifice fly to center.

State pitcher Wayne Davis had the Tar Baby hitters pretty well stymied until Talbott's single through the hole between second and third led off the seventh. Mickey Lienau sacrificed Talbott down to second to set up Turner's blow. Davis was lifted for right-hander Tom Haas who made his debut with a wild pitch, moving Turner to third. Prindle then lifted a fly long enough for the winning run to score.

Jimmy Dean, Carolina's winning pitcher, allowed only three hits and struck out seven men (while walking four) before he was removed in the eighth. The fireman, Tommy Kirkman finished up by striking out two and allowing a hit and a walk in the ninth. He got the game winning out by fanning the batter, leaving two men stranded.

The Cubs also threatened to tie it up in the eighth as Lloyd Spangler lef off the inning with a double and moved to third on a single by Randy Snyder one out later. But with Kirkman now pitching, a mix-up on signals on an attempted squeeze play saw Spangler easily tagged out on the baselines by catcher Tom Robbins. This spoiled State's biggest threat as Kirkman got the batter on a called strike.

Coach Bill Lovingood was well pleased with the victory and the tremendous defense played by the boys. The Tar Babies committed only one error, allowing State's only run. Comments were that the game looked more like a middle of the season game rather than the season opener.

The freshmen travel to Durham today to take on the Duke Blue Imps in a 2 p.m. game. Either Tom Gauntlett, also a basketball star, or Jim Dunlap is expected to receive the starting nod.

Wake Beats Duke In 10th

DURHAM—If the Tar Heels are going to win the regular season crown, it looks as if they will have to do it all by themselves. They aren't going to get any help from Duke.

The Blue Devils saw a 2-1 lead against defending champion Wake Forest evaporate to none in the sixth inning, finally losing by 4-2 in the tenth. Louis Howard, top hurler for the Deacons in '63, went all the way for his fourth straight win. Stan Crisson was the loser for Duke in a route-going performance.

Wake jumped on the tiring Crisson early in the tenth, with a single by Bill Scripture. First baseman Dave Uible fumbled Wayne Martin's sacrifice, and with one out Jim Israel plated both runners.

ON THE LEVEL with JOHN MONTAGUE

IN CONTRAST WITH Bud Wilkinson, the DTH Sports Staff would prefer on most occasions to stay out of politics. However, there comes a time every spring when they hold elections around this place, and this year campus athletics have a stake in these elections.

Next Tuesday the residents of the men's dormitories will be asked to vote "yes" or "no" on a referendum placed on the ballot by the Men's Residence Council. If you vote "yes" it will cost you 30 cents next fall. If you vote "no" it will cost you a lot more.

Resting on the outcome of this referendum, for all intents and purposes, is the future of the intramural athletics system in the dormitories. And intramural athletics are something you don't notice until they're gone—just like no one ever looks at the "Murals Scores" in the DTH except when his team's win is left out.

Specifically, what is being left up to the electorate is whether the intramural managers in the dorms will be paid, as they have been for the last two years. The referendum, if passed by a simple majority, will add 30 cents to the dorm room rent of each male student. This added income will be used to finance half of the intramural managers program. The other half would be financed by the administration.

The paying of intramural managers (they receive the equivalent of their room rent each semester) has proved to be an unqualified success, according to Tom Johnson, Director of the Intramurals Program. In the year 1961-62, when the paid managers program was given a trial in four dorms, dormitory intramural participation was at 22 per cent. In 1962-63, when it was in full effect, participation rose to 28 per cent. This year, participation is up to 47 per cent.

With the new dorms housing so many students, and with the older dorms housing more than they used to, organizing an intramural program in a dorm becomes a full-time job. Most of the dorm managers spend from 10 to 15 hours a week on their job. They deserve a return for their time and efforts. That is why we ask you to vote yourself out of 30 cents Tuesday in order to keep the program going strong.

From Out Of Nowhere Comes . . .

SOME SAY SPRING is happiness. However, on the UNC sports scene spring means Toledo and M.I.T., Swarthmore and Ohio U., Connecticut and Camp LeJeune, Washington of St. Louis and St. Mary's of Minnesota, Williams and Mercer, and rain and more rain.

It's an imposing line-up to say the least. The answer to the question "Who are we playing today?" is usually followed by an emphatic "WHO?" You try to explain, but you simply can't find the words to do it. I mean, REALLY, who, where, how and when IS St. Mary's of Minnesota???

About all you can say is that we (our baseball team) played them this year, and that Coach Walt Rabb's boys pulled it out, 5-4. Fifteen minutes after the last out, Bob Paradise and Jim Buffo and Tom VanHoltum and the other St. Mary's players had packed themselves onto their bus and disappeared forever. Fifteen more minutes, and you sit alone in Emerson Stadium, wondering whether such a team really ever existed. They probably were just a bunch of imposters, who go around the country each spring pretending to be St. Mary's of Minnesota.

Jim Speight Socks Homer In 4-1 Win

By LARRY TARLETON

Co-captain Bill Haywood allowed NC State only four hits yesterday as North Carolina defeated the Wolfpack 4-1 in its ACC opener.

The "Old Leaguer" was magnificent as it took him only one hour and 35 minutes to dispose of the Vic Sorrell-coached Wolfpack. Haywood gave up only one extra base blow, a triple off the glove of centerfielder Bill Taylor by Wendell Coleman, and struck out 11 men while walking only one.

Haywood also collected two hits n the Tar Heels' 11-hit attack. Shortstop Jim Speight had a home run, a line shot over the left field fence, and a single, while Ken Willard collected a triple and a double and scored two runs. Rightfielder Ken Boykin, who took advantage of his starting opportunity, also collected two hits and had an RBI.

The only run off Haywood, who lowered his ERA to a fantastic 0.54, was unearned. His won-lost record is now 3-0, while the Heels are 7-4, and 1-0 in the ACC. Haywood has struck out 36 men and walked only 13 in 33⅓ innings.

Speight, who raised his average to .298, started the Heels' scoring when he rapped an 0-2 pitch from Buck Johnson over the left fence in the first inning. After Johnson sent Bill Brown fishing for an outside pitch, Ken Willard lifted a long fly to left-center which fell in for a triple when centerfielder Warren Lineberger threw to the wrong base. Willard scored when second baseman Pete Parham threw wild on "Hot Rod" Hundley's grounder. Gary Black, running for Hundley, was thrown out trying to steal second, to end the inning.

The Wolfpack scored their only run of the game in the second when Haywood issued his only walk of the game to the first batter, Wendell Coleman. Third baseman Dick Fleming then threw wild into right field on a potential double play grounder and Coleman went to third. He scored when Haywood turned Jerry Carter's bouncer back to the box into a twin-killing.

The "old pro" had retired ten straight batters and hadn't given up a hit until the fifth when Carter beat out a roller to Dick Prindle with one out. Catcher Warren Cutts' single to right moved him to third and Cutts went to second when rightfielder Boykin bobbled the ball. However, Haywood left them stranded by striking out Vic Sorrell, Jr., and pitcher Buck Johnson.

Haywood gave up another hit to leadoff batter Willard Dean in the 6th, but caught him leaning toward second and picked him off with a quick move to first.

The Heels scored their last two runs in the bottom of the sixth when the hot-hitting Willard, who pushed his average over the .300 mark to .310, led off with a double to the left field corner. Hundley then lashed a single to right to score Willard. Second baseman Parham kept things going by dropping the throw on a potential double play ball off Haywood's bat. Boykin drilled another single to right to score Hundley and move Gary Black, (running for Haywood) to third. Black was thrown out at home trying to score on Bill Taylor's grounder to second, and Fleming lifted a fly to center to retire the side.

Wolfpack rightfielder Coleman led off the seventh with a triple, but Haywood left him stranded by retiring the side on two pop ups and a groundout. Haywood retired the last nine batters to face him.

Bill Haywood May Turn 1960 Heel Loss To Victory

A loss to the Camp Lejeune Marines in 1960 may turn out to be the best thing to happen to Coach Walt Rabb in his eight years as head coach at Carolina.

It was in this game that Rabb got his first look at a 6-3 righthanded pitcher for the Marines, who could lead the Tar Heels to an ACC championship and a trip to the NCAA playoffs this year.

Bill Haywood so impressed Rabb in this game that the Tar Heel coach wouldn't quit until he had Haywood on the Chapel Hill campus. Haywood came to Carolina last year after pitching his Wilmington Junior College team to the national junior college championship.

Last year, Haywood, who hails from Glen Burnie, Md., had a 6-4 record for the Tar Heels. His earned run average was the best on the squad, 1.65.

His teammates named Bill, now 26 years old, to co-captain the team this year, and he has been the team leader all year. He has pitched in four games thus far, compiling a 3-0 record. After stopping State on four hits yesterday, his ERA was down to an incredible 0.54 for his 33 1/3 innings.

Besides his pitching ability, Bill is a handy man with the stick and Rabb has used him as a pinch hitter several times.

Cindermen Visit USC For Meet

By BILL LEE

Fresh from a good showing in the South Carolina Relays last week-end, the UNC track team heads back to the Palmetto State for a dual meet with the University of South Carolina this morning.

The measles that have been sweeping the campus the past few weeks have taken their toll of Coach Joe Hilton's squad. Coupled with a knee injury to star miler Art Maillett, this has left the team a little bit on the weak side.

The epidemic has knocked Harvey Whitley, the team's only broad jumper, out of action for this week. Hurdlers Milt Bauguess, who caught them on top of cutting wisdom teeth, and Adger Stokes will also be out. Others who have been hit will be weak but ready to run.

Although Carolina beat the Gamecocks during the indoor season, this is no indication as to the result of outdoor action. Hilton commented, "South Carolina is much better outdoors and they have a very good team. They just didn't have a very good place to practice for the indoor season."

South Carolina is led in the distances by Bob Cromby in the 880 and Al Rose in the mile. Both took firsts against Carolina this winter. In the field events, Woody Chapman is the top broad jumper, Roland Brown, the pole vaulter, and Walt Christiansen, who took first in the SC relays, is the shot-put man.

New Sailing Club To Meet Monday P.M.

A UNC Sailing Club has been organized here for the purpose of promoting sailing interest around the campus.

The club is a branch of the South Atlantic Intercollegiate Sailing Association (SAISA) which is a regional section of the National Intercollegiate organization. There are s colleges in this region with active sailing clubs—Old Dominion College, Fredricksburg College, University of South Carolina, the Citadel, Duke University and now UNC.

The UNC Sailing Club will sponsor qualified speakers at bi-weekly meetings to cover the indicated points of interest of their members such as racing tactics, rigging and I.Y.R.U. rules.

The club invites all interested persons, regardless of experience, to join the club. The next meeting will be at 7 o'clock Monday night, April 13, at 106 Carroll Hall. Officers will be nominated at this meeting and six members will be selected to represent the club at the Citadel Invitational in Charleston, S.C. on April 25th and 26th.

Stan Stubbs is acting as temporary president of the club and will be glad to discuss the club with any interested person. He can be reached at 942-6903 or at the Beta Theta Pi fraternity house.

Woes Cop Badminton Title

Tuesday night the Phi Delts captured the Frat Blue badminton championship by defeating TEP, 2-1. Mercer Reynolds and Mark Michaels won their singles matches to give Phi Delt the victory. In the Dorm Final, the Winston Woes also pulled out a 2-1 win over the AFROTC Whites on singles victories by Frank Rhakestraw and Henry Tonn. The DKE Whites won the Frat White division, shutting out Kappa Psi, 3-0.

Billy Cunningham's three hits, including a grand slam homer, paced Avery to an 18-11 win over the Navy Admirals. The popular basketball hero was supported by Dick Thomas, who had a triple, a homer and single. The top pitching performance was turned in by Buddy Lial who fired a no-hitter in Craige's 14-0 win over the Winston Blues.

Junior Books Are Important

Perhaps the most important books we sell — or you give — are the lovely little volumes in the children's department.

So much depends on a youngster's introduction to books! If he's pushed and scolded, and given his reading as a task, he can develop resentments that will be a lifelong handicap. If he discovers books as delightful companions, he'll develop habits that will add to his knowledge and delight all his life long.

When the junior members of your family come to town, bring them in to the Intimate. Show them the new children's books — and the little shelf of old ones at kid-sized prices. Let them handle the books and have fun.

When we see a youngster who's found a book he likes, and sprawled out on the floor with it, we know we're doing at least part of our job well!

King Arnold In Command

By OSCAR FRALEY

AUGUSTA, Ga. (UPI) — Arnold "King" Palmer came back from a six-month exile Friday with a four-under-par 35-33—68 and a 137 total which gave him a four-shot lead in the second round of the Masters golf tournament.

Missing from the winner's circle for six long months when his short game fell apart to raise cries that "the king" was dead, Palmer flashed his old killing form as he roared through the bright sunshine to enhance his chances of becoming the first four-time winner in Masters history.

"Arnie's army" was in full voice as the biggest portion of the gallery of 35,000 trudged faithfully in Palmer's footsteps and cheered almost every shot while he was finishing seven under par for two rounds after an opening 69. That put him seven shots in front of co-favorite Jack Nicklaus, who shot a 73 for 144.

Palmer hit the field with six birdies against two bogeys, showing all his old dash and determination, and making one of his famed charges by posting four birdies over the last six holes to move four shots in front of South African Gary Player.

Overwhelms Pursuers

It was a killing charge and the four others who were tied with him at the end of the first round—Player, Australian Kel Nagle, handsome Bob Goalby and Charlotte club pro Davis Love, Jr.—could not match the pace.

Player, who in 1961 became the only foreigner ever to win the Masters, had to birdie the final hole with a 25-foot putt for an even par round of 37-55—72 second place total. Another shot in back of him at 142 came Don January of Dallas with a 72, after a disastrous triple bogey six on the short 12th, and Gene Littler, whose 34-38—72 was ruined by a double bogey on the last hole.

Nagle, who beat Palmer by one shot for the 1960 British Open Crown, rocketed to a five-over-par 77 for 146; Love ballooned to a 75 for 144, and Goalby's chances looked brighter when he eagled the 15th hole, but then he finished with three straight bogeys for a 75 and 144.

Bantam Ben Hogan fired a 38-37—75 for 148 which survived the cut to the low 44 and ties, but falling by the wayside went Slammin' Sammy Snead. After an opening 19, his second round 38-35—73 for 152 was not good enough. Taking the pipe with him were such as Byron Nelson and Wally Burkemo at 151 and former amateur champion Charley Coe at 152 with Snead.

Six strokes behind Palmer with one-under-par totals of 143 were a threatening foursome composed of Tony Lema, Dave Marr, British Open champion Bob Charles and Dow Finsterwald. Those at even par 144 included three-time winner Jimmy Demaret, who had a 69; Dan Sikes, the golfing lawyer from Jacksonville, Fla., with a 68; amateur Billy Joe Patton, Johnny Pott, Chi Chi Rodriguez and the disappointed Goalby and Love.

Paul Harney and Dave Ragan were at 145; Bruce Crampton, Bobby Nichols, Jacky Cupit and Nagle at 146; Jerry Barber and Mike Souchak at 147, and at 148 the brothers Jay and Lionel Hebert, Billy Casper and Hogan.

Palmer Charges

Palmer, wearing a striped sweater and a white sun visor, gave it the old charge as, hole after hole, Rodriguez, playing with him, almost jumped out of his shoes trying to hit with the blasting Pennsylvanian.

"Except for three holes, two of which I bogeyed, I couldn't have played better if I had placed the ball by hand," Palmer exulted. "Six times I got pars after being within 12 feet for birdies but I dropped a good share of them and I'm perfectly satisfied."

Hitching up his trousers, Arnie thrilled his "army" of followers by hitting his second shot on the 47-yard par five 13th seven feet from the hole. He missed the eagle putt but got his birdie. On the 15th he holed a 34-foot birdie putt.

On the 190-yard par three 16th he knocked him six iron tee shot six feet from the cup and holed it for a birdie, and then canned a 10-footer on the 18th for a closing birdie.

(They'd probably let it go to their heads)

But then, wouldn't any man? If he suddenly found all those starry-eyed gals looking at him? # Parties Reply In Rights Hassle

Statement by University Party Floor Leader Don Carson

Last Thursday night's resolution which would have submitted the issue of the student boycott to the campus in a referendum was proposed to the Student Legislature by UP Legislator George Ingram. We asked that this resolution receive immediate consideration in order to have the boycott question on Tuesday's election ballot.

The resolution calling for the referendum was the result of an overwhelming desire on the part of the supporters and opponents of the boycott to have an opportunity to express their viewpoint.

During the past two weeks I have visited and talked with hundreds of students. Some support President Lawler and the boycott. Many others do not. Almost all desire the opportunity to express their viewpoints.

Many Carolina students object, as we do, to the manner in which President Lawler has handled the issue of civil rights. The most frequent objection is that Lawler urged a student boycott with no prior consultation or discussion with the student body.

The obvious and democratic course of action would be to hold a student referendum on this issue. The new President of the Student Body could have then used this referendum in representing the student body.

The introduction of this resolution has been called a "political stunt" by Student Party leaders.

They have asked why it was introduced Thursday night, and why its introduction was not revealed in advance.

First, the timing of the proposal is very simple. The legislature would have had to act Thursday night in order to have this issue on Tuesday's ballot. The introduction of the resolution was not revealed for two reasons: (1) Student Party leaders obviously would have gone to great lengths to prevent this issue from being considered at the present time, including boycotting Thursday's session to prevent a quorum. (2) It was hoped that, if the members of the Student Party were compelled to consider the merits of holding this referendum, they would allow the referendum to take place. I believe this justifies the somewhat unusual, but clearly legal procedures which were used Thursday night. It should be pointed out that President Lawler gave no prior notice of his intention to call for a student boycott.

It is unfortunate that there was not sufficient support in the Student Legislature to allow this issue to come before the Student Body. I sincerely hope that the new Legislature to be elected Tuesday will support such referendums.

Spearman (UP)

I strongly favor the use of campus wide referendums, such as the one introduced in the Student Legislature Thursday night, to determine the opinion of the campus on civil rights and other controversial issues. If I should be elected Student Body President, I would utilize such referendums in representing the Student Body, and I would not misrepresent them.

The only previous time that the issue of a referendum has arisen was in Ehringhaus Residence Hall on Wednesday, April 8th. At this time a member of the audience asked me whether I favored a referendum on the Student Legislature's resolution which urged a boycott of the segregated establishments in the Chapel Hill area. I said that I did not favor such a referendum because it was impossible and would make no sense. I said that in the resolution the legislature urged each student to boycott segregated establishments. Thus it would be impossible for the students to vote that the legislature did urge a certain action, for in fact they did urge it. In fact it is possible to hold a referendum on any act of the Student Legislature (which appropriates money or establishes a committee) but it is impossible to have a referendum on a resolution (which merely states the opinion of the legislature.)

The proposed referendum was not a referendum on the resolution, which would make no more sense now than it did on April 8th. The referendum on the resolution on the boycott would have given each student a chance to express his opinion on the issue of a boycott of segregated establishments. This is why I supprt it.

Personally, as I stated in the Daily Tar Heel, I will lend my support only to those business establishments in Chapel Hill which will serve all my fellow students. I encourage other students to join with me in this action. However, I would ask each of them to consider this question himself and make a personal decision as to whether he will join with me.

As for the question of a public accommodations law, this is irrelevant in the election of a Student Body President. The President has no vote on the town Board of Aldermen nor in the United States Senate. Personally I would favor such a law, but I would not use my position as Student Body President to force its passage, nor would I misrepresent the student body on this issue.

EDITORS' NOTE

Due to the political implications of the boycott-referendum debate in Student Legislature last Thursday night, we have requested the floor leaders of both parties to describe what happened as they saw it.

Because the matter bears so pertinently on the elections Tuesday, we have also requested both Presidential candidates to submit statements of their positions on the civil rights issue generally.

All four statements have been printed exactly as they were turned in to us. The Daily Tar Heel is doing this in the interests of complete fairness to everyone involved, including the Student Body.

Dickson (SP)

I would like to make my stand clear on Civil Rights because I feel the electorate has a right to know how I feel on this question before they vote.

Briefly, here is my stand:

* I favor a campus-wide referendum on the question of Civil Rights. I stated this in the first dormitory meeting on April 1st in Grimes Residence Hall.

* I personally will not patronize those establishments that do not serve my fellow students and will ask others to do the same. However, I would ask that they make a personal decision about whether they wish to join me in this action.

* I would not take a stand as the Student Body Executive stating that I represented the students' feeling on Civil Rights.

* I do NOT favor a Public Accommodations Law either locally or nationally because I feel that civil liberties should be attained through personal action and NOT through legislation by the Federal or local governments.

* One of the main points now is not the boycott, but whether students will be willing to patronize those businesses that have been segregated in the past and change to a de-segregated policy. This should be implemented in the campus - wide referendum along with the boycott question.

* I do not favor civil disobedience since I feel it is wrong to break laws. It may be a cliche, but I think the old phrase, "Government of laws, not men," is sound. Civil disobedience does nothing but create an atmosphere of increased tension and hatred.

(S) Paul Dickson
SP Candidate for President

Statement by Student Party Floorleader Phil Baddour

What happened in Student Legislature last Thursday? That's what 100% of the SP, and all but three of the UP legislators were asking after the session ended.

Here are the facts of the fiasco which occurred in Legislature Thursday night:

1. In a dorm meeting at Ehringhaus Wednesday night, over seventy-five persons heard Bob Spearman say that he did not favor a referendum on the boycott.

2. Immediately prior to Legislature Thursday night I discussed with Mr. Spearman a procedure whereby Legislature could dispose of one necessary piece of legislation and then recess in time for the Legislators to attend Symposium. Mr. Spearman agreed but suggested that I go over to Memorial Hall to see if Mr. George Ball, the speaker for that night had arrived—he had heard that Mr. Ball had an accident. I sent someone else instead.

3. Immediately after the roll call, a motion was made by a UP legislator to suspend the rules in order to immediately consider a resolution calling for a referendum in Tuesday's election on the student boycott.

4. This move came as a complete surprise to all SP legislators and all but a few UP legislators. Because of Mr. Spearman's earlier agreement with me on the agenda and his negative response to the question on such a referendum the night before, I was especially shocked at the motion and the actions of Bob which followed.

5. Bob Spearman, Speaker of Student Legislature, immediately left the chair and yielded it to a UP legislator, by-passing Arthur Hays (SP) the Speaker Pro-Tempore, who normally assumes the chair. Objections to this unusual procedure were ignored.

6. Robert's "Rules of Order" (page 84) states that a motion to suspend the rules is not debatable. This was pointed out to the UP legislator in the chair. But with proper coaching from UP floorleader Carson, the chair allowed Mr. Spearman to assume the rostrum and debate the resolution. (A motion to overrule the chair on this matter was defeated by a UP-bloc vote.)

7. The motion to suspend the rules, which requires a ⅔ vote, was defeated and the resolution was not considered.

8. After comments by myself, Don Carson took the floor to deliver an attack against Paul Dickson, SP Presidential candidate.

If Mr. Spearman is sincere in his desire to have this question put before the Student Body, then he should have introduced it several weeks ago. Then, it would have been possible for the Legislature to consider the wording and form and instruct the Elections Board accordingly. However, this was not done. (How could it have been since Spearman spoke AGAINST such a referendum the night before.) Students in North Carolina know what can happen when legislation is hastily considered. (Witness the passage of the Speaker Ban). The Student Party wants no part of this mockery of the legislative process. The whole purpose of the UP move was to put the SP in a position where a vote either way would help the UP campaign.

I am indeed disappointed in Bob Spearman and Don Carson's action, disappointed in what price they would pay to win at the polls.

Law Students For Preyer

Robert G. Baynes, third-year UNC law student, has been named chairman of Law Students for Preyer at UNC at Chapel Hill, the campaign headquarters of gubernatorial candidate L. Richardson Preyer has announced.

SPU Literature Spread Stopped; Littering Cited

An apparent misunderstanding of rules governing solicitation on campus resulted Saturday in a controversy involving the Student Peace Union, Campus Police Chief A. J. Beaumont, Chancellor William B. Aycock, the YMCA, Student Body President Mike Lawler, and Superintendent of Grounds John Bennett.

The controversy arose when Beaumont ordered Rick Doble, a member of the executive committee of the local chapter of the SPU, to stop distributing literature in Y-Court. The literature advertised a panel discussion today in Gerrard Hall.

Bennett said that the SPU, a pacifist organization, did not have the right to distribute "pure propaganda" because it would litter the area and that the group did not have permission from University Business Manager J. A. Branch.

Beaumont backed him up and ordered Doble to leave, citing the "poor taste" of two posters used to attract attention. One poster showed a popular cartoon character saying "What, Me Worry?" and the other advertised the literature being distributed, a Bibliography supplementing the one distributed by the Carolina Symposium.

Lou Calhoun, spokesman for the SPU, said yesterday that he would be "distributing literature in Lenior Hall at 11:45 a.m. Sunday, whether or not they want to arrest me". When Calhoun's statement was repeated to Beaumont yesterday, he only commented, "I'm a Christian. I don't work on Sunday."

Student Body President Mike Lawler notified Chancellor Aycock yesterday afternoon, and the Chancellor gave his approval for the SPU to distribute the literature, and said he would confer with them further Monday.

"The Student Peace Union is a recognized campus organization," said YMCA secretary Ann Queen yesterday. "They have every right to distribute this literature, and to my knowledge very few groups have bothered to ask for permission before setting up booths in the Y Building or in Y-Court."

Bennett could not be reached for comment.

The UNC Radio Club is holding classes in Morse Code and radio theory for all persons interested in obtaining an amateur radio license.

Classes will be held in the evenings, and a choice of nights Monday through Friday is available. For information, contact the club station in Caldwell "Y" any day between 6:30 and 7 p.m.

Diver Tells Of Searches For Treasure

By P. W. CARLTON

Four years of research on the bottom of the Aegean Sea was the topic of a speech to the Archeological Society here Friday night by Dr. George Bass of the University of Pennsylvania.

Bass and a team of experts from Pennsylvania have spent the last four summers searching sunken wrecks off the southwestern coast of Turkey.

The wrecks were first brought to Dr. Bass' attention while he was a graduate student at Penn. when he volunteered to represent the University in exploring these interesting finds.

"I took a course in scuba diving at the YMCA, and when I arrived in Turkey I'd never been deeper than ten feet," reported Bass.

This didn't last long, however. During the first diving season, Bass and associates worked in 90 feet of water on a 3000-year-old wooden wreck located northwest of Antalya.

The divers, using aqua lungs and ordinary archeologists' tools, were able to bring up numerous artifacts, including bronze ingots, evidence of tin ingots in the form of tin oxide paste, various ancient tools, a well - preserved piece of wicker basket, fragments of wood and a quantity of crockery, plus some earthen lamps and the captain's business seal.

By employing some scientific detection techniques, Dr. Bass determined that the ship was carrying scrap metal, much of it in the form of broken tools.

Bass concluded that the shipmaster probably traded old tools for new, since the equipment for manufacturing new hardware was dredged up during the operation.

He concluded that this ship was of Venetian origin and that it was trading along the coast of Asia Minor before the time set by archeologists for the beginnings of such trade. Thus, Bass' findings will cause significant changes in future archeological texts.

At the end of two summers' work, Bass moved north to Bodrum, the modern name for ancient Halycarnassus. This time he dived on a Byzantine Roman ship, which dated from the early seventh century.

This ship was in 120 feet of water. On it were discovered several hundred amphorae jars for carrying oil or wine. These jars literally covered the ship's deck, giving some clues as to the shape of the hull.

Mock Voters To Nominate Candidates

Approximately 1000 UNC students will participate in the Mock Political Convention to be held in Woollen Gymnasium Thursday through Saturday evenings.

The delegates from most of the living units on campus will choose the presidential and vice presidential candidates from leading contenders for the nominations for both Democratic and Republican parties.

Gov. Terry Sanford will launch the convention in a speech Thursday night for the Democrats. Democratic Senator Frank Church of Idaho will give the keynote address.

Each living unit participating will be given a number of votes proportionate to the number of residents in the unit.

The convention is expected to set up a platform with planks on civil rights, foreign policy, agriculture, national defense, labor and government finance.

GUEST MINISTER

Dr. M. Richard Shaull, professor of Ecumenics at Princeton University, will preach at the Presbyterian Church today at 11 a.m.

Shaull, a graduate of Elizabethtown College and Princeton Seminary, spent twenty years as a missionary professor.

He is the author of three books in Portugese and one in English, Encounter With Revolution.

Ban Stands Taken

Four state political leaders of both parties have taken a stand on the Speaker Ban Law.

Democratic candidate for Governor I. Beverly Lake upheld the right of private colleges to invite Communists to speak before their students, but said public institutions should not be able to invite them.

"The people of North Carolina should not be taxed to provide a platform for known Communists or persons pleading the Fifth Amendment," he said.

Republican gubernatorial candidate Robert Gavin told women's club in New Hanover County he he felt the ban should be lifted and replaced with something similar to the Smith Act. "I am against thought control," he said.

Democratic candidate Bozo Burleson has advocated the law's repeal, saying he felt the matter should be handled by college presidents.

Kansas U Removes Cigaret Machines

LAWRENCE, Kan. (CPS)—The Board of Regents of the University of Kansas has voted to remove all cigarette machines from all state-supported campuses in Kansas.

The order came after a report by Dr. C. Frederick Kittle, associate professor of surgery at the Kansas University Medicine.

"I could certainly urge that cigarette sales be banned on the state university campuses," Kittle told the Board.

The order, which passed the Board of Regents unanimously, will become effective April 15.

"I probably need not remind you that no other non-medical university or college of which I am aware has banned cigarette sales and certainly no other state has taken such action," Kittle said.

The effect of the order on KU was explained by Raymond Nichols, vice-chancellor of finance.

"There will be no cigarettes sold on the University campus or property," Nichols said. This included vending machines and across-the counter sales in the Kansas Union. Secific plans for following the Board of Regents decision have not yet been made.

"Sale of cigarettes will be banned from cigarette machines located in university buildings and residence halls, and in the union," L. C. Woodruff, dean of students, said. "We have no immediate jurisdiction over the fraternity and sorority houses."

"The rule won't effect those who don't smoke, and will annoy those who do, but won't stop them," said one student.

"Students will only go off campus and buy cigarettes by the carton," another student quipped. "It won't result in cutting down on the number of students smoking."

A committee had been appointed earlier in the year to look into the problem of smoking on the KU campus.

"The object of the committee was not to ban smoking, but to question whether the university should facilitate smoking by providing cigarette machines on the campus," James R. Surface, vice-chancellor of the university, said at the time the committee was appointed.

Dean Woodruff said he felt that the findings of the committee may have influenced the Board of Regents decision.

'Braggart Soldier' Auditions Slated

The Carolina Playmakers have announced that auditions for their next major production of the season, Plautus' "The Braggart Soldier," will be held April 13, at 4 and 7:30 p.m. at the Forest Theatre.

Professor Kai Jurgensen of the Playmakers staff will cast seven major male roles and four major roles for women. There will be a number of smaller roles available in crowd scenes.

Scripts are now available from the Reserve Reading Room at the University library and from the Dramatic Art Office, 307 Bynum.

Johnson Welcomes Friendly K Words

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Johnson today welcomed recent conciliatory remarks by Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev and announced the Kremlin chief had withdrawn substantial numbers of Soviet troops from Cuba in the past few months.

The President told a news conference he was glad to see that Khrushchev, who had words of praise this week for the U. S. President, was "playing the role of peace and is seeking to preserve peace in the world." Johnson then said, "that is certainly the desire of our country."

The President was unable to say exactly how many Soviet troops had been moved out of Cuba in recent months. Explaining that he doubted anyone really knew. But he did say, with some emphasis, that the Russian soldiers have "really moved."

"There are fewer than months ago," he said. "The number has declined substantially."

Imposing Solution

At his impromptu news gathering, the President also:

—Emphasized that he was not trying to impose a solution in the railroad strike threat, and called White House - sponsored negotiations collective bargaining in the truest sense of the word. Asked whether he was considering anti-strike legislation, he said: "I am not here to bury collective bargaining—I am here to preserve it."

—Announced that Gen. Earle G. Wheeler, Army chief of staff, will join Secretary of State Dean Rusk in Saigon next Friday for two days of talks with U. S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge and Vietnamese officials on the war against Communist guerrillas. Of Lodge, the President said the GOP presidential possibility was doing a good job in his diplomatic post and he expected him to remain there.

—Disclosed that the high altitude Air Force plane A11 has broken the announced Soviet speed record for aircraft a number of times. He said the Soviet record was 1,665 miles an hour, and the A11 has surpassed 2,000 miles per hour.

—Interpreting the showing made by Alabama Gov. George Wallace in the Wisconsin presidential primary, the President said: "Seventy-five per cent voted against him." This was in reply to a reporter who asked how he felt about Wallace getting 25 per cent of the vote.

Student Legislature: A Qualified Analysis

As luck would have it, our regular Student Legislature reporter was busy covering Undersecretary of State George Ball's speech when the boycott-referendum issue split Student Legislature wide open. Fortunately, a reporter who contributes to the Daily Tar Heel occasionally was present. Armed with his account of what occurred, and after some checking into what went on behind the scenes, we were able to produce a fairly coherent report of the occasion in as objective a manner as possible.

Fearing that we might have unintentionally slighted someone, we asked both party floor leaders to submit statements on what happened as they saw it, and we have printed those statements as they were submitted to us on page one.

We, like you the reader, in other words, are still not exactly certain about the event. But we have talked to the principals involved, and we have carefully read the statements of the floor leaders and the Presidential candidates. On that basis, we venture the following analysis.

Student Legislator Darst Murphy is something of an oracle. Following the debacle Thursday night, she commented: "I regret very deeply that what I feel could have been a most meaningful and important expression of opinion by the Student Body was treated by representatives of both parties as just another item of party politics."

In other words, a curse on both your houses.

We pretty much agree.

Both parties are clearly out to capitalize on the apparently strong grass roots desire for a chance to voice their individual opinions on the boycott. Both would like to see the other tagged as "anti-referendum."

Thus the University Party is probably right that the Student Party would have boycotted any attempts to pass a referendum proposal on UP terms. But this does not justify the attempt by the UP to ram its proposal through the Legislature.

If the UP really wanted to allow students the opportunity to express their sentiments about the boycott of segregated busnesses, they should have tried to work out a bi-partisan approach to the matter. Then, if the SP had refused to go along, the UP could have made this known.

Instead we have seen an important issue dragged through the mud. This is not good for the campus or the issue. Both are far too important for that kind of treatment.

However, the SP had the vote to work out an agreement as to co-authorship of the bill. Also, it could have forced rewording of the referendum proposal which the UP sprang on the Legislature. But the SP feels it already has most of the so-called conservative vote, and, more importantly, it probably would not receive political credit for really co-authoring the measure.

In the fnal analysis, it is clear to us that both parties have gone at this extremely significant issue of affirming the rights of all our fellow students in a petty manner.

The Student Body is not without blame in this entire debacle, either. Unwillingness by many students to recognize fundamental moral and ethical realities created the climate in which the farce we saw played out Thursday night could occur.

Making A Tragic Situation Worse

The new life that has been breathed into the controversy over a UNC graduate student's treatment at Moses Cone Hospital on Easter Sunday seems to be a case of adding insult to injury and only makes a tragic situation that much worse.

A nurse who says she was on duty at the time the student, Dennis Nathaniel, came in for treatment of his injured nose, has written a letter to the editor of the Greensboro Daily News and to us.

The nurse, who requested that she be identified only by her initials ("E.P."), challenged the authenticity of Nathaniel's account of the incident. Put more bluntly, she indirectly called him a liar.

The Greensboro Daily News ran the nurse's letter in its letters column Thursday. We feel the Daily News erred in doing this, inasmuch as the reader is entitled to know if he was deliberately misled by previous accounts of the incident.

This is particularly true of the Nathaniel-Cone situation, as it has received widespread attention, including coming up in a civil rights debate on the floor of the U. S. Senate.

We therefore looked into the matter anew. Nathaniel willingly consented to give us a step-by-step account of what happened.

We contacted several persons also involved in the matter and they verified Nathaniel's account, athough they didn't want to be quoted extensively by name because of their positions in the hospital.

We also called "E.P.," and after some difficulty managed to talk with her. Her voice reflected great stress, and she refused to discuss the matter with us.

The most charitable conclusion our investigation permits is that the nurse, along with many other persons in the hospital, has become so upset at the widespread coverage given the Nathanel incident that she cannot correctly remember exactly what did happen, and in her attempt to present the "true facts" she has only aggravated an injury that already was being forgotten.

Some people think the nurse wrote the letter at the urging of hospital officials, who are necessarily anxious to minimize the Nathaniel incident. We give both the nurse and the hospital official credit for more integrity than this.

However, the state of fear that seemingly exists at the hospital when people involved are asked about what happened by the press reflects an extremely unhealthy situation. We think Benjamin Cone, president of the Board of Trustees, and Harold Bettis, director of the hospital, would do well to allay such fears if, as we believe, they are unfounded.

After all, the hospital has made a clean breast of the matter and apologized, and Nathaniel—who is a most excellent representative of the Indian people — has gracefully accepted the apologes and refrained from making any but the most moderate of statements.

The tragedy of this whole affair is not only the harm done to Nathaniel and to every American's sense of fair play and decent treatment. It is also, as Cone pointed out, that the hospital has undoubtedly done much good for Negro patients in a voluntary way. Clearly, however, the hospital still lags when an incident such as that which befell Nathaniel can occur, and we will all be watching with much interest to see how wisely and responsibly the hospital responds to the federal court order concerning desegregation.

Vice Presidential Candidates Are Endorsed

Jeff Davis (SP)

Editors, the Tar Heel:

Jeff Davis is, in our opinion, the most qualified candidate for Student Body Vice-President. His experience as legislator for two sessions from Craige, Treasurer of the Sophomore Class, Chairman of the Editors Roundtable, Judicial Committee member, committee chairman at the Model U.N., Publications Board member and in other areas of Student Government has given him direct insight into the problems facing the student body.

Dave Rendleman, President of Ehringhaus
Sonny Pepper, President of Aycock
Phil Baddour, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee
Arthur Hays, Chairman of the Finance Committee
Frank Hodges, Secretary of Ehringhaus
Baxter Linney, Past President of Ruffin
Mary King, Woman's Attorney General
A. D. Frazier
Dave Ronson
Suzy Sterling

Don Carson (UP)

Editors, the Tar Heel:

We are pleased to have the opportunity to personally and publicly endorse the candidacy of Don Carson for Vice President of the Student Body. Don is well experienced in Student Legislature, having served in three of its sessions acting as Parliamentarian and as University Party Floor Leader. Through his leadership of the Residence Hall Improvements Committee and the establishment of the Joyner social room "pilot project," Don has gained the confidence of the University Administration and the ability to work closely with them for the betterment of the student body. This represents the first realistic effort toward residence hall improvements in many years. In short, Don has the ability and experience necessary for an effective Speaker of Student Legislature and an outstanding executive of Student Government.

We hope that you will carefully consider these qualifications, and we ask you to join with us in electing Don Carson Vice President of the Student Body.

Buzzy Stubbs, Past Attorney General
Armistead Maupin, President, Grimes Residence Hall
Bev Haynes, Past Chairman, Womens' Honor Council
Gerry Hancock, Chairman, Carolina Political Union
Larry Coleman, Chairman, Mens' Residence Council Court
Larry Erhardt, President, Sophomore Class
Perry McCarty, Chairman, Orientation Committee
Archie Davis, Past Chairman, Orientation Committee
Dick Hesse, Chairman, Carolina Symposium
John Ulfelder, Chairman, Carolina Forum
Larry McDevitt, President, Order of the Grail
Charlie Battle, Past Chairman, Inter-fraternity Council
Pete Williams, President, Everett Residence Hall
Ronnie Jackson, Back, Varsity Football Squad
Danny Talbott, Freshman, Football Quarterback

Students Endorse Secretarial Candidates

Priscilla Patterson, UP

Editors, The Tar Heel:

At this time we would like to publicly endorse Priscilla Patterson, the University Party candidate for Student Body Secretary.

In our associations with Priscilla on various student activities, she has proven herself to be hard working, willing, genuinely interested, and most capable—traits which the Secretary of the Student Body must possess. In addition, in her position as Secretary of the Sophomore Class, she has been instrumental in working toward the completion of the Majors Investigation Handbook.

We hope that all students will consider her qualifications and vote Priscilla Patterson for Secretary of the Student Body.

Thank you.

Larry Ehrhart, President of the Sophomore Class
Ned Martin, President of the IFC
Charlie Battle, Past President of the IFC
Perry McCarty, Orientation Chairman
Archie Davis, Past Orientation Chairman
Buzzy Stubbs, Past Attorney-General
Gary Grossball, Editor, Craige Tarpit
Larry McDevitt, President, Order of the Grail
John Ulfelder, Chairman, Carolina Forum

Jean Dullun, Panhellenic President
Ron Hendren, President, Craige Dorm.
Judy Allen, Social Chairman, Junior Class
Joan Haley
Charlie Davis

Madeline Gray, — Student Party

Editors, Daily Tar Heel:

We, the members of the Student Government Secretariat, unanimously endorse Madeline Gray for Student Body Secretary. Madeline has the practical secretarial experience and knowledge of the various aspects of Student Government which has come from her work directly in the Student Government office.

As Student Executive Secretary this semester, she has initiated procedures which have increased the efficiency of the office and the secretariat. Having worked closely with Madeline in the office, we have seen her demonstrate superior administrative ability, dedication, and enthusiasm, qualities which are absolutely necessary in this position. There is no doubt in our minds that Madeline Gray is the best qualified candidate for Secretary of the Student Body.

The Student Government Secretariat

Candidates For Treasurer Endorsed

Lanny Shuff, SP

Editors, the Tar Heel:

It would seem to us that Lanny Shuff is the most qualified and experienced candidate for Student Body Treasurer. Through active interest and a great deal of participation, he has discovered for himself the complexity and scope of Student Government finances. He has already helped draw up two Budgets while on the Finance Committee of Student Legislature, and as Assistant Floor Leader of the Majority Party in Legislature, he has learned the intricacies of Student Government. While on the Audit Board, he helped supervise the Student Activities Fund Office and his experience on the Graham Memorial Board of Directors has given him insight into every major branch of student finances.

Lanny's knowledge of Student Government plus his practical experience on the Georgia tobacco market for two years as a bookkeeper make him the logical choice for Treasurer of the Student Body. We urge you to vote with us for Lanny Shuff for Treasurer.

Dick Akers, Treasurer of the Student Body
Arthur Hayes, Chairman of the Finance Committee
Don Chaplin, Vice President of Graham Memorial
Cissy Trott, Chairman of the Woman's Honor Council
Bill Davis, Assistant Attorney General
Woody Harrison, Vice President of the Senior Class
Sonny Pepper, President of Ruffin Residence Hall
Dave Rendleman, President of Ehringhaus
Baxter Linney, President of Ruffin
Roxanne Kalb, President of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority
Arthur Pearce, Business Manager of The Daily Tar Heel
Jim Fulwood, President of the Men's Residence Council
Bob Wilson, Former Chairman of the Orientation Committee
A. D. Frazier
Danny Talbott

Jim Light, UP

Editors, the Tar Heel:

We feel that the principal qualification for the job of Treasurer of the Student Body lies not in the area of political experience, but rather in a practical background of handling funds and in the ability to organize. The person who occupies the office should concern himself with that job alone, and should not become involved in political activities outside the area of finance.

The job of Treasurer requires not only practical experience, but also individual responsibility in administering the approximately $180,000 of student money which SG receives, and in working with the groups which obtain money from SG. The Treasurer should have a desire to go to any lengths to insure the fact that the students' money is being spent in their best interest.

Of the two candidates currently running for the office, we believe that Jim Light is the better qualified to serve as Treasurer of the Student Body during the coming year. He has acquired financial and SG experience as treasurer of the International Students Board, as a member of the Campus Affairs Committee, and in his major field—economics. His responsibility and ability to organize have been demonstrated by his work as co-chairman of the Campus Chest Carnival and by the fact that he will be in charge of forty book salesmen during the coming summer months. His scholastic abilities have been recognized by a Morehead Scholarship and he has maintained a "B" average.

We plan to cast our ballots for Jim Light on April 14th and urge other students to do likewise.

National Student Association Hopefuls

Neal Jackson, SP

Editor, the Tar Heel:

The Tar Heel has kindly submitted to allowing the NSA candidates to have letters of recommendation printed with signatures of endorsement. I doubt seriously the effectiveness of this sort of campaign material. All one of these letters means is that some dozen people either belong to your political party or know you better than the other candidates. This should not be a valid criteria for judging a candidate. This election is not or should not be a popularity contest.

All I wish to do is to affirm my wish and desire to act as your representative to the National Student Congress and to return and work for the student body next year. I have the experience to be an effective delegate, having attended the congress last summr as an alternate. I have the experience in Student Government to effectively utilize the information here on campus that I would pick up next summer at the Congress. Therefore, I would appreciate your support next Tuesday.

Neal Jackson,

for NSA delegate

Ron Hendron, UP

Editors, the Tar Heel:

For good NSA representation, a knowledge and understanding of present-day issues is necessary. But just as important is an insight into the opinions of the campus on these issues, in order that our delegates might truly represent the student body. Ron Hendren has such an insight.

Ron has served the campus actively in many areas since the beginning of the year. He is parliamentarian of the Student Legislature, secretary of the Men's Residence Council, president of his residence hall, has worked on the Residence College investigation, and is a member of the Consolidated University Student Council.

Working in these areas has given him an insight into campus opinion which few freshmen have, the type of insight which needs to be carried to the NSA convention to represent you and your university.

Mike Chanin, UP

Editors, The Tar Heel:

In my campus, regional, and national experience with the National Student Association (NSA), I have been very impressed with the diligence, concern, and perspective of Mike Chanin.

He is very familiar with the weaknesses and strengths of NSA, and this is essential to and effective delegate. His work at last year's National Student Congress in specific areas of student welfare was an innovation for the Association.

I sincerely hope that he will represent Carolina this year, and wholeheartedly endorse his candidacy for NSA delegate.

Harry De Lung

Karen Rawling, SP

Editors, the Tar Heel:

In re Karen Rawling, SP candidate for NSA Delegate.

We are but five of the nearly two thousand women students at UNC, yet we speak for hundreds of our fellow coeds.

Our collective voice has never been heard in the national student community because we have never been represented at its policy making body, the National Student Association.

We have supported male NSA candidates for years because we—like the men—have wanted to send capable and able spokesmen to the NSA Congress, and we have seldom seen the names of outstanding women listed on the NSA slate of either campus political party.

This year the situation is different. One of the Student Party candidates is Karen Rawling, an articulate and brilliant first year graduate student in the Department of Political Science.

Holding a fellowship in international relations, she is issue oriented; having won numerous speaking awards, she is an incisive and impressive debater; having represented this state at many regional, national, and international meetings, she is highly respected by leaders of the national student community; and having participated in an enviable number of extra-curriculars as an undergraduate, she has been a thoughtful and intelligent student leader.

Because she is a highly competent woman student, and because she is one of the most worthy candidates for the NSA delegation in recent years, we urge you to join us in her support.

Carolina Athletic Association Presidents

Milton Bauguess

Editors, the Tar Heel:

This statement regarding my candidacy for President of the Carolina Athletic Association (although the person elected is actually only a representative) will be exceeded in brevity only by my campaign. I am seeking this office for three main reasons: (1) As my opponent was running unopposed and endorsed by both parties, I felt that someone should oppose him in order to give the student body a choice. (2) My opponent is not directly involved in athletics and I feel the person elected should be (I run track). (3) I am interested in working with the Carolina Athletic Association in order to bring about a better and more meaningful relationship between this organization and the student body.

I will present no platform or promises except to pledge the time and effort that is required. My final word is that this is one "jock" who desperately needs your support.

Milton Bauguess

Rick Kramer

Editors, the Tar Heel:

We are pleased to endorse Rick Kramer for the office of President of the Carolina Athletic Association. His experience as a member of the Carolina Athletic Council (an all-student committee associated with the CAA) and his capabilities demonstrated there show us that he is the most qualified candidate for this position. Rick is completing a full term in the Student Legislature, where he has displayed ability and desire to take an active part in Student Government. In Legislature he initiated legislation to give the Carolina Athletic Council better organization and to make it more representative of the Student Body. We wish that you will join with us in support of Rick Kramer.

Text Of Rep. Frank Thompson's Address At Symposium Wednesday

Prepared remarks of Rep. Frank Thompson (D-NJ) to an afternoon session of the Carolina Symposium, April 8, 1964.

I am always pleased to return to North Carolina which, in a manner of speaking, is my adopted home, and where I have spent some of my happiest years. I am pleased, too, to be invited to this great University to participate in this symposium.

I was not entirely sure when I accepted your invitation how I would approach my topic—Government and The Arts. I think it a most fitting subject in any discussion whose theme is the aims of our society. Moreover, your distinguished keynote speaker, Senator Fulbright, has placed us all in his debt by generating a fresh atmosphere within which to air our thoughts. I refer, of course, to his recent call for a reexamination of the concepts which underlie our foreign policy. It is refreshing to see a national figure remind us that it is necessary from time to time to open the windows of our minds, clean out the cobwebs, and let light filter through to the deepest recesses. His statement reminds us of Socrates' thesis that the unexamined life is not worth living. While few of us would, I suspect, have the moral courage to approach his standard, I think it our duty, as individuals and as a nation, to make the effort. It hardly needs saying that if our concepts and views cannot be periodically reexamined, then we are to be encumbered with sterile policies and precluded from defining anew the national purpose.

We must recognize that he who calls for reappraisal will not be made welcome in public councils. Most of us cherish the concepts with which we have become familiar. To many, change is viewed as an intruder, unbidden and unwanted and to be ignored if at all possible. Indeed, there are those who look upon change of any kind as something darkly subversive and to be opposed at all costs. But you in the academic community know that the search for knowledge will not be denied and that new facts will insist upon presenting themselves and new circumstances will continually arise to make obsolete the premises upon which our beliefs are based. The nation which ignores these obvious truths does so at its peril. Therefore, you are to be commended for providing a forum for this discussion. In so doing, you are fulfilling the highest function of a university.

When we discuss the aims of a free society, I am reminded of Aristotle's comment on national purpose. A state, he said, is not merely a local association existing to prevent mutual injury and to promote commercial exchange. His view was that the central object of political association should be "noble action." It occurs to me that were he among us today, the great philosopher might suggest that national purpose should not be confined to the building of great engines to reach the moon no matter how rewarding and challenging an enterprise this might be. I venture to think his concept of national nobility in action would include a dedication to and an encouragement of the arts.

Participation of government in the arts is hardly a new concept or a Bolshevik invention. The great states of Europe have for a very long time actively supported or operated national opera and ballet companies; conducted national competitions in music, painting and sculpture, and, in general, subsidized in one way or another the arts and, indeed, in many cases, the education and training of the artists themselves. We have not, of course, adopted these approaches in this country. Here, the artist is largely left to his own resources, such as they may be, and patronage of the arts has traditionally been provided by a relatively few families of great wealth. However, as these private fortunes, amassed in an earlier day, have fallen victim to attrition and the tax laws, we have witnessed two developments—the growth of popular subscription as a patronization device; and, quite recently, the establishment of foundations as repositories for valuable private collections. Both are welcome, if limited, developments. The collections now being exhibited by the foundations are bringing to public view works of art hitherto enjoyed by a very few. Popular subscription seems to widen and expand participation in and, we may hope, appreciation of the arts. But as we have seen with respect to our National Symphony, popular subscription may be an unsteady reed upon which to rely for August Hecksher was moved to note in his recent report to the President that we are confronted with a paradox in which the richest nation in the world faces the startling possibility of cultural poverty at a time when interest and enthusiasm for the arts should be growing and expanding.

With this as background, let us review some recent events and examine the climate in which discussion of the arts is conducted in the Congress.

For many, many years thoughtful and dedicated persons have recommended and sought approval of an appropriate cultural center in our national capital. Finally, in 1958, legislation sponsored by Senator Fulbright and myself was approved authorizing this undertaking. Early this year, we introduced legislation designating the proposed structure as the John F. Kennedy Center For The Performing Arts and authorizing Congress to match the many millions of dollars raised through private subscription. While this action will not of itself provide a definitive national policy with respect to the arts, it will assure for the first time in the nation's history a proper stage for the display of the performing arts. Moreover, it will stand as a memorial to a president who performed an outstanding service in encouraging appreciation and recognition of the arts. He and Mrs. Kennedy brought to the executive mansion a passion for creative endeavor, and thereby stimulated an intellectual and cultural reawakening that has had a profound impact on our national life.

The assassin's bullet which quenched that bright spirit served also to suspend a project which I consider of the utmost importance. The late President had planned by executive order to appoint a national council of the arts. It was to have comprised twenty-four members to include private citizens recognized for broad knowledge and experience in the arts, practicing artists, civic leaders and a broad representation of other groups engaged in and allied with the major art disciplines. It may be that President Johnson will carry out his predecessor's intention, but, even so, it is the consensus that the Council have legislative authorization to give it a permanent status. A bill to accomplish this financial support. Thus, Mr. has passed the Senate and pends before a subcommittee of which I am chairman. I commend it to you and solicit your support. We envision that the Council's immediate task would be to inquire into the status of the several arts and collect the information necessary to formulate a meaningful national policy for their advancement.

Those of you who have followed the progress of this and prior legislation know that discussion of the arts is more often than not received with derision and unconcern in the Congress. One gets a little tired of such questions as "Is poker playing one of the arts you are talking about?" Therefore, until such time as the Congress demonstrates an understanding of the importance of the arts in our national life and begins to seriously consider the responsibilities of the government in this respect, my view is that the Congress should not under any circumstances be responsible for the administration of programs to assist the arts beyond, of course, the normal function of appropriation and review. A close examination of the few crucial votes taken on major arts legislation in recent years will, I am sure, demonstrate the wisdom of such a course.

In setting forth this view, I do not hold myself as an expert qualified to set standards for the guidance of others in the arts. Schopenhauer, in discussing music, said that every work of art contains an "unacknowledged treasure of profound wisdom." Each man must if he will search for and discover that wisdom in his own way and in his own time. But let us commit ourselves now to the proposition that the role of government in the arts is an issue worthy of inquiry and debate on the highest level. President Kennedy said at Amherst ". . . the nation which disdains the mission of art invites the fate of Robert Frost's hired man—who had nothing to look backward to with pride and nothing to look forward to with hope." Surely a nation which aspires to lead the world should not condemn itself to so mean a fate.

Student Plays To Be Given Free Tonight

The Carolina Playmakers will present three original one-act plays today at 7:30 p.m. in the Playmakers Theatre.

The spring bill includes plays written by UNC students in Thomas M. Patterson's playwriting classes. They are: "The Anniversary" by Richard H. Philp, Vero Beach, Fla.; "The Summer Tree" by Randolph Umberger, Burlington; and "Beast" by Alan Goldsmith, Atlanta, Ga.

There is no admission charge.

Rehearsed for ten days, the new plays are entirely student directed and produced. Wilton Beauchamp, Harry Calahan, and Tom Beneson, graduate students in the UNC Dramatic Art Deptartment, are directing the current bill.

"Sidney" by Philp appeared on the Playmakers' autumn bill of originals, and Goldsmith's "Beast" was given a concert reading by the Triangle Coffee House in Durham earlier this year.

The Coffee House has also produced a play by Playmaker actor Umberger, but this will be the first presentation of "The Summer Tree."

After each play, Harry Davis, chairman of the Dramatic Art Department, will lead a brief discussion.

WHO SAID Foreign Study is for Language Majors Only.

Of course, it's for them, too.

But it's also for undergrads in history, political science, international relations, economics, psychology, philosophy and some other fields.

We know. Over half the students in our university centers in Europe aren't language majors. They're pursuing studies in their own fields, and giving them a fresh, European dimension—without interrupting their college careers.

Foreign study may suit you, too. (It isn't for everyone.) This is the time of life when the experience of Europe can mean most. It will mean most if you use it to deepen and extend your formal studies.

You might look into it—and learn about our programs, including a new one opening next fall at the University of Madrid.

Our centers don't offer mere "civilization" courses. They aren't cozy little "ghettos" for Americans. Institute programs immerse you in a great European university as deeply as your abilities allow. (We supplement and guide your studies, as necessary, to make sure they satisfy U. S. requirements.)

There's Only One Master In '64 Masters—Mr. Palmer!

By OSCAR FRALEY
UPI Sports Writer

AUGUST, Ga.—Arnold Palmer, once again the tiger of the tees, grabbed the Masters golf championship by the throat Saturday when he fired a blazing three-under-par 35-34—69 for a 10-under-par 206 and a runaway third round lead.

Only four shots in front of little Gary Player when the day's play started, Palmer faced Sunday's final round with a fat five-shot lead on Bruce Devlin of Australia, whose 34-33—67 matched Ben Hogan's best round of the tournament and put him at 211. Dave Marr shot a 69 for 212, six shots back, while at 213, seven shots behind, were Briton Peter Butler and Jim Ferrier with 69s and Player with a 72.

But Palmer obviously was going to take a lot of catching after firing rounds of 69, 68 and 69 over the rugged 6,980-yard par 72 course.

"The King," charging back after six months away from the winner's circle, took the play away from a 35-32—67 — best round of the tournament—by bantam Ben Hogan which left the aging Texan at 215 along with Jack Nicklaus, who had a 37-34—71.

It was another Palmer day and another Palmer gallery as Arnie's "Army" marched faithfully in his wake, saw him lose ground momentarily with a bogey and cheered his slashing comeback with three birdies in a row. This, after failing to win a tournament since last October, was the swash-buckling slammer of old and they saw him playing better than ever.

He was playing it safe and easy through the front nine, content to stay away from trouble, let the birdies come when they might and defy the field to close the gap. One birdie did come for him on the 530-yard par five eighth hole when he was just short of the green, wedged to three feet and ran it down for his out 35.

But on the 11th hole he missed the green and lost that shot back to par. That's when "The King" hitched up his pants, threw caution to the winds and went charging at that long, rolling golf course in defiance of the odds. He rapped home a birdie on the 14th and then really let out the shaft on the 520-yard par five 15th. Reaching the carpet in two, he had a 25 foot putt for an eagle, missed by three feet but ran it down for a birdie. Then, on the 190-yard 16th, a par three, he cut his tee shot over the water 20 feet from the flag—and rolled it home to thunderous applause that rocked the golf course.

Butler Three Under

The closest man to him when he finished was British Ryder Cupper Peter Butler, whose 34-35—69 left him three under par for 54 holes at 213—seven shots behind The King.

Another stroke away at 214, two under par, was handsome Bo Winninger with a 34-35—69. Then at 215 came Hogan, Nicklaus, Billy Maxwell with a 35-34—69 and U. S. Amateur champion Deane Beman with a 70.

At even par 216 was Mason Rudolph with a 33-36—69 and Paul Harney with a 71; at 217 such as Billy Casper with a 69, Mike Souchak with 70, Ken Neagle with 71, Jimmy Demaret with 73 and Chi Chi Rodriguez with a 73. Lionel Hebert was all the way back at 221, and Doug Ford and Jerry Barber at 224.

Deacon Big Wigs Confirm Scalping Of 2 Assistants

A Wake Forest spokesman said the school hoped to have something to say about replacements in "a couple of days."

"We have not reached the potential in basketball that I believe available and necessary," said McKinney. "I want it to be clearly understood that I must, and do, accept my part in this failure.

McKinney said, however, that he thought it "best to make certain changes" and that changing of personnel was to be only one of many. He said the entire basketball department was to be "reorganized from stem to stern."

Dr. Hooks said, "we are accustomed to having successful basketball at Wake Forest and every effort is being made to insure continuance of such a program. We hope the basketball staff can be brought up to full strength as quickly as possible so that recruiting will not suffer."

The firing of Bryant and Murdock was the second major shakeup of Wake Forest's athletic department since Dec. 4, 1963, when Athletic Director William Gibson and head football Coach Billy Hildebrand were fired.

Fireman Kirkman Cools Off Duke; Tar Babies Win

By BILL LEE

DURHAM — UNC's freshmen ganged up on three Duke pitchers for 16 hits and an 8-7 slugfest victory over the Blue Imps in yesterday's baseball action here.

For the second day in a row, little Tommy Kirkman came in to put out the fire, this time picking up the victory. Kirkman relieved Tom Gauntlett with two out and two on in the sixth and finished up the game by allowing only two hits and a walk while striking out five.

Leading the bombardment were Lawson Baker, with three hits for five trips to the plate, and Danny Talbott and Harold Wells with two hits and three RBI's apiece. Randy Prindle also collected two hits in as many times at the plate.

Carolina started it off in the third after two were out, as Jerry Joyner drew a walk and moved to third on Baker's single to center. Both scored on Harold Well's triple down the right field line which turned out to be the only extra base hit for the Tar Babies. Talbott then singled to bring Wells home.

Barry Smith started off the fourth by reaching first on an error by the second baseman and moved to third on starting pitcher Jim Dunlaps ground out. Mike Saintsing beat out an infield hit to send Smith to third. Joyner then knocked him in with a single to left. Baker sent a long fly to center which the outfielder dropped to load the bases. Saintsing scored on a sacrifice by Wells, and Joyner and Baker tallied on Talbott's single to center.

The Tar Babies picked up the winning run in the seventh with Tom Robbins leading off the inning with a single off the second baseman's glove. A single by Prindle and an interference play on the first-baseman sent Tom Lampman to first loading the bases. Robbins then trotted home on a wild pitch by Duke pitcher Carter Hill.

Green Coats & Greenbacks

By DENNIS SANDERS

When they dubbed it "The Masters" years ago, they weren't kidding. It takes a master, or at least a near master of the golf game to win it.

The amateur who hits the links on the weekends and the professional who enters three or four tour events annually might as well sit in the Augusta National clubhouse and watch it on TV. He doesn't have a chance.

Arnold Palmer isn't an amateur, and his name is on the money-winners list in all of the tournaments he enters. The former Wake Forest golfer and three-time Masters champion doesn't pass many tourneys up, either.

This same long-off-the-tee and deft-around-the-greens golfer who said a week ago that he "didn't care anymore" has changed his mind. Exhibiting the confidence which won him "Arnie's Army" and more money than most can imagine, incomparable Arnie fired a 69 to tie for the first-round lead and followed with a 68, four under par, to carry a four-stroke advantage at the cutoff mark.

He carded that 68 in the inimitable Palmer fashion, with four birdies on the last six holes doing the job. But Palmer has something else going for him, and it's this "something" that is too often overlooked.

The caddy, especially in a tournament of the Master's magnitude, is vital to the golfer. He does more than carry the clubs for four days and hand over a towel to wipe off the sweat.

The caddy has to know the course, and at Augusta, this knowledge can make or break the golfer's finish. Arnie has had the same caddy in every Masters he's entered, and with three titles behind him, it would seem that the caddy has done a more than adequate job. Palmer thinks so, too, for after his last Masters win, he gave his club-bearer $600 for his efforts and help.

Selecting the wrong club can leave the hopeful par-breaker either short or long on an approach shot, and this is where the caddy's usefulness is especially needed. An intricate knowledge of the course and how it plays under certain conditions may mean a short putt for that birdie or par or another chip shot to get out of that sand trap and finesse a bogey.

On one hole, one poor shot may matter a little more than nothing, but over the long stretch of a tournament and in the final round, it can make or break a winner.

This is where Arnold Palmer has more than a stroke lead in the Masters . . . he has a caddy that knows Augusta like the back of his hand, and this is why Arnold Palmer is this writer's bet to walk off with an unprecedented fourth masters title. And beside this man in the green coat of victory will stride a quiet fellow with a golf bag and six hundred greenbacks—the caddy.

Pastrano-Olson A Possibility

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Light heavyweight champion Willie Pastrano was deluged with more than 880 telegrams of congratulation Saturday for his triumphant first defense of the crown as negotiations neared completion for a non-title fight at San Francisco with Bobo Olson.

Matchmaker Teddy Brenner of New York's Madison Square Garden who arranged Friday night's Pastrano title defense here against Gregorio Peralta for television disclosed Saturday he is confident of pairing Pastrano and former middleweight champion Olson at San Francisco on May 22 for television.

WHICH ARE YOU?

Shortly after Roy Heath became faculty advisor and friend to a group of Princeton University freshmen, he found his students developing as three psychological types: Non-committers (Xs), Hustlers (Ys), and Plungers (Zs). The students within each category matured during their college years, but several from all groups achieved an apex of development. They were the Reasonable Adventurers.

Dr. Heath writes of the Xs, Ys, and Zs, in his book The Reasonable Adventurer, and from his four-year experiment with them proposes a theory of personality development.

Rosemond Likes Dodging Snakes On Golf Course

Ken Rosemond, assistant basketball coach, got quite a thrill recently when he was a special guest at the Azalea Open in Wilmington and was paired for one round with Bruce Crampton, the pro.

"He played some new game," quipped Ken. "He would hit his drive down the middle, then blast the second shot on the green. He missed all the fun of hunting for balls and dodging snakes in the woods."

Long Campaign Trail Ends With Election Day

Two Teams Seek Tar Heel Editorship

The Daily Tar Heel editorship, Senior Class offices and Athletic Association posts will also be selected in today's balloting.

Candidates Fred Seely and Hugh Stevens oppose Candidates Curry Kirkpatrick and Mickey Blackwell in the race for DTH co-editors. The latter have been conducting a write-in campaign.

Seely, DTH Managing Editor, and Stevens, Associate Editor, are endorsed by both the University Party and the Student Party. Kirkpatrick and Blackwell announced their candidacy Wednesday.

The hotly-contested race for Senior Class offices finds the present president and vice-president of the Junior Class vying for the coveted Senior presidency. Harrison Merrill (UP) and Paul Chused (SP) wound up their campaigns yesterday with both predicting victory.

Clay Moore (SP) and Gene Barrier (UP) are the candidates for the vice-presidency. Moore has never run for campus office, while Barrier was defeated for Junior Class president by five votes. It is expected to be the closet race.

Six-foot-two Roxanne Kalb (SP) and five-foot-two Pam Hooper (UP) are the candidates for social chairman.

Doubly-endorsed Rick Kramer and Milt Baugess are the only announced candidates for chairman of the Carolina Athletic Association.

Ballot counters will be needed tonight on the second floor GM beginning at 6:30.

Khrushchev Is Not Dead, Says TASS

MOSCOW (UPI) — Dmitri P. Goryunov, director-general of the official Soviet news agency Tass, has denied a rumor abroad that Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev had died.

Meanwhile, the duty editor of the Tass news agency also said the rumor was "absolutely not true."

Asked if Tass would publish an official denial, he replied: "Why should we publish a denial? These are just evil rumors." The rumor began when the German news agency DPA transmitted a report at 3:53 p.m. (EST) Monday that Khrushchev had died at 2:19 p.m. (EST). The German agency said the source of its information was Tass.

Mural Referendum On Ballot Today

A referendum to approve an increase in residence hall room rent by $.30 per semester to pay intramural managers will appear on the ballot in today's elections.

The referendum, if passed, would continue the paid intramural managers program as initiated this year with the Administration matching Student Government funds to pay the managers.

The Administration agreed several weeks ago that they would continue to provide half of the necessary funds. Student Legislature then passed the referendum that will be voted on today.

A Constitutional amendment passed by Student Legislature Thursday to repeal the section providing for a Student-Faculty Review Board to hear appeals from the Honor Councils will not be on the ballot.

The amendment acknowledged the action taken by the faculty in October when the students were taken off this board. Since the faculty has invalidated this section of the Constitution, legislature felt it should be removed.

However, the amendment was not communicated to the Elections Board in time for it to be printed on the ballot.

It has not yet been decided whether there will be a special election for this amendment or if it will be postponed until the fall.

Newsman's Wife Fills In For Journalism Class

Well known feature writer and author Willie Snow Ethridge, wife of journalist Mark Ethridge, took her husband's place at the lectern yesterday to address his class in newspaper management on the facets of her specialty.

Mrs. Ethridge, author of 12 books, is the mother of DTH co-editor David Ethridge. She quipped her way through the lecture, pointing out as she went along that the feature story lends itself to more elasticity than any other form of journalism.

"You will find," she said, "that the feature story is the oasis in every editor's life. The closer the writer can come to the subscriber, the more intimate, the friendlier, the greater his hold upon the subscriber."

"The roommate," as Mrs. Ethridge calls her husband, "started my interest in writing by buying me a typewriter for Christmas instead of a steam iron." Actually the former Mrs. Snow had been writing for the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph when she met Ethridge, now editor of Newsday in New York City.

Mrs. Ethridge has just written a new book entitled "I Just Happen to Have Some Pictures," which is currently being released here in North Carolina. The book is about her experiences as a grandmother. She has 12 grandchildren.

GOING TO THE DOGS?

He is in traction with his head swathed in bandages. He sustained a broken right shoulder, a broken left thumb and a cut over one eyebrow.

Wadsworth has been riding his bicycle about campus for 15 years now.

The Candidates

In an effort to let the student know a bit more about the candidates for President of the Student Body, Paul Dickson (SP) and Bob Spearman (UP), the DTH sent ace reporter Kerry Sipe on the campaign trail to find out exactly what the candidates were like.

Sipe sat down with each at breakfast, and these are the impressions he received.

Dickson

By KERRY SIPE

"Just a poor little country boy trying to get along in the big city," was how Paul Dickson, Student Party candidate for Student Body president described himself as he pushed his breakfast dishes away and lighted a cigarette.

His story, however, was that of a man who had been out of the country for quite a while.

"I started out from Raeford, about 83 miles to the southeast. I went to high school there, played a little football, was editor of the school newspaper, and played E-flat tuba in the band."

"I graduated from high school on June 4 and by June 5 I was on my way to Lackland Air Force Base in San Antonio."

From there it was to Rantoul, Ill. for Air Force weather training and then to Fort Belvoir, Va. and the U.S. Military Academy Preparatory School.

"I joined the Air Force with the intention of working my way into the Air Force Academy. When I finally made it, I stayed just long enough to flunk chemistry and I was on my way back.

"It didn't bother me a whole lot at the time," he said. "I got out just in time to come home for Christmas.

"For a couple of months, I thought the Air Force had completely forgotten about me." Finally, he was transferred to Seymour Johnson Air Force Base in Goldsboro. Here he was promoted to the rank of Airman Second Class.

"I was in the service too short a time for much promotion. Let some poor sack who'll spend the rest of his life in the army have the stripes."

After a short stay at Goldsboro, Paul got orders transferring him to Saigon, Viet Nam.

"We had to catch a plane for Japan in three days. This guy named Ken from the Tennessee mountains and I got the idea to try to drive to San Francisco from Raeford.

"We bought an old '49 Chevy, stuffed the back seat with our duffel bags, some of Mom's fried chicken and cake and were on our way.

"I told Ken not to drive the car over 60. We ought to have driven it at 50 so it would last."

Spearman

By KERRY SIPE

Bob Spearman, University Party candidate for Student Body president, sat across the table from me and drank his coffee black.

The campaign issues were buzzing inside his head. Every time he opened his mouth one would unintentionally escape. It was only with some persuasion that he began to talk about himself.

Bob is a local boy, from Chapel Hill, 21 years old, a graduate of the elementary and junior high schools here, currently a junior majoring in political science and history, reading for honors in both majors.

The four years before he came to UNC were spent at Groton School in Groton, Mass. He graduated valedictorian.

His prep school years were spent in "a large amount of studying and academics." There was some sports participation—football, tennis, basketball. He was co-captain of the basketball team his senior year and set a single-game scoring record of 31 points.

"When I came to Carolina, I had no intention of going into Student Government. I was mostly interested in the Debate Team and in working on the Daily Tar Heel." Bob's father was editor of the DTH in 1929.

Student Government became his chief interest in the fall of his freshman year when he was elected on the UP ticket for class president. He won a legislative seat that spring endorsed by both parties.

"Student legislature is the one student activity where you have the chance to accomplish something good for the whole university," he said.

"Number one—being a part of the establishment of the National Merit Scholarship Program on campus. Then—the proposed Residence College System; the founding of the Fine Arts Festival; refounding the Carolina Political Union; And the legislation of the paid ntermural manager's program."

Quite a record. Has Bob ever thought seriously about politics as a career?

10,000 Invited To UNC-G For Gala Celebration

Ten thousand UNC boys have been cordially invited to Greensboro for the celebration of the UNC-G Consolidated University Day Saturday.

Festivities will begin at 2 p.m. with a concert by the Harlequins of Duke University, followed by a social hour at 4 p.m.

Highlighting the day will be a meeting of the Consolidated Student Council at 4:30 p.m. Discussion of the tri-mester system, the civil rights bill and the speaker ban resolution currently before the Council will be conducted.

The day will conclude with a combo party featuring the Ambassadors and Miss Massenburg in the Cone Ballroom of Elliott Hall from 8 to 12 p.m.

Police Catch Man After Wild Chase

By DAVID PRATHER

A man charged with auto theft led police a merry chase through the woods near Eastgate Shopping Center Saturday night before finally being captured and charged with three offenses.

Theron Edward McCaskill, 28, of Irving, was charged with two auto larcenies and carrying a concealed weapon, Detective Capt. C. E. Durham said yesterday.

He said that police received a call that a 1963 model car had been stolen from the Carolina Inn parking lot about 8 p.m. The auto was subsequently spotted by a highway patrolman near Eastgate Shopping Center and the patrolman gave chase.

Police said the driver jumped out of the car in front of the Tar Heel Motel and ran across the highway. He then reportedly ran down the Old Oxford Rd. where he was spotted by residents and escaped from the patrolman by fleeing into the woods.

He headed toward the WCHL radio station, Durham said, fell into a creek and finally arrived at a nearby house. Police said he broke into a garage and apparently tried to steal another 1963 model car by "straight-wiring" the auto with hair pins.

He dropped one of the pins and had to turn on the garage lights, alerting a neighbor who called the police, Durham said.

Police rushed to the scene and arrested McCaskill. They said he was carrying a loaded .32 calibre automatic pistol.

Durham reported that McCaskill said he was on his way to Irving from Florida and had hitchhiked to Chapel Hill.

Campus To Elect 'Big Four' Today

The student body goes to the polls today to select their officers for next year, as well as National Student Association representatives, Editor of the Daily Tar Heel, Senior Class officers, legislative representatives and Men's and Women's Council seats.

For Presidential candidates Paul Dickson (SP) and Bob Spearman (UP), it's the end of a long and sometimes fierce campaign. Both political parties have engaged in several controversies during the election—the first over an editorial in the Daily Tar Heel questioning Dickson's stand on Civil Rights and the second over a surprise University Party bill presented in Student Legislature Thursday night calling for a referendum on the student boycott.

Priscilla Patterson (UP) and Madeline Gray vie for secretary. (This has been one of the most hotly contested races, with both girls campaigning vigorously.)

Lanny Shuff (SP) and Jim Light (UP) are the candidates for treasurer.

The first controversy arose when an editorial in the Daily Tar Heel charged that Dickson had wavered in his stand on the Public Accommodations Law. Dickson defended his position, claiming it had been the same throughout the campaign.

The second battle arose over a bill introduced by George Ingram (UP) in student legislature calling for a referendum on the student boycott. The Student Party charged that the University Party used unethical tactics in attempting to get the bill passed. Several letters were distributed around the campus by both parties after the session.

Candidates for student legislature include:

Men's Dist IV — Jim Hubbard (UP), George M. Ingram (UP).

Men's Dist V — John Hart (UP), Neal Jackson (SP), Mal King (UP), Jim "J.P." Smith (IND), Bob Stack (SP).

Men's Dist VII — Stuart Ball (UP), Jan Crawford (UP), Sonny Pepper (SP), Dave Sentelle (UP), Bob Wilson (SP), Don Wilson (SP).

Men's Dist XI — Earl Johnson (UP), Jim Little (SP), Gary Lowe (SP), Charles B. Neely (SP), Creighton "Zeke" Sossoman (UP).

FRENCH COMEDY TONIGHT

"Les Caprices de Marianne," a two-act comedy by Alfred de Musset, will be presented in the original French by the Alliance Francaise tonight at 8 in Gerrard Hall.

The play is considered one of the finest works in the French romantic theatre, although it was not originally written for the stage. It was not performed during the author's lifetime.

VON LAZAR SPEAKS HERE

Professor Arpad von Lazar of the Political Science Department will speak on "Political Systems in Europe" tonight at 9 in the YMCA.

Valkyries Tap Nine In Pre-Dawn Ceremonies

GLADYS ALLISON

Black - hooded figures stalked the women's residences early this morning to tap nine new members to the Valkyries, the highest women's honorary on campus.

Tapped were: Gladys Irene Allison, Fairfield, Conn.; Elizabeth Blythe Clark. Pinetops; Nancy Evelyn Culler, High Point; Jane Engle, San Marino, Calif.; Diana Gayle Foote, Chapel Hill; Sylvia Lillian Shields, Columbus, Ga.; Sara Anne Trott, Kannapolis; Anne Elizabeth Vick, Alexandria, Va.; and Allison Lockwood Webb, Summit, N. J.

Valkyries corresponds to the highest men's honorary, the Order of the Golden Fleece. It was founded in 1941 when it replaced Alpha Kappa Gamma, national women's honorary society. Members are recognized for excellence in scholarship, leadership, character or service to the University; however they must be outstanding in each of these areas.

Citations to the new members read as follows:

Miss Allison: one who has shown enthusiastic and creative leadership in her campus activities, achieving excellence in her work with the YWCA. Through her guidance in Perspectives, she has awakened those around her to the challenges and responsibilities that confront them. Her inquisitiveness has served as a stimulus for her academic endeavors. She will always be remembered for her vital interest and devotion to her friends, her activities, and her University.

Miss Clark: one who has demonstrated excellence in her position as dormitory president. By her enthusiasm and sincere interest in her dormitory and those she serves, she has conveyed to all a sense of pride and a desire to play an active part in dormitory activities. Not only has she given unselfishly of her time, but she has shared with others her quiet strength and wisdom. Her curiosity and desire for knowledge is reflected in the superior scholastic average she has maintained.

Miss Culler: one who has shown excellence in her leadership of the Women's Residence Council. The Council's success in fulfilling its responsibilities can be largely attributed to her wise guidance and conscientious performance of her duties. Her willingness to serve her fellow students by giving unselfishly of her time and energy has been a valuable asset to her sorority and her university.

Miss Engle: one who has rendered tireless service to her University through her creative leadership in Perspectives and Phi Alpha Theta. Her dependability and devotion to her friends and her University has brought her respect and admiration. Her academic achievements have proven her to be a serious and diligent scholar. Her enthusiastic and vivacious personality will continue to serve as an inspiration to all.

Miss Foote: one who has given tirelessly of herself to the 1964 Carolina Symposium. Without desiring recognition, she has graciously and willingly assumed responsibilities for tasks which contributed significantly to the success of the Symposium. In addition to these responsibilities, she has rendered invaluable service to the language department. Sensitive to the needs of others, Diana is loved and respected by faculty and students alike.

Now It's Your Turn

Well, the annual siege of politicking is over, everyone hopefully is on their way to the polls, and by tomorrow at this time we will know upon whom the problems and opportunities of campus leadership will rest for the forthcoming year.

This has been an unusual campaign for several reasons. Most important, perhaps, is the number of highly-qualified candidates available. This has not always been the case, as anyone with even a relatively short memory is well aware. All too often the campus has not had the opportunity to make the hard choices that must be made today, for the simple reason that the qualifications of one candidate or another greatly overshadowed those of his opponent, if indeed he even had one.

Other factors, too, have made this an unusual campaign. For one thing, much pre-vacation energy has been dissipated due to the elections falling so late. For another, the weather has been exceedingly unhelpful to foot-slogging, handshaking hopefuls. And then there was the Carolina Symposium last week, which drained away lots of energy that might otherwise have gone into the campaign efforts of several of the candidates.

Unlike last year's editors, we don't propose to endorse anyone for anything. Not only is it doubtful whether such endorsements do any good, it's possibly quite unfair. However, we have seen some of the candidates close-up and had a chance to observe them at work for some time now, and we do have a few comments on two categories of them: The Presidential and editorial candidates.

Paul Dickson has surprised many people by putting up a good solid fight. Comparatively unknown, he has hit the hustings with a vengeance. But Bob Spearman has taken nothing for granted. He too, has hit the hustings hard. The Student Body has no excuse for not knowing much about either candidate, as both have made every effort to meet everyone he could.

Both Spearman and Dickson want the Presidency badly. This has led to some doubtful campaign tactics on occasion, but nothing that would serve to clearly disqualify either one for consideration of your vote. Spearman has a clear lead over Dickson in the area of experience in Student Government and government generally. But Dickson has shown himself to be an avid contender for such experience.

Both Spearman and Dickson are mature and sophisticated, meaning that whichever of them is elected should be able to bring sound qualities of leadership to the post.

THE DAILY TAR HEEL editorial candidates, likewise, are both strong. One of the central differences here is that Fred Seely and Hugh Stevens have campaigned hard for the post, whereas Curry Kirkpatrick and Mickey Blackwell have not indicated the overriding desire which the hours and obligations of the task make essential. Also, there is some question as to Blackwell's academic qualifications, although it's understood that he has or soon will take care of any formal deficiencies he may have.

All four candidates are good journalists, as you should know from reading these pages the past months. But it takes more than writing skill to run a newspaper, particularly The Daily Tar Heel, which depends so much upon contributions of effort. If you are hotheaded and start shouting easily, you can easily go crazy in the first month, for crises are to The Tar Heel what sand is to the desert. There are at least a dozen of them a day, which makes the job interesting.

The point is, simply knowing how to write isn't all it takes. You must be able to work with people, and here Fred and Hugh have the advantage over Curry and Mickey, although it's not one that couldn't be overcome with some determination.

The biggest factor separating Seely-Stevens from Kirkpatrick-Blackwell is that Seely-Stevens seem to want the job a lot more than their adversaries. This must be considered a strong plus by any intelligent voter. The opportunities of this job are great, but so are the problems, and you have to want it badly to do a good job.

THESE, THEN, ARE some considerations about the Presidential and Editorial candidates. There are other considerations to be sure, many of them perhaps more important, but we think not.

All the campus can rightfully expect of the students it elevates to positions of leadership is that they do their best to look at the facts and act in an honorable manner, no matter what the situation. All of the candidates running for the two top posts of Editor and President appear most capable of doing this. The question you must decide is which of them can do it best.

Good luck.

Was It Really A Success?

(Ed. Note: The following article is reprinted from "Quo Vadimus?", weekly newspaper of the Di-Phi. Dick Hesse, chairman of the 1964 Symposium, will reply in this space in the next few days. Readers are invited to offer their comments, too.)

By RICK DOBLE

A cartoon in a recent Daily Tar Heel showed a poster advertising the Symposium, across which was a strip of paper reading "success". I must differ with this view of the Symposium. If the Symposium was successful, it was only partially so, for it had many glaring errors which, although they did not make the Symposium a failure, kept it from being nearly as successful as it could have been.

On the side of success one can point to well attended lectures, enthusiastic response to issues, and to the speakers speaking genuinely to Carolina. The Symposium was competently organized and one was well aware of the tremendous amount of work that must have gone into it to make it a reality.

On the other hand there were some glaring inadequacies. Few speakers stuck to the topics which had been given them; each would comment on the relevance of the topic to the world today and then beg the audiences pardon for his taking liberties with it. The topic given to Morganthau was a terrible blunder. He does not believe in the garrison state in the U.S. One wonders why of all people this man was given a topic he was known not to believe in. George Ball, being the undersecretary of State, could certainly have been given a topic which dealt with his area, foreign affairs, not "Values and the Individual." Since few persons spoke on their topics, some people at least came away disappointed.

Perhaps better way to arrange the Symposium in the future would be to have tentative topics from which the speaker can choose. I say this because the speaker, it seems, will talk on his own topic in any case. It would, therefore, be a much more honest program to announce the speaker's own choice of topic in the program.

The speakers also tended never to come down to earth; they spoke in generalities which were rarely backed up. One frequently left a speech feeling that he had seen a well known expert in the world of today, but that he had not heard anything unusual in the speech that could be taken away as food for serious thought. Certainly this was not true of all the speeches, yet it was enough so that I heard one teacher at this University wonder whether it would not be better to give out free copies of well written material by experts in the different fields who, in the articles, come to terms with the issues, than to have a Symposium.

Much though I disagreed with Adam Yarmolinsky, I could not help agreeing with his general plea of: show me specifically where the defense budget can be cut then I can argue with you, but while you deal in generalities we can never really discuss the problem, for generalities say nothing unless correlated with specifics. (This is a paraphrase of what Mr. Yarmolinsky said.) David Brinkley, popular figure though he is, never, it seemed to me, touched on the real issue of news management—all he did was deny its existence.

The third and last main criticism I wish to make of the Symposium is that no one who held a position of non-deterrance spoke. That is, everyone who spoke criticized or endorsed the specific policy of the U.S., but all endorsed generally the status quo. No one felt the U.S. was moving in totally the wrong direction. The Symposium, because of this, lacked a true discussion. Men such as Allport, Fromm, Muste, Osgood, Waskow, and Rustin, should have been asked to speak to at least one session. Perhaps the Symposium did try to get one or two well known non-deterrance men who did not accept the invitation, but I am sure that if they asked others in the same field, they could have gotten at least one speaker who represented this position.

Whether the failure of the Symposium was the fault of the people who were invited to speak, the above criticisms boil down to this: there was no real discussion, no real debate, no real inquiry into "Arms and the Man," only a partial discussion which, being partial, could only hint at the real issues. The Symposium was then only a partial symposium, and thus, only partially a success.

Campus Leaders Endorse Wales For National Student Association

(Editor's Note: In covering the 1964 all-campus elections, it has been our policy to print letters of endorsement and statements for the various candidates. No letters or statements have appeared for several candidates because they did not submit them to the DTH for publication. In printing endorsement letters for those candidates seeking the position of NSA delegates, we inadvertently omitted the letter for Pete Wales, UP candidate. We offer Mr. Wales our apologies, and print his letter below.)

We feel that Pete has the experience necessary to be effective at the Congress from being a delegate last year and from attending two regional conferences. We feel he has a firm commitment to student affairs as chairman of the Men's Honor Council and news editor of the Daily Tar Heel. He is a good speaker, well abreast of world affairs, and he will represent the campus more than adequately at NSA.

Bob Spearman

Editors, The Tar Heel:

While qualifications as such are important for any candidate seeking office, there is a spark of leadership that combines with experience to make the best leaders. Bob Spearman, candidate for the Presidency of the Student Body, possesses this spark.

Bob's list of qualifications is long and impressive, but is not enough to reflect the type of job he did in these positions. As Freshman Class President, Bob introduced and directed many new projects for the class. Later, as a member of the Student Legislature, Bob was active in initating legislation of benefit for the entire University such as the Natonal Merit scholarship committee. This past year Bob has further demonstrated his leadership qualities as Vice-President of the Student Body through his efforts on many particular projects, such as the Paid Intramural Managers Program and the investigation of the Residence College System. The establishment of the Fine Arts Festival Committee under Bob's leadership is an example of a benefit that will remain for many years.

Seely-Stevens

As staff members of the Daily Tar Heel, we have had the opportunity to observe those in the office, and we would like to express our support to Fred Seely and Hugh Stevens for editors of the Daily Tar Heel.

Fred and Hugh have both worked on the Daily Tar Heel for two years and during that time have performed outstanding work. They are experienced newspapermen, and we feel they will do an outstanding job.

We urge the members of the student body to support Fred and Hugh on April 14.

Apology Wanted For Dickson

Editors, The Tar Heel:

In an editorial on Thursday, April 9, 1964 (A Misunderstanding With Paul Dickson) the editors agreed that Paul Dickson was consistent in his stand on the public accommodations law.

Then, after making a statement apologizing to Dickson for misrepresenting his views, the editors ended with "However..." What kind of an apology is this?

I am not a member of the SP. But I have heard Dickson speak out on integration three times. Each time his basic ideas and even much of his phraseology has been the same.

By making snide remarks ("However . . .") you cast doubt on a candidate who deserves our respect for making his position unequivocally clear. I believe Dickson is entitled to not only an apology but a complete retraction.

Yes, Call Me (Mr.) B'wana

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Edward L. Cannon, secretary-treasurer of the North Carolina State Bar, is noticeably upset by the United States Supreme Court ruling that Negroes as well as whites must be addressed as "Mr." or "Miss" in the courtroom.

His (hopefully) ill considered statements are contained in a letter entitled "Call Me B'wana" which was, according to the Raleigh News and Observer, sent to the judges, solicitors and certain law enforcement officers across the State.

This untimely tirade serves to remind those of us who are expecting to become Bar members in North Carolina that greater discrimination must be exercised in selecting those who represent the Bar Association to the general public.

As a member of the legal profession and particularily as one who so often speaks for it, Mr. Cannon should exercise greater discretion in offering his own views as those of the entire profession. It is disquieting, indeed, to see the lack of moral character which has permitted Mr. Cannon to become "inebriated by the exuberance of his own verbosity."

Gratitude To The Symposium

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Dear Sir:

It has been my great privilege, during this week, both in person and by radio and television, to share in the 1964 Carolina Symposium.

I cannot possibly say enough in praise of the program, its participants, and the students and faculty who organized and presented it. It is my sincere opinion that the University has, in this Symposium, rendered a great national service.

Clyde Wilson Attacked Again

Editors, The Tar Heel:

After reading with patience for some time the rather vague ramblings of Mr. Clyde Wilson, we have finally been nudged out of our state of journalistic stupor by Mr. Wilson's latest attempt at the defense of the citadels of conservatism, "Look at the Law". (DTH-April 4). Mr. Wilson's column is, as usual, a maze of contradictions, and a monument of incoherent and illogical journalism.

Mr. Wilson begins his tirade by stating that the law against which the current demonstrators are protesting, requiring the segregation of places of public accommodation, actually exists as a statute on the books in the State of North Carolina. Then, in a classic step of fuzzy logic, he claims that the law has not been enforced in years, and that the federal courts would throw it out if it were. Furthermore, he asserts that since the law is not enforced, the "demonstrators are not protesting a segregation law . . . (but) . . . the right of Clarence, or Carlton or Brady to operate his business in the way that he judges to be in his own best interest."

Is Mr. Wilson such a nullificationist that he actually believes that just because a law is not enforced that it no longer remains a law? And are not Clarence, Carlton and Brady in effect enforcing the law when they refuse to open their places of "public accommodation" to the general public?

And in a noble hearts and flowers gesture, Mr. Wilson depicts the plight of the hard-working, tax-paying family man, Clarence, who provides a useful public service, and is forced to "bow down to the superior moral pretensions" of the demonstrators. Once again Mr. Wilson has contradicted himself. Clarence and others, supposedly operating a useful public service, are in fact operating private services, the usefulness of which may be quite debatable, depending upon a factor over which one has no control, his skin color, and on one over which he does, his moral convictions which urge him to avoid self-proclaimed places of public accommodation which are in reality private clubs, the entrance requirement for which is a pale skin.

May we suggest, although we understand how hard it is to turn out copy now that Goldwater is a political non-entity, that Mr. Wilson restrain his hand from the pen until he has something to say?

Seely, Stevens Make Statement

As candidates for the Co-Editorship of the Daily Tar Heel, we have attempted to take our campaign directly to you, the owners and publishers.

We have made every effort to see every student on this campus and let them know how we stand on every issue. We have tried to let every student know why we think we can produce a truly excellent campus newspaper.

Having been in the mainstream of student affairs for the past two years, we can point to such things as chairing the Communications Committee, working with the CUSC, serving as adviser to Editor's Roundtable, publicity chairman for the Junior Class and Managing and Associate Editor of the Daily Tar Heel. We are also the only candidates endorsed by the Publications Board.

Our endorsements by the Student Party and University Party reflect the confidence these groups place in us. If elected, we will not be obligated to anyone. We will criticize those who should be criticized and we will help those who should be helped.

Now, as always, we wish to make it clear that we do not represent any organizations of any kind, on or off this campus, nor do we intend to act as advocates of such organizations. Our interests lie in the entire UNC campus, and in providing thorough news coverage and stimulating editorial comment for its newspaper. We were not dragged into the race by a special group of people eager to support their own personal interests and political opinions; rather, our campaign is the result of careful consideration of the various aspects of the Daily Tar Heel editorship.

As always, our views are open to all. This is how we stand on some of the issues of today:

1. COVERAGE OF CAMPUS AFFAIRS—We feel the DTH must be brought closer to the student body—that it must grasp the needs of the student community and make every effort to provide them the best coverage possible. News stories of questionable value to the campus should not be put on the front page at the expense of stories of local interest.

2. EDITORIAL COMMENT — One of the greatest criticisms of the DTH in recent years has stemmend around the opinions expressed by the editors. Many students disagree with the editors, but have had no chance to have more moderate viewpoints expressed because only one side was represented in all the candidates. However, it is different this time. We feel our moderate stand on issues are more in line with actual student opinion.

3. CIVIL RIGHTS—We naturally feel that all students should have the benefits of equal service and fair treatment, and we regret that they often do not. We cannot agree, however, with many of the methods used by certain groups in an attempt to cajole or coerce those merchants who are reluctant to live up to the complete ideals of equality.

We also feel that the student boycott is an extremely personal, moral question which every person must decide for himself according to circumstances and feelings. Our personal viewpoint is that it is sometimes useful, sometimes ineffective and cannot therefore be given a blanket endorsement for all concerned. Our prime obligation, we feel, is to weigh carefully each individual situation that arises, express our opinions clearly, and provide for the expression of the opposing point of view.

We are also opposed to the Civil Rights Bill now before the Senate, primarily opposing the Public Accommodations and FEPC sections. We are the only candidates who take this stand.

In closing, let us say that we earnestly desire to serve as editors of the Daily Tar Heel. We feel we can produce a good newspaper, and we have been gratified by the support we have received.

We hope to have your support today.

Convention Hears Republican Jonas

By ANITA SMATHERS

Congressman Charles Raper Jonas (R.-N.C.) will speak here Friday at the UNC bipartisan Mock Political Convention in Memorial Hall.

His address will directly follow that of Idaho Sen. Frank Church.

Jonas, who was strongly supported for the 1964 State gubernatorial nomination, was first elected to the United States Congress in 1952 and has been reelected five successive times.

He now serves as a member of the House Appropriations Committee and is a ranking minority member of the Military Construction Subcommittee.

A native of Lincolnton, he was a delegate to the National Republican Convention in 1960.

Jonas received an A.B. degree from UNC in 1925 and graduated from the UNC Law School in 1927. While at the University, he was president of the Student Body, permanent president of his class, a member of the debating team and the Golden Fleece.

As captain of the track team, he set a record for the half mile run.

He is a past president of the North Carolina Bar Association, a past member of the Board of Examiners and former editor of the North Carolina Law Review. From 1931 to 1933 he was the United States attorney for the western district of North Carolina.

For eight years he served as the only GOP congressman from North Carolina, a position which earned him the title, "Mr. North Carolina Republican."

Jonas is a member of the Methodist church and the International Rotary Club.

Sore Neck Fells Brave DTH Editor

DTH co-editor Dave Ethridge was flicked by the fickle finger of fate this weekend and is reported resting semi-comfortably in the UNC Student Infirmary.

"I'm so drugged up I have to read Peanuts twice to get it, and Pogo is just out of the question," the fallen co-chieftain said yesterday.

Ethridge injured his neck a week ago last Friday when he was thrown off a horse into a manure pile. Last Friday he was starting his motor scooter when he re-wrenched his neck.

It was the second tragedy to strike the DTH in as many weeks. Co-editor Gary Blanchard recently swooned when he attempted to give blood for a friend.

The DTH staff requests Ethridge's friends omit flowers and send the money they might have spent to the Daily Tar Heel Beer Fund.

lights and tossed rods, Paul and his friend made it into San Francisco on time and caught their plane.

Once in Viet Nam, Paul took it upon himself to work a double 16-hour shift—eight hours in the Weather Station in Saigon and eight hours at the Armed forces radio station there.

"It made my time pass a lot faster," he said.

"Cardinal Spellman goes to some hot spot in the world every year at Christmas to try to spread good will. When he came to Viet Nam, I was there with my little G.I. tape recorder slung over my shoulder.

"Most of the action I saw overseas was behind a hammer or a microphone. The closest I ever came to the war was when a bomb exploded right near me one day on the streets of Saigon." Luckily for the Student Party, Paul escaped injury and came home from Viet Nam with nothing but pleasant memories.

"I became good friends with an 18-year-old French girl while I was over there. It was her and her family that made my life bearable.

"Her mother could not speak English and I could not speak French, but somehow the flowing personalities of the whole family overcame any communication problems. They were such happy people.

"It was against the law in Viet Nam to dance, but we would have these big parties on Saturday nights and sneak into the back room of the house and play music and dance."

Paul thinks that the people he met and the things he did in Viet Nam were the most maturing experiences of his life. "They taught me how to really appreciate friendship and the importance of getting a job done."

Paul was in the Air Force three years, ten months and seven days (to the hour). He came from Viet Nam directly to enroll as a second semester freshman at Carolina last spring.

"Yes, I've thought about it. Whatever I do, I'll probably be involved in some kind of government—either on a state or local level. It's more exciting than any other career I can think of. Where else can you find the opportunity to do so much good?"

Bob says he'll go to law school after graduation. Currently he's writing an honors paper on the passage of the Gag Law. More specifically, "how it slipped past the General Assembly."

His summers for the past few years have been spent in government work. Last summer it was with Rep. Frank Thompson of New Jersey.

"Congressman Thompson, some of his associates and I were having dinner one day in Washington when suddenly he waved his hand in the air and shouted, 'Hey, Whizzer!' It turned out to be Supreme Court Justice Whizzer White. He and Rep. Thompson play handball together a lot.

"I was introduced as one of Thompson's 'whiz kids.' Justice White said, 'Gee Topper, I could use some help over at the Supreme Court, if you're interested.'

"I ended up preparing bibliographies for Supreme Court cases for the rest of that summer."

Government, however, doesn't occupy all of the versatile Mr. Spearman's time. He has a few hobbies. Reading, debating, tennis, basketball. "When I was 6 or 8, I had a lot of hobbies—stamps and coins—most of those have fallen by the wayside."

The summer of 1962 will forever be remembered by Bob as "the year I sold my soul to the Jolly Green Giant."

"Four of us from UNC wrote the Green Giant Pea Company and applied for summer jobs in the State of Washington. We received a letter back telling us we had been assigned to the 'Boxer Sanitation Department' of the operation. We thought we had it made. We had visions of ourselves standing by a conveyor belt looking into the boxes of peas to see if they were clean.

"We spent the summer up to our ears in pea pods emptying boxes and cleaning machines 12 hours a day.

"Our co-workers were escaped convicts and migrant workers. They woke us up at 4 a.m. by playing that rock and roll record that begins, 'Hello, Baby . . . This is the Big Bopper Speakin.' They fed us poor coffee, cherry kool-aid and pinto beans three times a day.

"One night I was talking to one of the workers, a convict who had escaped from prison a few weeks before. He was trying to decide whether to give himself up or to keep on running. We finally convinced him that the Green Giant Pea Company was worse than any prison he could ever see."

Sitton Testifies Before Mallard

UNC Philosophy instructor Robert Sitton testified as a witness for the state yesterday as Judge Raymond B. Mallard opened a special two-week criminal term of Orange County Superior Court in Hillsboro.

Sitton, who was subpoenaed by District Solicitor Thomas Cooper, said he could not say with certainty if Duke University student Thomas F. Gibbons, 20, was one of the persons he drove to a highway sit-down on the Pittsboro Road February 8.

Cooper said Sitton was called as an outgrowth of an open letter he wrote to Cooper several weeks ago asking him to clarify the meaning of "conspiracy," in connection with civil rights protests.

The solicitor said he did not expect to recall Sitton unless new evidence is forthcoming.

Cooper said he expected the Gibbons case would go to the jury today, and trial of UNC student Keith Payne, charged in connection with the same incident, would begin.

In other action, Cooper sent two bills of indictment to the Grand Jury as a result of sealed presentments handed down by the body during the last term of court three weeks ago.

One charges Clyde R. Jones of Carrboro with using "profane language" in allegedly "helping" Chapel Hill police arrest street sit-down demonstrators February 14. Jones' case was unexpectedly nol prossed in Recorder's Court several weeks ago by Chapel Hill Solicitor Roy Cole and the Grand Jury is investigating.

The other bill charges Chapel Hill Freedom Committee member Pat Cusick with going on Lincoln High School grounds without proper consent and attempting to get students to refuse to attend classes.

Somebody actually stole one.

We were tickled pink to hear that somebody wanted a Volkswagen Station Wagon badly enough to go out and steal one.

Not long ago we couldn't give them away.

So when Martin Carlson reported his loss to the police, we took it as a triumph.

In its own way, the VW Station Wagon is one of the world's best getaway cars.

You can escape north or south of the border. (The VW engine can't freeze up or boil over because it's cooled by air.)

You can go farther in a VW than in any police car (24 mpg is our average).

You have 21 windows to spot anyone who's tailing you.

And it carries more loot (1632 lbs.) than the biggest wagon you can steal.

Unfortunately, the whole theory blew apart when Mr. Carlson found his VW abandoned in the very spot he had left it.

Maybe everyone isn't ready for it, after all.

Not even crooks.

Deacs Bring Tough Test To Tar Heels

By JOHN MONTAGUE

When you talk about ACC baseball, you talk first about Wake Forest. And when you think about winning the ACC pennant, you think first about beating Wake Forest.

Coach Walt Rabb's Tar Heels have been thinking about beating those Demon Deacons ever since the 1963 season ended. Today they get their chance, and Rabb would gladly give up his chewing tobacco just for the taste of victory this afternoon.

Veteran right hander Bill Haywood, who is trying hard to be the first hurler in history to compile a minus earned run average, is Rabb's logical choice to go against the defending champs in the three o'clock contest. Actually, the 26-year-old ex-Marine has already given up an earned run —two of them to be exact—but he's also pitched 33 1/3 innings, good for a 0.54 ERA and a 3-0 record.

"There's no doubt about it," says Rabb, "Haywood's our most effective pitcher. I believe he's even better than last year."

AT EMERSON (3 PM)

lefty was Coach Jack Stallings' ace-in-the-hole last spring when he won nine games. He has been the anchor man on the Deacs' staff so far this season, even though the Tar Heels roughed him up for four runs (Wake won the game) in an exhibition at Tallahassee, Fla., during spring vacation.

Howard is expected to get the starting call today, which figures. Stallings considers UNC as the top threat to his team's chances of repeating this year. So just like Rabb, he'll go with his best.

The other UNC starters will be: Bob Hundley c; Bill Brown 1b; Dickie Prindle 2b; Jim Speight ss; Dick Fleming 3b; Ken Willard lf; Bill Taylor or Gary Black, cf; and Ken Boykin rf.

Long Live The King!

Never write off a true professional.

There are countless examples to support this, but when a famous sports figure hits a slump, some fans still persist in saying "he's washed up."

This was never better illustrated than in Augusta last weekend. Arnold Palmer hadn't won a tournament since last October and hadn't won a major tournament since he won the British Open in 1962. What's more he was playing golf like Jayne Mansfeld would play a serious movie role. His entire game had fallen apart. His wife, Winnie, could outdrive him, and anyone who had never seen a putter could out-putt him.

His mental attitude had fallen apart as badly as his game. He didn't seem to be getting any enjoyment out of the game. The gallery wasn't giving him the support he had been accustomed to when he was the master of the links. "Arnie's Army" was getting smaller and smaller.

After playing four half-hearted rounds in the GGO 10 days ago, Arnie slumped into a chair in the locker room and said, "I've lost all interest in the game." Anywhere golf fans gathered you could hear the words, "The King is dead."

But it was at this same GGO that Palmer gave warning of things to come when he said, "I've got to get my game going." The bettors took notice. You don't fool them very often (let's forget the Clay-Liston farce). Palmer and Jack Nicklaus, the 1963 champjion, were made co-favorites at 3-1.

Palmer was a three-time winner of the greatest of all golf tournaments. No man had ever won four Masters, but King Arnold set out to do just this.

In the first round, he gave his opponents warning that he had returned when he shot a 69, good enough for a four-way tie for first. "Arnie's Army" had once more pledged their allegiance, and overhead, a private plane cheered him on with a banner trailing which read, "Go Arnie, Go."

And then on the second day, he really "went" and for all practical purposes, the tournament was over. At the end of the day he led the former member of the "big three," South Africa's Gary Player, by four shots. He began one of his patented "charges" on the 13th hole and birdied four of the last six holes. Now it was evident the "King" had indeed returned to reclaim his crown.

Another 69 on Saturday gave Palmer a five-stroke lead over young Australian Bruce Devlin as Player bogied the last two holes to fall seven back.

Sunday was anti-climatic. Arnie was threatened, first by young Dave Marr from New Rochelle, N. Y., and then by Nicklaus, but he was the Palmer of old as he calmly played his game and ignored the two challengers. He turned the first nine at even par, but when Marr pulled within three strokes of him, he "charged" again. He birdied the 14th and 15th to pull away, and at 12 under, with three holes to play, had an excellent chance of bettering or tying Ben Hogan's Masters record of 14-under for the 72 holes. Without any competition now he muffed an easy birdie 2 putt on sixteen and then on 17 he missed an eight-footer for par and had to settle for a bogey five.

On 18, Marr, Palmer's playing partner, sank a 30 for a birdie and a final six under to trail by only five strokes, but the champ wasn't through yet. To the delight of his army, he sank his 20-foot downhill putt to finish with a 12 under par 276, six strokes ahead of Marr and Nicklaus.

Speaking of comebacks, Ben Hogan and Nicklaus should not be overlooked. Hogan, who averaged 68 shots per round in winning the 1953 Masters, hadn't played in a tournament since last June because he was ashamed to putt in front of a large gallery. The bantam from Texas did not have anything to be ashamed of at Augusta. After shooting a 75 and a 73 the first two days, he came back with the lowest score of the tournament, a 67, on Saturday and, discounting Palmer, was the crowd's favorite. His 72 Sunday gave him a one under par 287 for the four rounds.

Kerrying On

BY KERRY SIPE

The song says it's just a hundred pounds of clay that makes life worth living.

Sonny Liston will tell you that that clay is not in the shape of a pigeon.

So will Cassius if you ask him.

But though he may be the greatest, heavyweight Champion Cassius Clay is not the first to tongue his way into the Sports Hall of Fame with a classic saying, so unique that people just can't forget it.

Try your memory on a couple of these gems, sports fans! The answers are below. When you have finished, sign the pledge and calculate your score.

Ten correct means "You are the greatest!" Less than five—"Say it ain't so, Joe."

Remember what the man said, "Nice guys finish last."

* * *

1. I just forgot to duck, honey.
2. I should have stood in bed.
3. Win one for the Gipper.
4. I see something.
5. I'll murder de bum!
6. The bigger they come, the harder they fall.
7. Say it ain't so, Joe.
8. Unbeaten, untied, unscored upon and uninvited.
9. Hit 'em where they ain't.
10. Nice guys finish last.

* * *

1. Heavyweight Jack Dempsey had just returned to his hotel from 1926 title bout with Gene Tunney in Philadelphia. "What happened, Ginsberg?" asked Estelle Taylor, Dempsey's first wife. "I just forgot to duck, honey." was his answer.

2. Joe Jacobs, manager of German pugilist Max Schmeling, had just come home from a very trying day in the 1930's when he came up with this classic quote describing complete frustration.

3. Notre Dame football coach Knute Rockne, eight years after George Gipp, one of Notre Dame's all-time greats, had told him on his death bed that if the going ever got tough, to tell the team to win one for the Gipper. Rockne told the story to his 1928 team at halftime of their game with Army. The emotional effect was so moving that the team went ahead to win in a 12 to 6 upset.

5. Tony Galento, Cassius Clay-style, before his 1936 bout with Joe Louis. Tony wasn't as lucky as Cassius. Louis floored him in the fourth round.

6. Bob Fitzsimmons, a giant of a middleweight, before being knocked out by heavyweight Jim Jefferies at the turn of the century.

7. A small urchin of the street outside the investigation room where "Shoeless" Joe Jackson was accused of taking a bribe to throw the 1919 World Series.

8. Colgate football coach Andy Kerr after his 1932 team amassed an unbeaten, untied, and unscored upon record and still didn't get an invitation to a bowl game.

9. Wee Willie Keeler describing how he batted his .345 average from 1892 to 1910.

10. Leo Durocher, as manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers. Durocher was asked his opinion of well-liked public figure Mel Ott who had just accepted the helm of the New York Giants team.

Netters Host Wake; Go For Number 47

By BOB BETTIS

North Carolina's Tar Heel netmen, who have won 46 consecutive ACC matches, open defense of their ACC crown by clashing with Wake Forest College here today.

The Tar Heels, seeking their seventh straight championship, must be rated heavy favorites over a somewhat mediocre Demon Deacon squad.

"Wake is still in the process of building up its tennis program," UNC Coach Don Skakle said yesterday.

"But we expect a good match from them. They won their first four games of the season and are a little stronger than last spring. So we might have a little more trouble with them than in the past."

In compiling a 9-1 record this spring, the Tar Heels have whipped Michigan State twice, George Washington twice, Williams College twice, Toledo, M.I.T. and Ohio University.

The lone setback came on opening day when Indiana upset UNC by a 5-4 margin.

Only two of these non-conference opponents, the Hoosiers and George Washington, managed to score over one point on the Tar Heels. Four of them—Toledo, M.I.T., Williams and Ohio—were shut out completely.

Today's contest is the last home match for Carolina until May 1, at which time the South Carolina Gamecocks journey to Chapel Hill.

Fencers Win

North Carolina's fencers knocked off The Citadel Saturday, 16-11. Foiler Murray Pender led the assault, taking his foil matches, 3-0, and proving effective as a sub in the epee. UNC won all three divions: foil, 6-3; sabre, 5-4; and epee, 5-4.

Spearman Wins Student Body Presidency

Fred Seely, Hugh Stevens Gain Tar Heel Editorship

Fred Seely and Hugh Stevens were elected editors of the Daily Tar Heel in yesterday's campus election.

The Seely - Stevens combination, endorsed by both the Student and University Parties, tallied 2606 votes, compared with the Blackwell-Kirkpatrick write-in of 1665.

The winners said, "We are extremely pleased at the response to our campaign. We pledge to make every effort on behalf of the Daily Tar Heel and the student body. We realize that it is indeed a great challenge, but we will do our best to make next year's DTH the best ever."

Stevens and Seely will assume their duties beginning next week.

Results of the Student Legislature, National Student Association, Senior class officers, Women's Residence Council, Carolina Women's Council races were not available at presstime last night.

Complete results will be printed in Thursday's Daily Tar Heel.

Carson, Gray And Light Victorious

The University Party scored victories in three of the "Big Four" races Tuesday, with Bob Spearman being elected student body president.

In unofficial returns late last night:

Don Carson (UP) won over Jeff Davis (SP), 2489-2094.

Madeline Gray (SP) scored the most impressive victory of the day in clobbering Priscilla Patterson (UP), 2892-1753.

Former student body vice president Spearman piled up large majorities in Spencer, Craige, Whitehead, and Town Men's IV to capture an easy victory.

Spearman, a junior from Chapel Hill issued the following startement after he learned of his election: "I am delighted that the campaign is over and that it turned out a success. I think it was a hard and vigorous campaign on both sides and I sincerely hope, and expect both parties to be able to put the campaign behind them and turn their concerns to the student body and the university.

"I would like to express my thanks to the many people who helped me in the campaign.

"I hate to sound so mundane, but there will be a special meeting of Student Legislature today at 3 p.m. to consider the budget."

Taylor Opposes Direct Support In Viet Conflict

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, strongly opposes any use of U.S. armed forces as "the direct means" of suppressing Communist-led guerrillas in South Viet Nam.

He testified at a Feb. 17 House appropriations subcommittee hearing during which Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara said the success of the anti-Communist war depends on the South Vietnamese themselves.

In a heavily censored hearing transcript made public Tuesday, Taylor said in reply to a question from Rep. Gerald Ford (R-Mich.) that he would oppose use of U.S. combat forces in South Viet Nam "under all circumstances that I can think of."

The General said American forces are there now to advise the Vietnamese "and in some cases to provide and operate equipment which cannot be transferred immediately to South Vietnamese forces."

Later in the hearing, Ford told McNamara that there seemed to be "a reluctance on the part of administration officials to commit U.S. forces to combat for a Vietnamese-U.S. victory, and I don't think this is a proper or prudent attitude."

McNamara said, "We will make whatever hard choices have to be made," and the discussion then went off the record. But he said at another point that the kind of war being waged in Viet Nam could be won by the Vietnamese, although the United States will take all measures "within our capability" to prevent a Communist victory.

Concerned Citizens Return From D. C.

The first of several teams from the Committee for Concerned Citizens lobbying for the passage of the civil rights bill in the Senate returned from Washington last week.

The next group will leave for a two-day lobbying trip Sunday.

The first group visited legislative assistants to four key senators and told them about the events in Chapel Hill this year. They spoke about the stand of the Board of Aldermen on the proposed public accommodations law and about the subsequent demonstrations.

The Committee's representatives said they were attempting to present as accurate a picas possible of the Chapel Hill racial situation.

On the basis of this picture, they urged that the senators vote down weakening amendments and vote for passage of the bill as it now stands.

The legislative assistants told them that there had been so much mail on the issue that much of it had to be thrown away. They encouraged more personal visits by people interested in the fate of the bill.

Senators whose officers were visited were: Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), floor manager of the bill: Sen. Sam Ervin (D-N.C.); Sen. Beall (R-Md.), co-sponsor of the bill: and Sen. Roman Hruska (R-Neb.), whip for the public accommodations section.

Apologies Fill The Air After Nikita's 'Death'

MOSCOW (UPI) — Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev smiling and in high humor, appeared Tuesday night at a Moscow reception where he joshed and engaged in horseplay with high ranking aides as if in answer to false reports of his death.

The West German news agency DPA, which originated the report, apologized to the Soviet government. Although Khrushchev did not mention the reports, his Foreign Ministry press department chief, Leonid Zamyatin, did.

Zamyatin gave a tongue lashing to DPA chief correspondent Heinz Wurzel, lodged a stiff protest and said: "This is a real provocation and we will take action." He indicated he might make a formal statement after an investigation.

Japanese journalists in Moscow met and issued a denial that any of their number had been involved in circulating the Khrushchev report, which electrified the world. The DPA indicated it received the originial word from a Japanese news agency.

Ritchie Makes UNC Richer And Richer

Ray Ritchie, the man who increased sales at the Book Exchange by more than $1,300,000, was honored this month with a three page article in "The College Store Journal."

Under the leadership of Ritchie, the UNC Book Ex grew from a tiny, overcrowded store to an operation with eight branch locations throughout the campus. For 22 years, Ritchie guided the Book Ex toward success but he retired in December for reasons of poor health.

"The College Store Journal" is a trade magazine of the National Association of College Stores, of which Ritchie was president in 1952.

Last Chance For Lyon!

Applications for the UNC Year-At-Lyon program are due today. Dr. Richard Frautschi, Professor-in-charge, announced that over 20 applications have been received so far. Anyone desiring to submit a late application should make arrangements with Dr. Frautschi in 315 Dey Hall.

The UNC Year-At-Lyon will take 30 students from Carolina and other southeastern colleges to Lyon, France, for the next academic year. They will receive intense language and cultural training and enroll for two semesters at the university there. They will live with French students and families and live the life of an average Frenchman for a year.

All students will finance their year just as they would a year at UNC, although the normally-available student aid funds have been expanded for the Lyon students.

TAYLOR HONORED

Dr. Ransom Taylor of the UNC German Department has been appointed visiting professor of German civilization and culture at a ten-week session this summer at the University of Colorado.

Taylor will travel to Boulder, Colo., as part of the Institute for Teachers of Modern Foreign Languages.

Mock Political Convention Opens Tomorrow In Woollen

Barry Goldwater

Henry Cabot Lodge

Thursday through Saturday of this week will be the time for the students of U.N.C. to express their political opinions.

For the first time in the history of this school a bi-partisan mock political convention will be held.

Strong forces for Johnson, Lodge, and Goldwater have been working hard during the past few weeks consolidating their support and will clash starting tomorrow night at 7:15 in the gym. Approximately 900 delegates will participate and all visitors are welcome. The keynote speakers for Thursday evening are Governor Sanford for the Democrats and Republican Congressman John B. Anderson from Illinois.

The convention promises to be exciting with prominent Democratic and Republican speakers on the platform each night. However, the keynote speakers are by no means the most important part of the program. On Thursday evening the rules will be adopted, the committees approved, and the permanent chairmen elected. The speakers will follow the business of the evening. On Friday the platform will be adopted plank by plank with a unit vote to each delegation. Saturday highlights the convention with the nomination of the Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates. The speakers will precede the business on Friday and Saturday. Starting Thursday afternoon there will be numerous caucuses held. All of the important meetings of the standing committees will be during the afternoons also.

The planks of the platform include: Foreign Policy, National Defense, Labor, Agriculture, Government Finances and Domestic Policy, and Civil Rights. Democratic and Republican platform may be released in tomorrow's Tar Heel. If not, they may be obtained from the delegation chairman by Wednesday evening, or at the Convention itself. A list of the names of the delegation chairmen follows.

Johnson Asks Aid For Aged

WASHINGTON (UPI) —Spurred by political as well as humanitarian considerations, President Johnson was pressing hard Tuesday for legislation intended to lighten some of the financial burdens of the aged.

It appeared likely that Congress would respond by raising Social Security payments or improving health insurance programs for the aged—or possibly a combination of the two.

Two Greek Cypriotes Killed In Gunfight

NICOSIA, Cyprus (UPI) — Greek Cypriotes opened fire Tuesday on a 650-man Turkish army contingent during a three-hour gun battle with Turkish Cypriotes in which two Greeks were killed and two others were wounded.

None of the Turkish army soldiers was hit, but the action once again raised the fear of direct Turkish intervention. Ankara Radio reported that 24 Turkish navy ships sailed Tuesday from Iskenderum, 100 miles away, for maneuvers with live ammunition.

The fighting in Nicosia was the heaviest since the bloody battles of last December. Still, it was overshadowed by the growing fears of Turkish intervention and the possibility of a clash between Greece and Turkey, both members of NATO.

SPU Panel Attracts 20 In Gerrard

By PETE HARKNESS

A four-man panel discussed "The Philosophical Implications of Man and the Nuclear Age" in Gerrard Hall Sunday afternoon before about 20 people.

The panel, sponsored by the Student Peace Union, included the Rev. Vance Barron of the Presbyterian Church, Robert Johnson, director of the Wesley Foundation, Dr. Robert Sitton, of the Philosophy Department, and Tim Ray, a graduate student in philosophy.

Sitton said that "our day by day decisions are being governed less and less by reason and more by fear." He claimed that most people were trying to think evils out of existence and that an attitude of indifference prevails.

Speaking about our free press, Sitton said, "Our failures to be what we say we are come into full view." He said the best thing we can do is clean our own house before we lose the rest of the world. He cited the civil rights question as a prime example of our not Americanizing America before we try and sell it to the rest of the world.

Sitton warned that "Many people may be driven to communism because of our failures to live up to the ideals of a democracy."

Rev. Barron criticized churches for not living up to the demands of the Nuclear Age. He said that Christians used to be pacifists before the time of Constantine. Since then, he said, the Church has even advocated war.

Puccini Opera Set For Hill Hall Today

The University Opera Workshop will present a student production of Puccini's one-act comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi" this afternoon at 4:30 p.m. in Hill Hall Auditorium. William Bennett, student director of the Workshop, will conduct.

The starring role of Schicchi will be sung by Creed Freeman, Jr., and the part of Lauretta, Schicchi's daughter, will be sung by Nancy Milner. Laurens McMaster, contralto, and Lawrence Gupton, tenor, will also sing in leading roles.

This is the second fully staged and costumed production of the University Opera Workshop this year. Under director Wilton Mason, Mozart's "Cosi fan Tutti" will be given on May 12 and 13.

The performance is open to the public. There will be no admission charge.

Udall Keynotes NSA

REP. MORRIS UDALL

U. S. Representative Morris Udall, Arizona Democrat, will keynote the spring Regional Assembly of the Carolinas-Virginia Region of the U.S. National Student Association (NSA) on April 17-18.

The topic of the meeting will be "National Issues, 1964," and it will be held at East Carolina College in Greenville, N. C.

Approximately 150 students are expected from 35 colleges and universities in Virginia and the Carolinas, according to NSA Regional Chairman Harry DeLung. He added, "UNC traditionally sends six delegates and six alternates to these meetings. They will be appointed by the new student body president."

Udall, 42, was elected to fill the Congressional seat vacated by his brother, Stewart, when the latter was appointed Secretary of the Interior by President Kennedy in 1961.

He received his law degree from the University of Arizona, where he was president of the student body in 1947-48. He has played college and professional basketball, and been president of the Tucson YMCA. Udall has been mentioned as a Democratic possibility to upset Arizona Republican Barry Goldwater.

Following Udall's banquet-address Friday night, seminars will be held Saturday on issues of national significance in a presidential election year. Topics include: The War on Poverty, Education and the Federal Government, Civil Rights, and the U.S. Image in World Affairs.

Resource persons to assist in the seminars will include a representative of the North Caro-

Rocket Ignites; Injures 10

CAPE KENNEDY (UPI) — At least 10 persons were injured, three seriously, when the third stage of a Delta rocket ignited today spewing flames and hot gases during an indoor test, the federal space agency said.

A spokesman said 9 of the 10 injured were hospitalized and one was reported in critical condition. About 20 persons were in the area at the time.

The Air Force said it was the first major accident it had incurred at this space center.

The third stage which ignited contained solid fuel and the engine was about five feet long, the space agency said.

"They were moving it to a spin table when it ignited," said a spokesman for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

A Suggestion For Future Symposiums

One of the points upon which Rick Doble, critic of the recent Carolina Symposium, and Dick Hesse, chairman of the Symposium, agree is that the Symposium was only partially successful.

Doble thinks this is due to the fact that "there was no real discussion, no real debate, no real inquiry into 'Arms And The Man,' only a partial discussion."

Hesse (see below) agrees that it was "only a partial Symposium" but says this is due chiefly to the fact that "it would be impossible to present a complete Symposium during which every view, every opinion would be fully and adequately expressed.

"We could not begin to do this," Hesse says. "Our purpose was to focus interest upon these issues and to provide food for thought. . . It can become a complete Symposium only if those who attended discuss the issues involved and . . . express different opinions."

Obviously, Doble and Hesse are looking at the Symposium from two different vantage points. Doble sees it as finished, and Hesse implies that it won't be until we find out if everyone who attended the Symposium has chewed thoroughly the food for thought which the Symposium served up.

In their own way, both Doble and Hesse are both right. The Symposium is over—the luster and glow of it all already are fading and the campus has turned to other topics. And yet, those who attended the sessions undoubtedly carried away with them at least a greater familiarity with the terminology of the Cold War and its origins, motivations and effects, and this is bound to affect what they say, do and think about this important topic in the future. In that sense, the Symposium will never be over.

So much for other people's criticisms. We have one of our own.

Why must the Symposium be telescoped into such a brief period? To capture attention and interest?

What about all the students and others who can't afford to take five days off in the middle of the semester?

And how can you really digest and ruminate on a speech such as Sen. Fulbright's if you're immediately hit in the intellect with half a dozen more in the space of a few days?

Why not stretch the Symposium over a two-month period, with a little time to rest and reflect between speakers?

This would also permit the spotlight of campus attention to focus strongly on each particular speaker, with his or her own unique merits, rather than having many of them lost in the shuffle of a tight timetable and getting what amounts to only a passing glance from the campus.

The afternoon panelists are a case in point. Many of them were excellent and had lots to offer the campus. But they were confined to a very brief period of exposure. There was little or no opportunity for deeply-interested members of the audience to dig into their thoughts and get to know them as more than just famous names and important people.

Marya Mannes was one of the many panelists who expressed severe disappointment at being invited down, paid a healthy honorarium then not having an opportunity to give her hosts their money's worth, so to speak. She, obviously, wanted an opportunity to talk with students and others as much as many of us wanted the opportunity to get to know her, and other panelists.

Why not, then, stretch the Symposium out over a longer period? We think this would benefit all concerned.

We would appreciate comments on this suggestion from members of this year's Symposium who, even its critics readily concede, did a magnificent job of organization.

United

The National Observer

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—In an effort to unify the two elements of an undergraduate's life—living and learning—the University of Michigan has started an unusual project to help break down the barrier that separates the student's classroom experience from his living experience.

Under this project, freshmen and sophomores living in three regular residence halls are assigned to special sections of survey courses most commonly taken by students in the literary college.

Thus, each freshman and sophomore in these houses is taking at least one course with other residents of his house. Professors teaching their courses are invited to the houses for dinner.

The theory is that students get maximum benefit from a class if they discuss the material informally with other students outside of class. All students benefit intellectually if those they associate with on a day-by-day basis have shared a common academic experience, have heard the same lecture, and have read the same books. Such a common experience provides the basis for academically oriented discussions that reinforce what they have learned in the class.

Hesse Answers Criticisms

(Ed. Note: This is Dick Hesse's reply to criticisms of the recent Carolina Symposium expressed in yesterday's issue. Readers are invited to offer their comments on the matter.

By DICK HESSE
Chairman,
1964 Carolina Symposium

In reply to Rick Doble's recent criticism of the Symposium, I would like to say that, though some of it is thoughtful and legitimate, some of it is neither. He stated that "few speakers spoke on their topics." With the exceptions of one or two speakers (out of twenty) the others all spoke quite precisely on their topics.

Mr. Doble's second criticism was that the speakers never "touched on the real issue," and he cites David Brinkley as an example. We cannot dictate to a speaker what views to express, only invite him to express his own opinion on a given issue. Mr. Brinkley outlined quite specifically what the question of news management is, explained how it had arisen, and then went on to say that he thought it was a myth. Apparently Mr. Doble wanted Mr. Brinkley to say that news management exists, but quite obviously Mr. Brinkley does not believe that it does. Any criticism of Mr. Brinkley for not saying something he did not believe seems ridiculous.

Another criticism along these lines was that to invite Hans Morganthau to discuss the concept of The Garrison State was a "terrible blunder" because he did not feel a garrison state existed in America. Such a criticism is absurd. Prof. Morganthau explained the premise, gave historical references and specifics, and then expressed his own learned opinion. We were not trying to convince people that either news management or a garrison state does or does not exist. We thought the issues themselves were important and we invited well-known authorities to discuss them. It is the right of everyone to disagree with any of the opinions expressed at the Symposium.

The last criticism was that no one who held a position of non-deterrence spoke. This is true. We tried very hard to have this viewpoint represented. In point of fact, we did invite Fromm, Allport, and others, but they all declined. This was unfortunate, but there was nothing at all that we could do about it.

Finally, Mr. Doble concluded with the statement that it was only a partial Symposium. I agree. However, it would be impossible to present a complete Symposium during which every view, every opinion would be fully and adequately expressed. We could not begin to do this. Rather, we tried to raise important issues, to ask many questions instead of trying to give all the answers. It can become a complete Symposium only if those who attended discuss the issues involved and do express different opinions. Our purpose was to focus interest upon these issues and to provide food for thought. This, I think, was certainly accomplished.

Letters To The Editors

Reply From The Pi Kappa Phis

Editors, the Tar Heel:

I feel rather foolish even bothering to answer such a completely ridiculous letter as the one Mr. Manning had printed in the Tar Heel on April 7, but since this letter has such malicious overtones and damaging accusations and statements, I feel it is my duty to do so.

First of all, the editors of the DTH have shown extremely poor taste in printing a slanderous letter such as the one entitled "Animals on a Frat House Roof." Letters of this type serve no academic purpose whatsoever—they only create antagonistic and hostile feelings between students, student groups, and the faculty. Is this the purpose of the DTH?

The presence of students of the Pi Kapp porch roof is easily justifiable since the house is only about 40 feet from what was a burning and smokefilled Kappa Sigma house. We were very concerned with the future of our own two-story, wooden, frame house. During the meantime, our front lawn and shrubbery was being trampled and littered up with refuse by a curious crowd of several hundred onlookers, of which I assume Mr. Manning was one. We furnished wet towels to some of the men in the house and offered our restroom to needy students, even to several inebriated ones who were finally asked to leave the house and front porch. The identity of the several students behaving in an obnoxious manner is known and none were Pi Kapps. Due to the fact of mass crowds all around the burning house and a rapid turnover of onlookers the statements of April 7 seem especially misdirected.

Pi Kappa Phi has no apologies to make to anyone for any incident which may have occurred the night of the fire. On the contrary, we feel we are due an apology for the writing and printing of this ill-founded and nonsensical letter!

On Our Coverage Of Cone Incident

Editors of The Tar Heel:

Because The Daily Tar Heel reported the recent Moses Cone Hospital incident so "thoroughly" and "accurately," I thought you would be interested in the following letter which appeared in the April 9 edition of the Greensboro Daily News.

Editor of The Daily News:

"Since Moses H. Cone Hospital has been so widely criticized on the treatment of Dennis Nathaniel, I feel it is time that the true facts are told. I am the nurse who was on duty in the emergency room and I feel justly qualified to state them.

"When this man entered the emergency room at approximately 3:20 p.m. on March 29, 1964, he was walking and came immediately to the desk. He was covering his nose with a cloth on which there was some blood, but when I removed the cloth his nose was not bleeding; it was swollen. The pupils of both eyes were equal. The patient was asked if the blow had knocked him unconscious and he stated it had not.

"I was not informed of Mr. Nathaniel's nationality, and since the hospital policy has always been to refer patients of the Negro race who were not seriously injured to L. Richardson Hospital, I explained the policy to him and suggested that he go there for treatment.

"As has been stated above, these are the true facts surrounding this incident, and I feel the time has come for the citizens to know just exactly what occurred . . ." E. P.—Greensboro.

As a student in the School of Journalism, I have been taught that the press should recognize a positive obligation to give its readers the news of genuine significance to their lives as fairly, completely and without bias as competent professional practice and judgment permit.

Quite obviously, The Daily Tar Heel did not fulfill one of these obligations in reporting Nathaniel's "story." This fact was most upsetting and shocking to me, since The Daily Tar Heel is regarded as one of the finest college newspapers in America.

I have several other comments to make on the matter, but you see my nose just started bleeding and. . . .

Sincerely yours,

Letters For The Kennedy Library

Editors, the Tar Heel:

Our generation has experienced few shocks, and none have we shared more intensely and none has moved us as deeply as the death of President Kennedy. All Americans were stunned and grieved by his untimely passing, but perhaps youth felt the blow more than all the rest. He was a man who shared his youth and ideals with young people and awakened within us the challenge to find a purpose and to carry out our responsibility to ourselves and to our country.

We believe that the personal letters college students wrote to friends, sweethearts, parents and others who were close to them during those days in November would indicate their true feelings and vividly describe the effect of John F. Kennedy's death upon our generation. In addition to providing a tribute to President Kennedy, these letters would serve not only as a valuable asset to historians, but would clearly depict for the future the emotional and psychological impact of the tragedy upon the thoughts of America's young people.

Because we feel that these letters are important, we as individuals are collecting them for deposit in the JFK Memorial Library and have been assured by officials at the National Archives that the letters will be stored in Washington until the library is completed.

As we are college students with a limited budget, our only appeal is to students through college newspapers, and we need your support and cooperation to make this project a success. If you have saved any of the letters which you received which commented upon the effects of the events in Dallas, and if you are interested in donating them to the library, please send them to:

Letters,
Blacksburg, Virginia 24060

If possible we would like to have the original envelope showing the postmark and date. Upon receipt of the letters, we will assemble them and forward them in a body to the National Archives in Washington, D. C.

It should be remembered that these letters will be made available for examination by competent and interested persons at the library, and thus, any personal matter may be deleted or the letter may be recopied omitting these parts. We will attempt to acknowledge all letters which are received.

We feel that if we are able to obtain an adequate number of these letters representing a fair cross-section of the U. S. college population, then our generation will be enabled to make a real and unique contribution to history, helping to paint a clearer picture of our times.

Sincerely yours,

Physician Speaks On Cone Memorial

Editors, the Tar Heel:

In view of the recent publicity about the University of N. C. student, who, through a regrettable but human error, was referred to another hospital for emergency treatment I am anxious to say something in behalf of the administration, doctors, nurses and technicians of the Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital. As a new resident of Greensboro I have been very much impressed by the excellent facilities and high quality of medical care administered to the sick of all races by the staff of this fine hospital. The citizens of Greensboro and Guilford County should not lose sight of the fact that of the hospitals in this area the administration of The Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital has been the forerunner in trying to solve the medical needs of all races. We should not forget that Negro doctors and dentists have been on the staff of this hospital and that Negro patients have been treated daily and voluntarily prior to any mandate from Federal Courts.

More From McInnis On The Marvelous Marilyn

by HENRY McINNIS

"The Dreams and the Dreamers," by Hollis Alpert. The McMillan Co. New York. 1963. 258 pages.

"We were standing on 57th Street in New York and I told Marilyn she didn't seem very much like the articles I'd read about her. She said, 'Maybe I shouldn't say this but I've always felt those articles somehow reveal more about the writer than they do about me'."

Thus Hollis Alpert, cinema critic for "The Saturday Review" magazine, penned a memory of an interview he had in 1960 with the late Marilyn Monroe in his entertaining and frequently witty "The Dream and the Dreamer," essentially a scrapbook of impressions that are the result of what Alpert chose to term "a critical viewing of films, meetings with some of the major and minor personalities of the film world and hundreds of discussions."

Critic Alpert certainly revealed next-to-nothing about the elusive and enigmatic Marilyn, as her remark seemed to sense. On his other subjects for examination, he is more adept.

Among the more fascinating excursions into the film world via Alpert, are his chapters on the changing face of Hollywood's taboos and customs; censorship problems; the big, big stars of the past and present; Marlon Brando and how he has succumbed to money instead of art; Ingmar Bergman and why his pictures are generally significant and meaningful; Ross Hunter, producer-director of those glossy, flossy Doris Day fashion shows that masquerade as films; Jean Seberg, the actress-Cinderella whose wicked fairy godmother dropped her, glass slippers and all, into the laps of the cruel critics for her disastrous performance in Otto Preminger's "Saint Joan"; Hollywood's favorite cliches, or how to succeed as a hack script writer without really trying; and a symposium-diagnostic session on the casting couch analyzing the contributions of the best American directors such as Stevens, William Wyler, Elia Kazan, Billy Wilder, Joe Mankiewicz, William Wise, Fred Zinneman, Otto Preminger and John Huston.

Mr. Alper spends a whole chapter chronicling the reasons why he thinks Alfred Hitchcock fails to be a great director. He suggests Hitchcock lacks substance and message, that he cannot be serious and fails to be interested in the ordinary experiences of humanity. To document this "charge," the author points to Hitchcock's movies and explains their defects, not in craftsmanship, but in artistic integrity.

A genuinely uproarious episode is found in the chapter dealing with Mike Todd Jr.'s ill-fated dabbling in "smell-movies," variously and infamously known as Glorious Smell-O-Vision! and AromaRama. Alpert says that "the promoters of the scented movies took a confident approach, emphasizing that the movie-going public was now to have three senses instead of the usual two, with which to appreciate the cinema. If the Feelies ever come, there should be no hesitation in announcing to us that we can stop living and simply be movies!"

Nothing particularly new or revealing is contained in Alpert's discussion of the Italian film industry, so readers who are seeking great depth in this phase of the world cinema will be disappointed. Here we go again, flagellating our own insipid cinematic Americana and praising the genius that characterizes the work of directors like Rossellini, Visconti, De Sica, Fellini and Antonioni, and bemoaning the vapidity of our own cultural backyard.

The author makes it clear why he considers Ingmar Bergman the world's greatest director. Readers will want to see if they can agree with these reason. Telling why Bergman's view of sex and the erotic is modern, Alpert writes that the Swedish director's vision is "modern, based partly on wit, partly on psychiatric knowledge and viewed as an essential part of the human comedy. In the serious films it is part of the human tragedy. Nor is the erotic substratum in religious feeling neglected. In "The Magician" the neurotically religious wife of the baron sees in the visiting magician someone who will ease her suffering. Her religiosity is disguised eroticism. Thus Bergman ranges far and deep, viewing human behavior with a realistic mind."

"And the French Created Women" is his chapter on the French New Wave cinema and the rise of Brigitte Bardot and her less than obvious contributions to the art of the motion picture.

Prudery and its disciples, the bluenoses, who censor and mutilate in the name of "morality" are attacked by the author who lifts up the skirts of the censors to see what makes them tick. It's not a very pretty or wholesome sight.

Reader Replies To Wilson's Statement

Editors, the Tar Heel:

In reference to a statement by Clyde Wilson in the DTH on April 4, I would like to ask Mr. Wilson what he meant by "a society which holds freedom of the individual as its most important goal." It's apparent that he concurs with the idea of the business man's right to choose customers. He stated that ". . . the demonstrators are not protesting a segregation law. They are protesting the right of Clarence, or Carlton or Brady to operate his business in the way that he judges to be in his own best interest."

Now I'm not against any man's right. I think every man should be allowed freedom of choice. But there must be a little more to this than has been stated. As I understand it, this business man's right has never been voiced so heartedly before in U. S. history. It seems to be a cover up for segregation.

Our legal rights are dictated by the constitution. No where, in the constitution, is there a law, regarding a restaurant owners right to choose customers. As I understand it, the restaurant owner has already made his choice. He's opened a business to the buying public. The matter of choice is left completely up to one individual, the buyer. The restaurant owner would be glad to see as many patrons as possible. He doesn't go out into the street to say, "hey Mack, I want you to eat at my place." He doesn't tell Mr. Ross that he can't buy the same brand of shoe polish Mrs. Sanford bought. His door is opened to the objective public.

There is such a thing as a right. There is such a thing as a privilege. As far as the public business is concerned, the customer has the right to choose. The only way that the customer's "right" can be defined as a "privilege" is in respect to a "private establishment." Just anyone can't enter the "Playboy Club." There are certain restrictions. But what restrictions are there against Mrs. Brown patronizing the A&P Market?

It's easy for one to say "so you're saying I can't throw a drunk out of my place if I want to." Surely, no drunk should have the right to "force" his company. He's a menace. But in a public establishment does an Indian chief, candle stick maker or Russian Premier have that right? In any public establishment, he should.

It's another thing to misinterpret and try to forget those principles so dear to us, as liberty and human equity. Should all men be regarded as equals in the eyes of the law or shouldn't they? Should Joe White be given a cold shoulder because his skin is black? One might wonder about the ideals of American government and Jesus Christ. One might wonder about others, who have the nerve to say "good exists."

Again, everyone of our rights has been evaluated before being made into law, whatever the case. What use is there for a restaurant owner to have the right to choose customers? What use is there for the customer to have the sole right to choose, regarding a public business?

Further, it seems that the Negro Civil Rights Movement is not opposed to "Clarence, or Carlton or Brady," as you referred to them. It is apparent that the Negro is fighting a social institution, segregation.

The Negro is faced by the same enemy as "Carlton." Only when that enemy is conquered will Carl be allowed to stop worrying about his financial problems and relative loss of white patrons.

For Carl is being pressured, when he states, "I don't like being pushed by those Core ruffians." He's being pressured by an injust social ideal, an ideal derived from slavery. Carl faces the same problem that Kashmir, the Indian inn keeper, faces. There isn't much of a difference between good old American segregation and the Hindu Caste System. But there is a difference between human understanding and hypocrisy.

If these points are erroneous, correct me. Again, how should one define "public establishment," if I'm wrong? How should one define "hypocrisy" if the "liberal minded" segregationist is right?

World-Famed Pianist Here On Thursday

Pianist Gina Bachauer

When Gina Bachauer sits down to the keyboard in Memorial Hall Thursday at 8:00 p.m. she will be closing the eleventh season of the Chapel Hill Concert Series as well as playing a return engagement after only three years' absence. In 1960 her piano recital was so acclaimed that the concert series has brought back for another concert the celebrated Athenian who plays in a romantic style that has almost vanished from the music halls.

As a matter of fact Gina Bachauer's entire concert life reflects a kind of elegance. Her first formal music study began at the Athens Conservatoire under Ariadne Casasis and Waldemar Freeman where within a short time she had distinguished herself by winning the conservatory's highest award, the Medaille d'Or. At the insistence of her teachers she subsequently set out for Paris to study with Alfred Cortot at the Ecole Normale de Musique. In 1933, still a piano student, she auditioned and won the coveted Medaile d'Honneur in the Vienna Competition for Piano and Song.

To get the musical instruction that has so markedly influenced her technique she followed Rachmaninoff, the great Russian Maestro, all over Europe because he was concertizing at the time. Recently in discussing Rachmaninoff's effect on her style Mme. Bachauer recalled that the maestro could encompass eleven notes and that "chords he has written for his concerts are unplayable for a normal hand." Such dexterity is unusual; nevertheless she plays quite agilely music edited for her by him. His influence on her fingering technique has been especially pronounced and to this day audiences marvel at the amount of music she can play in such a short time with only ten fingers—sometimes it sounds as if she must have at least twenty. Occasionally she is taken to task by the critics for speeding up certain passages she shouldn't, but the criticism is usually mingled with amazement at such musical virtuosity.

After her training with the distinguished Rachmaninoff she felt at last prepared to launch her professional career and returned appropriately to her native Athens to make her debut and in 1935 appeared as guest soloist with her fellow countryman Dimitri Mitropoulos, conductor of the Athens Symphony; then she made her first major appearance with Pierre Monteux and the Paris Symphony. Her fame as a foremost pianist spread almost overnight. Then abruptly came World War II. Alas, her musical career was halted and she had to take refuge in Egypt where she played more than 600 concerts, some of them jazz, to the Allied Forces. It was, incidentally, during that time she became the friend and teacher of the late King Paul of Greece who later decorated her for her war service to her country.

When the war was over she went to London to resume her concert work and in 1945 made her British debut with Alex Sherman, quickly becoming and remaining one of London's prime favorites. Her debut in this country was not made until 1950 but since that time she has been coming annually playing from coast to coast.

Her concert repertory comprises many complex and difficult compositions and for her American tours her programs lean toward brilliant selections of Bach, especially his organ works in concert transcription. In fact her talent for producing organ-like tones has provoked the comparison of Bachauer to the great Teresa Carreno who was called "The Valkyrie of the Pianoforte." Earlier this year Harold Rogers in an enthusiastic description of her Chopin in a recent concert said that "she was now the compleat pianist in that she runs the gamut from power to tenderness in a total poetic expression at any dynamic degree."

Tickets for Mme. Bachauer's concert are on sale at Danziger's Old World Gift Center where a seating chart is available; by telephoning 942-2865; or at the door the night of the performance. All seats are reserved at $3 and $2. UNC students will be admitted with ID cards.

BILL IS ENDORSED

The Editors' Roundtable Wednesday endorsed a bill before the legislature to make the Roundtable a permanent executive committee. The Roundtable also drafted its bylaws.

Jeff Davis, chairman of the Roundtable, appointed a news service chairman and a printing committee chairman.

$10 MILLION IN GRANTS

Research training grants and contracts totaling almost $10 million were awarded or renewed at the University during the past fiscal year. Even with a decrease in research and training money ise going into the Division of Academic Affairs, UNC's total income in this area climbed about 14 per cent.

CPU

The Carolina Political Union will meet tomorrow at 9 a.m. in the Grail Room for a brief business meeting. All members are asked to attend. Orders will be taken for the CPU key by the Balfour Co.

COURT OFFICERS NAMED

Warren Price, junior from Bethesda, Md., and former freshman basketballer, was elected chairman of the Interfraternity Council Court Thursday night.

Tommy Baysden, junior from Rocky Mount, was elected clerk.

Price is a member of Sigma Nu fraternity and Baysden is in Phi Gamma Delta.

Air Society Takes Top Area Award

The local unit of the Arnold Air Society was awarded the "Outstanding Squadron" plaque for the third consecutive year at the 16th National Conclave last week in Denver, Colorado.

Honored for its outstanding efforts during the year, the squadron was selected as the best unit in Area R-2, which consists of Duke University, Agricultural and Technical College of North Carolina, North Carolina State, East Carolina College and the Virginia Polytechnical Institute.

The Arnold Air Society is an honorary national service organization of the Air Force ROTC cadets, with squadrons at 175 campuses across the nation. The squadrons, which are divided geographically into 17 areas, vie each year for the plaque.

Educators To Visit

Educators from throughout the nation will visit the University next fall for the 12th National Core Conference to study the needs of junior and senior high school general education programs.

The core program is one way of organizing general education courses required of all students on the junior and senior high school levels, explained Dr. Jack E. Blackburn, co-chairman of the conference and assistant director of UNC's Fifth-Year Program.

Brewer Wants Preyer Debate

Insurance man Kidd Brewer said Monday he would accept the challenge to a television debate which L. Richardson Preyer extended Sunday to his two major opponents.

Preyer intended that the challenge apply only to Dan K. Moore and I. Beverly Lake. Brewer quoted news stories, however, as saying Preyer challenged his two major opponents and Brewer said "I, for one, hereby accept the challenge."

Preyer made the challenge contingent upon an agreement by the other two major candidates that all three would share the expenses of the debate. Brewer said, "With my limited campaign resources, I will not be able to continue to pay for the privilege of debating with Judge Preyer.

"But it will be my pleasure to debate with him every day from now until May 30th before any audience and at any place in the state, including the Holiday Inn at Greensboro. I await the opportunity to negotiate as to the day, hour, place and the proportionate cost of the TV debate," Brewer said.

Brewer entered the primary contest while serving an 18-month sentence in Central Prison for influence peddling in connection with sales of highway signs to the state. He was paroled last week after serving one-fourth of his sentence.

Tigs, Heels Clash For Olympic Fund

By BOB QUINCY

When Clemson and North Carolina clash in a sports event, there is usually a maximum of action and thrills. When the baseball clubs of those schools mix here Saturday, it will have an Olympic air.

Coach Walter Rabb of the Tar Heels has designated the important Atlantic Coast Conference contest as "Olympic Day" at UNC. Receipts from the game will be donated to the Olympic fund.

"For the first time," said Rabb, "baseball will be a part of the Olympic program. It is a move we college baseball people have pushed for years. It seems ridiculous that our recognized national pastime did not have Olympic distinction until the Tokyo games.

"Actually, the baseball competition will be billed as exhibitions at Tokyo and will not be counted in the point system. However, it is a move in the right direction—and I'm sure it will have a bearing on official recognition in the future."

The Japanese, who enjoy their baseball as much as Americans, are responsible for the appearance of baseball on the docket. The host country is allowed to choose an extra sport for Olympic viewing. Baseball won the privilege for the 1964 pageant.

"Our team will do well," predicts Rabb, "and it will be treated with the same favor of all other Olympic teams. The baseball players, when chosen, will travel and be housed in the manner of all Olympic performers. That is why our game with Clemson is important. We are doing our share to help in the important Olympic venture."

The Clemson clash is always something special—and this year it takes on something of an "avenge" showdown for the Tar Heels. The Tigers hold wins over Carolina this school year in football and basketball. It also should be noted that Clemson's coach, Bill Wilhelm, was once a Rabb assistant at UNC.

THE POPLIN SUIT

Poise, deportment and tradition are deftly tailored into these poplin suits. Zephyr weight, but the Dacron/cotton blend is studier in body and softer in drape than most poplins. Washable, crease resistant. In these interesting colors: Natural, navy, gunsmoke grey, English olive, slate blue, chamois and rye. They are here now at $45.00.

All Chisox Fans Sober Opening Day

CHICAGO (UPI)—The Chicago White Sox kicked off their 64th season Tuesday but there was something missing in Comiskey Park where they played the Baltimore Orioles.

Tuesday was an election day in Illinois, and no beer could be served at the game to wash down the traditional hotdogs.

Minnesota Begins With 7-6 Win Chase Of Yanks

The Minnesota Twins began their battle to dethrone the New York Yankees as American League champions yesterday by easing past the Cleveland Indians 7-6.

The Twins scored all their seven runs in the middle three innings after trailing the Indians 6-3 going into the fifth inning. Earl Battey had the only homer for the Twins, while Leon Wagner and Woodie Held homered for the Indians.

Homers by John Orsino, Joe Gaines and Boog Powell pushed the Baltimore Orioles by the Chicago White Sox 5-3. The Birds tallied twice off loser Hoyt Wilhelm in the eighth and rode the fine relief pitching of Stu Miller to victory.

The Detroit Tigers bombed the Kansas City Athletics 7-3 behind homers by Norm Cash and Billy Bruton. Jim Gentile and Manny Jimenez homered for the A's.

EMERSON STADIUM WAS empty yesterday as the April rains finally succeeded in washing out the UNC-Wake Forest baseball game. The Tar Heel-Deacon tennis match was also rained out and rescheduled for tomorrow. The baseball game was rescheduled for April 30.

Rain Washes Out Tar Heel Wins

The tennis match has been rescheduled for tomorrow, while the baseball game was rescheduled for Thursday, April 30.

The postponed baseball game was touted as being the biggest game of the year for the Tar Heels. Wake Forest is the team the Heels have to beat in the ACC race. The Demon Deacons walked off with the championship last year although the Tar Heels defeated them in two out of three games, but this year, Coach Walt Rabb's men are planning to end the Deacons' domination of ACC baseball. Now the Heels will have to wait two more weeks before they get their crack at the Deacons. Their second game with Wake is scheduled for May 5th at Winston-Salem.

The Tar Heels will get back into action this weekend with games with South Carolina and Clemson. The Gamecocks will be at Emerson Friday afternoon, and the Tigers follow them with a 2:30 game with the Tar Heels Saturday afternoon.

Sport Shorts

While Carolina has suffered a string of losses to Clemson, the Tar Heels had completely baffled the University of South Carolina in athletic contests this year until last Saturday.

The Gamecocks, aching for revenge, thumped the Tar Heel trackmen at Columbia for their first victory in any sport this school year over UNC. Coach Joe Hilton had several of his key men missing. The Birds wasted no time in taking advantage of the cinders.

Carolina's tennis team, which last week leaped past George Washington, 5-4, thus won its ninth victory in 10 starts this spring. The upcoming meet with Maryland, a terror this year, on Saturday at College Park, Md., could provide the key to the Conference crown. Maryland is unbeaten at this writing.

HAIL LARRY BROWN: The current Sports Illustrated has a highly complimentary article on the performance of ex-Carolina basketball guard Larry Brown during the Olympic trials. Brown is called a superb playmaker and court general.

Larry, now working and playing for Goodyear in Akron, O., was always a dare-devil on the hardwood, a little guy who went for the basket like a shark going for an unwary swimmer.

Giants, Dodgers Pennant Hopes With Rookies

Twelve rookies were starting or scheduled to start in Tuesday's major league games.

The defending world champion Dodgers had one rookie, third baseman Johnny Werhas, in their opening lineup last night against the Cards. The Giants used their two "jewels," Jim Ray Hart (3b) and Jay Alou (rf) in their opener against the Braves. How these three fare could have a distinct bearing on the outcome of the race.

The Phillies showed two newcomers in their opener against the Mets. Manager Gene Mauch was to show off third baseman Richie Allen and left fielder Danny Cater. The other National League rookies were in the Cubs' starting nine, with Billy Cowan in center and Jimmy Stewart at second.

Chicago and Minnesota also are counting on rookies to help them towards the pennant. Don Buford, the top minor league performer at second last year, and Tony Oliva, a right fielder, both have had greatness predicted for them. Straight from East Boston comes Tony Conigliaro, who was to have started against the Yanks for the Bosox. Dior's sheep, the A's, opened with Dick Green, who never hit in the minors, at second. Monday the Angels had started Dick Simpson in center and Bobby Knoop at second.

Mets Trade Snider To San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—The San Francisco Giants got one of their illustrious foes on their own side Tuesday when they purchased Duke Snider from the New York Mets for what was described as "above the waiver price" of $25,000.

Club President Horace Stoneham said that the 37-year-old Snider, an institution with the Brooklyn and Los Angeles Dodgers, would join the team Tuesday night.

The Duke, who may be headed for his last season, was expected to serve mainly as a pinch-hitter in Candlestick Park where the prevailing winds favor his left-handed power.

Snider batted .243 last season for the Mets and hit 14 home runs after the Dodgers sold him on April 1. He frequently appeared as a pinch-hitter and his 14 blasts gave him a career total of 403 for tenth spot on the list of all time major league home run hitters.

NO QUORUM HALTS SL

Failure to achieve a quorum forced the Student Legislature to adjourn yesterday without considering the budget for the new fiscal year.

Student Body President-elect Bob Spearman called the meeting for Wednesday afternoon but repeated efforts of floor leaders failed to attract the minimum number of 25 necessary to conduct business.

Another meeting is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. today.

Wales Tops NSA; Merrill Elected Sr. Class Prexy

Peter Wales led all candidates to cop the first of four places in the National Student Association delegate election. The other three winners were Neil Jackson, Jim Brame, and Karen Rawlings.

In the race for president of the Senior Class, Harrison Merrill solidly defeated Paul Chused for the office.

NSA—(4 delegates)

Peter Wales (UP) 2579, Neil Jackson (SP) 2235, Jim Brame (SP) 2539, Karen Rawlings (SP) 2282, Mike Chanin (UP) 2216, Bo Edwards (UP) 1554, Ron Hendren (UP) 1693, Bill Lucas (SP) 1334.

Moore Rally Set Saturday For Raleigh

Students from all parts of N. C. will attend a Dan K. Moore rally this Saturday, April 18, in Raleigh at the Sir Walter Hotel.

Transportation will be provided. Chartered busses will leave from the Woollen Gym parking lot about 1 p.m. Saturday. Judy Stewart, 1941 Strong Hall, will make arrangements to meet dates from W.C. at Woollen Gym and then will go on to Raleigh.

In Raleigh, there will be various and sundry activities throughout the day. Judge Moore will be with the college groups all afternoon and will make several speeches.

A "Doll for Dan" beauty contest will be held in the afternoon with entries from North Carolina colleges. The winner will be announced at 2:30 p.m. and will receive a $250 scholarship raised by students from all over the state. 40 out of 60 colleges in the state have participated.

At 6 p.m. Saturday evening there will be a "Students for Moore" Dinner. The cost of the meal is regularly $10 but county supporters have payed nine dollars of this fee. Therefore the cost to the student is only one dollar.

For further information, call L. D. Hyde, college manager for "Students for Moore", collect at 833-5503 after 1 p.m., or Richard Hughes at 942-2643.

Crash!

RIVERHEAD ,N. Y. (UPI)—Eaton Brooks, 21, a student at UNC from Darien, Conn., was one of four young socialites found innocent Wednesday of helping to wreck a guest mansion during hijinks that followed the coming-out party of dubutante Fernanda Wanamaker Wetherill.

Brooks was charged with standing on a mantlepiece and swinging on a glittering chandelier which tore loose from the ceiling and crashed down on top of him.

His co-defendants were Granville Toogood of Philadelphia, charged with breaking a pane of glass in a door; Thomas Molyneaux of Philadelphia, charged with breaking a lamp, and Samuel Shipley III, also of Philadelphia, charged with breaking dishes and lightbulbs.

Judge Thomas M. Stark, who heard the case with a jury, said he was not concerned with "wholesale house wrecking" but only with the specific charges against the four defendants.

Charges were filed against a total of 14 guests at the debutante's party. Before Wednesday's verdict, charges had been dismissed against six of them. Three others will stand trial as youthful offenders and one elected a separate trial.

DTH STAFF MEETING SET TODAY AT 4

All persons interested in working for the Daily Tar Heel for the remainder of the semester and next year are asked to meet in the DTH offices at 4 p.m. today.

"Many jobs are open, and everyone who applies will be considered for staff positions," said Fred Seely, co-editor for next year.

Anyone who cannot attend the meeting should call Seely at 933-1011 between 2-4 p.m.

Rep. John Anderson (R.-Ill.)

Rep. Anderson Is Adept Politician

Rep. John B. Anderson brings a wealth of political knowledge to the Mock Political Convention opening tonight at Woollen Gym.

Anderson, an Illinois Republican, was elected in 1960 and re-elected two years later. He serves on the Government Operations and the House Administration Committees.

Before his election to Congress he served as state's attorney for Winnebago County, Ill. in 1952. While a member of the United States Career Diplomat Service, he was sent to West Berlin. There he was an advisor on the staff of the U. S. High Commission for Germany.

During World War II he served in the Army for 2½ years in the field artillery corps. He spent ten months overseas and participated in four major campaigns in the European Theatre of Operation.

He received his A.B. and J.D. degree from the University of Illinois, and later he received his LL.M. degree from the Harvard School of Law.

In 1946 he was admitted to practice law before the Illinois State Supreme Court.

The congressman is a member of the Winnebago County Bar Association, the American Legion. He is a former trustee and member of the First Evangelical Free Church of Rockford, Ill. He is married and has three children.

Second Annual Military Week Now Underway

Athletic competition has highlighted the second annual UNC "Military Week" which began Monday.

The joint Air Force and Naval ROTC week of activities has thus far included contests between the two units in softball, basketball and physical fitness. A trophy will be presented to the unit compiling the most points in the contests. The award will be made Saturday night at the annual Military Ball, officially ending Military Week.

The trophy will be presented by the Society of Scabbard and Blade, an honor organization composed of Air Force Cadets and Naval Midshipmen. Scabbard and Blade sponsors both Military Week and the Military Ball.

The athletic side of Military Week winds up today with a volleyball battle between the two units. With the Navy boasting a lead in the totals both staffs will be trying for a final victory for their unit today. Both units will meet tomorrow in drill competition.

Birch Leader Not Against Red Speakers

HANOVER, N. H., Robert Welch, founder of the John Birch Society, said Tuesday night he sees nothing wrong with a Communist being invited to speak at a state university.

It came at the conclusion of a speech devoted largely to what Welch called the evils of big government, which he blamed for a breakdown in morality, honesty, and human decency.

A student asked if he thought a Communist editor should be permitted to speak at a tax-supported university.

"Provided he is properly introduced as a Communist editor, I personally have no objections," Welch replied. "Once that is done, then I'm willing to let the college people think for themselves."

COUNTERS NEEDED

Ballot counters for seats in Student Legislature and NSA are needed today from 1-5.

Anyone interested in helping Bill Aycock and his noble crew should come to the Roland Parker Lounge in Graham Memorial.

Lowenstein Speaks Here Before CCC

Al Lowenstein, controversial assistant professor of political science at N. C. State, will address the Committee for Concerned Citizens (CCC) tomorrow at 8 p.m. at the Community Church.

Lowenstein, a UNC graduate and a graduate of Yale Law School, is the author of a book on racial injustice in South West Africa.

He is a former president of the National Student Association and was involved last summer in voter registration drives in Mississippi.

State Sen. Clarence Stone and others have recently been applying pressure to have Lowenstein fired from the N. C. State faculty because of his civil rights activities.

RECOUNT—Bill Aycock (center) chairman of the Elections Board, is aided by John Ingram and Pug Pittman in recounting ballots from Tuesday's elections. More counters are needed this afternoon on the second floor, GM.

900 Students Expected To Participate In Convention

Governor Terry Sanford will launch the bipartisan Mock Political Convention for the Democrats here Thursday night in Woollen Gym. He is expected to give a political address. Sanford will speak at 9 p.m. and Congressman John Anderson will follow with the first Republican address.

This will be the first of a three-day affair here this weekend which will be climaxed by the selection of candidates for the presidency and vice-presidency. Either a Republican or Democrat may be nominated.

Routine preparations for the convention will be made in the Thursday session. Delegations will be seated, rules adopted, and a permanent chairman will be chosen. Then the Democratic and Republican keynote addresses will be given.

During the Friday evening session, Senator Frank Church, Idaho will speak for the Democrats and Congressman Charles Jonas of North Carolina for the Republicans. Church will speak at 7:30 p.m. and Jonas will follow.

Each evening the Democratic speaker will give the first address which will be immediately followed by the Republican. There will be separate arrivals and departures of the Republican and Democratic speakers each evening. The Democratic speaker will be escorted in at the beginning of the program and will leave immediately after he speaks. And then the Republican speaker will enter.

Church will speak at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Jonas will follow immediately. After the addresses, debate will begin on the platform. Each plank will be considered separately and then the platform will be voted upon as a whole.

Planks for the platform will be considered on six controversial issues; civil rights, domestic policy, government finance, labor, agriculture, and foreign policy. Republicans and Democrats will each present their proposal for each plank and amendments may be made from the floor. Civil rights is expected to be the area of greatest controversy.

Each delegation will have one vote regardless of its size, to cast for the platform.

Fifty delegations will be present, including two from the town men's districts and one from Victory Village. Most of the dorms, sororities and fraternities are represented.

Approximately 900 UNC students are expected to participate in the three-day affair. All sessions will be held in Woollen Gym. Persons not attending as delegates are invited to attend and observe.

Voting on presidential and vice-presidential candidates will be Saturday evening after speeches by Assistant Postmaster General Richard Murphy for the Democrats and for the Republicans, Joseph W. Harrison, Research Associate for the Republican National Committee.

Moore Names 3 Ex-UNC In Blast

Three former UNC students were named by gubernatorial candidate Dan K. Moore Tuesday as appointees of Gov. Terry Sanford who had "helped organize racial demonstrations."

Moore made the accusation in an attack on Sanford's administration before a meeting of the 4th District Medical Society in Goldsboro.

Asked to comment on Moore's charges, Sanford said in Asheville yesterday morning he would follow his previous policy of declining to debate with the candidates.

He did say, however, he "might save up all of these foolish things and answer them all the last week of the campaign."

Moore named Curtis Gans, William Darity and Leon Rooke, all of whom have had close ties with UNC, as the three he was referring to.

There was no immediate comment from any of the three.

Gans, editor of the Daily Tar Heel in 1959-60, is assistant director of the North Carolina Volunteers. He has been active in recruiting volunteers for the program from UNC.

Darity is a Public Health specialist and lives in Chapel Hill. He recently received his Ph.D. degree from UNC.

Rooke, who has attended UNC, formerly worked in the UNC News Bureau. He has written several short stories and articles

Moore said that Gans "has been active in leading civil rights demonstrations up and down the Atlantic Coast." He also said that Darity and Rooke have participated in racial demonstrations in Chapel Hill.

The gubernatorial candidate said that the three "helped organize racial demonstrations" and urged "deliberate violation of our laws."

None of the three, however, is a state employee.

The North Carolina Fund has been established mostly with the funds of private foundations and is operated by a nongovernmental board. However the Sanford administration was primarily responsible for setting it up.

With millions in funds of the private foundations, mostly the Ford Foundation, the North Carolina Fund is leading in a Sanford-sponsored attack on the cycle of poverty in North Carolina, trying to locate reasons why the "poor grow poorer" in some areas of the state.

Kemp Moves - Next Door

By FREDERICK SCHEER

Kemp's of Franklin street is "moving" its location.

In an interview with the popular record store owner, Kemp Battle Nye, it was learned that the "move" will consist of switching the places of the Oriental Shop and Kemp's Record Store.

The Oriental Shop is filled with scrolls, wood cuts, idols, reed rats and other oddities from

Kemp came to Chapel Hill in gathered in his travels to China. "I try to get there every September but I haven't been able to go since 1961," Kemp said.

Kmp came to Chapel Hill in 1931. In 1932 he went to China and for 11 years served as a courier for the American Embassy in Peking.

His great great grandfather, Mathew J. W. McCauley, donated 600 acres to the University set by General Davie in the 1700's. "He's buried at University Lake," Kemp said.

Classical music is the best seller in the record shop, but the best seller in the Oriental Shop is—you'd never guess it—jade rings.

If you're worrying yourself sick wondering what happens to the ducks in Central Park in the winter or what ever happened to the "Peacock Chair" that used to spur our football team to victory, you can rest—about the chair, anyway. It's in Kemp's house.

Undergraduate Library To Stay Open Saturday

By LARRY JONES

The Undergraduate Library is staying open until midnight on Saturday nights during April, on an experimental basis.

The project, started by the University Party Campus Action Board is to find out if a significant number of students need this space for study on Saturday nights.

Undergraduate Librarian William A. Pease said he was not able to staff the room in time to open on April 5, but it was open on the night of April 11.

"I am having staffing difficulties," he said. "Do you know anyone who wants to work from 5 to 7 on Saturday evening?"

Pease said the staffing problem may resolve itself in time, "but things don't look good now."

The experiment was also tried during exam week in May, 1962.

Statistics showed "a considerable number of kids (using the room)," said Pease, "well worth our staying open, but . . . this was during exam period. We'll keep the statistics again and see how it works out for the regular semester Saturdays."

Students will be counted in the Undergraduate Library and the Newspaper Room at 8 and 11 p.m.

In the 1962 experiment, there were 73 people in the two rooms at 10 p.m., May 19, and 107 people at the same time the following week.

Semi-Parting Shots

A little over a year ago we came storming into office with all sorts of bright visions about The Daily Tar Heel and the coming year. Out went a couple of walls, in went a new telephone system, and so forth.

Well, it's been a fast year.

We have some comments to make by way of summing up this past year, but we have been assured that we'll be invited to a "Parting Shots" session before graduation, so we'll save most of them until then.

However, some general remarks need to be made.

Thanks, first of all, to relatively unsung people like The Daily Tar Heel's ever-faithful, if sometimes unpunctual, photographer, Jim Wallace. Without him, the job of getting the paper out would have been infinitely more diffcult than it has been, not only for us, but for the editors who preceded us over the past four years.

Thanks, too, to coeds like Linda Riggs, Nancy McCracken, Sue Simonds and Shirley Travis for being such wonderful Girl Fridays.

Thanks to the Chapel Hill Weekly's printshop crew for absorbing broken deadlines and sundry other difficulties and adding their craftsmanship to our most-imperfect product.

Thanks to the Circulation and Subscription staff for getting the paper to you, despite the weather and sporadic hangovers.

Thanks to the Business and Advertising staff for keeping our finances under control.

Thanks to the various editors and reporters for helping us try to chronicle the passing parade.

Thanks to Fate for providing us with so many interesting and challenging situations to editorialize about, and thanks to God for keeping us from being wrong too much of the time.

Our apologies to those we have unintentionally slighted or wronged, and for the mistakes we couldn't help and never found out about in time to correct.

Our thanks to those of you who voted for us last year, and thus gave us the opportunity to add a significant dimension to our education.

We hope you have enjoyed it half as much as we have.

Professors

It's moved to the inside pages, but it's far from over. We're referring to the civil rights trials of six professors in Hillsboro. One, Prof. William Wynn, is from UNC. The other five are from Duke. Two of the Duke professors' cases remain to be decided. They, like the others, probably will be appealed all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court.

This takes money. Professors aren't rich people. Contributions can be sent to Prof. Tom Langford of the Religion Department at Duke. Checks should be made out: "Tom Langford, trustee, Professors Defense Fund."

Any money received in excess of the professors' legal costs will be used to help defray the costs of similar cases. Contributions will be greatly appreciated.

Force-Feeding Education

(Dr. Delbert S. Elliott, who prepared this article for The National Observer, is principal investigator of a school dropout project being conducted by San Diego State College in California. He is assistant professor of sociology at the college.)

A boy finds that he cannot cope with the social and educational problems of school. He turns 16, the legal age, and quits. He is a dropout. Currently, our society is in a dither to figure out some way to make him go back to school.

But is this sensible Does it do any good to force youngsters who don't fit to stay in school? Must everyone "play the game" whether or not he has a chance to succeed?

The school in our society is a creature of the middle class. Lower-class youth are forced to compete with middle-class youth for grades and other status rewards. These rewards are given by middle-class teachers using middle-class standards.

Youths from lower socio-economic classes are not adequately prepared for the kind of competition encountered at school. The early training at home and the attitudes and values of their parents limit their chances of success. When they realize their opportunities are limited, they feel insecure and frustrated. Their personal sense of worth is threatened. They may even lose confidence in their ability to learn those things they are capable of learning.

The failure experienced at school provokes some of these youngsters to reject those middle-class success goals that are not available to them. They often blame the school system for their frustration and failure. Consequently, they feel justified in criticizing and openly attacking the school, the teachers, and the community.

Malicious mischief and vandalism are thus an expression of their rejection and disdain for these middle-class goals. Much delinquency is a by-product of failure at school.

Researchers in the field of delinquency are aware of the relationship between delinquency and school dropout. They point to studies that indicate that 35 to 40 per cent of all dropouts appear in juvenile court, that the delinquency rate for dropouts may be 10 times as high as for high school graduates.

But it doesn't necessarily follow that being out of school—supposedly with nothing constructive to do—causes delinquency. It's possible that delinquency and dropout are related because they are different responses to similar problems.

Two separate studies, in Seattle and San Diego, support this explanation. In a 1960 follow-up study of youngsters who had dropped out of Seattle schools during the 1957-58 school year, it was found that 40 per cent had official delinquency records. But 80 per cent of those with records had delinquent referrals before they left school.

In the San Diego study, 90 per cent of the dropout - delinquents became delinquent, while in school. Even more striking, the dropouts committed fewer offenses after leaving school than in a comparable period while in school.

Delinquency is only one of several possible reactions to failure at school. Dropping out of school is another. The typical dropout has been failing academically or socially for several years, and as soon as legally possible rejects the school milieu that has repeatedly rejected him.

This decision is not necessarily a bad one. Dropping out of school could eliminate the motivational stimulus to engage in delinquent behavior. The boy or girl who drops out is no longer involved in the unequal competition at school and escapes the frustration of continual failure.

Yet efforts continue to force children into the middle-class mold. For example, the Michigan State Bar Association's Committee on Juvenile Problems recently proposed that the compulsory age for school attendance be raised from 16 to 17 as a means of dealing with the dropout problem.

That might reduce the dropout rate. It will not, however, solve the basic problem. In fact, it may aggravate it. Although conclusive evidence of relationship is not yet available, it is a fact that while our annual dropout rates have been steadily decreasing, our delinquency rates have been steadily increasing.

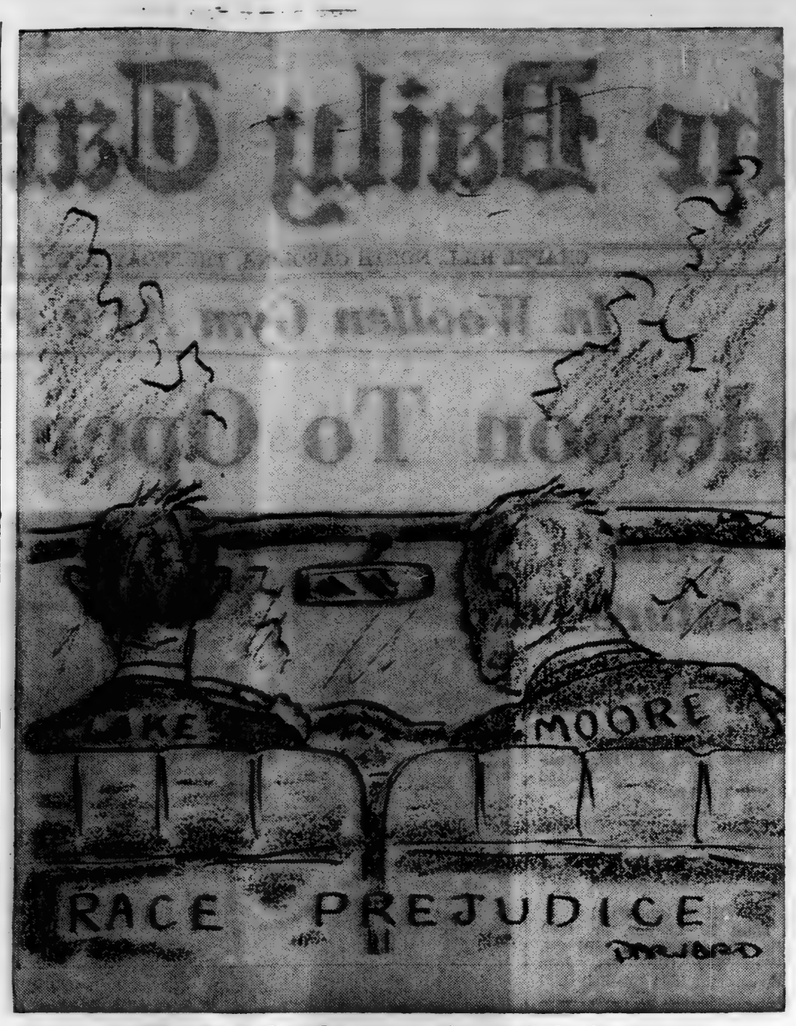
Any constructive program aimed at reducing the dropout rate must take into consideration undesirable consequences that may result from forcing young people to stay in school. The probability of delinquency may be increased, and at the same time the school must maintain a double standard. It is expected to provide educational programs of increasing excellence, while s imultaneously serving as a community "baby sitter" for students marking time.

Programs designed to lure dropouts back to school have generally failed. They have failed because the situation that led to the dropping out has not changed; the student was a failure before and becomes a failure again. About 800 dropouts from schools in Washington, D. C., for example, were persuaded to return to school. Within a month, 75 per cent of them left again. Daniel Schreiber, director of the National Education Association's School Dropout Project, suggests that as many as 90 per cent of dropouts who return to school will leave again before the end of the first semester.

The major problem associated with dropout is not the mere act of leaving school. It is the fact that there are no jobs available for this group of unskilled and untrained youth. The efforts to keep all youth in school or to get dropouts back to school will not ultimately solve this employment problem, and raising the compulsory school age will only temporarily postpone it.

The employment problem should be tackled head-on by the community, rather than the schools. Certainly potential dropouts who are intellectually capable of graduation should be encouraged to remain in school. But those who are not should be helped to find jobs or to learn vocational skills necessary for employment. There are now 1,400,000 U. S. youth between the ages of 14 and 19 who are unemployed, and this age group's unemployment rate of 17 per cent may double or triple in the next 10 years.

The community's greatest challenge thus is to find job opportunities for those with limited abilities. This approach to the dropout problem has a major advantage over programs designed to keep all youth in school: It should reduce, rather than increase, the urge to engage in delinquent behavior.



'Mind if I take over for awhile?'

'The Negro Revolt': McInnis

By HENRY McINNIS

("The Negro Revolt," by Louis Lomax. Signet Books. 1963. 265 pages.)

"To Hugh, my ten year-old son, in the faith that his will be a better nation, and in the hope that his color will never be a curse or a blessing. For if the Negro revolt succeeds, he will have to take his stand as a man. And that, with God's help, is what I am rearing him to be."

This is the poignant dedication written by Negro author Louis Lomax at the beginning of his "The Negro Revolt," an accurate, compelling, disturbing, perplexing and incisive work of scholarship and winning dignity. The book tells the story of the history of the Negro, American-style, from the early seventeenth century and his slave origins, up to the present, clarifying the current racial movement and explaining the tactics and goals of the leaders of the various forms of the Negro revolt.

Lomax sets the context of the revolt by his thesis that the American Negro is a man-made, not God-made race, "the result of alliances between slave masters and their female slaves. Few of today's Negroes are of pure African descent," he states. "We are a New World phenomena and although we are socially and economically segregated from the American mainstream, we are culturally integrated with it." From this premise, hardly refutable, he proceeds with a golden thread of objectivity, never falling prey to the ranting and ravings that sometimes mar the work of James Baldwin.

"The Negro Revolt" is vivid, realistic and tough. Citizens of every political hue and stripe will profit by reading this book, particularly in the light of the explosive civil rights fight now being waged in the Senate and in our own communities. The fact that the author is Negro, and a brilliant one, carries a peculiar persuasion.

Few white people, writes Lomax, have more than a "headline acquaintance with the Negro; even white liberals share the general white population's total ignorance of Negro history; that this is exactly the reason why all white people are at a total loss concerning the current racial unrest. There is much truth in this observation but it is one instance in which the author underestimates the knowledge and understanding that most certainly exists in the intelligent and educated white community. If the book has a serious flaw, it is at this point, for Lomax should know better.

However, the allegation is qualified by Lomax. "The white population's confusion about what Negroes are up to is understandable, for if the truth is told, Negroes are fairly confused about themselves." Lomax believes that more than half of the Negro population has deep psychological problems over the ethnic question, "who and what am I?" He also states that Negroes are incapable of articulating just what it is they seek under the catch-all label of integration. Obviously, Lomax considers himself somewhere above this supposed state of ignorance.

The single accomplishment of this book is the author's ability to isolate and give understanding to the forces that have shaped the Negro into what he is in 1964. He appreciates the fact that there are far too many superficial answers to what the American Negro is and what it is he is up to. Lomax also knows these "answers" beg too much and tell too little.

"The Negro Revolt" often vibrates with its sweeping panorama of Negro history. Some of the topics he discusses with unusual coherence are: the American Revolution and its aftermath; the Civil War; the faiths that failed; the emerging tribe; beyond the Southland; the Negro in the 1950's; the birth of the revolt; the NAACP; the sit-ins; the freedom riders; the crisis in Negro leadership; the Black Muslims; the white liberal; pain and progress; the Urban League; the American Negro and his government; and the international context of the revolt. This list of lively subjects should give readers an idea of the comprehensive spectrum of thought Lomax provides.

An example of Lomaxian lucidity is revealed in his comparison of Martin Luther King to Malcolm X's chief, Elijah Muhammad. Lomax says that King will have none of Muhammad's blanket indictment of the white man; nor will King abide black supremacy notions. "Yet both men are saying that the purpose of a religion is to explain life for the people who adopt or create it and that the function of a gospel is to speak to the frustrations of a people." Muhammad's gospel as a whole will not be accepted by the Negro and this is the important thing, . . . no gospel that fails to answer Muhammad's criticism of Christianity will be accepted either. This is a shrewd and illuminating observation, to be sure.

The author hits the target on dead center with his chapter on the white liberal. All integrationists should read this to discover if they are "knee-jerk liberals," those with the correct morals and sympathetic responses but with no real feelings. Lomax describes this hypocritical type as one who would cry out against Little Rock but would not have a Negro for a next-door neighbor.

Also of great interest is the chapter that attempts to assess the contributions of the late President Kennedy to the civil rights struggle. It also evaluates the administrations of Truman and Eisenhower and relates their political philosophies and ambitions to the Negro question.

Two Readers Hate Posters

Posters, Posters Just Everywhere!

Editors, The Tar Heel:

This letter concerns what is admittedly a rather pretty grievance, but since you have given space to men's-room door disputes, and rebuttals to rebuttals to Otelia, you might be good enough to hear me out.

It is again election time, and the reams of yellow, blue or white picture posters, party platforms, valuable-and-useful-phone-number-cards, and other garbage have reappeared. Publicity is, I suppose, instrumental to the politician's campaign, but I object to the present system on two grounds: first, it is wasteful. I would like to know how much each party or candidate spends on the distribution of this universally-hated waste paper, and how much good it does toward swaying the voters or even reminding them of their obligation to vote. How much does the University pay in extra janitor hours? in repairs to walls and bulletin boards which have the misfortune to lie beneath the now umbrella-maimed or fire-scarred faces on the posters? The second side of my gripe is the immunity of this trash to rebuttal; poster defacers are threatened with severe punishment. It escapes me how something plastered so lavishly on our walls, so widely scattered, so prodigally distributed could be scared in the eyes of campus officials.

I propose an alternate system. First, have the parties appropriate money for the construction of a centrally located election bulletin board to which resumes, party platforms, pictures within specified limits, and campaign promises would be affixed neatly and systematically. Let the same penalties which now exist for defacing posters be rigidly enforced for disturbing the official bulletin board, and let no one slide printed matter under doors or hang any political paper but on the big official board. This system would keep the candidates equally represented, the dorms and campus clean, and the vandals at bay. The money that the parties now spend on littering the campus could be given (I might say should be given) to the Campus Chest or some other worthy cause.

At long last, Connor Hall is being painted. Among the first items to be painted have been the front entrances. To add to the embellishment, campaign posters have been neatly stapled to the interior of each doorway. There should be some control on such inconsiderate and irresponsible practices.

Soapbox

By Jeff Dick

The erroneous report of Premier Khrushchev's death for a moment resembled slightly that of the report of the assassination of President Kennedy.

The release which came over the wires was not preceded by a clanging bell on the teletype as is usually the case when a matter of extreme importance has occurred. So it was with the death of John F. Kennedy—the release was picked off the wire only after a telephone call asked for substantiation of the report that the President had been shot.

No one here knew until that time that the message had even come over the wire.

In the case of the Khrushchev report, the advisory came in the form of a note to editors. It said: "Editors, informatively, and not for publication, our sources indicate that a British news service (which later turned out to be Reuters) has quoted a German news service (DPA) which in turn is said to have quoted Tass (the official Russian news agency) that Khrushchev is dead. We are checking."

In retrospect, I wonder what the reaction would have been on the part of the average Russian, if, indeed, Khrushchev had died.

Could Ivan have felt the soul-burning remorse that a majority of Americans felt at the time of the death of Kennedy?

For an answer, one is compelled to think back to the death of Stalin and the ramifications of its after effects.

The news of Stalin's death is now generally conceded to have been held up for two days. It is also generally conceded that immediately following the death of Stalin, a massive power struggle ensued in the Kremlin.

This struggle which ensued ran for a fairly long length of time before it was finally resolved with Khrushchev emerging as the final victor. In his wake lay the demise in power of Beria, Molotov, Malenkov, Bulganin and Zhukov.

Would the reaction immediately following the death of Khrushchev have been one of gigantic apprehension toward the possibile after effects of Khrushchev's death?

Would such apprehension, if it had occurred, have negated any true national feeling of remorse?

It must be said that the personal attachment which most Americans felt for Kennedy would not, in all probability, be matched by their Russian counterparts for their fallen leader. such reasoning would assume that the average American is closer to his president than the average Russian is to his premeir.

Americans watched Kennedy as he fought his way through the battle to win the nomination of his party for the presidency. They watched him as he battled Richard Nixon for the office he sought.

Few Russians, on the other head, had the opportunity of watching Khrushchev battle for the position of power and leadership. Many of the factors in Khrushchev's ascension to power are still unknown today.

Few Russians were able to judge for themselves the relative strengths and weaknesses of Khrushchev and his opponents. Fewer still had the opportunity to make the choice as to which of the rivals would be the premier.

The structure of the Communist Party today makes it impossible for many Russian citizens to participate directly in the affairs of government at a level which deals with premiers —today, only one out of every twenty Russians is even a member of the Communist Party.

The result of this structural arrangement, it is generally conceived, is that the average Russian thinks of the policy making levels of government as "they." There seems to be little or no direct involvement or concern over the day to day occurences at that level.

Western officials seem eminently more accessible to the public than Russians officials are to their own public. True, Russian officials such as Khrushchev make numerous appearances before television cameras. Even these appearances, however, are extremely impersonal.

There is no interchange between the people and Khrushchev on the television media, as there is in presidential press conferences televised in the U. S.

In this respect, it must be said, however, that Khrushchev has made himself extremely more accessible to the public than Russian leaders have in the past, by visiting factories, festivals, and production farms.

Do the Russians feel he has helped their plight? Most informed sources say he has, particularly in upping standards of living within the Soviet Union.

There is no doubt that the average Russian would, at the present time, in the event of Khrushchev's death, like to see many of his policies continued.

There may well be, however, an underlying fear that Khrushchev's death would be associated with the rise of a Stalinist cult. The apprehension may well have worked to stifle any outward feeling of grief on the part of many Russians.

Any true inward feeling of grief, however, would probably be felt more sincerely than at the death of Stalin.

No longer must the Russsian live in fear of being hauled out of his house in the middle of the night. To quote a political science professor, "When a Russian hears a knock on his door in the middle of the night, now he wonders who it is.

I wonder how Ivan really would have felt had the report of Khrushchev's death been true?

Not Ordinary Men

From The Chapel Hill Weekly

Major Gus Grissom and Lt. Cmdr. John Young were chosen Monday as the first two of the nation's astronauts who will orbit the earth in the new Gemini two-man space capsule. Both have been in Chapel Hill, Major Grissom several times, Commander Young last year.

All the astronauts take certain parts of their training at the Morehead Planetarium. In the Planetarium chamber they learn their way around the heavens, and other spacial matters. After training sessions, Planetarium director A. F. Jenzano has gotten some close looks at the astronauts.

According to Mr. Jenzano, Major Grissom is not what you might call an ordinary man. Mr. Jenzano thought for a long time about the Major, then produced a stream of adjectives to characterize him:

"Carefreely concerned, cautiously aggressive, sincerely humorous, humbly proud, reserved but read. He has admitted fear and proven bravery. Quiet, profound at times, unassuming, unobtrusive.

"He's the type of fellow who tempts, and easily accepts ribbing. You want to kid him, but when you do it rolls off him like water off a duck's back."

Mr. Jenzano said Major Grissom was the only one of the original seven astronauts who admitted he was afraid to go into orbit. But the Major added that he had to do it, and did. When he goes aloft in the Gemini capsule he will be the only astronaut to go into space twice ("We can disregard the Russians because they're called Cosmonauts.")

Major Grissom also has more speeding tickets than any of the other astronauts. Like Commander Alan Shepherd, who once entered the Daytona 500 automobile race under an assumed name, Major Grissom is an energetic racing fan.

Mr. Jenzano could not recall as much about Commander Young. Little things begin to outline Commander Young's personality, but several gaps have been left. When he was at the Planetarium a year ago January, he said, "I feel just like a kid with a new toy." He had never been in a Planetarium before.

"He's a run silent, run deep guy," said Mr. Jenzano. "He doesn't say much, but he takes in a lot. Many times in the darkened Planetarium chamber when we were working it was hard to tell who was speaking when somebody made a remark. Every now and then you could determine something about a guy's personality, when you knew he was speaking, but I don't remember anything about John Young."

There is one memorable item about Commander Young: the slip of the tongue he made at a news conference here. He was asked why he joined the space project, and replied, "It's a wonderful opportunity to make a contribution to this Navy's—uh, this country's space program."

One other interesting item about the astronauts: Capt. Thomas Stafford, one of the two backup men for the coming Gemini shot (the other is veteran astronaut Wally Schirra), has a long string of relatives in this area of North Carolina.

Twenty Players See Action As Freshmen Down Louisburg 7-1

By BILL LEE

The UNC freshmen baseballers banged out nine hits, capitalized on four errors, and took advantage of weak catching to top Louisburg, 7-1, here yesterday.

Skip Downs led the base-stealing, once as a courtesy runner and once as a pinch-hitter, with three of the team's eight stolen bases.

Coach Bill Lovengood used twenty ballplayers, including six pitchers, in sewing up the victory. Tom Gauntlett picked up the victory, even though allowing the only Louisburg run.

John Hubble, the starter, didn't allow a man to reach first and struckout three. Gauntlett pitched the third, allowing 2 hits and a walk while striking out two. Jim Dunlap, who was ineffective at Duke, gave up only a walk and struck out four in his 2-inning appearance. Grey Clark, Jimmy Dean, and Tommy Kirkman finished up the game allowing two hits and a walk between them while striking out seven.

Leading the hitting attack was Danny Talbott with 2 for three and an RBI. Also driving in runs for the Tar Babies were Mike Knowles, Mick Lienau, Mike Saintsing, and Tom Robbins. Randy Prindle, Jerry Joyner and Lawson Baker collected the other Tar Baby hits.

The next contest for the frosh is at Winston-Salem Friday against Wake Forest in a doubleheader. This is a re-scheduled game because of Tuesday's rainout.

Nicklaus Picked At Houston

HOUSTON (UPI)—Jack Nicklaus, with his strong-arm approach to golf, rules as the favorite of the field Thursday when touring pros tee off in the opening round of the $50,000 Houston Golf Classic.

Nicklaus, the only one of golfing's "big three" to enter the classic this year, has been established as a 3-1 favorite to take the first place $10,000 prize.

Bob Charles, the standard bearer of all the lefthanded golfers of the world, and defending classic champion, is rated no better than 5-1 as are Dave Marr, Paul Harney, Dow Finsterwald, and Bruce Devlin.

Campus Tourney Begins Friday

Zip-Zip! Fencers Finish 10-6 Season

The UNC fencing team defeated The Citadel contingent by a 16-11 margin last Saturday at Charleston to wind up its season with an overall record of ten wins and six losses plus a win by the novices over Duke's frosh.

Friday night at Graham Memorial the Intramurals Dept. and G.M. will co-sponsor the foil event of the tenth annual individual campus fencing tourney which will be held on three successive Friday nights.

Entries for the tourney, which is open to any student in the university, must be recorded either at the GM information desk or at the Intramurals office in Woollen Gym at least 24 hours prior to the individual event.

A large field of fencers is expected in the foil with such strong contenders as Ken Simons, Murray Pender, Joe Hollis, Bill Benton and others in the tussle for the trophies. Each of the three top men in each of the three weapons will receive the handsome fencing figure trophy emblematic of his achievement.

The following Friday (April 24) will see the sabre event held at GM and on May 1st the epee event will conclude the series.

The strong showing this past weekend and the season record should help the team's chances in their perennial bid for varsity recognition which is pending before the Athletic Council. Tar Heel fencers won easily in foil over Citadel by a 6-3 margin and edged their opponents in sabre and epee by 5-4.

Among the outstanding records individually was that of No. 1 foilsman Murray Pender who won all three of his foil bouts and doubling in epee with a win and a loss finished the day's effort with a four out of five record. In sabre, Mark Emory won two of three bouts and doubled in epee for a win to finish the day with three out of four wins.

Others who did well in their respective weapons were Mike Hughey in foil, Jerry Bradbury in epee, and Gerry Graham in sabre, all of whom posted records of two out of three bouts won.

Hey Everybody!! Combo Party Set At Cobb Tonight

The Men's Residence Council will sponsor a combo party mixer on the Cobb parking lot from 8-12 p.m. tonight.

MRC social chairman Gordon Appell said Thursday that "All students are invited. We've been looking forward to having an outdoor party for a long time. We anticipate a successful mixer."

Appell also said, "Since the mixer will be on the parking lot, we would appreciate it if students would park somewhere else if possible, for their own protection."

Commando Gives Speech To AFROTC

An Air Force Captain, recently returned from South Viet Nam, yesterday outlined the mission and methods of Air Force Special Warfare Units such as the Air Commandos.

Capt. Vernon Bergstrom, speaking before the UNC AFROTC, emphasized the need of civilian populations in countries such as South Viet Nam to back the central government.

"In Viet Nam, we are in the active stage of counter-insurgency, but we also are using civic action. Without the people you just can't win," he said.

"I don't think we've lost there, but it's the rice bowl of Southeast Asia and the Communists would love to get it."

Capt. Bergstrom was in Viet Nam August 21, 1963, through February 4, of this year as a B-26 navigator. He participated in some 70 combat support missions in cooperation with the South Viet Nam Air Force. He is now assigned to the Special Air Warfare Center, Eglin AFB, Fla.

Sorry! No Room Left At Lyon

The first UNC Year-At-Lyon program is fully subscribed for next year, Dr. Frautschi, director, announced Thursday. A full quota of 30 applications were received before the deadline Wednesday.

Anyone submitting a late application will be placed on the waiting list.

Final acceptance for participation in the program will be announced officially on May 12.

Dr. Frautschi says that two merit scholarships of $100 each have been made available to the Lyon program by the French government. Interested students of high academic qualifications should pick up separate application blanks as soon as possible in 216 Dey Hall.

All students interested in loans, or who need scholarships or other financial aid for the year at Lyon should see Dr. Mason, Student Aid Director, 1 Hanes Hall.

President Spearman Says—

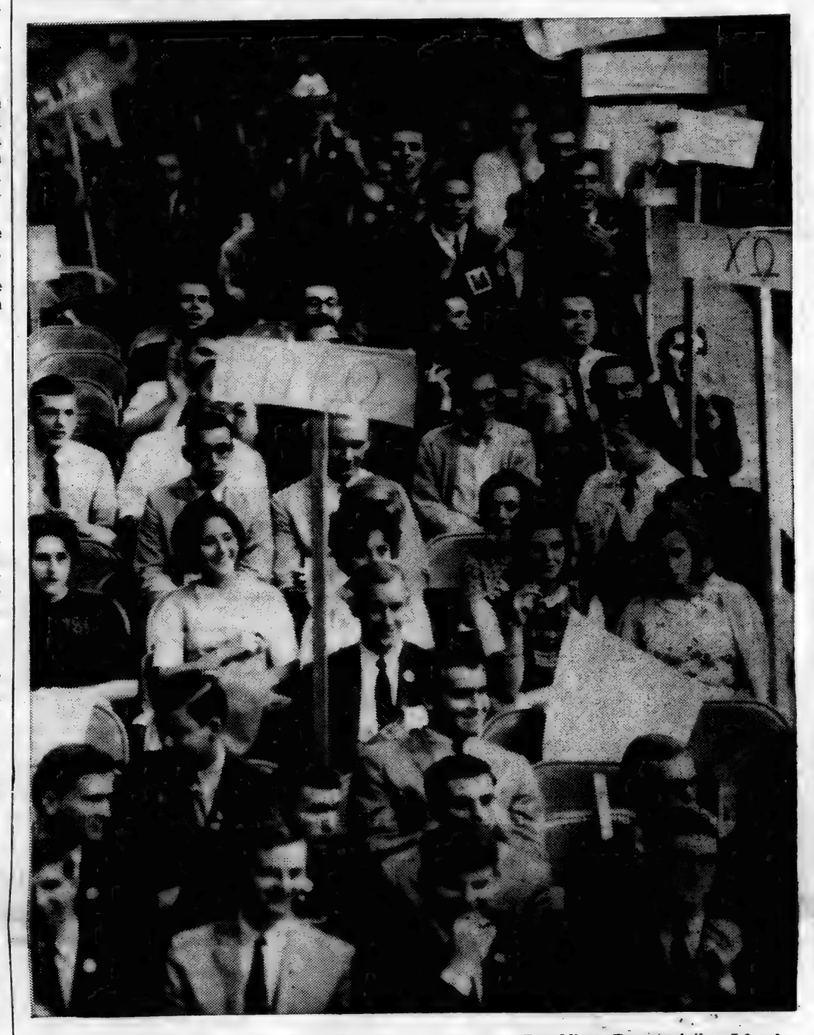
"I would like to urge all Carolina students to take advantage of the opportunity to participate in this spring's Mock Political Convention. This event will offer an excellent opportunity for political discussion and debate as it parallels the national conventions which will take place late this summer. I would extend my congratulations to the organizers of the convention and my thanks to them for the service they have performed for the student body and the University community.



MOCK CONVENTION—Delegates and members of official delegations to the UNC Mock Political Bipartisan Convention show their enthusiastic support, or lack of it, for the Republican and Democratic speakers keynoting the gathering last night in Woollen Gym. First to speak was Republican Representative John Anderson of Illinois, followed by North Carolina Democratic Governor Terry Sanford. Republicans and Democrats can almost be separated here by the looks on their faces.

Partisan Speeches Open UNC Mock Convention

Sanford, Anderson Trade Party Plugs

Partisan speeches by Governor Terry Sanford and Representative John Anderson (R-Ill.) highlighted the opening of UNC's first Mock Political Convention last night in Woollen Gym.

"The disunity within the Democratic Party has failed to bring about a single course of direction by the present administration in Washington," said Anderson, speaking first and leveling an attack on the foreign policies of the Johnson Administration.

Anderson's words were welcomed by the Republicans, who seemingly outnumbered the Democrats at last night's gathering. However, the Democrats had their moments to cheer also.

"It is our job to help people get in shape to help themselves," said Sanford. "If you believe this and follow this, then you'll make a good Democrat, because you're concerned with your fellow men."

Sanford, who arrived at the Convention Hall about 9:15 and left immediately after his short address, cited the current administration's "War On Poverty" as a project worthy of everyone's support. He said the Federal and State govenments' activitiesr in the field of social welfare "is not socialism; it is the concern of all the people as expressed through their government."

In his opening speech, Anderson emphasized foreign relations, and said this would be the No. 1 issue in the upcoming presidential campaign. He praised Senator William Fulbright (D-Ark.) for his recent expression of differences with the Administration's foreign policy. He added, in conclusion, that another big issue in the campaign would be morality in government, and he blasted the Administration for putting the lid on the Bobby Baker case.

Anderson's "keynote" address officially opened the convention at 8 o'clock, though delegates began assembling in the hall at 7:30. Preceding the governor's address came the usual order of business for all conventions, and as usual, it was hectic.

First came the seating of the University students who are participating in the three-day affair, include 50 delegations which represent all areas of the campus. Convention rules were then adopted.

Buddy Schiff, a senior from New Jersey, was then chosen as permanent chairman for the convention. He will preside over the affair which will conclude tomorrow with the adoption of one platform (a compromise between the Republican and Democratic platformss is expected) and the nomination of candidates for the presidency and vice-presidency.

The convention is bi-partisan, which means that the nominees for the two offices may come from different parties. For example, President Johnson may get the presidential nomination, while, at the same time, Senator Goldwater could be chosen for the second spot on the same ticket.

Tonight, Senator Frank Church (D-Idaho) and Representative Charles Jonas (R-N.C.) are the featured speakers. Church will address the gathering moments after it convenes at 7:30. Jonas will follow him immediately.

The debate on the platforms will begin after the speech by Jonas. Six controversial issues are included on the two platforms (one submitted by the YDC, the other by the YRC). They are: civil rights; domestic policy; government finance; labor; agriculture; and foreign policy.

Tomorrow night's activities will begin with a speech by Assistant Postmaster General Richard Murphy, who will speak for the Democrats. Speaking for the Republicans will be Joseph W. Harrison, Research Associate for the Republican National Committee. He will follow Murphy immediately.

Two Parties Will Debate On Platforms

By JOHN GREENBACKER

The platforms of the Young Democrats and the Young Republicans were introduced at the Mock Political Convention last night. Voting on each party's ideas for the particular planks will determine which side the convention, as a whole, will adopt.

Republican Platform

Foreign Policy—The Republicans score the "blundering on a nuclear level" which since 1960 has seen the communization of Cuba and areas of Southeast Asia. They call for a tightening of our alliance system and no increased trade with members of the "Communist Bloc." They want the "threat of Cuba" removed and an international victory over the "evil of Communism."

Agriculture — The Republicans are opposed to the "restrictions" placed on the American farmer, and advocate a "gradual withdrawal from the management of our nation's farms."

Domestic Policy — "Federal Government's persistence in living beyond its income seriously weakened its fiscal responsibility," the Republicans maintain. They want local government to reassert its independence. The Republicans are committed to a revision of our "punitive tax structure."

Civil Rights—The Republicans reaffirm the right to vote and to receive equal treatment before the laws, but they want a distinction to be made between civil rights and rights of association. They oppose a public ac-

The New Regime

The Daily Tar Heel hung out a sign yesterday that read, "Under New Management."

Hard on the heels of their campaign for the co-editorship, Fred Seely and Hugh Stevens assumed their duties yesterday, and announced a number of new staff appointments in the process.

In the past, the editors have had longer to prepare for the takeover, but past editors Gary Blanchard and Dave Ethridge handed over the keys quickly in order to get in plenty of studying before the end of the school year.

Seely, a junior Journalism major from Asheville, and Stevens, a junior from Burlington, said more appointments would be made in the near future, "as soon as we get settled."

"A number of paid positions will be open for the rest of the year, as well as for next year," they said. "We will be attempting to obtain a large and competent staff, and we want people both to work now and to train for next fall."

Staff appointments announced yesterday were:

MANAGING EDITOR—JOHN MONTAGUE, senior from Norfolk, Va. John has been with the DTH for three years and has held the position of Sports Editor and Assistant Sports Editor. A journalism major, he will be in charge of the first and third pages.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR — MICKEY BLACKWELL, senior from Gastonia. Mickey has worked on the DTH for two years as a reporter and News Editor, and has also worked for WCHL and The Charlotte Observer. A journalism major, he will act as "chief troubleshooter" for the news staff.

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR—PETE WALES, junior from Loudonville, N. Y. Pete, who has served as News Editor, is Chairman of the Men's Honor Council, a Morehead Scholar and a member of Chi Psi Fraternity. As his title implies, Pete, an English major, will be in charge of laying out the editorial page.

NEWS EDITOR — DENNIS SANDERS, freshman from Durham. Dennis has been a reporter this year for the DTH, and has worked on the Durham Morning Herald for two years. Dennis will be in charge of assigning reporters to cover stories.

COPY EDITOR—NANCY McCRACKEN, sophomore from Chapel Hill. Nancy, who plans to major in political science, has worked as both a secretary and as Copy Editor this year. She will continue as Copy Editor, being responsible for checking all copy for spelling and grammar.

SPORTS EDITOR — LARRY TARLETON, junior from Peachland. Larry will be in charge of the sports page and has a staff of six working under him. His top assistant is Pete Gammons, a freshman from Groton, Mass. Larry is a journalism major and has recently served as Assistant Sports Editor. Pete, who has worked as a sports reporter this year, plans a major in journalism.

REPORTERS—The following three students have all worked on the DTH this year as reporters on assigned beats. They will continue at these posts—John Greenbacker (Student Government); Kerry Sipe (Administration); and Jeffrey Dick (Municipal).

SPECIALTIES — Shirley Travis will continue as staff secretary. Staff artist Chip Barnard and Reviews Editor Henry McInnis will also remain at the posts they have held this year.

Error Reverses NSA Result; Chanin Victor Over Jackson

An error in totaling correct election returns has reversed the totals in the NSA election, giving Mike Chanin (UP) a berth on the delegation and dropping Neil Jackson (SP).

Elections Board Chairman Bill Aycock said yesterday that an error of 100 votes was made in totaling election returns from the master control board, giving Chanin 2308 votes to Jackson's 2229.

The incorrect total was not discovered until early Thursday morning.

Aycock also announced that a runoff would be held for the 6th legislative seat in MD I. The election, to be held April 21, will be between Jim Bunn (UP) and Frank Willingham (UP). Both candidates tied for the seat in the first election with 40 votes apiece.

Residents of MD I include all male students residing in the area outside the corporate limits of Chapel Hill. This includes male residents of Victory Village.

Polling places for the district will be at Y-Court and at the Victory Village Housing Office. Polls will open at 10 a.m. and close at 5:30 p.m.

Other results in Tuesday's campus elections, which were left out of Thursday's DTH are:

LEGISLATURE SEATS

Woman's II—Judy Scales (SP), 108; Patty Nash (SP), 104.

WOMAN'S HONOR COUNCIL

WD I—Ann McDaniel, WD II—Ruth Anderson, WD III—Mary Gray Teague, WD IV—Leith Merron, WD V—Myrtle Bilbro, 186; Parks Freeze, 149; Louise Menefee, 132.

Jubilee Next Weekend Here

By DENNIS SANDERS

Looking for something to do this weekend? The Harlequins, a Duke group styled after the Four Freshmen will open the annaual UNC-G Consolidated University Day at 2 p.m. Saturday in Greensboro.

UNC-CH delegation chairman Johnsye Massenburg announced that plans have been completed and 10,000 Carolina Gentlemen have been invited to the festivities.

Following the Harlequins concert will be a social hour at 4 p.m. The Consolidated Student Council will meet at 4:30 p.m. to discuss the tri-mester system, the civil rights bill and the Speaker Ban resolution.

A combo party featuring the Ambassadors and Miss Massenburg will close the day in the Cone Ballroom in Elliott Hall from 8-12 p.m.

The following weekend, Miss Massenburg and her fellow entertainers will take a back seat to Jubilee, as jubilation will flood the UNC campus.

A concert under the stars in front of GM featuring the Four Freshmen will open the gala weekend at 8 p.m. Friday. The Monzas' combo party will follow, closing the opening day at 12:30 a.m.

Saturday afternoon, Lester Flatt and Earl Scruggs bring their Foggy Mountain Boys to the GM lawn for a 2:30 fling with refreshment being served.

The Serendipity Singers and comedian Fred Smoot will highlight the evening performance Saturday, with combo parties scheduled until 1 a.m. Donnie and the Miracles will play at GM while 13 Screamin' Clowns blast away at Y-Court.

Jazz guitarist Charlie Byrd will open Sunday's finale at 2:30, with the Sinfonians' Petite Musicale closing the weekend. Byrd will perform on the lawn and the Sinfonians will occupy the GM lounge.

Free flicks will be shown each evening at 6:30, 8:30 and 10:30 in Carroll Hall. "Breakfast at Tiffany's," starring Audrey Hepburn and George Peppard, will run Friday, with Deborah Kerr and Michale Redgrave in "The Innocents" Saturday. Sunday's flick will be Ingmar Bergman's "The Virgin Spring."

Sponsored by the Graham Memorial Activities Board, Jubilee brings top entertainers to the Carolina campus each year for a series of on-the-lawn shows.

The Four Freshmen began a slow climb to fame in 1948, and it wasn't until 1952, that "It's a Blue World" swept the country and skyrocketed them to a prominent place among modern vocal groups.

The quartet, which tours the country making personal appearances 11 months of the year, has appeared on every major campus in the United States.

The Serendipity Singers' "Crooked Little Man" is their latest hit, and Flatt and Scruggs are said to have come from a "Bluegrass Background" bringing "folk music with overdrive."

Fred Smoot started as a news photographer and hit the entertainment field with lauded performances in a Greenwich Village club. He is unique from many comedians in that he writes his own material, keeping it fresh and alive.

The Old Chairs And The New Editors

With this morning's edition, your Daily Tar Heel comes under a new co-editorship. It's all rather sudden, for you and for us. The long campaign hardly seems over, and we have not yet caught up on our sleep or our studies. Nevertheless, with one of the past editors in the hospital, and the other pounding away ceaselessly on an honors thesis, it seems best for all concerned that we forego the usual waiting period and settle ourselves immediately (if a little uncomfortably) into the squeaky easy chairs reserved for the editors.

The effect of this sudden change has been that we have had no real opportunity to reflect at length upon the challenge that has come into our lives. It is a big one, of course, and quite naturally we considered it carefully before plunging wholeheartedly into something so hectic and demanding as a campus-wide campaign. But now it is real. Now the telephone rings for us. Now the first three columns of the edit page are ours to fill. Now this paper, which you pay for and read, must reflect our abilities and personalities. We face a big task.

We could consume this space with endless specific promises concerning the performance of our duties, but they are primarily for us to keep in mind as newspaper men. We have changes in mind or in process, and they will be made. Other aspects of our performance will depend greatly on the happenings which arise and the unforeseen manner in which they will affect us. Our goal will be, as we have stated throughout the campaign, to bring you a Daily Tar Heel which truly serves you, its owners and publishers. In doing this, we will be guided throughout the next year by many things—our own judgment and moral fiber, our devotion to the paper and to the campus, the standards of good journalistic practice and your reactions and suggestions as readers.

Ideally, we will be completely successful. Practically speaking, we will not.

But "success," however nebulous that element may be, is the thing for which we shall be continually striving. Our news coverage will be as fair and as comprehensive as we know how to make it, and our editorial comment,wherever directed, we shall always attempt to reinforce with fact.

In assuming these worn chairs, we are entrusted with the care and safekeeping of an institution dear to us and to this institution. The Daily Tar Heel, through the efforts of able and dedicated editors, staff members and administrators has carried on a long and sometimes glorious (and occasionally infamous) tradition of campus leadership. Now the Daily Tar Heel is what we care to make it. Being mere fallible mortals, we are not prone to promise miracles, but it is our sincere hope that one year from today we will be able to relinquish these well-worn cushions (or perhaps some new ones) to our successors with a maximum of satisfaction and a minimu mof regrets.

This Is The Year That Will Be . . . Maybe

We have been fortunate in the past to do well in predictions, but unfortunately have not felt confident enough in many of them to put money where our mouths are.

Our sports department has made a name for itself by predicting such things as a victory for Liston and Michigan and Kansas State being in the finals of the NCAA basketball tournament.

Now, we don't aspire to such success as this, or such heights as the Ol' Pillar in Durham, but we do think we have a decent line on several events of the coming year. Such as . . .

The hottest, closest gubernatorial race in many a year. Our old buddy Jessie Helms has predicted the three major aspirants, L. Richardson Preyer, Dan K. Moore and I. Beverly Lake will finish no more than 30,000 votes apart. We give them 60,000, and think it will be Moore and Preyer when the second primary rolls around. It will then depend upon whether or not Moore can light the fire under the Lake voters to get to the polls. Probably not.

President Johnson will take the White House again, but not without a bit of trouble. We have no idea who his running mate will be, but we do know he will be in for one heckuva fight if it's Attorney-General Robert Kennedy or Minnesota Senator Hubert Humphrey. And he will become a good bit more moderate between now and then.

Civil rights leaders may find their movement backfiring. Such happenings as the proposed stall-in in New York City can only produce ill-will, and this is borne out to a great extent by the showing of Alabama Governor George Wallace in Wisconsin.

Speaking of Wallace, he will also do well in the upcoming primaries, partly because of GOP switching but mostly due to whites being dissatisfied.

The Yankees and the Giants will find themselves in the World Series, and we fear the same fate as last year will befall Yogi Berra and his crew. They'll cry all the way to the bank.

South Building, of course, will conduct its yearly campaign to straighten out the fraternities whether or not they need straightening out, and the residence college idea will be pushed more and more.

The Speaker Ban will be amended by the 1965 General Assembly, perhaps to the extent that it is acceptable to almost all.

Joel Fleischman will be in Chapel Hill every weekend, there will be late-night sessions at Ann Queen's, the integrationists will march, Carlton won't integrate, no public accommodations law will pass the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen, deferred rush will foul up fraternities, Mike Lawler will still be in school and people will gripe about the food in Lenoir. But all these would happen anyway.

Don't keep this and try to hold us to it next year about this time. Please.

See You At CU

This Saturday we will have our final opportunity of this school year to strike a telling blow on behalf of better relations between the three branches of our ever-larger, ever-more-diverse University. Saturday is CU Day at that branch of UNC with which better relations should never be discouraged — the Greensboro campus. Now in the past, including this year, such celebrations have been poorly received by the majority of students. The problem seems to be twofold, resulting from a lack of good communication between the campuses and the general reluctance of the University's gentlemen and coeds to visit their counterparts at the other branches. This should not be so. Without fail, such days are marked by special events, good entertainment, and an atmosphere of congeniality. The usual inhibitions about speaking to strange students lose their potency, which they should not have anyway, and one can almost count on making new acquaintances for the purpose of expanding the social horizons. We sincerely hope, then, that an unusually large number of Carolina students will make the trek to Greensboro to join in the well-planned festivities. We'll be there. After all, in the Spring a young man's fancy likely turns to thoughts of (you guessed it), and that's where they are.

Liebling And A Visit To Harvard

By THOMAS GIFFORD
In The Village Voice

A. J. Liebling was, as his employer, the New Yorker, might have put it, odd as Dick's hatband. And I would add: particularly to look at. I didn't know him well, but his appearance was the sort you don't easily forget, no more easily than you can forget what he wrote and what he said to you.

But initially it was the size of him which impressed me. He couldn't have been more than five-seven (or so it seems in the eye of memory), and he must have weighed 220. His shape was out of the ordinary. He was surprisingly agile for someone who, when I first saw him that night, looked so completely frog - like and immovable, as if he were a piece of garden pond statuary. He was sitting deep in an ox-bloodish leather armchair in the Common Room at Lowell House, Harvard. As I recall, he had taken off his suitcoat and was holding a tumbler of scotch and water. He was a Dartmouth man, but he seemed to be making himself at home. I can't recall now what he was doing there—whether he was a guest of the house or a Nieman fellow, or if he'd simply come up to Cambridge to deliver himself of a few remarks concerning "journalism as a career," a phrase he didn't much care for.

Liebling was the best reporter of his time. He turned the hammer-and-nail carpentry of reporting into an art by sleight-of-hand. You don't see him do it, only that it was done. I was reminded of that night recently when I read of his death at 59 during the Christmas season. The newspapers reported that he died of "pneumonia and complications," the vague sort of statement which would have reinforced his low estimate of the press. I happened to be reading "The Most of A. L. Liebling," a gift from my wife, the night of his passing. As I read the pieces in the book, I became aware of how important it is to realize that he was a writer of astonishing lucidity, taste, and grace. It is too easy to underestimate the literary merit of newspapermen—for, though he'd been with the New Yorker for more than a quarter of a century, he was still a newspaperman, a reporter, a correspondent.

Somehow he managed to write with authority and sensitivity of war and boxing and the "wayward press" and French cooking and an ancient Tunisian historian named Ibn Khaldun, who is reported to have observed that nothing is more like a raindrop than another raindrop, a principle which Liebling deftly applied to several fighters, a couple of wars, and a great many omelets. He wrote about a crossing of the North Atlantic in 1941 in much the same rhythmic motion Melville used in "Moby Dick," the artful juxtaposing of lull and event. He wrote a lovely piece about the cows of one Mme Duhamel and how they perished in or survived the war in France. And later he concerned himself with the life and times of Archie Moore and Earl Long of Louisiana. You could trust what he wrote. And, like most accurate writers, he was snappishly intolerant of his colleagues who failed his tests of research and judgment; witness the violence he did Graham Greene regarding "The Quiet American." Liebling wrote nothing carelessly, nothing without exactitude. And he liked to make his point, which brings me back to the Common Room, the late-night talk, and the scotch watering down in grainy ice.

He was quiet the most intellectually sophisticated of non-academic men I'd ever known, though he wasn't a particularly glib or fluent talker. His writing, of course, was a showcase for his madly eccentric knowledge, but not much of this came across in his conversation. He was more prone that evening to the gruffness of the old newspaper hand, an image I suspect he enjoyed sustaining. The sophistication which impressed me then, in the dim yellow light of table lamps, was the sophistication of wide experience, rather than the massy learning of the scholar, the cloistered intellectual.

For me, A. J. Liebling, for all his bulk and sleepy, heavy-lidded eyes, was the man of action, hero of a novel by Ambler, on the scene where the big guns were cracking or champions hung bloodied on the ropes. It is a type which has suffered an unhappy fate at the pens of our better satirists—one thinks first of Mr. Marquand. Still, the real thing—and Liebling was that, all right—is exciting. He had, to one young admirer, an air about him, an air of impending crisis, as if he'd had a tip an hour before that the government was about to topple, and, by chance, he happened to be dining with the leader of the parliamentary opposition that very evening. It was exciting to sit there with him. He'd been a lot of places, and I'd never known a foreign correspondent before.

"You've got to climb the stairs," he was saying, "you've got to climb the stairs and be there."

Someone had wandered in and asked him how you become a reporter, and after a spasm of properly scornful muttering about the inanity of the question, he tried to form an answer. He always wanted to make his point in the most exact way. It was often so exact that it took you a minute to get it at all.

"I remember when I started out on the paper in Providence," he said, "it was running around all the time. I was on the police beat, hanging around the station until something awful happened. Then we'd go like hell. It was run like hell all the time. That's how you got to be a reporter." His voice was so low you had to lean forward to hear him. It was as if he was embarrassed to discuss such a thing with someone who had so little experience of such matters as police stations.

"You've got to climb the stairs," he repeated. You didn't know what the hell he was talking about, of course. One night in Providence, he told us, a worker had slipped while steeplejacking and gotten killed. Liebling had gone with the cops and seen the body spilled all over the sidewalk. Before he left he noticed the red brick dust beneath the fingernails. "The poor stiff had tried to catch hold of something all the way down. Fingers all bloody on the ends, brick dust under the nails . . . the poor stiff."

The trick was in going to see the widow to get an angle. When he got to the tenement, he stood downstairs, afraid to go up and intrude on grief. But finally he forced himself. He climbed those stairs.

She was a middle-aged woman who asked him to come in and share a bowl of soup since she'd made too much. She said she missed Jakey already, but Liebling was surprised she wasn't more cut up about it. She seemed pretty tough, and he got his story, as he told it so many years later in the Common Room's genteel quiet, far from the life of a steeplejack. He couldn't bear to tell her about Jakey's fingers, but the point was, he'd climbed the stairs and gotten his story.

Since that Harvard night years ago, I haven't really known what he was doing, at least little of a personal nature. The "Wayward Press" articles continued in the New Yorker—he was the only really coherent critic of the deplorable state to which the newspapers have sunk in this country; occasionally one of the brilliant boxing pieces with their inevitable references to Pierce Egan, whom he called "the Edward Gibbon and Sir Thomas Malory of the old London prize ring," Bill Neat, the Bristol Butcher, and Ibn Khaldun, who had become Liebling's very personal property, and infrequent from some out-of-the-way place. There was "The Earl of Louisiana," the sort of book for which there is really no precedent in our literature, certainly the best book on Southern politics since V. O. Key's classic. And there was the collection of food stuff, "Between Meals." But I never really learned any more about Liebling, who the devil he was.

The only personal note I did hear was the widespread rumor that through his wife, Jean Strafford (his third, after two divorces), who was on the awards committee, he had engineered the National Book Award for a sensitive but very minor work by a New Orleans doctor, Walker Percy. People said his motive was a love of New Orleans, which struck me as being sheer bilge. For this alleged intrigue great abuse was heaped upon him, because the intellectual lobby had its own candidate that year, an almost unbelievably overwritten collection of aggressive eleverness called "Catch-22." As far as I was concerned, neither one of them deserved a prize so Liebling's part in the whole steamy business was of no concern to me.

I kept remembering what he'd said to me outside Lowell House as we walked toward Eliot. The mist caught the lights of the street lamps, diffusing them into vague yellow balloons. We parted at the Eliot entryway, and I thanked him for the good talk, the free advice. I must have called him "Mr. Liebling," because the last thing he said to me was, "Aw, hell, call me Joe." Then he hunched his shoulders and waddled off up Dunster Street.

Then this past December, as I spent a cold Minneapolis night with him in the war-time fields of Brittany, he—in New York—died on me. It was a sad trick, but then he was a very independent fellow. Odd as Dick's hatband, really.

And what to say of him now? Evelyn Waugh — writing of Anthony Carson, another notably odd bird — put best what one might say of A. J. Liebling. "Here is an artist to be enjoyed . . . without concern for dark trends or symbols; a man who does what he sets out to do with complete mastery."

"Damndest Performance I Ever Saw"

The Sayre Case: A Matter Of Proportion

From The Wall Street Journal

It's getting to be an old story in the academic life, but the case of Professor Woodrow Wilson Sayre is at last bringing it to more general attention.

Dr. Sayre is the assistant professor of philosophy at Tufts University who has been advised his contract for the next academic year probably will not be renewed; he has taught there since 1957. The reason is that, though he is considered to have been effective in the classroom, he has not published enough scholarly works. The professor, who incidentally was one of the four amateurs in a near-tragic assault on Mt. Everest a couple of years ago, is fighting the impending decision.

While we are not in a position to judge the merits of this particular case, it does reflect an emphasis on research and publication which may be getting out of hand. That is true not only in the teaching profession; the pressure is felt in medicine and other scientific disciplines. And now that the Government is so heavily involved in research of all sorts, the stress on research is raising important questions of public policy as well.

No one, we take it, opposes either research or publications as such. Apart from contributions to knowledge, some universities believe that formal research and the discipline of publishing findings in scholarly journals and books may make a teacher's own teaching more stimulating and significant for his students.

It is, rather, a matter of proportion. Many observers think that requiring a man's academic career to depend on how much he publishes is unfair to him, introduces an excessive rigidity and causes a dilution of teaching. As Mr. Sayre sees it, this national tendency downgrades teaching "by judging merit by such superficial externals as publications, articles, grants and fellowships." It risks putting quantity above quality.

What, after all, makes a good teacher? Enthusiasm for the subject, eloquence or at least ability to communicate effectively, genuine interest in the minds of the young — these are a few characteristics. Formal research may or may not aid a teacher; it certainly cannot supply such individual talents where they are absent. In Professor Sayre's words, "there is no necessary logical connection between the ability to publish and the ability to teach."

If the "publish or perish" fetish can work to the detriment of teaching, it can also lower the quality of research, paradoxical as that may seem. The very necessity of publishing is bound to mean that much research will be undertaken which is marginal or worthless.

Jacques Barzun, Columbia University's renowned provost, is one who has long and forcefully argued research has been given such sacrosanct status that it covers multitudes of waste. It is not here a question of whether the particular research has any immediately evident application; what is of concern is the proliferation of petty, pedantic, silly projects.

With the rise of the foundations and the Federal Government, plus general affluence, there has never been so much money to toss around on anything that can parade itself in the mantle of research. That is more likely to dissipate both the money and the human resources than it is to add to knowledge.

The intrusion of the Federal Government is of special interest because its money—the taxpayers', that is — already finances the bulk of the nation's whole research and development effort. Among other potential dangers, this circumstances places a weighty additional premium on research, and that can only be at the further expense of the art of teaching.

How a better balance might be struck is naturally not easy to say. It should be possible, though, for the Federal Government to re-examine the implications of its somewhat helter-skelter research activities. It should be possible for college and university administrators to encourage intelligent research without making publication the price of survival.

At least the publicity attending the Sayre case may propel some needed thought on a problem of growing importance. It will not serve the nation's future interest if it is permitting a decline in the quality both of research and of education.

commodations law that would "open the door to a police-state system of enforcement that would threaten everyone's liberty. They want advances through "orderly law," rather than by "emotional or violent revision of constitutional concepts."

Democratic Platform

Foreign Policy—The Democats want definitive policies concerning distribution of foreign aid and co-ordination of all allied aid programs. Besides strengthening alliances, they support increased contact with independent nations in the Communist sphere. They would strengthen the Alliance for Progress and revise the Panama Canal Treaty. They categorically oppose Chinese expansion.

Agriculture — The Democrats would increase trade agreements on agricultural products, train farm unemployed to non-farm careers, encourage grass land areas, and diversify agricultural stockpiles.

Domestic policy—The Democrats propose extensive programs to aid education and the "War on Poverty." They will continue pressure for medical care for the aged and will promote a "War on Crime." They want a cabinet post for a Director of Urban Re-development.

Civil Rights — The Democrats want passage of the Administration's Civil Rights Act, increased use of the Justice Department in civil rights cases, and discouragement of prejudice. They also support the passage of a law providing the use of wire-taps and mail covers when authorized by a Federal Court.

Gator Bowl Films Here

Mr. Howard Henry, director of Graham Memorial, announced Thursday that the official films of the Gator Bowl Game had arrived and would be shown to the campus next week.

The films, which last for 45 minutes, will be shown twice in Memorial Hall on Tuesday, April 21.

The first showing will take place at 7 p.m. and will be immediately followed by the second showing at 8 p.m.

The films will be shown in color. There will be no admission charge.

BEAUTY NOTES
BY ALICE STONE

Here are a few facts concerning scratchy, non-catchy Erythema solare—better known as sunburn. A leading dermatologist had this to say.

"Sun ages the skin. Too much of it over long peroids destroys the elastic fibers, or connective tissues, and they become degenerated.

"These fibers are like rubber bands and hold the skin taut. If you overdo it, even with a tan, the rays get down into the connective tissues."

Forgetting skin and sun for the moment, let's speak of your hair. Is it a problem — a lank, limp, spiritless problem? Actually, you don't have a great problem at all. There are always the excellent facilities and stylists of Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon, 133½ East Franklin to serve you. Try us. Phone 942-2335.

Hoehn Sparkles In 9-0 Victory

Netters Smash Deacons In ACC Opener

By BOB BETTIS

The victory, Carolina's 47th consecutive in ACC competition, upped UNC's record to 10-1. Wake suffered its first loss of the season and is now 6-1-1.

A sun-baked crowd watched the Tar Heels quickly capture triumphs in all the singles, as five of the matches were completed within an hour.

Ted Hoehn, possibly trying to set a record for the quickest match, won in 40 minutes for the second time this spring. He shut out Pratt Lindsay on court three, 6-0, 6-0.

Carl Evans, a rapidly improving sophomore, followed three minutes later with an exact duplication of Hoehn's score. Evans whipped John Memory, 6-0, 6-0, at the sixth post.

The third Tar Heel point was registered by Pete Myers, a 5-7 senior from Elkins Park, Pa. The Demon Deacon to fall this time was Tom Williams, a 6-4 athlete who resembles former UNC star Bitsy Harrison in appearance but not in ability. Williams lost by a 6-0, 6-2 margin.

At this point Wake Forest made its biggest threat of the day when Steve Parson, on number five, took four games from Charlie Shaffer in their second set. But Shaffer, back from Italy and playing his first match since March 27, killed the Deacon rally in two sets, 6-2, 6-4.

And O. H. Parrish, the consistent junior from Richmond, Va., did the same thing scoring-wise with his 6-3, 6-1 win over Curt Dixon on court two. Parrish frequently earned points by placing balls just over the net, a move which caught his opponent standing on or near the baseline.

UNC Coach Don Skakle inserted two reserves, Rich Henderson and Ken Oettinger, into the number three doubles, but the Tar Heel attack again was not noticeably weakened.

Even though his chances for an unbeaten season were rudely smashed, Wake Forest Coach Jim Leighton was composed and relaxed.

"Nothing happened today that I didn't expect," Leighton said.

"We knew before coming over that North Carolina was out of our class. Actually, there are two ways to play tennis. When you meet teams you expect to beat, you are dead serious and play to win. When you meet teams you don't expect to beat, you play for fun. Today we played for fun."

Leighton, in his second year at the Deacon helm, said he looked for Carolina to win the conference championship again.

"There's no doubt about it. I hear that Maryland and Clemson have fairly good squads this year, but I simply can't see how they will be able to match Carolina's experience and depth.

Saturday the Tar Heels face Maryland at College Park in a contest that could decide the ACC championship. Their next home match will be on May 1 against South Carolina.

Tar Heels Host Roosters Today

By LARRY TARLETON

The "which way" Tar Heels get back into action today after a week's layoff determined to go only one way—up.

Coach Walt Rabb's Heels play host to a greatly improved South Carolina team at three o'clock. The Gamecocks finished in the ACC cellar last year with a 3-11 conference mark and a 7-14 overall record. However, a couple of sophomores have developed at key positions and the Roosters are currently sporting a 10-6 overall mark and are 2-2 in conference battles this year.

So far this year, UNC can't decide whether they are going to be a great team or an average group. Great things were expected of them at the beginning of the year. After all, they lost only two men from last year's 20-9 second-place finishers. But the Tar Heels haven't been great; they have been consistently good except for the two losses to Florida State, but they just haven't reached their potential.

The team's 7-4 record is identical to that of last year's after 11 games. However, last year the Heels were great the last half of the season, winning eight of their last nine (the only loss was 1-0 to Maryland in 10 innings).

Two injuries to key men have hurt Rabb's squad this year. Third baseman and co-captain Tom Wright pulled some ligaments in his knee on the Florida trip and hasn't played since. He has been working out with the team, but his playing status is still uncertain. Junior Dick Fleming has taken over at third, and has been a capable replacement, although he has been erratic at bat and in the field. Fleming is hitting only .160, but three of his four hits have gone for extra bases including one four-bagger.

Sophomore lefthander Beattie Leonard was expected to give the Tar Heel pitching a big boost, but he forgot to use his glove on a smash back to the mound in a practice game, and has been sidelined with a broken hand. He had the cast taken off Monday, but won't be able to throw hard for a few more days. Big Jerry Davis was impressive in a 7 2/3 inning stint against Camp Lejeune, and has become the top southpaw on the staff during Leonard's absence.

Spence Willard, who hasn't seen action since shutting out Yale 15 days ago, will probably start on the mound for the Heels. Willard is 2-2 on the season and has a 2.84 ERA.

Other Tar Heel starters will probably be 1b—Bill Brown (.263), 2b—Dickie Prindle (.262), 3b—Fleming (.160), ss—Jim Speight .298), lf—Ken Willard (.310), cf—Gary Black .263), rf—Ken Boykin (.500) and c—Bob Hundley (.357).

Coach Rabb has a problem with his catchers—all of them are hitting over .300. Merle Kruer was the starter when the season began and was hitting .316 when an injury sidelined him. Sophomore John Shaw is hitting an even .300 while Hundley, who has won the starting job is at .357.

UNC Cindermen Host Terrapins

By BILL LEE

UNC's track team, victim of a 68-77 defeat at the hands of South Carolina last Saturday, play host tomorrow to the Maryland Terrapins, the terrors of the cinder world.

The Terps are fresh from a 111-34 rout of Duke last Saturday at College Park, but Coach Jim Kehoe invades Chapel Hill expecting much more competition, because Carolina is always his biggest threat to the ACC crown.

The Tar Heel loss last weekend was due largely to the epidemic of measles that have been sweeping the campus. Many of those hit were too weak to contribute their top performance. However, most of the cases have cleared up and Coach Joe Hilton expects his boys to look a little more competitive tomorrow.

Art Maillett, David Peltz, Harvey Whitley, Pat Tone, and Jerry Smith didn't make the South Carolina trip.

Hilton praised the performances of Nick Street in the javelin, Earl Evans in the broad jump, John McNinch and Dale White in the 100, and Bob Bennett, Bill Janowitz, and James Meade in the distances.

Tommy Henley took first place in the discus at 142' 3½", but has sprained his ankle in practice and will not be ready for the meet tomorrow.

In Maryland's win over Duke, the first meet for the Terps this season, junior Mike Cole competed in five events and racked up 19½ points toward the victory. Cole won the broad jump, the hop-step-jump, and the 100-yard dash, while taking second in the 200 and running anchor man in the 440 relay.

Terp Steve Lamb also sparkled as he set two meet records in both the 220 at 21.3 and the 440 at 49 flat. He also ran anchor in the mile relay.

In general it seems that Maryland and UNC are about even in the running events with the Terps holding a slight edge in the hurdles and weight events.

Expected to give top performances for the Tar Heels are Tommy Clark in the high jump, Harvey Whitley in the broad jump, Nick Street in the javelin, Art Maillett in the mile, Dale White in the dashes, Milt Bauguess and Rich Ambrose in the hurdles, Al Dobritch in the 440, and Bob Bennett and James Meade in the distances.

Big 4 Sports Day Seeks Ballplayers

Captain-Manager Al Hamilton is putting together what he hopes will be a strong softball entry in the Big Four Sports Day. Hamilton says, "We've got an enthusiastic group, one that I think can win. We could use another pitcher, catcher, and a little more hitting and outfield strength to supplement what we have at the present time. We aren't in any real dire need of immediate help at these spots, but qualified tryouts could no nothing but strengthen the team. The more good ball players we get, the better the chance we have of winning."

Carolina meets N. C. State in the first round, while Wake Forest faces Duke. Last year the Tar Heels dropped a heartbreaker to Duke in the first round, before drubbing Wake, 11-3 in the consolation. State murdered Duke in the finals, 16-0.

In Wednesday's softball action Bill Helms lined a bases-loaded single in the bottom half of the last inning to give the Town Drunks a 12-11 win over the Naval ROTC. The Drunks needed three runs in the inning to offset the six scored by the Navy in the top half of the frame.

Five walks gave the Ehringhaus B Governors the winning margin in the last of the seventh for a 13-12 victory over the Navy Neseps. The Neseps had led most of the way before the last inning collapse, led by four hits by Bill Posenecker and three by Bill Gosselin. The victory was a heartening comeback for the Governors, who were routed their last time out by Alexander, 25-1.

Chi Phi pulled out the day's other squeaker, 8-7, over Lambda Chi. With the game tied in the bottom of the seventh, Stan Thompson walked, advanced to second on a single by Jimmy Polk, went to third on a walk to John Hammett, and scored on Tom Stenson's single to center.

A Weejun With Milton's Custom Touch Is The Living End!

To keep the Carolina campus No. 1 satorially, Milton has designed his own Bass Weejuns and used special leathers purchased exclusively for us, so even your casual weejuns can have their own distinctive touch.

In the men's and women's loafers the backstay is straight and narrow rather than being curved like a saddle, and the heel has a cradle of its own, rather than coming out to the edge of the shoe. All other women's weejuns except ours show the back seam where the shoe is joined but in our version this is concealed by a ½" backstay that adds so much good looks. These distinguishing details are ours alone.

But this is only half the story. The new exciting leathers are an unusually light tan which we have named Cupboard tan plus a natural waxed leather that requires saddle soaping only, but no polishing. In our women's weejuns we have also just received the new styling in this same unusual wax or oil stained leather.

Lady Otelia — She Walks Softly, Carries Mean Umbrella

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

"Hello," the reporter said.

"Hel . . . just a minute young fellow," the gray haired lady began. "I'm not going to talk to anybody who's chewing gum. If you want to talk to me, you'll have to throw that gum away. Only common people chew gum in public."

The reporter threw the gum away.

Chapel Hill's Queen of Manners had spoken.

Otelia Connor, champion of courtesy is a stickler on manners. She has taken it upon herself to correct "the terrible manners that many of our students have."

Rare is the UNC student who has not been told to sit up straight at the table or to put his feet on the floor or to hold the door open for a lady or to stand up when a lady enters the room.

She also counsels to the student body through letters published in the DTH.

And it is through these letters that Otelia Connor, who is 69 years old has encountered much opposition to her program of good manners. Many students write in letters of rebuttal to some of Otelia's remarks. Some also write uncomplimentary poems about her. But this criticism doesn't bother Otelia.

"You've got to be able to take it as well as dish it out," she said. "When I write about something, I realize that I must accept remarks that some of the students say. Either that or quit writing."

"But," she added, "most of the students ask me to keep writing the letters."

Otelia began her good manners campaign in 1957 when she moved to Chapel Hill from Durham where her late husband was a tobacco executive.

Let Mickey Blackwell Introduce You To Chapel Hill's Queen Of Manners

"My first letter was on 'Let's Behave at the Basketball Games,'" Otelia said. "And I've been writing on and off ever since."

Otelia has been told by many people that she doesn't look her age, to which she replies, "A woman is as young as she feels." She also added with a gravely laugh, "A man is old when he stops looking."

Her favorite outfit is a fire-engine red dress and a wide-brim rainbow-colored hat is her campus trademark. She is a short woman, a few inches over five feet, and her face is wrinkled with age.

Otelia then invited the reporter, minus his chewing gum, to step inside her big rooming house which she shares with four other people.

"You smoke?" she asked.

"No."

"Good," she replied. "Don't ever start. I wish I hadn't. It's just a silly nervous habit. I don't even inhale.

"You ask me some of the things that upset me. Well. I'll tell you," she said as she took a quick puff from her cigarette.

"When someone puts an empty tray on my table, I jump all over him. When a student drags a chair away from my table without asking if it's all right to do so, I correct him.

"I slapped a law student on the leg one day with my umbrella," she said. "I told him to put his feet down on the floor and to sit up. He never sat with me any more, but he sits up straight now.

"However," Otelia added, "most of the students appreciate my criticism. Manners evidently are not taught in the home any longer."

"University students shouldn't be allowed to wear their shirts on the outside," she said. "They look like they just got out of bed."

"And a lot of these students don't wear any socks. Their feet get awfully dirty. Students should take more pride in the appearance of their clothes," she said. "Some of the clothes look like they came out of a garbage can."

Otelia said she has noticed a general improvement in students' manners since she began her corrective campaign.

"Students aren't saying 'Huh,' and 'Uh Huh,' as much as they used to. They aren't chewing gum as much in public either," she said looking the reporter squarely in the eye.

"But table manners still need to be improved on," she said. "People prop themselves up on their elbows. They put their feet on the tables. They've got weak muscles. That's why I recom-

LBJ—Barry Showdown Expected At Convention

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

A showdown between Goldwater and Johnson forces is expected tonight as the delegates to UNC's Mock Political Convention go about the heated task of nomnating candidates for the presidency and vice-presidency.

Speeches by Senator Frank Church (D.-Idaho) and Rep. Charles Jonas (R.-N.C.) and debate over the six-point platform highlighted last night's session of the Woollen Gym bi-partisan clambake. Tonight's nominations will close the three-day affair which began Thursday.

Going into the final stages, both parties were predicting victory for their respective candidates.

Said Charles Hooks, president of the UNC-YRC, "It's fairly obvious this convention will go Republican. After seeng the convention the first night and the strength shown by both parties, it would be fairly safe to assume that the Republican nominee will be elected.

"The Republicans know what they are doing—they are out to win," said Hooks.

Speaking for the UNC-YDC, Bill Davis said, "Things are looking good—as a matter of fact, things are looking real good. The Republicans have shown surprising strength, but we Democrats will be there in full force tonight to back LBJ all the way."

Johnson is expected to have no opposition as presidential nminee, but the contention for vice-president will probably be hot and heavy, with favorites being Robert Kennedy and Sen. Hubert Humphrey.

A floor fight is expected over the Republican Presidential nomination with particular emphasis on Goldwater, Henry Cabot Lodge and Richard Nixon, with Goldwater given the edge.

No particular candidate is being prominently mentioned for the Republican vice-presidential nomination although Lodge will have the edge if Goldwater gets the Presidentialy go-ahead.

Planks for each of the platforms considered last night dealt with six controversial issues: civil rights, domestic policy, government finance, labor, agriculture and foreign policy.

As expected, the civil rights section brought on the most heated discussion of the night.

Sparks Fly Over Barry Banner At Y

UNC Goldwater supporters were quietly indignant yesterday when student YMCA officials said the large "GOLDWATER IN '64" banner hanging from the Y building must come down.

"I think the YMCA should take a non-partisan position in this campaign," said Niki Nicholson, YMCA Secretary. He continued, "If you allow this sign to stay up, pretty soon there will be ones for Lodge, Rockefeller, Scranton, Romney, and Johnson and Kennedy and the whole thing will just get out of hand. Even though I personally am a Democrat, I think the Y should just stay out of it."

Charles Hooks, President of the YRC which is strong with Goldwater sentiment said, "It seems ironic that the same people who are so adamant in defending freedom of expression when the extreme liberal position is at stake should object to simply displaying the campaign banner of a major presidential candidate because he happens to

Duke Prof Given Heavy Sentence

HILLSBORO — Prof. Harmon Lee Smith, the last of five Duke professors to be tried on trespass charges, was sentenced to 90 days at hard labor and court costs by Orange County Superior Court Judge Raymond B. Mallard here Friday.

The 34-year old professor, one of 10 defendants in the Chapel Hill civil rights cases, said that he would appeal the decision shortly after court was recessed until Monday.

Nine students, including two each from Duke and UNC and five from North Carolina College, were tried on counts of resisting arrest and obstructing traffic. All pleaded nolo contendere (no contest) to the resisting arrest charge and eight of the nine made the same plea on the latter count.

Three of the nine defendants were sentenced to two months at hard labor and court costs, suspended on agreement to certain conditions set down by Mallard.

The conditions included that they pay costs and agree not to engage in or be a part of civil rights demonstrations in any way for a three-year period. Furthermore, they were prohibited from physically accompanying any person participating in or about to participate in a demonstration.

Six-month sentences at hard labor were handed one Duke student and one UNC student, suspended upon agreement to these conditions for a period of four years.

A jury consisting of five white women, four white women, four white men and three Negro men delivered the verdict in the Harmon case, after being released Thursday at 5:30 p.m. by Mallard. They had delliberated for 90 minutes at that point.

The other nine students were tried for participating in massive street and highway blocking incidents in Chapel Hill on Feb. 1 and Feb. 6. Mallard carefully questioned each defendant Thursday to insure that all had made their pleas freely, and the process was repeated Friday.

The two days of court action are the first major break in attempting to try the estimated 1,400 cases awaiting trial. Prior to the completion of Smith's trial, only two cases had been completed.

The trials will resume Monday.

Policeman's Bullet Is Fatal To UNC Student At Myrtle

Special To The Daily Tar Heel

MYRTLE BEACH, S. C. — A UNC student identified by police as Arthur A. Rauchfuss III, of Lenoir, was shot and killed by a Myrtle Beach policeman Friday.

Police Sergeant W. L. Chestnut said he shot at a youth fleeing the scene of a burglary at the Corral Men's Shop, a new haberdashery just getting ready to open for the summer season. Chestnut said he fired first into the air and when the youth did not stop, he shot again, this time hitting the fleeing youth.

Police Chief Carlyle Newton said that identification of the youth was traced through a fraternity pin.

The shooting occurred at 3:45 a.m. Friday in the back lot of the haberdashery. Officer Herman Fowler had discovered the robbery and had called Chestnut for assistance. Police Chief Newton said the officers found a broken window in the adjacent Allen's Office Supply store. As the officers entered the building, police said, the youth fled through a rear entrance. The shots followed.

In Chapel Hill, Rauchfuss' former roommate, Norman Leafe of Charlotte said the last time he saw the youth was at Easter after he returned from the holidays.

Leafe said he had heard that Rauchfuss was going "to leave school for a week.

"I figured he would be back," Leafe said.

Dean of Men William G. Long said he first heard about Rauchfuss leaving school late the afternoon of April 3.

"Someone (Long declined to name the sex of the person) called me and said they had given a ride to a person who said he was a UNC student and a member of Phi Gamma Delta fraternity.

"The person didn't give the name of the boy, but after checking with members of Phi Gamma Delta, it was determined that Rauchfuss was the

Nikita Says Red World Won't Split

MOSCOW (UPI)—Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev, warmed by the praise of old comrades and an outpouring of the nation's brightest honors of his 70th birthday, said Friday the Soviet Union will "not break off relations" with Communist China.

His voice choked with emotion as he admitted he has "not so much time left" but it was clear that he had no plans to retire. He appeared still firmly in control over the Soviet government and Communist party.

Khrushchev's statement Friday and a birthday greeting Thursday from Chinese Communist leader Mao Tse-tung calling their split only temporary indicated that both the Soviet Union and Communist China have retreated from severing relations.

Khrushchev also extolled Soviet military might but said: "We do not want to blow the trumpet and we plan no campaigns; but we must always keep up the guard, remember the responsibility which rests with the Soviet Union."

SL Blocks Bid To Shut Out NSA

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Conservative legislator Borden rker's attempt to block a $490 propriation to the National dent Association was beaten wn by the Student Legislature a special session Thursday ht.

Parker (UP) proposed the letion from the mammoth 4,000 student budget, saying NSA appropriation was "an necessary expenditure of the dents' money and supports ws with which they do not ree."

President Elect Bob Spearman left the speaker's chair to defend the appropriation and explain some of its functions. Student Party Floor Leader Phil Baddour also came to NSA's rescue.

"Just because many people at NSA are more liberal than we are, this is no reason to leave," said Baddour. "In fact, it is all the more reason for us to stay in."

This came as a direct answer to Parker's claim that many southern schools have withdrawn from the organization because of its extremely liberal character. Baddour further said that the UNC influence in NSA was extremely high, and that our withdrawal might wreck the organization.

Spearman, who will be inaugurated President of the Student Body at special ceremonies next Thursday, gave examples of UNC delegates to NSA who have learned many things about student government at the conventions. He said they have returned to the campus and put them into practice, and he cited Jim Fullwood's work with the Men's Residence Council as an example of this.

The Student Legislature gave most of its time Thursday evening to consideration of the 1964 summer school budget and the 1964-65 fiscal budget. Most of the budget passed at the four-and-one-half hour session, and final approval is expected Tuesday night.

Specific action on the finance-package saw the defeat of Rep. Lanny Shuff's motion to cut a $3,500 appropriation to the MRC for social activities.

Also, the salaries of the Daily Tar Heel co-editors and the subscription manager were cut, and a $3,421 appropriation for the Columbian Exchange Program was passed.

Under new business, UP Floor Leader and Vice President Elect Don Carson introduced a bill for a student referendum on the "boycott issue" and also one to appropriate more money to the MRC. Both of these bills will be considered at a later date.

Mr. Leeds Carries Protest A Bit Too Far

We have noticed lately that proponents of the Civil Rights Bill before the Senate have been growing progressively more restless about the extremists within the Negro movement.

In the past two days, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, Sen. Hubert Humphrey and Sen. Thomas Kuchel have criticized some of the integrationists, specifically the Brooklyn chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality.

The leader of that group, Oliver Leeds, has taken it upon himself to hold a "stall-in," whereby True Believers will put just enough gas in their cars to get them near the World's Fair site on opening day next Wednesday and then run out.

The Police Commissioner of New York City has said that this will produce the greatest traffic jam in the history of the city, as more than a million people are expected to attend the Fair on opening day.

Leeds justifies his action by simply stating, "We do not see why people should enjoy themselves when Negroes all over the country are suffering."

It is not only Mr. Leed's logic that we question—it is his common sense.

This is a crucial time for the Negroes of America. The most sweeping Civil Rights legislation in history has passed the House of Representatives and is before the Senate. It is quite possible that a strong bill will be passed by that body before mid-summer.

And Leeds decides to create the greatest traffic jam in history in an effort to "dramatize" the needs of the Negro.

The Negro has been clamoring during the past years for that nebulous thing called "equality." He is nearer to it today than ever before, and it is time some of the leaders of the integration movement learned that responsibility must also come along with rights.

We are happy that CORE's national office had the presence of mind to suspend the Brooklyn chapter, and we hope they will be able to soothe Mr. Leeds' savage breasts before he succeeds in making the entire movement look irresponsible.

Parts of it are irresponsible enough.

The Dirty Old Men And The New Greeks

A sudden and stirring change is brewing in the hallowed halls of Graham Memorial these days. The change is best characterized by a marked decrease in the noise and the number of small children running up and down the halls, and by noticeable increases in madras coats, striped ties, and bright-eyed coeds. With tongues well in cheeks, we might say that the "dirty old men" are giving way to the "new Greeks."

Actually, of course, both these affectionate terms are unrealistic. You couldn't truthfully say that the Blanchard-Ethridge-Lawler-Akers group was old OR dirty, and no one is quite sure where the term arose (a dormitory newspaper is suspect.) On the other hand, the name "new Greeks" is nothing more than a vague reference to the new type of campus-conscious fraternity member.

With the "old men" in power, however, there were certain unusual hazards to be dealt with in working for the Daily Tar Heel or Student Government. For example, there was the continual threat of tiny tots invading the premises to turn off the UPI machine or slobber on the carbon paper. Irate wives were often encountered (especially on the phone), asking "When are you coming to supper?" And more than once a grocery list wound up in the SG files or a DTH copy run. The atmosphere was in some ways different (and in a few ways better) than ever before. But now the old men are gone.

In their stead we have the "new Greeks," however new or Greek they may be. Jim Clotfelter, DTH co-editor during the 1962-63 school year, characterized them as the UP members who would champion the dorm man's cause in the face of the fraternity-or-nothing domination stressed by the "Old Greeks." They are, then, fraternity men whose vision is supposedly not limited to their own segment of the campus.

First, there's President Bob Spearman. As a Chi Psi, he is somewhat of an enigma. During his career in Student Government, he has borne the label of an "All-Campus" man. He looks fraternity, but he talks Carolina. If the election returns are an indication, he may be more than the "dorm man's fraternity man." He may be everybody's man.

Next we come to Don Carson, Vice-President. He is precisely the opposite of Spearman. He is a dorm man from way back, working diligently for Residence Hall improvements, yet on April 14 he received more fraternity votes than any candidate on the ballot. He might be termed the "new Dorm Man." (These are rarer than hens' teeth.)

Holding down the Secretary's post is Madeline Gray. She doesn't really fit into the picture, being neither a man, a fraternity member, or UP. About the only connection that we can find is that she is a Classics major, and therefore she studies Greek. It must come in handy. She won in a walk.

Last, but not least, there is Jim Light, the new Treasurer. He is a member of a definitely Old Greek fraternity, but he has two things in his favor: (1) he has great personal appeal, and (2) he is not a politician. Whatever he may be in private, at Graham Memorial he gives the appearance of being just one thing—a treasurer.

Oh yes, about your new editors. Someone came in to suggest that we don't fit into either category, so you'll have to think of us as the "new old men" or the "dirty young Greeks" or . . . something.

Letters To Jesse

The Voice of the South, Jessie Helms, has huddled with his compatriots at WRAL-TV and decided that it would be advisable that they do something to pacify the Federal Communications Committee, which has been nasty enough to investigate complaints that the Raleigh television station has been presenting only one side of the picture.

It seems that Jesse will now devote a certain amount of his editorial time to reading letters from viewers who disagree with his controversial stand. Great. But there are still a couple of unanswered questions.

First, why in the world did it take a threat from a federal agency to awaken in the half-sleep "Voice of Free Enterprise" the sense of responsibility which has been dormant (or non-existent) for so long? Secondly, will ol' Jesse still attempt to put in a "last word" following the reading of such letters? We'd like to know.

Discrimination Not All Bad

Fraternities Own Right To Choose

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The action of the Board of Regents of the University of California requiring fraternities and sororities to sign a nondiscrimination pledge runs counter to all intelligent thought on either the fraternity system or the problems of discrimination. The fraternity system has its existence in giving groups the power to choose exactly with whom they will associate. The social fraternity exists in order that one brotherhood may say to whatever individual or group it pleases, "we consider ourselves better than you, and it is our desire to have nothing to do with you; you are repugnant to us." There is no more injustice in telling someone that you do not like him because he is black than telling him that you do not like him because he wears the wrong kind of shoes, or is more perceptive and sensitive than you, or just rubs you the wrong way. This action by the Board of Regents is the first step toward making the fraternity an organization whose members are bound together by the fact that their last names happened to fall together on an arbitrary alphabetical list compiled by the university administration. Any official action by any such administrative body will not alter the fact that we are not all fraternity desirable WASP's, even though our only fault is being undesirable in the eyes of those who are already in the fraternity.

Discrimination is not bad; the connotation which it has today may be bad. Ta admit that one is being discriminated against is only to admit that one is considered inferior. Discrimination amounts to selecting what one considers to be the best. Only by being the best and convincing others that one is the best can one avoid being discriminated against. As Brooker Taliaferro Washington said: "No race can prosper till it learns that there is as much dignity in tilling a field as in writing a poem."

Apologies To Pi Kappa Phi

To Phi Kappa Phi,

I want to apoligize for the reaction I have caused by my letter. I meant no malice; it was only a satire. But I am at fault.

First: Although I didn't mean to slam Pi Kappa Phi, this is probably a general impression. So I have missed my goal entirely. I went after those individuals who were heckling the firemen.

Second: Although in all honesty I must affirm my belief that the hecklers were on the roof of Pi Kappa Phi, I cannot verify this beyond a doubt. I may have been fooled by the acoustics of the building arrangement.

Third: Instead of asking a few questions, I played Crusader Rabbit. Crusades are good sometimes, but there can be needless hurt if they go off half-cocked.

Fourth: Just like many others I followed the herd instinct and (shall we say stampeded?) on the Pi Kappa Phi lawn. After identifying with mankind, I resumed my role as Godhead of Mallette Street, earlier having tucked away the ageless truth of John 8:1-11.

Mr. McLeod's letter hit me between the running lights. I made a public slur now I make a public apology.

By Jeff Dickey

Spring has sprung and with it, we note, shades of Griselda have returned.

Griselda, for those whose memory is short, was the first pig to run for the position of Secretary of the Student Body here at UNC. She ran in the spring elections last year.

Officially, her votes were never counted, but estimates credit Griselda with polling anywhere from 600 to 650 votes. Griselda was whitewashed by her opponents in the election, but the unique thing is that she really existed.

The grunting pig was led around campus for over a week by her campaign managers. She was there for everyone to see—in front of Lenoir Hall, in Y-Court, everywhere—her ardent supporters even staged a rally and march for her.

Griselda was, truly, the common man's dream. She didn't care what kind of clothes she wore, or how she wore her hair. In fact, she didn't even own a pair of Weejuns. More than that, however, Griselda was the fulfillment of all those who dreamed they would like to write in Donald Duck, Mickey Mouse, Joe Palooka and even Linus and his blanket for co-secretaries.

Never during her campaign was Griselda forced to speak about issues in which she didn't believe or of which she had no understanding. She'd just belch or squeal whenever she felt like it and didn't even have to say "excuse me" when she did it.

It has been learned that a group of Wake Forest students are making plans to run a billy goat against an unopposed candidate in the election for student body president.

The goat's backers are having difficulties in raising the necessary capital to purchase the goat, but we have faith that these students possess the ingenuity to find a means to procure the necessary working capital.

Cliff Lowry, a human being, is the other candidate. I really feel sorry for him.

Can you imagine how this poor guy is going to feel if he loses?

Just suppose his folks call up election night to find out how he did. What do you say at a time like that?

"Well, ma, I lost to the other candidate. His name? Oh, it Billy Goat. No, he's not a guy with a funny name, he's a real live goat."

Knowing how far out the whims of campus frolic can go, especially during election time, I have no doubt that that goat is going to get a heck of a lot of votes.

What if the goat wins? There are going to be an awful lot of crazy things happening in that student government office if that goat gets elected.

Letters written to the student government office are going to disappear mysteriously, literally consumed by the goat.

"Yes, you did," will come the reply, "but our president ate it."

The goat may well cause a lot of trouble, not to mention the added expense of buying him a chair that he is able to sit in. He'll probably draw a reprimand, not for walking on the grass, but for eating it.

Can you imagine the goat in a receiving line when the President of the United States comes to visit the campus.

"Mr. President, I'd like you to meet our student body president, Mr. William Goat."

"How do you do, Mr. Goat. It's nice to see you."

"Ba-a-a-a-h."

There may be much merit in running animals for some of the public offices throughout the state.

Someone could run a bull for Secretary of State for the state of North Carolina. When he was elected, he could write a bill making it unlawful for a hippopotamus to speak on the campus of any state-supported university. It would be safe to pass a law like that because anyone who protested it would either be a hippopotamus or a hippopatamus-sympathizer.

If you really got down to it, you could appoint an elephant as janitor for the Dallas police station. Nothing would happen to it because nobody would see him.

Wisconsin Just The Beginning For Wallace

By ROBERT S. ALLEN and PAUL SCOTT

WASHINGTON — Alabama's Gov. George Wallace is setting his political sights a lot higher than most Democratic party leaders and politicians realize.

By the time the Democratic National Convention convenes in Atlantic City in August, the mild-speaking segregationist seeks to roll up one million votes in presidential primaries throughout the nation.

While publicly working to crystalize the opposition against civil rights legislation, Governor Wallace's private political objective is to pile up this impressive vote total in Indiana (May 5) and Maryland (May 19), where his name is on the ballot, and from "write-ins" in Illinois (April 14), Massachusetts (April 28), Nebraska (May 12) and Oregon (May 14).

Governor Wallace and his supporters are shooting for a "Lodge-type" surprise "write-in" in Oregon since this is the only primary where President Johnson's name appears on the ballot.

They are stressing that a sizable Oregon vote, along with impressive showings in other states, could have a major impact on the coming Democratic convention — especially the choice of the vice presidential candidate and the platform.

In private backstage talks since the Wisconsin primary, Governor Wallace is personally expressing confidence that his million-vote goal is well within his grasp.

He argues that his campaign strategists in Maryland and Indiana report political conditions very similar to Wisconsin, where he reaped over 260,000 votes. His plans are to pick up the remainder of his million votes from "write-ins" in other states.

If these political soundings are anywhere near correct, Governor Wallace is convinced that the President and other Democratic leaders will have to listen to his voice at the convention—especially since the Kennedy-Johnson ticket won by less than 150,000 votes in 1960.

Governor Wallace even hints that if his views are disregarded at the convention, he may be forced to bolt and form a third party designed to attract voters favoring his state's rights views.

THE WALLACE ICEBERG— Although no announcement was even made, Governor Wallace set his vote goal last September, basing it on the receipt of more than 1,300,000 "favorable" letters the past two years in his fight against the administration's civil rights proposal.

Originally Governor Wallace planned to enter primaries in California, Wisconsin, Maryland and Indiana, since most of his mail outside the South came from those states. California was mysteriously dropped from the list after Governor Wallace conferred with Governor "Pat" Brown in Washington during the Kennedy funeral.

While neither Governor Walnor Brown will reveal what they discussed, one of Governor Wallace's political advisers said the Alabama governor ruled out California on the basis of these talks, despite the fact that more "favorable" mail came from that state than any other.

Governor Wallace hopes to score big in Maryland since neither Gov. Millard Tawes nor Senator Daniel Brewster, who jumped into the presidential race after a call from President Johnson, has taken Governor Wallace's bid seriously.

Until jolted by the Wisconsin primary results, Governor Tawes had limited his campaigning to "ducking" Governor Wallace whenever he came into the state to campaign.

On Governor Tawes' orders, state highway patrolmen escorting Governor Wallace are making private reports on Governor Wallace's campaign activities. One recent report noted the similarity of Governor Wallace's dark eyebrows to those of former Vice President Nixon.

Governor Wallace is using the long-distance phone to personally reach voters in both Maryland and Indiana. In one instance, he spent a half hour talking to a former supporter of Senator Estes Kefauver. Unable to convince him to join his campaign, the governor asked his wife to come to the phone to try to win him over.

In order to help Senator Brewster, the White House is offering both money and campaign workers from the Democratic National Committee to line up voters for the pro-Johnson slate of delegates headed by the Maryland senator.

POLITICAL FLASHES — Robert M. Mullen, chairman of the "Draft Lodge for President Committee," is forecasting a victory similar to that in New Hampshire for the former GOP vice presidential candidate in Oregon's May 15 primary. Mr. Mullen is so confident that he is writing Republican state chairmen and national committee members, urging them to await the outcome of the primary before making known their preference. Mr. Mullen, a Washington, D. C., public relations man with offices in New York and abroad, earned his political wings barnstorming the country for former President Eisenhower before the 1962 convention . . . Senator Edwin Mechem, R-N.M., who at San Francisco will head his state's delegation pledge to Senator Barry Goldwater, is privately saying that Governor Scranton is his second choice. However, he feels that a Goldwater victory in the California primary will make him hard to stop . . . Democratic senatorial candidates are quietly being urged to play up their party connections rather than issues in the coming campaign. That's the frank advice given them by Representative Morris Udall, D-Ariz., during a recent campaign "school." "People don't vote on issues but the party," Mr. Udall reported. "Candidates should use issues only for something to talk about. Stress your party associations."

Pitman To Address Statistics Meetings

Professor E. J. G. Pitman of the University of Tasmania will address the University Statistics Colloquium Monday at 4 p.m. in room 265 Phillips Hall. His topic will be "Some properties of characteristic functions of probability distributions."

While in Chapel Hill, Mr. Pitman will also speak, at the Biostatistics Seminar on "Some remarks on the chi-square test." His talk will be given Wednesday afternoon at 4 in room 416 of the Public Health Building.

YMCA Director Claude Shotts said he did not object to the Goldwater banner on the building and added, "You can put anything up as far as I'm concerned.

The controversy erupted early Friday morning when Rick Edwards, YMCA President, and Niki Nicholson went to the room on the second floor of the Y building which is being used as Goldwater headquarters for the convention, and told a student working there that the banner must come down. Edwards said, "It has been the policy of the Y in the past not to display political banners and I think we should attempt to remain nonpartisan."

Friday afternoon, Supervisor of Operations John Bennett sent a University employee to the Y building to take the banner down. After a call to Dean Long by a Goldwater partisan, the employee left without disturbing the Goldwater sign.

Bennett said he did not know that the banner was being used in connecion with the Mock Political Convention which is an authorized University function. However, both Dean Long and Bennett stipulated that the sign must come down after the convention is over Saturday night.

Otelia said she has had a couple of embarassing events during her good manners crusade.

"One day, a nun put her tray on my table. Automatically, I corrected her. It just popped out. When I see something wrong, I just have to correct it."

Otelia has become quite an integral part of campus life here. She was asked and eventually joined a campus political party. She has her name listed on the official student roster. She has audited several courses. The only thing she hasn't been able to secure is a students' pass book.

"If I'm going to write about these things," she said, "I ought to be able to get in them free of charge. I'm still working on that."

Otelia said that since she began her good manners crusade, several years ago, she has had to be doubly careful about her own manners.

"I feel like I'm in a glass cage all the time," she said. "I know that people are watching me and trying to catch me doing something wrong. They want to get something on me because I'm always getting something on them.

"Don't get me wrong," she declared. "I'm not trying to criticize everybody. Far from it. I'm trying to get the students to go out of the University as good ambassadors. People expect college students to go out into the world with good manners.

"I think the students realize this, too, and I also believe that most of them realize that I'm only trying to help them."

Police Move To New Quarters

The 24-member Chapel Hill police force has moved out of its congested three-room quarters into greatly expanded and remodeled offices on four leves of the Chapel Hill Town Hall.

The newly completed, bond-financed $40,000 project for remodeling the Town Hall gave the police force almost all of the area formerly occupied by the fire station. Through a complete rebuilding of the area the department was able to expand into much-needed quarters.

Police Chief W. D. Blake took the Chapel Hill aldermen on a formal tour of the new facilities following their Monday night meeting. He said a public open house is planned in the near future to show off the station. On the main floor of the Town Hall is the chief's office, which now occupies almost all of the area taken up by the department previously.

Adjoining is the traffic clerk's office and public reception room. Walled off in one corner is a radio operator's room. The jail area in the basement was remodeled to provide for a booking room, so that prisoners would not have to be brought through through the main area of the building.

NC Demos Hold Rally

The political spectrum will still maintain a top spot over the weekend as two Democratic gubernatorial hopefuls host youth rallies in Raleigh.

Youthful political forces will stage separate rallies for two of the major Democratic gubernatorial candidates. Dan K. Moore and L. Richardson Preyer will appear at the respective rallies which are being sponsored by various youth groups backing each candidate.

Bus loads of supporters will leave the campus early this afternoon — Preyer's at 12:30 p.m. from the Morehead Planetarium and Moore's at 1 p.m. from Woollen Gym.

Tonight, the political factions will join forces for the annual Jefferson-Jackson Day Dinner, which is expected to attract hundreds of North Carolina Democrats to Memorial Hall.

Officials estimate that 1,400 Democrats would pay $50 per plate to hear Rep. Hale Boggs, D-La.) the evening's principal speaker.

On Tuesday of next week, L. Richardson Preyer will address a joint meeting of the Orange County YDC and the UNC Democrats to be held at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Bill Caffrey of Greensboro, district coordinator of the Preyer campaign, said the public is invited both to the speech, and to an informal reception in Graham Memorial following the address.

Banquet Opens International Student Week

The International Students' Board, the Cosmopolitan Club, the YWCA, and the Men's Residence Council have combined to make this week "International Student Emphasis Week."

The purpose of the week's activities are to make more students aware of the cosmopolitan nature of the UNC campus. The ISE Week formally begins tonight at six o'clock with the "International Night Banquet," sponsored by the Cosmopolitan Club. This dinner annually attracts hundreds of students, both foreign and American.

On Tuesday, April 21, a folk group, The Echoes, will perform at the Hillel Foundation at 8:00 p.m. These performers are well known artists from Israel, sponsored by the United States National Students Association.

Wednesday, April 22, the International Students' Board will be selling cookies in the lobby of the "Y" in order to raise funds to support the Chilean illiteracy campaign. A daily forum will be conducted in the DTH by foreign students in attendance at UNC. Jim Fulwood and the Men's Residence Council have scheduled meetings with foreign students and the dormitory residents.

Kellis Parker, chairman of the the International Students' Board said that "UNC has failed to make foreign students feel that they are a real and significant part of the University community. Our great injustice to the students is that we are ignoring them. This situation is irritated by the fact that the University is expanding in area and numbers. Concomitantly, the number of foreign students at the University is increasing by leaps and bounds. The International Student Emphasis Week is designed to make students aware of their responsibility to integrate foreign students into normal campus life."

State Drama Festival Ends Today

The final three sessions of the Carolina Dramatic Association's 41st annual state drama festival will be held today and tonight in the Playmakers Theatre.

At 10:30 a.m., three one-acts—"The Lesson," "The Friend" and "The Accident" will be presented. "Christ in the Concrete City," "The Workhouse Ward," "This Property is Condemned" and "Suppressed Desires" will begin at 2:30 p.m.

"Swan Song," "Gloria Mundi" and "The Potboiler" will close the day starting at 7:30.

Tickets for the performances, at 50c per session, will be on sale at the Playmakers box office one hour prior to each session. Presentation of awards will follow the final performance.

Republican Candidate Opposes Ban

GREENSBORO (UPI) — State Rep. Donald Badgley, one of three Rpublican candidates for governor, proposed Thursday that North Carolina's Communist speaker-ban law be revised to meet the state's immediate needs.

"A true conservative will take the good out of the past, build on it and then progress," said Badgley, from Guilford County. "I think the present law could be gotten rid of and the 1941 speaker-ban amended to meet our contemporary needs."

The present law, passed by the 1963 General Assembly, prohibits known Communists or Communist sympathizers from speaking on the campuses of state-supported colleges and universities. The 1941 law banned speakers who advocate the violent overthrow of the federal or state governments.

Mississippi Jury Deadlocked Again In Trial Of Beckwith

By AL KUETTNER

JACKSON, MISS. (UPI) — A Circuit Court jury deadlocked at 8 to 4 for acquittal Friday and a mistrial was declared for the second time in the case of Byron De La Beckwith, charged with the ambush slaying of Negro leader Medgar Evers.

"No sir," the jurors one by one told Circuit Judge Leon Hendrick when he asked them individually if they felt they could come to a unanimous decision.

Hendrick promptly declared the mistrial, the same action he took in February when another all - white jury deadlocked 8-4 in its deliberation of the case.

Hendrick said later Beckwith's case would be continued until the May term of court. This is automatic in the case of criminal cases.

Within 30 minutes of the decision, bond for the 43-year-old white fertilizer salesman was set at $10,000. Defense attorney Hardy Lott said he did not know when the bond would be posted with the Hinds County sherriff.

District Attorney William Waller said he would not oppose the release of Beckwith, who has been jailed since his arrest last June.

The 12 white men had deliberated 10 hours since receiving the case Thursday. In Beckwith's first trial the jury stayed out eleven hours and one minute.

There is nothing in Mississippi law to prevent the 43-year-old Beckwith member of an old-line Southern family, from being tried a third time on the same charges, but there was speculation prior to the verdict that if another mistrial was declared the entire case might be dropped in the inactive file.

The verdict was returned at 11:35 a.m. CST and two hours later Beckwith was set free and was rushed from the jail in a car driven by Sheriff Fred Pickett.

HAYWOOD WINS FOURTH

Willard's Hit Ends Gamecock Comeback

Speight Crosses The Plate Af ter Willard's Winning Single

By LARRY TARLETON

Ken Willard lined a single to center field in the last of the ninth yesterday to score Jim Speight from third with the winning run as the Tar Heels defeated South Carolina 7-6.

UNC went into the top of the ninth with what semed to be a safe three-run lead with Bill Haywood on the mound. However, the Gamecocks battled from behind for the second time and tied the game with three runs and four hits off the "Old Leaguer." After one was out in the bottom of the inning, Jim Speight reached base when third baseman Joe Tonelli's throw was high and drew the first baseman off the bag. Speight then stole second and went to third on Bill Brown's groundout to set the stage for Willard's blast.

The game was sloppily played throughout as each team tried to give it away, then decided they wanted to win it, then gave it away again. USC made seven errors in the game while Carolina committed three miscues, two in the almost fatal ninth.

The Gamecocks started the scoring in the second off starter Spence Willard. With one out, Willard gave up hits to Ronnie Lamb and Dave Corley then walked Bill LaMotte. Pitcher John Coleman scored Lamb with a long sacrifice fly to center.

The Heels came back in the fourth to tie the game when Dickie Prindle walked and scored on a sacrifice, a hit by Brown, and two hit batsmen.

The Gamecocks came right back in the fifth to take a short-lived 2-1 lead when Coleman singled sharply to left after Willard retired the first batter. Second baseman Hoke Griner was retired on an infield popup, but then Joe Tonelli singled to right to advance the runner to third. Courtesy runner Dunnie Dunlap then scored when Jack McCathern blooped a single to center.

A comedy of errors by the Rooster infield resulted in two Carolina runs in the bottom of the fifth. Dickie Fleming led off with a sharp double down the third base line. Fleming seemed to be a "dead duck" when he tried to advance to third on Spence Willard's bounder to short, but Tonelli dropped the ball. Willard was trapped off first, however, but when Fleming tried to come home catcher Dick Moseley missed the throw and Willard wound up on third. He scored when Dickie Prindle lined a shot to right field to give the Tar Hels a 3-2 lead.

The Gamecocks tied it up in the sixth on a base on balls and a double by Bill LaMotte. The game remained tied until the eighth when the Tar Heels came up with three big runs with another assist from the Gamecock infield.

Bill Brown led off the inning with a single to center. Shortstop Corley bobbled Ken Willard's double play grounder then Coleman threw wild to third on Bob Hundley's attempted sacrifice to load the bases. Ken Boykin lined a single to right which got by Dan Reeves to score all thre runenrs with Boykn gonig to third, However, Boykin was stranded as Coleman retired Black, Fleming and Haywood.

In the ninth, the Heels decided to play "giveaway." Haywood gave up consecutive singles to Lamb and Corley. Boykin misjudged LaMotte's fly to right and let it fall in for a double scoring Lamb. Pinchhitter Dunlap hit into a forceout; Hope Greiner got on on an infield single; then Dick Prindle made two consecutive errors to score the two runners.

Then in the bottom of the inning Big Ken came through.

The Tar Heels play host to Clemson's Tigers this afternoon at 2:30. Clemson tied the Heels for second last year and bring a veteran team back to Chapel Hill. Mike Bohonak, the basketball star, was the leading hitter last year and is joined by sophomore shortstop Jackie McCall who hit three home runs last week against Georgia Tech. Third baseman Ben Marsella has been the Tigers big gun this year with a .369 average and three grand slams.

Attention Golfers! Finley Is Open If You're Early

If you are among the seeming thousands of golfers who have ventured out to our own Finley Golf course and then waited for hours to tee off, you can probably hope for a change only if you get to the course earlier in the day.

After a couple of complaints were lodged with the DTH about the monomtonous waiting, a call was put in to UNC golf Coach Ed Kenney, but he could offer no hope for improvement.

"We've tried every conceivable idea," he said, "but starting times have proved unsuccessful, and the only fair way to do it seems to be for students to put their name on the list and wait their turn."

Kenney said that the course was especially busy now, "as it always is this time of yeor."

He also said that the course is closed for approximately one hour on the days when the UNC golf teams are playing at home. "Students should take note of the days when the golf team will be playing in order to avoid arriving at the course while the first tee is closed," Kenney said.

He continued that the condition of the course has improved greatly with the recent good weather.

"The playing conditions are fine," he concluded, "but to avoid a wait you'd better come early."

ROTC Unit Week Closes

This week Air Force Cadets and Navy Midshipmen have been competing in various athletic contests, as a part of the annual Military Week, sponsored by the Scabbard and Blade, an honorary organization for the two ROTC units.

The Air Force leads the competition thus far, 79½-60½, with basketball, volleyball, and physical fitness completed. Drill competition and softball will be played off today.

Military Week will be climaxed tonight by a Military Ball at the Elks Club in Durham. At this gathering the athletic winners will receive their trophy. Navy won it last year, but the Air Force seems determined to win it back.

A queen will also be selected for the ball, and will be chosen from the dates of cadets or midshipmen. Those chosen will enter through a sabre arch and will be chosen by the Scabbard and Blade.

Former Actor's Son Goes Own Way With NC Javelin

By BOB QUINCY

Pat Tone, whose famous father—Franchot—recently completed a foreign film titled, "The Good Soup," is regarded on the UNC campus as a lad with a good soup bone.

Young Tone's strong right arm is his trademark. As a sophomore, he has tossed the javelin 187 feet. Before he graduates, Pat should be in the 200-feet plateau, the upper-class of javelin students.

"Pat is strong and works hard," comments Coach Joe Hiltco. "Nick Street is our best man in the javelin at the moment, but Pat, as a sophomore, is ahead of Nick's progress."

Pat and his actor dad spent several weeks together here recently. Franchot was doing special work in television at the University station. He and his son are quite close and spent many hours enjoying the good life.

The Tones have a track background, and it began at the same institution. Both attended the Hill School in New Jersey. Papa Franchot was a manager of the track team in his time. Pat excelled in weights and dashes.

"I chose Chapel Hill because a number of my classmates wanted to come south," said Pat. "Dad had gone to Cornell. But he is a very good friend of Paul Green, the playwright, who lives near the Carolina campus. They have worked together on many projects."

Pat isn't a carbon copy of his father. The young man is blond thatched and much larger. Pat's mother is Jean Wallace the actress. She now is married to actor Cornell Wilde.

"It was while visiting my mother that I became interested in the javelin," revealed Pat. "She lives near the UCLA campus, so I had occasion to watch Raefer Johnson during his peak. I was tremendously impressed."

Pat, good-looking enough to catch the eye of a talent scout, admits he may try an acting career. He has appeared in several productions of the Playmakers on campus and there is no doubt he has promise.

If Sol Levine, the producer of spectaculars, is looking for another muscleman, he might offer Pat a screen test. Give young Tone a spear and he'll outdistance Hercules.

Chowan, USC Fall To Frosh Trackmen

UNC's freshman track team scored a double victory Friday over South Carolina and Chowan. The scoring against USC was on the basis of firsts, which the Tar Babies captured by a 9-8 score, and the Chowan sector was on the basis of the normal track scoring, which was won by a wider margin, 111-28.

Hoppy Ancarrow and Bo Wood set UNC Frosh records in the hop, step, and jump, and the discuss, respectively. Ancarrow jumped 43'1", while Wood's record toss was 150'6½". Wood's efforts were in vain, however, against S. Carolina, for the Gamecocks' Tommy Swartz beat him by nine feet.

Johnny Johnson and Jon Levin were each double winners for the Tar Babies. Johnson captured both the broad jump and the pole vault, while Levin won the 100 and 220 sprints. Drummond Bell easily won the two-mile run for the last individual victory. The winning margin over USC was provided by the mile relay team of basketball star Ian Morrison, Ed Daw, Jon Levin, and Dave Kurth, who ran out an impressive 3:22.4.

Controversy Busts Open UNC Mock Convention

MAN-ON-THE-STREET

By DENNIS SANDERS

What do you like and dislike most about Chapel Hill and UNC?

A number of students, merchants and local residents were queried on this topic on Franklin Street yesterday, and they came up with some interesting answers.

Prevalent among the dislikes were the General College, lack of contact between student and instructor and the attitude of some Chapel Hill residents and merchants toward the students.

Arthur Hays, senior from Franklin: "I don't like the attitudes a lot of merchants have toward students and the high prices they charge. They have a monopoly on business. I do, though, like the casual atmosphere."

Otto Reigh, sophomore from Charlotte: "Most of the required courses in the General College are a waste, and there aren't enough girls on campus. I guess I enjoy springtime more than anything else."

Paul Russell, freshman from York, Pa.: "There are too many segregated establishments here, and there is almost no contact between instructors and students. The people here are nice, though, and the campus itself and the educational facilities here are very good."

Ken Hiller, grad student: "I can't think of anything that I particularly dislike. I like the conditions and facilities for grad students, especially the Chemistry department."

Beaufort Lancaster, freshman from Spindale: "The lack of availability of the teachers bothers me more than anything else. You can't find them when you need to talk to them. I don't like the impersonality of the freshman advisers, either. You're just a number here to them. I like the liberal atmosphere here, and the exposure to the political extremes, one way or another. There's a wide cross-section of students here, too, and I like that."

A sophomore from Littleton "I dislike what I would call the 'corrupt' administration. That may be the wrong way to describe it, but it seems to me that they're nothing but a bunch of money-grabbers. I enjoy the casual, friendly atmosphere."

Senior married couple: "We can't stand the Daily Tar Heel. It's a waste of time, and frankly I'm glad it isn't delivered to our apartment. The spring weather is enjoyable, though."

Doug Lester, junior from Greensboro: "The big classes and the General College are the worst things at UNC. And, being a BA major, I find it hard to get a good job in such a small town as this. The town is good for college environment, I think, and all-around, the University is well-rounded both socially and academically."

Senior coed from Asheville: "I can't stand professors who use graders to grade their quizzes. I have one prof who told us to write two or three sentences on an ID question, and I did. But when I got my paper back, the grader marked me down for not being complete. See what I mean? There aren't enough parking spaces in town either, and I don't like the large classes. I do like the small-town atmosphere, though."

Negro freshman from Chapel Hill: "The state of human and race relations here is good, I think, especially when it's compared with other towns in the state. The courses required in the General College is another story."

These are a few opinions from those who live and attend school here on Chapel Hill as a town and on Chapel Hill and its major industry—the University of North Carolina.

Dr. Speers Given Child Psychosis Research Grant

By DON ENGVALL

Dr. Rex Speers, director of child psychology at the North Carolina Memorial Hospital, recently received $50,793 for his research in new treatment methods of childhood psychosis.

Dr. Speers has received grants over the past three years totaling approximately $160,000.

A child who may be slow to talk and walk is often diagnosed as mentally retarded. Actually, as research shows, he may be emotionally disturbed.

But even after diagnosis, treatment of such children has always posed a problem to psychiatrists because of the great amount of time necessary for treatment and correction.

Four years ago, Dr. Speers developed a plan of treating these children in groups. Since the initiation of the project, 15 children have been successfully treated, several times the number a single psychiatrist could have treated in a lifetime.

The typical psychotic child prior to treatment is mute, and unable to communicate with parents or other children. Furthermore, he is acutely anxious when separated from his mother and unusually sensitive to light, touch and sound.

These children are not different mentally or physically from normal children, but their strange behavior sets them apart. For example, when a psychotic child feels a need for his mother, he may drag one leg, take off his shoes and socks, or slap his face.

The causes of childhood psychosis are clearly understood at this time. Study has suggested heredity may be an important factor. Undetected congenital defects of the brain and nervous system is another possibility. Other studies indicate psychological behavior of the mother may be a factor.

"Our job is to constantly confront them with reality so we can alter the mistaken ideas about themselves and the external world," says Dr. Speers.

One of the main features of his treatment is the small, box-like

Two In J-School Repeat In Contest

For the second consecutive month, Mickey Blackwell and Jim Clotfelter, students in the UNC School of Journalism, won national recognition from the William Randolph Hearst Foundation for excellence in reporting.

Blackwell, a senior from Gastonia, ranked eighth nationally in the March investigative-interpretative writing competition, winning $100 for his series entitled "A Look at Local Rebellion." Clotfelter also was awarded $100 for his study in the Durham Morning Herald on various people involved in area civil rights sitins and the reasons for their participation.

A junior from Atlanta, Ga., Clotfelter won an 18th place award last month for spot news reporting, while Blackwell picked up another $100 for an eighth place finish in the same category.

Blackwell, the associate editor of the DTH, has served as reporter and news editor for the UNC daily. He has worked with the Charlotte Observer and radio station WCHL. Currently, Blackwell is area correspondent for the Raleigh Times, the Observer and several radio stations.

Clotfelter, a staff writer for the Herald, was co-editor of the DTH in 1962-63. He has also worked for the Atlatna Journal.

Blackwell and Clotfelter are the third UNC journalism students to receive double awards from the Hearst Foundation. Last fall, Curry Kirkpatrick won $1,150 from the foundation for superior writing. He received a first-place award in the general news writing category and a third-place award for editorial writing.

Republicans March Out Friday Night

By FRED SEELY
And JEFF DICK

Charges and counter-charges filled the air yesterday after a walkout by the GOP in the Mock Political Convention Friday.

The Republicans, charging "railroad" tactics, marched out of the Woollen Gym convention in protest of methods employed by Convention Chairman Buddy Schiff. Led by Charles Hooks, chairman of the Young Republican Club, some 50 delegates left the gym.

Hooks charged this morning, in a statement mimeographed and distributed throughout the campus, that the leadership of the Mock Convention had violated procedure on at least six occasions. He called upon Republicans to boycott the meeting last night and attend a GOP gathering in Gerrard Hall. The flyer said Joseph W. Harrison of the Republican National Committee would address the meeting.

Later in the day, Dave Sheps, co-chairman of the YM-YWCA Public Affairs Committee, sponsor of the event, said that legal action would be contemplated unless Harrison spoke at the Mock Convention.

Most observers felt Hooks' walkout was a political move.

"He saw he was beaten in the convention", one said, "and he did the best thing he could for his party—he left."

Hooks based his walkout mainly on procedures in the convention. The major controversy arose when Schiff asked for a motion to dispense with the reading of each party's platform in order to speed up the session.

He made this request after the body had finished considering the first plank of the platform—Foreign Policy.

Schiff said yesterday that it took some 55 minutes to complete this section, and "we could not have completed the pending business in time if we did not figure some way to speed things up."

"Besides, everyone had a copy of both platforms, and there was really no need to bother with reading them."

Hooks said he had difficulty in obtaining a Democratic platform, and he "saw quite a few without them."

Convention leaders said all platforms were passed out at the door, and "if people didn't have them it was their own fault."

BULLETIN

The Republican delegation which walked out of the Mock Convention Friday night will "make every effort to negotiate with the Democratic delegation in an effort to straighten out the controversy which has arisen."

Charles Hooks, head of the walkout, said last night that "every effort would be made to get the Convention back to normal and insure a good exercise into the political realities of today."

Hooks also attacked the Credentials Committee of the Convention for not having held a meeting.

Committee chairman John Angell said yesterday he saw no need to hold a meeting because "everything was in order."

Hooks also charged that Carr Hall's delegation had never been approved. Carr, he said, was not on the original list of delegations and, no one had interviewed for the post of delegation chairman.

"When I saw Lane Brown leading a delegation, I was surprised, to say the least," commented Hooks.

Brown is chairman of the Young Democratic Club and a resident of Carr Hall. He is a law student.

"Another reason for the walkout came when the convention, and especially the chairman, refused to consider our preamble for the convention's platform," said Hooks. "I've never heard of a platform without a preamble, and the Democrats had not prepared one."

Schiff said yesterday there was no rule which said a preamble was needed.

The convention finally adjourned at 1:30 p.m., after passing a platform almost identical to the one submitted by the Democrats.

"If the Republicans had stayed, there is no question but that the platform would have been changed substantially," said Angell. "The vote on my amendment to delete the Public Accommodations and Fair Employment Practices Commission sections from the bill was defeated 19-13, and the additional Republicans, who had adopted a conservative platform, would have been enough to change the vote."

"Hooks didn't object to anything until he saw he was beaten," said Schiff. "Then he tried to bring up everything he could find, including the rules of the convention, which had been passed unanimously."

Albin, Famed 1st Violinist, Plays Tonight

The first violinist of the Augusta String Quartet will present a petite musicale tonight at 8 p.m. in Graham Memorial Lounge on the UNC campus.

A student at the Academy of Music in Berlin, Germany, Albin was director and conductor of the Symphonie-Orchestra of Freiberg from 1943 to 1947. He gave violin recitals in Germany, Spain, Netherlands, France, Mexico, and the United States. In 1950 he left the Russian Occupation Zone of Germany.

"He commands a highly developed technique and his bowing is under complete control, producing a large variation of dynamic expressions." He plays an original Guanerius violin.

Tonight's program will be: Antonin Dvorak: Sonatina, op. 100; Harold Genzmer: Sonata No. 1; intermission; Robert Schumann: Sonata op. 105.

NCC Instructor Talks At Gerrard

Max Drake, sociology instructor at N.C.C. will talk on "Sociological Implications of the Nuclear Age" in the second of a series of lectures and discussions this afternoon at 3 o'clock in Gerrard Hall.

Other topics to be considered in the coming weeks include "Political Realities of the Nuclear Age" and "Potential Alternatives to the Nuclear Cold War."

Will Draft End In 1974? LBJ Wants It Considered

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Johnson disclosed Saturday he has ordered a a broadscale study of the Selective Service System in the hope that the draft might be ended within the next 10 years.

He announced the study at an impromptu news conference—the second meeting he has had with newsmen in the last three days.

He said the "very comprehensive study" was aimed at the possibility of filling military manpower needs on an entirely voluntary basis in the next decade.

He was asked if the move envisioned a possible reduction of the armed services. The President said he did not want to predict the future but added that everyone hoped a workable disarmament plan can be reached with the Soviet Union.

If it is, Johnson said, some of the money now being spent on military preparedness could be shifted to humanitarian purposes.

The Selective Service system was instituted in 1940 before the entry of the United States into World War II. It was retained on a peacetime basis in 1948. The present law extends the draft until July 1, 1967.

During the World War II draft, a total of 10,022,367 men were summoned.

Since resuming in November 1948, the number of inductees through next month total 2,958-450.

The highest monthly call in the peacetime draft was for 80,-000 in March and April of 1951. Recent draft call have been running about 12,000 a month.

The President told newsmen: "This study will consider alternatives to the present draft selection system, including the possibility of meeting our requirements on an entirely voluntary basis in the next decade.

"It is clear that at the present time the obligation for military service is essential for meeting our military strengthen requirements," the President said.

But he added that "the present law has been in effect for more than 15 years and a very comprehensive study of the system is now indicated."

Gubernatorial Candidate L. Richardson Preyer will speak Tuesday night at an Orange County YDC rally on the University campus.

Judge Preyer's district coordinator, William Caffery of Greensboro, said Judge Preyer would speak at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall. The public is invited.

The speech will follow a Dutch treat dinner in Lenoir Hall at 6:30, arranged by the three Orange County Preyer campaign managers, Dr. Kemp Jones, Robert Satterfield of Hillsboro, and Mrs. James Prothro. Price of the dinner will start at 40 cents.

Special guests at the dinner and rally will be Orange YDC president Robert Cooper, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Durham, John Umstead, campus YDC president Lane Brown, Orange County Democratic Women president Mrs. H. R. Laws, and UNC Preyer coordinators Dick Ellis, Cydne Wright, Bill King, and Rob Glenn.

CO-EDITOR INJURED

A bumblebee flew under Stevens' shirt and his car hit a shoulder on the side of the road and overturned. He suffered lacerations of the left arm.

"I was scared as hell," he said.

STAFF WIVES TO MEET

The House Staff Wives will meet Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge of Morehead Planetarium. Refreshments will be followed by the scheduled program in the planetarium at 8:15, "Milky Way and Beyond." Election of officers will take place after the program.

Jonas, Church Give Speeches

Senator Frank Church (D-Idaho) and Representative Charles Jonas (R-N.C.) gave political addresses during the Friday evening session of the Mock Political Convention at Woollen Gym.

Assistant Postmaster General Richard Murphy spoke last night to the Democrats, who met in the regular convention Saturday night. As personnel director of the postal department, Murphy supervises the hiring, training, promotion and labor relations within the Post Office Department.

Also last night, Joseph W. Harrison, Associate Director of Research for the Republican National Committee, spoke to Young Republicans, who had walked out of the Bi-partisan Mock Convention during the Friday evening session.

During the Friday session, Church gave what amounted to a political oration. He began by criticizing the Eisenhower years and concluded with praise for the Johnson Administration.

Congressman Jonas countered that the Eisenhower years consisted of "a period of peace and prosperity unprecedented in the history of the United States." The North Carolina Senior Republican Congressman charged that for each of the 129 nations in the world, the Johnson Administration was using a different foreign policy.

"You may not have liked the Eisenhower foreign policy but it was unified and you knew what it was."

Senator Church applauded the Kennedy Administration as having made "one of the greatest steps ever taken by mankind," in reference to the recent nuclear pact agreement."

Both Jonas and Church were accepted by enthusiastic campus Republican and Democratic groups. Church was escorted into the convention hall following at 10-foot banner which read: "UNC Democrats Welcome Sen. Church."

Jonas was given a demonstration which lasted several minutes. Student Republicans paraded the aisles with banners reading "Welcome Mr. North Carolina Republican" and "Welcome Congressman Jonas."

Jonas attacked President Johnson's equivocating stands on Civil Rights. He said, "In 1960, Johnson campaigned on a platform supporting segregation while at the same time running on a national platform which advocated integration."

The North Carolina congressman said Gen. Curtis LeMay's reappointment by President Johnson as chief of staff of the Air Force was designed "to keep him quiet during the current campaign." It was Gen. LeMay who recently admitted the Russians were gaining on the United States in military armaments.

A Mock Convention Takes Itself Seriously

Back in October, when Kriss Waterman and David Sheps first told us of the Mock Convention, we were impressed. They started planning the Big Show in September, and last week were quite confident as to its success.

And now it is in total chaos.

We didn't attend Friday night's session, so we have had to rely on others to fill us in on the details. And as far as we can see, we know just about as much now as we did a week ago.

The freedom of thought that reigns at Carolina (Speaker Ban notwithstanding) gives rise to many factions, and all seem to have met in Woollen Gym during the past few days. The Steering Committee of the Convention, headed by Miss Waterman and Sheps, has bent over backwards to make this affair completely bi-partisan, and many took advantage of them.

The GOP walkout is by no means the only bit of fishiness involved. The selection of Chairman Buddy Schiff is also a bit suspect, although we are sure Schiff has had only good intentions throughout the procedure.

The handling of the delegation from Carr Hall, a Democrat stronghold, was very suspicious.

And the statements of just about everybody involved were so opposite that we have no idea who is right.

A partisan convention such as this breeds partisan thoughts. In the heat of the moment, there are only two sides —Democrat or Republican—no matter whether your Democrat is Sam Ervin or Bobby Kennedy, or your Republican is Jacob Javits or Barry Goldwater. The great part of the convention, we suspect, was of conservative bent, yet after the GOP walkout had weakened that voting power a Civil Rights Bill including Public Accommodations and FEPC sections was passed. It certainly would have failed otherwise.

The turnabout made by Charles Hooks last night in attempting to negotiate with the Democrats in an effort to save the convention may have succeeded. We earnestly hope so, for the sake of the campus as well as those who put in many long hours in order to hold the event.

But the die is cast, and there is no telling what may happen in similar situations in the future.

We have heard the expression, "The only thing wrong with that man is that he takes himself seriously." This may be the case here. Instead of making the Mock Convention an experience which all can enjoy and from which all can benefit, it has been turned into a power struggle for the sole purpose of vanity.

It does not matter if the delegates to the convention nominate Johnson, or Lodge or Goldwater or even Ross Barnett. It will make no difference two days from now, and certainly will make no difference a year from now.

But it does make a difference to the 450 students not in the power elite who sat through the thing and have little to show for it, other than having seen petty people do petty things in a petty manner.

Perhaps we can all learn a lesson from the events of the past few days.

Actors Needed For A Really Big Show

The stage is set, the spotlights have been turned on, and in the Graham Memorial wings four new directors wait anxiously for the old crew to clear the stage so that the new production of Student Government 1964 may begin. As always, the production is scheduled to run for one year, to create some fanfare and some dissent, but mostly to turn campaign promises and ideas into action. The new directors, we are sad to admit, may be faced with disappointment. The actors seem to be on strike.

The situation is not new. For years, a big audience (including an unusually large number of critics) has been on hand to view SG's production. Most of them have been more than content to settle comfortably in their seats and watch the show, doing little more than occasionally hurling a verbal tomato or two. The problem is that the same persons who compose the audience are often asked to leave their seats and join in the show, and they are terribly reluctant.

We will be among the first to admit the show has sometimes left a lot to be desired, but the many occasions when it has received rave reviews have chiefly resulted from the willingness of former spectators to leave their seats and turn in Oscar-winning performances —even in bit parts. Next week, all of us will have an opportunity to sign up for next year's cast. We can't all be directors, but we can try out for a role. If you have frequently found yourself to be a critical member of the audience in the past, give serious thought to joining the troupe. You are likely to find that there IS something to Student Government, that there ARE people on this campus other than those next door, and that you CAN help. Besides, the show will be better, too.

Nagging Headaches Of Discrimination

By HARRY GOLDEN
In The Carolina Israelite

The biggest headache the news room, the publisher's office, and the copy desk suffers on a Southern newspaper is when, through some misadvertance or negligence an obituary notice refers to a white man as a Negro.

Some of the papers used to hire a special copy reader, usually an elderly gent who had done his bit on the other beats, and before he retired spent a few years going through the bull dog edition deleting the word "Mister" if it appeared before the name of a Negro, making sure that no names of a Negro and a white appeared on the same line unless both were involved in the commission of a crime, and checking the color and ancestry of everyone who died yesterday.

They still exercise this great care up in Newport News, one of the birthplaces of our country. They have lots of trouble these days with the teenage page.

Recently, the first Negro admitted to the previously all-white school was elected Treasurer of his class. The reporter was duly concerned about the story. Following the rules, she would have to write "Jimmy Brown, Negro, was elected Treasurer of the 8th grade." So this reporter took the easy way out. She reported, "Jimmy Brown, brown, was elected Treasurer of the 8th grade."

In the first hour, there were 99 protesting phone calls.

Letters To The Editors

Honor, Nurse, A Friend

Statute Of Limits For Honor Code

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I would like to propose that a statute of limitations be enacted into our Honor and Campus Codes.

Imagine yourself five years from now. You are a junior executive and walk into your office one morning, and a letter is on your desk requesting that you appear before the Men's Honor Council at Carolina. Or suppose you are a senior and one of your classmates decides to present evidence that you cheated on a particular test your freshman year. Fellow students, consider yourself in this situation. Under our present Honor System, we don't have a statute of limitations and a student at Carolina is liable to be tried by a council at any time for any offense.

Such a system of government is contrary to our society, relative to state and Federal laws, and it seems to me that it is not in harmony with the rights of the accused as guaranteed in the Constitution. What validity is there in trying a person on charges which are several years old? Should we not consider the rights of the accused, who are frequently found innocent, or are we determined to punish the guilty at all costs?

It seems only fair to me that if a student is going to accuse a fellow student of cheating, stealing, lying, etc., that he should present his evidence to the proper authorities within a specified period of time. Under our present system, a student can withhold evidence as blackmail, or for any other purpose, for weeks, months, or years.

You may ask whether there have been cases where a statute of limitations would have been in effect. The answer is "yes." I refer to two cases in which the investigation was not even begun until at least four months after the alleged offense. Who knows, you may be the next case.

I am thoroughly convinced that this matter needs serious consideration by our Student Government, Study Body and the Faculty. Surely Carolina students will admit that justice delayed is justice denied.

Patriotism Stirs Bynum-Parsons

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I feel it my patriotic duty to make it known that in Raleigh may be purchased a hand-crafted model of the presidential caisson and bier used in the funeral of our late president. The model is composed of seven horses, the caisson, and a flag-draper coffin. There are six white horses drawing the bier and a solitary black gelding (assuming that the horse is as accurately done as the rest of the replica) with reversed black boots.

Although the horses are plastic and obviously not made by the modeller himself this detracts nothing from the sentimental value of this memorial. The caisson is very carefully constructed of wood and brass. The obvious hand-craftsmanship lends an even greater sense of poignancy to an already very moving physical trbiute.

The model is made by hand by hand by a native workman in Willow Springs and may be ordered from a Raleigh variety store for a price of approximately $25.

'News' Answers On Nathaniel

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

The Daily Tar Heel's solicitude for Mr. Nathaniel's dignity and for the truth about the Easter Sunday incident at Cone Hospital are commendable. I share both. But as one who bears considerable responsibility for the Daily News having printed the duty nurse's version of the incident, in a letter to the editor, I must offer a few comments on your editorial of April 12, "Making A Tragic Situation Worse."

First of all, to resolve a rather technical question, it is the policy of the Greensboro Daily News to afford space to all authentic letters that offend neither the libel laws nor a conception of decency which is necessarily a matter of editorial judgment. That policy applies not only to the expression of ideas, but to accounts of "facts" which may or may not accord with the observations of others and certainly do not always accord with our own. If, let us say, the editos of the Daily Tar Heel wrote a letter alleging that the Old Well had run dry or that Chancellor Aycock wears too many bow ties, we would feel no editorial obligation to journey to Chapel Hill to test its veracity. Our assumption—which is usually borne out—is that errors of "fact" will shortly be countered by other letter-writers. Such "truth" as is to be found is rarely put to flight by letting the winds of doctrine blow from all directions.

The Daily Tar Heel is of the opinion, I gather, that the Daily News "erred" in printing the nurse's account, "inasmuch as the reader is entitled to know if he was deliberately misled by previous accounts of the incident." The Daily Tar Heel's assumptions, in bringing this indictment against us, argue both a gross underestimation of the frequently subjective nature of "fact" and a gross overestimation of the capacity of the Daily News to discover truth.

If the editors of the Daily Tar Heel have devised an infallible method of arbitrating between conflicting views of a disputed incident in which the "truth" is limited by fallible human observation, then I am certain that the world's historians and lawyers, not to speak of its reporters and editors, would like to know of it.

Lacking that infallible method, I would make one observation merely for the sake of logic-chopping. If one were taking a Martian's view of the conflicting testimony regarding the Cone Hospital incident—that is to say, one from which all human emotions were expunged—he could quite reasonably credit the nurse's testimony over Mr. Nathaniel's. For if Mr. Nathaniel were seriously injured by the errant cricket ball—perhaps even suffering from mild shock—he would be less likely to recall the exact train of events than a trained nurse presumably accustomed to the sight of gore and injury. And if he were not seriously injured, that in itself would tend to sustain the nurse's decision to adhere to a hospital policy which we all abhor.

Of course I am far from saying whose account is correct, or indeed from saying that either account is capable of being strictly correct. My own observation of the power of human observation in the most placid of times, not to speak of times of duress, suggests that there may be no ascertainable "truth" about the incident. And it is all rather beside the point, anyway, since we all agree that it is an aberration of both human and medical ethics that parcels out first aid on the basis of race or color or creed.

The Daily News receives thousands of letters every year. If its editors set out to verify each one we would have little time to do aught else. And I must observe that I doubt, having once sat upon the august editorial throne in Graham Memorial while pursuing a full-time academic load, that the Daily Tar Heel is quite so scrupulous about conflicting testimony as it would like the Daily News to be.

'Strangelove' Drops Bombs But Not Among Critics

"Dr. Strangelove," or "How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb," is a movie that has one big thing working for it. That is—it doesn't ever try to con you. It is based on an assumption that seems more and more likely: that at this peaceful point in time, all of us, governments, governors, and governees—we have all flipped out.

At Burpelson Air Force Base, General Jack D. Ripper (Sterling Hayden) sends out the 34 bombers in his command on a war mission. He is persuaded that the Russians have been poisoning us—that they have been putting fluorides in our drinking water. RAF Group Captain Lionel Mandrake (Peter Sellers) tries to get Hayden to use his secret code and recall the planes. And in Washington, in the War Room, the assembled National Security Council, chaired by President Merkin Muffley (Sellers, again) must deal with the crisis; although General Buck Turgidson (George C. Scott), air chief of staff approves a first strike. In the background, at the council table, sits the hypnotic German scientist (Sellers, once again).

The bombers are recalled in time; all except one, and it completes its mission. But now, it would seem that the Russians have also relied on a secret automatic doomsday counter-weapon; and this secret, and therefore futile, deterrent is released. And to the tune of, "We'll Meet Again, Don't Know Where, Don't Know When," the screen is then filled with billowy, cushiony, mushroomy clouds. And the earth has been destroyed.

Kubrick is obviously serious. "Strangelove" may be seen as political satire, but I would ask you to see it differently. Like the man says, it's about a strange love: that wildly, welcoming, happy thing we feel as we wing our way toward extinction; our exultation as we expire; in other words, deathwish. Therefore, the argument that "Strangelove" is misleading (that the people in charge of the bomb are really not like that; or that the film makes you worry when you really don't have to; or that if you must worry, you really shouldn't worry about what "Strangelove" makes you worry about) is not to the point. And as for the people who say that the bomb isn't anything to be funny about, and that blowing ourselves up is no laughing matter, maybe so, but did you ever see that very serious film called "On the Beach;" and what did you think of that?

There are three parts to the film, each of which is kept separate from the other. On the base with Hayden, Sellers, and Keenan Wynn; in the bomber with Major King Kong (Slim Pickens) and his crew; and in the War Room. The cross-cutting between the parts generates the momentum of the film. The action within each part is generally the same, in that the source of the action resides in a contrast of characters.

On the base: Sellers' dry Englishman is foil to Hayden who delivers his lines with crazy, quiet, low-pitched intensity. Wynn, as Colonal Bat Guano, blinking in the daylight, is foil to Sellers. The action is tight, and this part works the best.

In the bomber: the interior of the plane is a jewel box of batteries, wires, and knobs. The crew, underplaying, executes the destruction of a Siberian Missile Base calmly and economically. The unheroic manner of the crew contrasts with the mock heroism of the major, who, once committed to the mission, pursues it with sentimental madness. This part of the film is the least effective because the dynamic between the major and crew does not really come off. Anyway, the bomber has the bomb; and it is all actually the least bit uncomfortable.

In the War Room: this part is the strangest of all. Sellers' Muffley is a mildly ineffective President. His foil would seem to be Scott who is at the heart of things. Scott is erratic. He is a virile burlesque of a wooly general and I think something more should have been there at the center: something propulsive, not merely obfuscatory. It wasn't there. Finally there is Strangelove, Sellers is hypnotic, glittering, dynamic, and (despite a tic which becomes a Nazi salute) desperately controlled. There is apparently no foil for Strangelove, nor is he foil to anyone else. He sits alone; in a way, untouchable, unthinkable. He gathers speed slowly and then fires rocket after rocket, turning, twitching, twisting, out of reach and touch. The idea of Sellers confronting Sellers: mad Sellers, mild Sellers, mellow Sellers—of Sellers all over the place, is a very good one. It gives the absolutely proper ubiquitous touch to the whole business of blowing ourselves up.

I think you should see "Strangelove."

Longer Hair And Wigs Are Now 'In' For Men

By HENRY McINNIS

The power of human hair to influence thinking is really astonishing! There are the Beatles, that quartet of thatched Limeys; the "old" Elvis sideburns and ducktail; John L. Lewis' bushy brows knit into a frown; Marilyn Monroe, whose kind of blond beauty sent untold millions of females to their peroxide bottle; and John F. Kennedy, whose boyish dishevelment brought glamor to politics. Yes, we live in an age when a person's looks can either lock or unlock the doors to glory.

The wig has come into fashion this season and we are told that no one need feel embarrassed to wear one. Even men now have the opportunity to improve their appearance with an acceptable and convincing hairpiece, and why shouldn't they?

Men have two strikes against them when it comes to the glories of hair. Nature gets them by passing down the poisonous genes of baldness while our society prevents the socially correct man from wearing his hair as he pleases as madame certainly wears hers as she well pleases. African lions can slouch around the jungle with flowing mane while their mates look deprived. A plumed peacock can strut around arrogantly enjoying a veritable orgy of color while his mate looks on sheepishly from the wings. And speaking of sheep, it is not difficult to see where their value lies.

We are a hair-conscious nation from the word bleach. Is it really true, as Clairoil says, that blondes have more fun? It hardly looks like fun when you see the ordeal women go through in their quest for beauty. They torture and tease their hair until you can almost hear it screaming back for mercy. A good case could be made for the utter inconsequentiality of the whole business. Nothing is more annoying than to watch a young girl constantly preening in public, softly stroking her hair as if at any moment Disaster might befall her should the pompadour take a back seat to what is inside madame's head.

Let no one disparage women's shining glory. It is truly marvelous to see a beautiful head of hair, but we have blown the significance of hair out of proportion. We judge a person's character far too much by his hair. A man feels that he has to repress an adventurous hairstyle because it is too individual. Hair creams almost always whack the strands down to the scalp in the name of neatness while madame would have a fit if the same arbitrary attitudes were leveled at her. Yes, we men are a timid lot when it comes to how we wear our hair. Thank heaven for the Kennedys, who made the tousled look fashionable in the drab and dreary world of men's fashion.

Let's have more fun with our hair instead of wearing it like a badge or a uniform and let's also stop reading too many things into a person's hairstyle. It takes a lot more intelligence to judge a person by what's underneath that dome than what's on top of it. Get the hint, ladies and gentlemen?

Leadership Should Always Be Seen

Editors, The Tar Heel,

You students always talk about the great amount of responsibility you have. Well, I'll tell you one thing—some of your leaders are revolting in public. Just the other night I saw one of them parked in front of the bus station with his girl. I mean to tell you it was disgusting.

He had some chewing gum (youngsters shouldn't chew that stuff anyway) and every time he would kiss his girl he would transfer the gum to her mouth and vice versa. Finally they strung it between their mouths. It was awful. And to top it all off there was another boy in the back seat.

Freshman Camp Baseball Game (Score Was 5-4)

Freshman Camp Dates Set

Freshman Camp which first introduces many UNC students to the "Carolina Way of Life" will be held this year from September 10-13 at Camp New Hope.

Applications are now being accepted for camp counselors. Anyone interested in applying should attend a special meeting Monday night at 7 on the second floor of Y-Court. Some 30 positions ranging from cabin counselors to athletic directors are open.

The camp is held each September just prior to the regular freshman orientation. The camp centers on informal discussions among the students and leaders.

Also several outside speakers address the camp and later lead in informal discussions. Other activities, including athletic participation, center around a freshman's life at Carolina.

Speaking about the camp, Erky Duff said, "We feel that Freshman Camp gives the new student a basis for his four year stay here.

"The companionship and fellowship at Freshman Camp is something that most of the fellows never forget. There are some life-long friendships made at Freshman Camp."

Duff said that the camp laid the frame-work for the regular orientation period, "but it gives the young man a better idea of what's going on around him in his new environment," said Duff.

"Individual thought and expression usually develops at Freshman Camp," Duff said. "This is because the new students are urged to participate in the information discussion, and most of them do."

Fall Orientation Counselors Picked

The first training session for next fall's Orientation counselos will be held Tuesday, April 21, in Gerrard Hall at 9 p.m. This will be a joint meeting of both men and woman counselors. Selected student laders will speak on academics and student government — emphasizing what the counselor should stress with his group about these two important areas.

Orientation Chairman Perry McCarty issued this statement:

"I want to say a sincere word of thanks for all those who took the time to come by for an interview. The response on the final interviewing day was simply overwhelming. Again, a hearty thank-you to those involved from the entire Orientation Committee."

Att-Gen Staff Interviews To Be Held

Positions will be filled this week for men and women's positions on the Attorney-General's Staff for next year.

There are approximately 50 positions open, but since a heavy influx of applicants has occurred in the past, interested students are advised to sign up early at the GM desk.

The staff is divided into four separate divisions, including the Men's Council, the Women's Council, the Men's Residence Council Court and the Interfraternity Council Court. Each person selected will work with one of these councils.

Each interview will take about five minutes, and will be held on the following days: Monday, 5-6 p.m.; Tuesday, 4-6; Wednesday, 4-6; Thursday, 4-6; and Friday, 4-6.

Students seeking these positions should make an appointment at the GM information desk. Then they should fill out an application form which can be picked up outside the Council Room on GM's second floor.

TO ATTEND CONFERENCE

The director of the Graham Memorial Student Union at the University, Howard Henry, will attend the annual conference of the Association of College Unions to be held at Indiana University at Bloomington, Indiana April 19-22.

Tone Kills 2 Birds With One Stone

By WILLIAM M. HARDY

"Well, I just couldn't resist an opportunity to come down to Chapel Hill and spend a pleasant week with my son, Pat."

The speaker was Franchot Tone, one of America's most distinguished actors, and the statement was in response to a query as to his presence on the UNC campus. The quick roguish smile which was so familiar to moviegoers during the 30's and 40's hinted that there was more to his presence than a family excursion.

He went on, "Of course, since I've been here, I've been wearing out the pavement between the Carolina Inn and Swain Hall, and the only chance I've had to see Pat is during meals."

The occasion of Tone's visit to Chapel Hill was his appearance as guest star in a 90-minute television show which was being produced by the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures commemorating the 400th anniversary of the birth of Shakespeare. The show, entitled "Shakespeare—A Portrait" will be shown on WUNC-TV, Chanel 4, Thursday, April 23, at 8 p.m.

Young Pat Tone is an undergraduate at the University. He is a handsome, husky boy whose interests range from acting (he has appeared in several Playmaker productions) to athletics (he is currently a member of the Carolina track squad specializing in the javelin).

Earlier this year, Dr. Wesley Wallace, Chairman of the Department, contacted Franchot Tone about the possbility of his participating in the Shakespeare show. He accepted, and this past week the show was being taped in the new studios of the department. Appearing with Tone are British actor and actress, Eric Salmon, a visiting lecturer at the University, and Janet Crowder. The show was directed by D. John S. Clayton.

Tone's reaction to the University and the television facilities was very enthusiastic. He expressed himself as being impressed by the high quality of the RTVMP students who made up the entire production crew for the show.

He is an actor who has an obvious love for his work. Asked how he became an actor, he grinned and said that it was "just one of those things that happened."

"I was exposed to the old silent movies," he explained, "and I also had the opportunity of seeing a number of stage plays. After I would see a picture or a play, I used to go home and stand in front of a mirror and act out scenes for myself."

His career has spanned almost forty years and includes work on the stage, in motion pictures and in television. During the 30's and 40's, he was one of Hollywood's most popular leading men. Before going to Hollywood, he was a member of the famous Group Theatre which included such great names as Elia Kazan, Luther Adler, and the late John Garfield. In recent years, he has made his home in New York, although he continues to make an occasional film. He will be remembered for his portrayal of the President in "Advise and Consent." He is a member of the Actors Studio Theatre, and, immediately following his departure from Chapel Hill, he is reporting for rehearsals in a forthcoming production of this group.

Asked about his preference of media as an actor, he shrugged and said, "There isn't any real preference. Nowadays, an actor works in all the media. There are differences, of course. The stage actor must act with his whole body because the audience always sees him that way. In films and, to a large extent in television, the acting is in his eyes."

The call was out for the actors to stand by for a final dress rehearsal of "Shakespeare — A Portrait," and Tone excused himself. A final question had to do with the possibility of Pat's becoming an actor.

"Who knows?" he smiled. "He seems to have the bug, but he may come to his senses."

There was something about the way he said it that hinted he would not be sorry to see his son go the same route of the father. After all, by his own admission, he has found a full and complete life in acting, and he went out for the final rehearsal with an air of confidence and satisfaction which indicated he was doing the thing he loved best.

During the treatment, Dr. Speers and his assistants do not respond to the children's abnormal behavior requests, but instead encourage the children to conform to normal means of communication when they need assistance or attention.

"By our failure to respond to the bizarre communication, and only responding to more normal behavior requests," says Dr. Speers, "the child learns more acceptable behavior patterns."

Willard Gets Chance: Tigers Fall

By PETE GAMMONS

Ken Willard commented in the sixth inning that he had come up every time as a leadoff batter, and he seemed less than pleased about it.

But in the bottom of the seventh he finally got his chance with men on base: the score tied, the bases loaded, and two out. He promptly rifled a single between third and short for the winning runs, and finally gave UNC a victory over Clemson.

Upset in football, and knocked off twice in basketball, the Tar Heels had been hexed all year by the Tigers. But strong pitching by lefty Jerry Davis, and clutch hitting by Willard and Jim Speight produced the long-awaited win.

Carolina scored first in the bottom of the third when Dickie Fleming walked, was sacrificed to second by Davis, moved to third on Dickie Prindle's Texas leaguer to right, and scored on a wild pitch by Tiger lefty Tommy Chapman. However from then on until the seventh, the Tar Heel bats were held silent by Chapman.

Clemson tied the score in the fourth on a line drive homer by George Sutton. Sutton, considered a tremendous football prospect, hit the ball on a line over Willard's head in left and it cleared the fence by about five feet. They forged ahead in the fifth due to some shoddy Carolina fielding. Ronnie Moore tapped an easy grounder to Bill Brown five feet inside the line, who let it go through his legs into right field, and by the time right fielder Ken Boykin could get to it, Moore had reached second. Moore held at second while catcher Stan Ayers hit a high hopper back to the mound which resulted in a hit. The ball took an extremely high bounce, and when Davis finally got to it, Brown had wandered off the bag. After a sacrifice by Chapman, Benny Marsella was then walked intentionally, and Lawton Cowert lined to sharp single into the hole to left, but Ken Willard's throw only allowed Moore to score, and forced Ayers to pull up at third. Davis worked his way out of the jam by striking out Bud Nixon and forcing Tommy Pack to bounce into a force play.

Chapman had breezed along until the seventh, but with the traditional stretch, the roof fell in. With two outs, Bill Haywood pinch hit for Davis and lined a sharp drive past shortstop Jack McCall into left center and stretched it into a double. Bill Taylor ran for Haywood. After a walk to Prindle, Jimmy Speight lined a single into left scoring Taylor, and on the throw to the plate, he and Prindle moved to second and third. Bill Brown then had the courage to look at a 2-2 breaking pitch that Clemson thought was a strike and was all but at the water fountain, but luckily the umpire disagreed. Brown took the next pitch for a base on balls. That brought coach Bill Wilhelm to the mound, contemplating whether to relieve the lefthander with a curveballing righty. But, after long deliberation, he left Chapman in. He erred. Willard lined the second pitch cleanly into left scoring both runs, giving UNC a 4-2 lead. Bob Lowell then got his chance and retired Bob Hundley for the third out. Carolina threatened again in the eighth on singles by Gary Black and Fleming, but Lowell got out of the jam.

Clemson added a run in the top of the eighth on a single by Sutton, but Haywood retired the side in order in the ninth to preserve Davis's first win of the year.

Davis was sharp in the seven innings he pitched, allowing only four hits and one earned run. This gives coach Walter Rabb some relief in his search for another starter, especially since Clemson is feared as a hitting club: 23 home runs, and five batters over .300. Gary Black bounced out of his slump with two hits, while Dickie Prindle upped his average to .300, the same as Willard's. Probably the most noticeable player on the field was Jim Speight, however, who handled nine chances without an error, and contributed the hit that kept the big rally going.

The next game is Tuesday at Duke, but Rabb hasn't indicated yet whom he will start.

Terps Run Away From Tar Heels

By BILL LEE

Well, what can you say but that Maryland was here for a track meet, and most anybody can take it from there. As expected they went back to College Park yesterday on the long end of a 97-48 score.

In picking up the victory, the Terps won twelve first places as compared to Carolina's five. Coach Joe Hilton commented, "Well, we really didn't expect it to be this bad." One blow to the Tar Heel thinclads was that Art Maillet's knee has not yet healed enough for him to run his best. As a result, Maryland won the first two places over third place Maillett, who had previously topped them all in the indoor championships.

Hilton praised the perfomances of several of the boys. Nick Street lived up to expectations in the javelin with a throw of 204' 1", and Tommy Clark won the high jump at 6' 40". Dale White took firsts in both the 100 and 220 yard dash, winning the first in a school record tying time of 9.6 and the latter in 21.3 seconds. Bill Graham threw the best putt of his career in the shotput. He heaved it over 54 feet but didn't place as Maryland's top was 58 feet.

UNC's 440 yard relay team also ran off with first place with a 42.7 time. Making up the team were Al Dobritch, Adger Stokes, John McNinch, and Dale White, who took advantage of a Maryland disqualification.

Tom Krueger came out a double winner in the meet, gaining firsts in both the mile and two-mile runs. His time for the mile was 4:27.5 and for the two-mile, 9:34.9. Mike Cole was also a double winner, topping the broad jump and the hop-step-jump. He won the former at 22' 10" and the latter at 44' 3¼"

Taking other firsts for Maryland were Walt Samora in the shot put, Steve Lamb in the 440, Tom Finley in the high hurdles, Ramsey Thomas in the half, Ed Bennet in the pole-vault, and Ed Bury in the intermediate hurdles.

Giardello Wins Fri. Night Bout Over Argentinan

CLEVELAND, Ohio (UPI) — Middleweight champion Joe Giardello, returning to action after a long layoff, received a scare Friday night but rallied to earn a split decision over unranked but fast rising Rocky Rivero of Argentina.

Giardello, idle since December 7, when he took the championship from Dick Tiger, looked sharp the first two rounds but then began to show the effects of his inactivity. He suffered a cut over his right eye in the sixth round and back pedaled most of the way from then on.

Referee Tony Branch and judge Bill Thomson scored the non-title, nationally - televised fight, 46-45, in favor of Giardello while judge Charley Bill gave Rivero the edge, 46-45.

UNC Invaded

Four members of last year's New England Lacrosse champions are now playing for this year's UNC freshman team.

Deerfield Academy, in Deerfield, Mass., has placed Bob Morrison, Jake Hubbard, Tim Balch, and Sandy Reider on the Tar Babies. Morrison was an All-New England chioce in leading Deerfield to an undefeated season. Hubbard, son of the coach there, was an honorable mention choice. Balch was captain, while Reider also started. All are starters on this year's team, with Hubbard captain for the first game.

True Failure— That's Cassius

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Cassius Slay, by his own admission "the greatest," was classed by the Army Saturday a "true failure" not up to minimum mental standards for draftees.

Army Secretary Stephen Ailes, in a letter to chairman Carl Vinson of the House Armed Services Committee, said the new heavyweight champion, tested both before and after the Feb. 25 fight in which he toppled favored Sonny Liston in Miami Beach, passed physical tests but flunked on the mentals.

Ailes said that three psychologists, including the Army's senior men in this field, supervised the tests and satisfied themselves Clay "was a true failure" arther than a malingerer — in other words that he was doing his best on the standard Army mental exams and the special psychological tests he got in addition.

Furr, Simmons Lead Wrestlers

Ken Furr of Albemarle and Russell Simmons of Rockwood, Tenn., have been named co-captains for next season's wrestling team.

The announcement, made by Coach Sam Barnes, followed the annual team banquet, at which time ballots were cast. The Tar Heel wrestlers completed their season by finishing second in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Furr, a 130-pounder, was runner-up in his competition in the ACC tournament. Simmons placed fourth in the meet in the 137-pound division. Both are rising seniors and two-year lettermen.

Joseph J. Jacobson, a 157-pounder from Pensacola, Florida, was tapped as honorary captain of the freshman team for the past season. The freshmen won seven of eight matches during the winter.

A special award went to Dick Blackmon of Whiteville. The Educational Foundation honors the most outstanding senior in each sport at the University. Blackmon, who went to the finals in the ACC competition in the 147-pound division, was presented an engraved wrist watch.

Medal Play Golf Lead Taken By Deacon Linksmen

By JOHN ISENBURG

Wake Forest enjoys a nineteen stroke lead after two days of play with a third day's competition coming up. The third and final round will be played at Finley April 27.

Wake's 513 strokes give them a two-day total of 1,039. The Tar Heels are second with 1,058, while Duke fades behind at 1,080. Carolina has only a faint hope of catching the Deacs. The linksmen from Winston-Salem seem too formidable unless knowledge of the home course can play a big part.

Ed Hoopes led the Heels in scoring with a fine 70, and was closely followed by teammates Bill Stevenson (71) and John Baldwin (73). Les Fleischer and Skip Tucker each shot 74's, while Harvey Hill and George Reams didn't fare as well, although they shot commendable rounds. With the balance showed in the scoring, coach Ed Kenney is looking forward to the ACC tourney with the hope that UNC might pull it out.

The freshmen stand third in the Big Four Medal play after one round. Wake also leads in this category with 621, followed closely by the Blue Imps with 126, and the Tar Babies with 128. N.C. State is a hopeless fourth with 682.

Steve Robbins is the leading UNC entry, with a first round 76. tSeve Coleman (77) and Lee Ball (78) are right behind him, while Stan Thompson and Pete Chanin each shot an 81. The Wake lead is certainly not out of range, and with a good day at home on Finley the 23rd, the Baby Linksmen could still win.

The Frosh will next meet Myers Park High School from Charlotte and Duke Monday at Charlotte, and will return home Tuesday against Duke.

Tar Babies Take Two From Deaclets

By BILL LEE

The UNC freshmen crashed four home runs and eight doubles among twenty hits and "Fireman" Tommy Kirkman finished up both games to lead to a double victory over the Wake Forest frosh, 9-8, and 7-5.

The win extended the frosh winning streak to five games without a loss, and Kirkman has finished every game. In the first game, he relieved "Old Man" Jimmy Dean in the sixth with none out and two on, letting the runs in but stopping the Deacs the rest of the way. Dean picked up the victory after relieving John Hubble in the third.

The Tar Babies racked Wake's best pitcher, Cecil Robinson, in the first game for 11 hits and a six-run sixth inning rally. Mick Lienau led off with a double down the right field line and scored on Tom Lampman's double to left. Lampman moved to third on a ground out and scored on a wild pitch. Mike Saintsing blasted another double to center and scored on Charlie Turner's double to right. Dallas Peoples scored Turner with a bloop single, and Lawson Baker cleared the sacks with a homer over the right-center bank for the winning margin.

Wake couldn't come up with anything much better in the next game as Lampman, Lienau, and Danny Talbott connected for homers. The Heels started off their scoring in the third inning with a one run deficit. Randy Prindle doubled and scored on Lampman's home run. Saintsing then singled to right, stole second, and scored on a double by Talbott. Talbott scored on a bad throw by the catcher on an attempted steal.

The starter, Jim Dunlap, went 3 1/3 innings, striking out six and allowing five hits. Kirkman came in in the fourth with one out and two on but escaped with giving up only a run. He hung on despite two Deacon threats in the fifth and the seventh for the victory. Both Dean and Kirkman are now 2 and 10.

The Tar Babies have proved they can hit by amassing 45 hits in their last four games boosting the team batting average to .306. The pitching is strong and evenly distributed, but no one has been able to complete a game.

Lovingood's chief problem is playing each one enough to condition him for the varsity. This has been proven by the use of 18, 19, and 21 ballplayers during a game. The frosh journey to Louisburg Monday to take on the team which they topped 7-1 Wednesday.

The Convention — It's Over

Demos Parade With Donkey Following Johnson Nomination

LBJ, Lodge Chosen By Mock Convention

The Bi-partisan Mock Presidential Convention concluded Saturday night with President Lyndon B. Johnson receiving the presidential nomination and Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge winning the vice presidential nomination.

Republicans who had walked out of the convention during debate on the platform Friday night returned for the Saturday session to capture the second spot. They marched into the convention hall behind a large Goldwater banner, with cheers and political war whoops louder than those made during their exit the previous night.

Assistant Postmater General Richard Murphy addressed the Democratic delegates Saturday, reviewing the history of the party and predicting a successful campaign for this fall.

Associate Director of Research for the Republican National Committee Joseph W. Harrison told Republican Delegates what the major issues would be in the coming campaign and also predicted victory in November.

Nominated for president were Lyndon Johnson, Barry Goldwater, Robert Kennedy and Sen. Frank Church, who had addressed the convention Friday night.

Three unsuccessful attempts were made to reconsider the Civil Rights plank of the platform which had been adopted Friday night after Republicans walked out. The original Democratic proposal was adopted after an amendment was made to delete a section which advocated giving federal authorities the power to use wire tapping and mail covers under specially controlled circumstances.

The bill in its final version included an endorsement of the Johnson Administration's Public Accommodations section of the Civil Rights proposal.

Both Republicans and Democrats were involved in the attempt to reconsider the bill.

In the vice-presidential vote, Lodge received 95 votes to 71 for Humphrey and 11 for Adali Stevenson. Senator George Smathers (D-Florida) was nominated and appeared to have strong support, but his fans switched to Humphrey when it became apparent that a united effort would be necessary to halt the sudden Republican upsurge. Lodge also won on the first ballot.

The Lodge victory was accounted for by a number of Democrats joining the Republican block. Goldwater was not nominated for the vice-presidency.

This was the first Bi-partisan Convention to be held at UNC. There was a Democratic Convention here in 1960.

Republicans said yesterday they disapprove of the bipartisan approach to a nominating convention, preferring instead a convention of the party which does not control the presidency for that term.

A spokesman for the Republicans said, "The whole idea of bipartisan politics is ridiculous, because when it comes to adopting a platform or selecting presidential and vice-presidential candidates, no one can remain bipartisan. What you have then is voting by partisan lines and it just becomes a question of which party can stack the delegations the most."

However, a Democratic spokesman approved of the bi-partisan effort

"This is the only type of convention that would have been feasible here this year. It would not have been fair to have a Republican convention for two reasons: first, there are not enough Republicans on this campus to have conducted a successful convention and secondly, the results of a Republican convention wouldn't have fairly represented the views of the entire campus."

Last Night At Memorial Hall

The Golden Fleece Taps 19 Initiates

Two hooded giants stalked Memorial Hall last night and tapped 19 new initiates into the Order of the Golden Fleece, the highest men's honorary on the University campus.

Following the ceremony, it was announced that Allen Thomson Cronenberg, Jr. had served as Jason during the past year.

Other active members of the Fleece include Roger Foushee, Hank Patterson, Willis Whichard, Grant Wheeler, Thompson Mann, Mike Lawler, Whitney Durand, Buzzy Stubbs and Charlie Shaffer.

The dramatic hour-long ceremony included the reading of the legend of Jason and the quest for the Golden Fleece.

"You have dared to be above the average . . . You have lost yourself . . . and tonight in the darkness of this hall you will find the Golden Fleece," highlights Jason's oration.

The new initiates are:

William Arthur Hays, Jr., Franklin; Robert Cherry, Chapel Hill; William Harrison Merrill, Atlanta; Haywood Monroe Clayton, Morrisville; Archibald Hilliard Davis III, Winston-Salem; Philip Augustine Baddour, Goldsboro; Charles Henry Battle, Miami, Fla.; Roger William Smith, Albemarle; Heathcote Peter Wales, St. Thomas, V. I.;

Also Bert Newton Adams, Chapel Hill; Jeffrey Joshua Bayer, Claremont, N. H.; Edward Stephens Martin, Chapel Hill; Larry Steven McDevitt, Asheville; Peter Ross Range, Athens, Ga.; Thomas Franklin Henley, Pittsboro; Bruce Stephen Cooper, Winston-Salem; Robert Worth Spearman, Chapel Hill.

Also faculty members Joseph Floyd and Samuel Hill.

And You Thought Our Elections Were Messed Up

Renger told the DTH yesterday, "All I know is what I've heard."

"The Old Gold and Black," WF student newspaper, said yesterday that Renger's posters had saturated the campus during the weekend. Staff members located Renger here through his campaign picture, the background of which was a scene from UNC.

Adrian King, associate editor of the Wake Forest paper, said Renger is the latest in a parade of write-in candidates (including a billy goat and two bona fide Wake Forest students) to oppose Cliff Lowry of Raleigh, nominated by the college's only campus political party. King said almost every student office had only one real candidate, a host of write-in candidates offering the only opposition.

Renger said his friends told him of his candidacy after deciding on their own to go through with the action.

"I would not want to speculate on their reasons for doing this," he said, "but I feel that it is a form of protest against the Wake Forest student government, just like the goat. I assume they chose me because there is no way to lose face by being defeated."

Orange County Rally Hears Candidate Preyer In Carroll

Democratic gubernatorial candidate L. Richardson Preyer will address an Orange County YDC rally tonight at 8 o'clock.

Judge Preyer, one of three major candidates for the office, will speak to a joint meeting of the Orange County YDC and UNC Democrats in Carroll Hall.

Bill Caffrey of Greensboro, district coordinator of the Preyer campaign, said the public is invited.

A 6:30 dutch treat dinner in Lenior Hall will preceed Judge Preyer's address. All students interested in working with Preyer's campaign are invited to the dinner, which was arranged by three Orange County campaign managers — Kemp Jones, Bob Satterfield and Mrs. James W. Protho. Prices for the dinner will start at 40 cents.

Cydne Wright, one of four campus coordinators for Preyer, said Monday the student rally held Saturday in Raleigh was a "huge success." The rally was attended by students from throughout the state. Other campus representatives are Rob Glenn, Bill King and Dick Ellis.

Following Judge Preyer's address, everyone will have a chance to talk informally with him at a reception at Graham Memorial.

Frosh Sale Is Tomorrow

Tomorrow is the big Freshman Class Merchant Day. A sale will be held at The Hub and the Freshman Class will receive 10 per cent of the net sales between the hours of 12 noon and 9 p.m.

Besides the lovely coed clerks, the class plans to promote sales providing cokes and cookies for all customers entering the store. The freshmen also plan to provide combo music between the hours of 7:30 and 9:00 p.m.

The proceeds from this sale will go toward the Freshman Weekend sometime in May.

Stat Colloquium To Hear S. N. Roy

S. N. Roy, professor of statistics at the University, will address the UNC Statistics Colloquium next Monday at 4 p.m. in room 265 Phillips Hall.

Prof. Roy will discuss current research of his and his collaborators on simultaneous linear estimation. The problems he considers in this area arise in the analysis of scientific and industrial experiments.

2 Profs Say Kidd Lacks 'Legal Leg'

Two UNC professors familiar with Federal Communication Commission (FCC) regulations agreed yesterday that Raleigh businessman Kidd Brewer cannot legally force his way into a proposed television debate among the three major Democratic candidates for governor.

Professors Wesley Wallace and John B. Adams said in separate interviews that the FCC's "equal time" regulations would only mean that Brewer must be sold one-third of the equivalent time the proposed debate takes, by the stations carrying it.

Wallace, chairman of the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, said "If the televising stations had offered free time for a debate, all six candidates would have had to be included on the basis of the FCC ruling.

"As long as it's a commercial program, all the stations have to do is make equal time available to Mr. Brewer under equivalent conditions."

Adams, professor of journalism, said "there seems to be a widespread misunderstanding" of the FCC ruling.

"There's nothing in the regulations I can see that requires that Brewer be allowed to participate in the proposed debate. His lawyer is saying there is, but I don't know what he's basing it on."

Brewer, recently paroled from prison after serving time for influence peddling, wired all the state's television stations threatening possible legal action if he is not included in a televised debate among the three major candidates, which is to be paid for by them.

Gator Bowl Films Shown Tonight

Color films of the 1964 Carolina-Air Force Gator Bowl game will be shown free of charge tonight at 7 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

The 45-minute film is being presented by Graham Memorial in co-operation with the athletic department.

Open to the general public, the film will provide a complete replay of UNC's 35-0 victory over the Air Force in the Dec. 31 post-season attraction.

The win, Jim Hickey's first in a bowl game, gave the Tar Heels a 9-1 over-all record for the season and capped Carolina's winningest season in several years.

Viewers of the film will see Ken Willard, the Tar Heels' all-ACC halfback and most valuable player in the Gator Bowl clash, in action.

Terry Isaacson, the Air Force's highly-rated quarterback, will also be seen along with Junior Edge, Gary Black and All-America end Bob Lacey of UNC.

Run-Off Election For MD-I Today

A run-off to decide the sixth seat in the Student Legislature from MD I will be held today, according to Elections Board Chairman Bill Aycock.

Voters will choose between Jim Bunn (UP) and Frank Wellington (UP), who tied for the seat in last Tuesday's general election.

Only men students residing in the area outside the corporate limits of Chapel Hill and Carrboro are eligible to vote. Polling stations set up at Y-Court and in the Victory Village Housing Office will be open from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m.

Aycock also said Bill Brown was elected to the Men's Council in MD IX as a write-in last week.

NSA Considers Welfare Plan

By JOHN GREENBACKER

An extensive program for the welfare of America's college students was outlined at the regional meeting of the National Student Association at East Carolina College last Saturday.

The program, which includes plans for an architecture board to set standards of construction for residence halls and classrooms, will be presented at the national convention in Minneapolis, Minn., in August.

It will also attempt to lower costs and improve medical facilities available to students and provide low-cost student accident insurance.

The medical program will put emphasis on mental health, as recent psychological studies show one out of every five college student needs psychiatric treatment.

The Association is currently trying to establish youth hostels across America, and will work for discounts on transportation rates for students.

"NSA will emphasize helping students in their role as students on campus this year," NSA local coordinator Mike Chanin said.

The regional congress of the Association, composed of delegates from colleges in North Carolina and Virginia, resolved to urge the national convention not to discuss controversies not directly related to college students and their interests.

Regional delegates also participated in a program of seminars on national goals and education improvement, and heard an address by Arizona Congressman Morris K. Udall, brother of the Secretary of the Interior.

Jubilee

'A FOREIGNER, NOT A STRANGER'

(Editor's note: This is "International Student Emphasis Week" Abdo B. Bardawil of Lebanon, on the campus. The following article, written by UNC student is a contribution to a symposium on "The Experience of Foreign Students in USA," sponsored by the United States Information Agency.)

By ABDO BARDAWIL

My academic background does not differ much from that of the average American student, for I have received my undergraduate, and a part of my graduate, education from the American University of Beirut, Lebanon. This university is fairly similar, in its educational programs, to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill where I have studied for my Ph.D. and where I am now pursuing a post doctoral work in chemistry. The two universities differ only slightly; the Honor System, while applied at all levels at UNC, is followed only by the Engineering School at AUB. The only subtle difference lies in the student life on campus. There is greater cooperation and rivalry among the different schools, clubs and elements at AUB than there is at UNC. This may be due to the size of the student body; the University of North Carolina hosts about three times the number of students the AUB does.

Therefore, coming to know the Americans, rather than my academic accomplishments, is what I call my American education. For four years, I have lived in Chapel Hill, N. C., pursuing my education at the University. During these years, I have come to know the Americans rather intimately. I have had the chance to share their lives with them—to criticize them as well as to enjoy their fellowship. After reviewing in my mind the reaction that I have towards this valuable experience, I can safely conclude that there are three stages through which the foreign student passes when he comes to the United States:

1. Because of the often erroneous impression the foreign student has about the Americans from their films, books, and other American sources of information, the first stage is invariably a frustrating one. Immediately, the student observes the fallacy of his impression. He finds things different from, or even contrary to, what he has expected. He is, therefore, disappointed.

2. The second stage, which comes almost simultaneously with the first one, is one of criticism. Out of his disappointment, the foreign student begin to criticize the Americans and their way of life. His first conclusion always leads him to believe that theirs is a superficial way of life. He observes, for example, that every one on the street is friendly towards him, but at the same time, and for reasons mainly pertinent to the fact that he is a student, it is difficult for him to establish close and deep friendships. Therefore, he tends to brand their friendships as being superficially oriented. He notices, also, that American children enjoy quite a bit of freedom at home, so he concludes that the American family ties are not strong, to say the least. In effect his conclusion, at this stage, that the American way of life is superficial, is, itself, a superficial and shallow conclusion. I am not saying, necessarily, that his conclusions are wrong, but I definitely maintain that these conclusions were formulated hastily and from little experience and knowledge. For even if these conclusions were right, he as a student could not have fathomed all the complexities of the American life in order to reach a fair conclusion. Thus the student in this stage is critical and disillusioned.

3. Here, then, comes the third stave where after ample time and opportunity to experience and share with the Americans their lives, the foreign student comes to know them. He finds that their way of life is well founded, and though it may be different from his, it is still deep rooted. The American enjoys and respects his life; he definitely believes in it and strives to improve it just as the foreigner does his own. His values are guarded with conviction and he is willing to defend them. The foreign student may even observe that only the American way of life suits the Americans. At this point, then, the foreign student, no matter how much he may like or dislike the American way of life, can not but respect it and understand it. And with this conclusion, as long as he is in America, he begins to live it and, surprisingly enough, becomes in many cases, as the American himself, a believer and a defender of what this way of life may stand for. This conclusion, in itself, must be rewarding to the foreign student as well as to the American who, in many cases, fails to realize the potentalities that exist within himself and within his way of life.

This experience, I believe, is common to most foreign students in America. Some may have lived the three stages in a shorter time interval than others. Some may have even missed them all. But every foreigner, I sincerely believe, must have experienced, and if not I hope he will soon experience, what I have enjoyed most in America—that is, to be a foreigner. Ever since I arrived to the USA, I was helped, in many different ways, by many Americans, most of whom later became my friends, to feel at home. It is with great gratitute that I say that their effort has borne its fruits. But at the same time, I was never deprived of my "national character", instead, it was preserved, respectfully, by my American friends. I was made, not a stranger but a foreigner, proud of my heritage and every thing that makes me. As a foreigner, I had to meet the challenge of being what I am and what I represented. In response to that challenge—a challenge kept alive by my contacts with the Americans and their genuine interest in my background—I became a better citizen of my country and a better representative of my culture, the thing I owe, in part, to my education in America.

ACT – Starting Out On The Wrong Foot

Hard on the heels of the proposal of a "stall-in" at the New York World's Fair by the Brooklyn chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality comes the announcement of the formation of a new integrationist group—ACT.

The group was formed in an attempt to help local integrationist groups when their campaigns are "attacked and undercut by the standard civil rights organizations such as the NAACP and the Urban League."

Leaders of the group include such luminaries as Mrs. Gloria Richardson, who managed to make a total shambles of Cambridge, Md., last year when she ordered local Negroes not to participate in a referendum on a Public Accommodations law for the city because "We should be given this right anyway."

Others in ACT are our old buddy Malcolm X, who has been suggesting Negroes form local "rifle clubs"; Rep. Adam Clayton Powell; and Rev. Milton Galamison, who organized the New York school boycott.

They support the "stall-in" as a means of further "dramatizing" the Negroes' plight, and were denounced by A. Whitney Young, director of the Urban League, for their stand.

Probably one of the NAACP "undercuts" to which this noble group was referring is the special school in Goldsboro, where 50 to 75 Negro youths are taking special courses at night to advance themselves in order to qualify for higher education.

They are taking courses in vocabulary, grammar, composition and cultural appreciation, and, according to the school's director (a NAACP member), are "anxious to learn."

We have long advocated sensibility in the Negro movement. We think the attitude of the nation is toward integration, and the Negro has done enough "dramatizing." The Civil Rights Bill looks more and more as if it will get through the Senate, and this will be a major step toward equality, even though we feel it will be at the expense of others.

Such actions as have been taken in Goldsboro reflect sensibility, and we wager there will be far less problems in Goldsboro than in New York when the bill passes.

And so we ask our local integrationist groups, who have had their share of irresponsibility, to reject any offer of help by ACT. There is more than one way to skin a cat, and there is more than one way to win a friend.

And the Negro will need as many friends as he can get when the Civil Rights Bill passes. He will face a road that quite possibly will be rougher than the one he has already traveled.

For rights, and the incumbent responsibilities, are just around the corner.

An Invested Interest In Southeast Asia

A GUEST EDITORIAL

The visits of Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara to South Viet Nam in recent weeks seems to be more of inquiries than of invested interests. The Saigon government has been in a state of internal struggle since early November when dispatches announced that Ngo Dien Diem had been toppled from power by a military junta.

Since this time the Viet Cong, backed by the Chinese Reds, has been more bold in its activities and has achieved considerable success. However, the situation is not as bad as the foreign press in Saigon has led the world to believe.

The transitional period following the November coup was of a socio-political nature which seemed for the moment to push the war effort into the background. General Von Don Minh, who led the coup against the Diem government and assumed the leadership of the military junta, seemed to have made the mistake of trying to solve social problems, created by Diem's lack of regard of the people, at the expense of the war effort. The Viet Cong took advantage of Minh's misguided policies and scored numerous victories in the immediate Saigon area. Minh's second mistake appeared to be his desire to satisfy the political ambitions of fellow officers who had engineered the coup with him.

The field commanders who had supported Minh's junta in November decided by January that the lack of war activity and the renewed talk in favor of neutralizing the country had to be stopped. General Nguyen Khanh led what he called an internal shift in power and the Minh justa was ousted.

Khanh, a veteran field commander, took the war effort to the people, telling them that unless they were willing to sacrifice, the cause could easily be lost. He increased the pay of the lower ranks, gave his field commanders more authority and put the war effort above socio-political reform. Pay had not been raised since 1956 and all military decisions had been made by Diem and his advisers, including the use of reinforcements in areas hundreds of miles from Saigon.

Whether Khanh will be able to overcome the major problem of winning support of the people deepnds upon his ability in the field. It had long been a favirite, if somewhat sadistic, game among the Vietnamese to guess how much the Diem regime had overplayed Red losses and underplayed its own.

According to Americans in Saigon, Khanh is a fiery and aggressive leader who believes there is no substitute for victory. He has placed proper emphasis on the war and has realized that the guerillas of the Ho Chi Minh-Mao Tse Tung school become more regimented and bolder as time passes. The only way to fight them, he says, is to return to conventional tactics.

The battalion-sized attacks of the Viet Cong in the past few months point out the fact that guerillas are becoming more and more regimented. Hit-and-run tactics may have been put on the shelf, at least for the present.

If Khanh does win the support of the people he appears to have his battle half-won. The recent announcement that the Ho Chi Minh supply trail will be sealed off will create major logistics problems for the Reds and force them to rely more on partisan support. Khanh must win support for his junta and he can do this by success in the field. Without the people, he has an army but not a country.

The United States has more than an invested interest in Viet Nam, and it will be watching closely to see if Khanh's promise to win becomes a reality.—PAT KELLY.

"Who Says We're Not Willing To Sit Down Together?"

Life In Concentration Camp Told By Blind Frenchman

By GUDGER NICHOLS

"And There Was Light" by Jacques Lussenyran; Little Brown and Company; 1963; 312 pp. $5.75).

". . . joy does not come from outside, for whatever happens to us it is within. The second truth is that light does not come to us from without. Light is in us, even if we have no eyes."

These are the closing words of "And There Was Light" by Jacques Lussenyran, a blind Frenchman who is currently teaching in an American university. In this book, which is autobiographical, the author is not striving to relate in detail the story of his life. Rather he wishes to tell the reasons for loving life with all its joys and demonic horrors.

After seven years of sight, Jacques lost his vision by falling against the sharp corner of a teacher's desk. He then learned to read Braille and continued his studies in Paris. The next few years were filled with the joys of running across wind-blown fields with friends in the summers, going to concerts after school with his father in the winter, and falling in love for the first time. These things ended in 1940 when the German soldiers entered Paris and turned Jacques's beloved city into a "giant convent with its parlors deserted." He became bitterly opposed to Nazi domination and was convinced that in some way he and his friends would unite to undermine the occupation.

Jacques, Jean, George, Francois and Denis formed a small resistance cell of boys under twenty that slowly grew into a secret society of five hundred called the Volunteers of Liberty. Ultimately, the volunteers joined forces with a larger resistance movement, led by powerful Philippe, named the "Defense de la France." They published a paper containing pictures, editorials and news stories about what was really happening throughout France and Europe. German propaganda was counteracted and weakened by this medium even after the first leaders of Defense de la France were betrayed to the Gestapo and shipped away in cattle cars to prison.

Jacques spent 15 months in Buchenwald, the largest German concentration camp for French non-Jewish war captives.

Here the young, blind boy of 20 found strength to live by sharing food with his fellow prisoners, trying to comfort the wounded and going from section to section each day to tell the news given in German on the Gestapo's loudspeaker to French, Russian and English speaking prisoners.

He almost died shortly after his arrival in Buchenwald. Through God-given aid and comfort he recovered from his sickness and learned to receive strength both for life and joy within this man-made hell. Memories sapped strength and each day was lived moment by moment regardless of the past and without fearing the future.

In telling what he learned about other men and living at Buchenwald, Jacques Lusseyran combines philosophy, religion, and wisdom born of experience in his lucid and strong view of life:

"The self-centered life has no place in the world of the deported. You must go beyond it, lay hold on something outside yourself . . . be engaged . . . through another man's warmth which communicates with yours, through yours which you pass on to him; or simply by no longer being greedy."

His blindness has taught him to look at the inner screen of his mind and to seek to understand and be warmed by his own inner light. The author was one of 30 to survive the original deportment of 2,000.

The book is written in the glowing earnestness of one who wishes to tell a glad secret or good news. Jacques gives a highly subjective account of the war and seeks to help the seeing understand the fears and comforts he discovered in blindness. The interest of his story is consistent and real. It is wonderful to learn how the author sustained his will to live in war-torn Europe.

LBJ Learned From FDR

By WILLIAM S. WHITE

Washington—It was 19 years ago, on April 12, 1945, that Franklin D. Roosevelt died on the eve of a great Allied victory in World War II and just at the dawn of the atomic age.

The anniversary has, this year, a special significance, a strange effect of merging the present with the past. For the feet of the present President of the United States, Lyndon B. Johnson, were first put on the high, swaying ladder to national power by Franklin D. Roosevelt, to run, in 1938, for his first elective office—a seat in the It was he who got Mr. Johnson House of Representatives from Texas.

And no occupant of the White House in these last two decades has been more basically like Franklin Roosevelt of Groton School, Harvard College and Hyde Park, N.Y., than Lyndon Johnson of the public schools of San Marcos, (Tex.), State Teachers College and Johnson City, Tex.

History, fate and circumstances have now put the pupil and protege where the master sat so long. And those here whose memories go back far are sometimes caught up in startled recognition that some action, some gesture now seen in the White House is a curiously faithful echo of some action, some gesture seen there half a generation ago.

There are even marked physical and personality resemblances—the broad, heavy shoulders characteristic of both men; the gusty humor and, occasionally, the powerful anger; the intuitive, highly personal approach to the art of politics with little recourse to the advisers, the charts and all the other aids of the more mechanical politics practiced by others in the White House.

There are differences, of course, but these are mostly superficial. Mr. Johnson's modified Texas drawl is a far tone away from President Roosevelt's modified broad "a"- about as far as it is from Hyde Park to Johnson City. President Johnson's political techniques in dealing with Congress are usually conciliatory, whereas Mr. Roosevelt's were urgently demanding. But even so and even here, Mr. Johnson himself can be most demanding at times, as he has just shown to Congress in his farm and anti-poverty legislation.

But the principal differences between Presidents Roosevelt and Johnson as men are more of shadow than of substance. And such differences as do appear spring largely only from differing circumstances; the 1960s are not the '30s or '40s.

For what truly identifies Presidents Roosevelt and Johnson is a common human quality wholly surmounting the fact that they never looked at every issue in the same way or with the same eyes. This is a shared quality of high and natural political savvy, a thing that can never be made but can only be inborn.

Agree or totally disagree with President Roosevelt, he had all the same a gift, a talent, for politics, for an indescribably acute blend of presidential power with presidential persuasion, that is rarely seen in public life.

Agree or totally disagree with President Johnson, he has that same gift or talent. This does not mean he is always "right;" it only means that, right or wrong, he has a superlative instinct for his profession. Nothing in the world could have prevented him from becoming a performing politician, just as nothing in the world, not even crippling polio, could keep Mr. Roosevelt from becoming a performing politician.

Mr. Johnson's predecessor, the late President Kennedy, was never in the Roosevelt mold—and never for a moment wanted to be. Indeed, he was both amused and annoyed at followers who tried to make comparisons that did not, in fact, exist. Mr. Kennedy was simply not President Roosevelt's kind of politician.

The old New Dealers know this ad this is why one sees them gathering around President Johnson. They may think him sometimes wrong in his policies, and in individual cases they may even think President Kennedy more nearly spoke their language in terms of issues and all that. They gather around Mr. Johnson not in the conviction that he is necessarily "right," but because in him they see the old master painter of politics revisiting the White House.

Convention Partisanship Makes Mockery Of Issues

By PETE WALES

When the tired delegates from the 1964 UNC Mock Political Convention finally trudged away from Woollen Gym at 1 am. Sunday morning, it was not without a strong sense of dissatisfaction with the three-day fiasco.

The aims of the convention were to:

1) Arouse the slumbering political consciousness on the campus.

2) Give the students an opportunity to debate under the rules and pressures of a simulated party nominating convention.

In part, the convention was a success.

Several excellent speakers were brought to the floor by speakers chairmen Bill Davis and Charles Hooks. Sen. Frank Church (D-Idaho), Rep. John Anderson (R-Ill.), Gov. Terry Sanford, Rep. Charles Jonas (R-N. C.) and Assistant Postmaster General Richard Murphy all were stimulating speakers and did much to liven the convention and arouse interest.

But when it got down to the students debating and politicking on the various issues and candidates, the convention was quite a farce indeed.

Convention Chairman Buddy Schiff had read his Robert's Rules of Order, but it was painfully obvious that he had had little experience in chairing any parliamentary body. Several interpretations were quite unusual, his explanations of his stands were very confusing and he was much too slow in his rulings to keep any sort of order on the floor.

The questions raised about his political leanings seemed quite unfair. The real problem was that he was going by the book without really understanding it.

Because of the lack of order, there was very little time for any real speaking by students on the issues and very little audience listening to them when they did get the floor.

The Republicans were accused of stalling Friday night in order to get rid of the liberal girls via curfews, but it really wasn't necessary. Everyone was so confused and so intent on making parliamentary points that virtually nothing else got consideration.

Probably the brightest spot in student activity during the convention came Saturday night when the Democrats led in a donkey and paraded him around. Thus, the convention at least provided a good psychological substitute for a panty raid. Everyone had a chance to blow off plenty of steam.

The silliest point in the convention was the Hooks-led Republican walkout Friday night during debate of the platform. Here was the one great opportunity for students to really air their views.

Unfortunately the issue on the platform, as in all other matters of business in the convention, was not the issues themselves, but the parties presenting them. Voting followed strict party lines throughout the proceedings.

When the main spokemen of the Republican contingent walked out, all possibility of a decent debate was elmnated.

It might be a better idea in future years to hold two mock party conventions rather than one bi-partisan one. This year's convention was so partisan that consideration of the real issues was all but abandoned.

Most noticeable was the lack of the usual "student conference crowd" at the convention. There s generally a small group of "in" Student Government people who will drop anything to go to a convention of some sort and usually end up going.

These forces were depleted by the competition of the Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner in Raleigh and the NSA Regional Conference in Greenville. It was a refreshing change and a comfort to see so many other interested students.

I only hope that the students who did attend were not so disillusioned that they won't ever attend a student conference of any kind again. For many it was a new experience and the handling of it was necessarily inept.

But it was real nice to see so many people trying.

Gum Chewers Deplored, Cure Worse Than Disease

Their Mandibles moving
With great precision . . . .

It could be a line from one of Dame Edith Sitwell's classic rhythmic poems. More's the pity that it is not because it actually describes a scene noted increasingly and with increasing horror by an authority on executive behavior and advancement, Lon D. Barton.

"It literally sets my teeth on edge to watch otherwise normal executives in bars, in our finer restaurants and clubs, and on commuter trains and planes, viciously moving their jaws in public as if they were devouring the head of some huge prehistoric monster. Executive image! It all goes down the drain when I witness debacles such as this," Barton remonstrated.

The man who has been father confessor to literally thousands of executives on their way up denied that he had any vendetta going against the manufacturers of chewing gum.

"It is a well know fact that gum chewing, if it is done for short periods and in a civilized manner, is good exercise and an aid to dgestion. What particularly exasperates me is the way men tear at that flavored substance in their mouth as if they were literally devouring their competition or masticating their daily quota of ten pounds of liver. When they go at it that viciously it accomplishes no good whatsoever and looks terrible," he said.

Barton has noted a great increase in gum chewing with the advent of the latest smoking scare and he was sympathetic:

"Men who decide to quit smoking are admittedly faced with tremendous emotional problems and I can sympathize with them. They have to find a mother substitute in a hurry. They have to find something to do with their hands to replace that light-up gesture. They have, in some way, to replace that chemical change in their bodies that occurred when they inhaled—but why take all of this out on a minute piece of gum?"

(Barton has not yet abandoned the cigaret habit.)

The executive authority reiterated the fact that he is proposing no 18th Amendment, outlawing gum chewing. What he is proposing is moderation.

"If you must go at gum chewing with vigor to gain emotional satisfaction, do it in the privacy of your office, the men's room or in your own home if you've been able to enslave your wife with the habit," he said, "but don't do it in public where it makes you look ridiculous and could cause your bar stool or train riding neighbor to seek noise abatement legislation."

The man who has previously railed at bow ties and the four-martini lunch modestly gives Shakespeare credit for this particular phase of executive development: "Hamlet, in his advice to the players (Act III, Scene 2) said it a lot better than I ever can.

" 'Suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance that you overstep not the modesty of nature.'

"Certainly the man who drinks excessively at lunch, wears a bow tie or bites his gum is overstepping the modesty of nature in a most unbecoming way. What we aim for is a kind resourceful, intelligent, well groomed totality when we offer our executive candidates to the public and to prospective employers. Anything that detracts from that image is a profound mistake."

Wives who chew gum? That's a completely different story though the results turn out to be the same. The man may be wearing a custom tailored modish suit and his wife may be expensively furred to the eyebrows—and then you notice that twitching movement above her shoulders—turns out to be a vigorous set of jaws moving rapidly—between gasps for breath as she monopolizes the conversation—and the entire effect is lost.

She may even be a non-talker. The effect is still lost if she is a violent chewer.

Are there antidotes for this admitted basic need? Barton reacts favorably to the kind of adult pacifier that has been developed that looks like a cigaret, is plastic and even has a menthol tip; even a controlled use of gum in pubic, a glass of water, more frequent swallowing—any mannerism that will relax you that does not become itself the center of attention.

If you are a confirmed gum addict of the vicious chewing school how can you break the habit? Next time you feel the urge for this form of exercise, do it in front of a mirror—see how idiotic you look and you'll never do it again, the executive's executive insisted.

Residence Council Withdraws From National Group

Delegates from UNC withdrew the University's membership from the North Atlantic Association of College and University Residence Halls at the association's meeting held at Penn State recently.

The UNC representatives announced that they were withdrawing from the association and planned to form a southern region of the association.

Jim Fullwood, president-elect of the Residence Council, was appointed by National President Torlof Nelson of the University of Idaho, to coordinate the formation of the new region. The first conference of the southern region is planned for the spring of 1965, according to Bob Payton, MRC vice-president-elect, who has been appointed conference chairman.

UNC had joined the association this year and was attendting its first conference. UNC delegates were Gerry Good, current president of MRC, Fullwood and Payton.

First Place Tar Heels Meet Duke

By PETE GAMMONS

The Tar Heels, fresh from a sweep of the South Carolina teams, journey this afternoon to Durham to meet Duke.

Leading the ACC by a half game and sporting the only perfect record in the league, Coach Rabb's club is pushing hard for their first championship since 1960.

The Heels hope Ken Willard, Dickie Prindle, and Jimmy Speight can keep up their good hitting which has pulled out the last two games. Willard hit late inning singles for the winning runs, while Prindle and Speight each chipped in key hits. In the two weekend games Willard and Prindle also have reached the .300 mark, the leading marks for the starting nine. Gary Black has snapped out of a brief slump and is also pressing the .300 mark, while playing a very steady center field. Ken Boykin in right, Hot Rod Hundley behind the plate, and Bill Brown at first have hit adequately. Dickie Fleming will be the other starter at third, and although his average isn't impressive, he has hit for some power and showed some signs Saturday of breaking out of his slump.

With the hitting beginning to come around, it is now up to the pitching to do their share. Bill Haywood certainly has done his job, but the rest of the staff had been erratic. Either Haywood or Spence Willard will go this afternoon. If it is the latter, he may have to be a little bit sharper than he has been. He was sharp against Yale, but down South he was hit hard, and wasn't really that impressive against South Carolina Friday.

Duke will probably counter with football star Stan Crisson, who although hit hard this year, is a highly regarded pitcher. Crisson throws a curve ball three out of four pitches, which could give some of the Tar Heel right handers like Willard trouble. His last outing Friday against Maryland, he lasted only four innings and allowed seven hits and six runs. His failure so far has been attributed to a sore arm, which accounts somewhat for the Blue Devils' 0-3 conference record, and 3-9 mark overall.

The Devils, if Crisson starts, will probably have six football players in the starting lineup. Biff Bracy hit a lusty .385 last year and will be starting in left. In right will be Sonny Odom (.365 in '63) and in center John Gutekunst, who round out an all-halfback outfield. Dave Uible and Scotty Glacken, both quarterbacks, will be at first and catcher respectively. Glacken is regarded as one of the top sophomores in the conference. The other starters should be sophomore R. D. Carson at short, Bucky Fader at second, and Tommy Taylor (.314 last year) at third.

Despite what looks like a solid team on paper, the Blue Devils have failed to do anything so far this year. Saturday, for instance, they were shut out cold by Virginia 5-0, which emplanted them deep in the ACC cellar. There is a chance they will snap out of this slump, and they could do it with an explosion.

The Tar Heels go on the road over the weekend for games at Maryland and Virginia on Friday and Saturday, a single game with State Tuesday, and return the next Friday against the Terps.

The varsity and freshmen track teams will travel to Winston-Salem today for meets with Wake Forest, while the Duke Freshmen will come here to face the Tar Babies in baseball and golf.

Tar Heel Baseball

By LARRY TARLETON

The Har Heels, Orioles and Phillies find themselves on top of their leagues at this early date in the season.

Although it is too early in the major league season to pay much attention to the front-running teams, Carolina has given notice that it may be the cream of the ACC teams with Wake Forest experiencing hitting difficulties.

The Tar Heels have shaken off numerous injuries to attain their rank at the top of the ACC standings. Tom Wright, Beattie Leonard, Gary Black, Spence Willard and Merle Kruer have all spent time on the sidelines nursing injuries.

Coach Walt Rabb says, "I think we're fortunate to be in first place in the standings in light of the injuries we have had. Our boys have been playing sound baseball. We've had adequate pitching, hitting when we needed it, and good defense.

"The squad as a whole has worked hard and they really have the desire to have a good team. All our games have been close so we have had to go for one run. We like to hit and run but so far we haven't been successful.

"Everyone will be saving their best pitchers for us now, but I think that we'll give a pretty good account of ourselves."

The injuries to Wright and Leonard were especially hard for Rabb to take. Wright was the leading hitter on the team last year with a .377 mark. Although he was hitting only .154 when he was injured, the Heels have missed Wright's bat in the lineup. Tom was elected co-captain by his teammates and is a "great team man" according to Rabb. He has been trying to get his knee ready for more action, but the knee is still giving him trouble and his playing status is still uncertain.

Leonard Could Be Best

Rabb says that Leonard is "potentially as good as any pitcher in the conference." Beattie broke a bone in his pitching hand in a practice game and just had the cast removed. He is scheduled to throw hard in batting practice this week, but it may be a couple of weeks before he sees any action under fire.

If Leonard's hand heals as expected the Tar Heel pitching should be in capable hands. The pitching thus far has been brilliant in spots, and has been more than adequate except for the three losses in Florida. The "Old Leaguer" Bill Haywood is the ace of the staff. He has appeared in seven games, two as a starter and five as a reliefer. He paces the staff with four wins and no defeats and a 1.17 ERA. Rabb says that Haywood is "one of the best relievers in college baseball." Although not as sharp as usual, Haywood was credited with one win and a save in the two Tar Heel victories last weekend.

Spence Willard was the other proven starter on Rabb's staff this year. Spence hasn't been as effective this year, but he didn't hit his stride until the second half last year. Bill Dannemann has been wild in his first two starts, but always managed to get the side out in the clutch. Dannemann was the scheduled starter last Saturday, but was sick and Jerry Davis got another chance. The junior from Cramerton turned in his second consecutive impressive performance before tiring in the seventh inning. Davis, a crafty lefthander, could prove to be an invaluable member of the Tar Heel staff. Batters find themselves hitting his sinking pitches into the dirt, and with the flashy infield of Speight, Prindle, Brown and Fleming behind him, few of the hits get through.

Fleming has filled in capably for the injured Wright at third. Rabb said, "We're fortunate to have a capable replacement like Fleming to fill in in case of an injury. However, now we don't have anyone behind Dickie. If he is hurt, I'll have to move Bill Taylor back to third. Taylor is a good man to have on the club. He can play anywhere.

Black Steadies Outfield

With Gary Black recovered from the jammed arm which sidelined him for two days, the Tar Heel outfield is set with Black in center, Willard in left and Ken Boykin in right. Black has raised his average to .296 and looks as if he will be the big hitter everyone expects him to be. Willard has been the big gun for the Heels. He was hampered with an ankle injury much of last year, but this year he is meeting the ball much better. He and Black are concentrating on hitting the curve ball up the middle.

Boykin, one of the better hitters on the team, has won the right field job. Ken's trouble so far is he's not "hitting the ball where they ain't." He has hit several good shots but they have all been toward someone.

Rabb's catching is the best at Chapel Hill in many seasons. Bob Hundley, Merle Kruer and John Shaw are capable catchers, and all three can hit. Hundley has won the starting position with his hitting and hustle. Rabb said, "Hundley has done a good job. He has a lot of hustle and keeps the infield on their toes at all times."

These boys could give Carolina their first ACC baseball championship since 1960. Rabb said, "This is a good bunch of boys to work with. They have a lot of spirit and they all get along together."

Initial Frosh Lacrosse Team Wins 1st Meet

The first organized Freshman lacrosse team at UNC celebrated its birth with an auspicious debut Friday: a 14-5 win over the Duke Frosh.

It was the quartet of "Deerfield Dandies" that sparked the triumph. Timmy Balch (5 goals), Pake Hubbard (5 assists), Bob Morrison and Sandy Reider (one goal each) were the big guns in the first of three meetings with the Blue Imps.

Hal Minis and Pete Collison each scored twice, Minis's pair coming with the Tar Babies leading by only two goals, and helped break the game wide open. Clee Edgar, Loring Swasey, and Sammy Williams also scored. Edgar and Swasey were also teammates at St. Marks School in Southboro, Mass.

Defensemen Frey Tygart, Joe McGirt, and George Venters were outstanding in the win. None of them had ever played before, and have come along remarkably.

The win gives some hope for varsity coach Cony Steele, whose team hasn't fared too well. There will be two more games with Duke, and an official practice game with the varsity.

Willard Top Hitter

While the Tar Heels suddenly find themselves alone atop the ACC, Ken Willard and Bill Haywood have taken over most of the individual team leaderships.

Willard is tied with Dickie Prindle for the highest average among regulars at .300, although injured catcher Merle Kruer still has a .316 mark. Willard and Jim Speight each have three doubles, while Willard leads with three triples and doubles, and fifteen rbi's. Speight leads in runs with ten and stolen bases with five.

"Old Folks" Haywood leads every pitching department. He has pitched 38⅓ innings, has won four and lost none, and has an earned run average of 1.25.

Sport Shorts

NEW SPORT: A stranger passing Chapel Hill's Fetzer Field any weekend might mistake the campus for that of Oxford or Cambridge in merrie old England. That would be because the cricket players are in force.

A group of students here have formed their own cricket club and own all the equipment necessary for that sport. They engage in matches with nearby schools and enjoy themselves thoroughly. Onlookers appear to relish the activity, although few know what's going on.

The cricket squad is manned by a cosmopolitan set, a good number of the players being students here from India.

THE LAWYERS: Gene Sigmon, who co-captained the Carolina football team last fall, recently passed the entrance exam for law school here. The ex-tackle hasn't decided on his future, however.

Wayne Bishop, who has been serving as assistant track coach under Joe Hilton, finishes law school this spring. The Greenville (N. C.) native, one-time teammate of Jimmy Beatty, eventually hopes to practice in California.

"I met my wife while I was running out there," explained Wayne. "We both fell in love with the area around San Francisco."

HIGH HONOR: The naming of Vic Seixas as captain of the Davis Cup tennis team gave Chapel Hill net enthusiasts a real thrill. Vic's stay at Carolina was a highlight of a tennis program which dates back to 1909.

Education Emphasis Pledged By Preyer

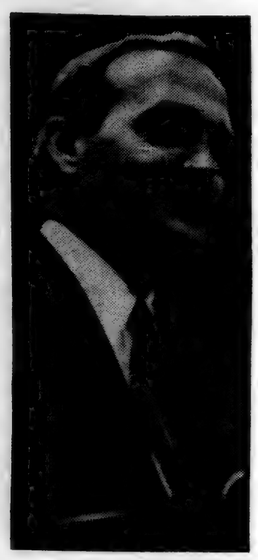
By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Education was given prime importance here last night by a man who hopes to become the next governor of North Carolina.

L. Richardson Preyer, speaking in Carroll Hall, pledged that, if elected, his administration "will always put education first, for we are talking about a million children and the hopes of the world."



JUDGE PREYER

"I want to see us keep growing in education," Preyer told a large audience assembled in what looked like a miniature convention hall. "I want to see this University grow in stature.

"This state can no longer afford a 'feast or famine' approach that gives salaries and colleges attention only at long intervals. The time has come when education must be the number one concern of every governor, not just one every 60 years."

Preyer gave hearty praise to The community college program and urged that more communities undertake to establish such a program. The former Federal Judge, who gave up a life time job to seek the Democratic nomination, also said the University should expand to other campuses.

"It is doubly important that the community colleges not become second rate institutions—they will need attention; they will need financial support, and they will need leadership," said Preyer.

The lean, well-tanned candidate said the University must supply leadership to these Community Colleges because "the University stands as an example of what a college is supposed to be.

"If that leadership is to be crisp and forceful, the University must know where it is going; it must be recharged periodically; it must re-examine the thrust of its teaching and the quality of direction.

"For when it is all done with, the University is an on-going physical thing; but the contribution of the University that is most lasting, rests in the mind of a student who has had the good fortune in his passage through school, to know a good teacher."

Preyer challenged the students present to help make the State a better place to live. "You can help only if you get involved and become a participant instead of an onlooker," he said.

"Too many students treat their college years and the politics that swirl about them, if it were all unimportant, and their lives had not begun yet.

"It is important to live intensely and with purpose and effort. I think that students are tired of role-playing and make-work.

"The quickening in government by young people is one of the most heartening signs on the social scene today," Preyer said. "I think state government must take the initiative and respond to your interest with new ways to use your energy, your ideas and your enthusiasm."

Preyer arrived on campus shortly after 6:30 last night. He had dinner with a large group of supporters in the South Room of Lenoir Hall.

Before eating, however, Preyer found time for a little politicking, as several of his supporters took him through the main room of Lenoir to shake hands with many of those who were still there.

Ross Barnett Coming Soon

Don't expect the day after Jubilee Weekend to be a quiet one in Chapel Hill. Ross R. Barnett, former governor of Mississippi, will speak at Memorial Hall Monday, April 27, at 8 p.m.

Having stepped down from the governorship, Barnett is now a partner in a Jackson, Miss., law firm.

Demonstrators Threaten Opening Of World's Fair

NEW YORK (UPI)—Rebellious civil rights leaders hurled defiance at the city Tuesday and said there is nothing that police or the courts can do to stop them from ruining today's opening of the New York World's Fair with a massive traffic and pedestrian tie-up.

"No power on earth can stop it now," said the Rev. Milton A. Galamison. "It's gone too far. Mayor Robert F. Wagner could have stopped it by meeting with Negro leaders and giving some satisfaction to our demands . . . but it's too late now."

In a last-ditch effort to combat the danger of chaos and possible violence, Fair officials passed a regulation Tuesday forbidding demonstrations on the Fair grounds unless the Fair Corporation gives written permission.

Pinkerton detectives hired by the Fair had detention compounds built in warehouse areas on the fringe of the fair-grounds—one for men and one for women—big enough to hold a total of 300 prisoners comfortably and up to 500 or 600 if necessary.

Early Monday Theft May Be Biggest In Town's History

By GARY BLANCHARD

Thieves walked off with an estimated $16,000 worth of jade and ivory art pieces and records early Monday in what is believed to be the biggest theft in Chapel Hill's history.

The burglary occurred at Kemp's Record and Oriental Art Shop, an Eastern Seaboard landmark for oriental art buffs and record collectors.

Police reported they have fingerprinted the store and sent out an alert for the stolen articles to law enforcement agencies across the state and to other officers and art dealers in cities around the country, where the irreplaceable art pieces might turn up.

Officers doubted the likelihood of the Kemp theft being linked with the robbery Monday evening of Merritt's Service Station on the outskirts of Chapel Hill. In that incident two white men made off with $150 in cash.

"I'm just sick," said Kemp Battle Nye, 50-year-old owner of the art and record shop and a well-known Chapel Hill figure. "The art is stuff I've lived with since I came back from China in 1940.

"They knocked the lock off my back door and took about 14 pieces from my collection. They took all my scrolls, the good with the bad. The oldest one dates back to about 1400 A.D. And they got about 500-600 of our best records, mainly stereo classical.

"Evidently whoever did it had cased the place thoroughly. They left some of the most valuable stuff. They took the things most appealing to the general public.

"I can't figure it. They didn't touch several valuable pieces.

They had a lot of other stuff piled by the door, but evidently they got scared off."

Police said the back door which the thieves broke the lock off was checked about 4 a.m. Monday, meaning the theft probably occurred between then and 8 a.m. when the janitor arrived and sounded the alarm.

Det. Howard Pendergraph said a description of the stolen art pieces indicated most of it could have been put into a large suitcase and carried off. He said a check of the neighborhood turned up no reports of suspicious persons or cars in the area.

Nye said he collected the art pieces while serving as a courier for the American Embassy in Peking from 1932 to 1940. He said the value of his 680-piece collection has increased since 1955, when the U. S. government passed an act forbidding trade with Communist China.

"Nothing more hase come out of China since then," Nye said.

The collection has been shown at the Morehead Planetarium here, at Catawba College in Salisbury, N. C., and at the Mint Museum in Charlotte. It has also been shown privately several times. In between, it has been on display, locked under glass, at Nye's shop.

The stolen art pieces undoubtedly would have to be sold to a "fence," a buyer and reseller of stolen goods, Nye said. "Museums wouldn't touch the stuff.

"If they get 'lost' in Chinatown in New York or San Francisco," he added, "it will be very difficult to trace them."

Nye said his store, which he has operated since 1945, has been robbed twice in the past few years, but never of anything approaching the size of the present theft.

Nothing New On Robbery At Merritt's

Police are still searching for two white men who escaped with $150 after robbing Merritt's Service Station early Monday night.

Orange County Sheriff Buck Knight said that E. G. Merritt, owner, and his son-in-law, Ben Grantham, were in the service station-store when the bandits took the money from the cash register.

Grantham fired several shots at the bandits, but he said he didn't think he had hit either of them.

The robbery occurred around 8 p.m., Monday, at the business establishment located on the Pittsboro Highway, just outside Chapel Hill. Speculation is that the bandits escaped in a car which they had hidden out of sight down the road.

An eyewitness, not identified, said the two men entered the store and demanded the cash register be opened. He said that when Grantham declared there wasn't any money in the safe, one of the bandits fired a shot through the counter.

Yippee! Sigma Chi Derby Rides Again

By DENNIS SANDERS

The 19th annual Sgma Chi Derby will brighten Kenan Stadium Thursday afternoon beginning at 2:30 and running throughout the afternoon.

Co-chairmen John Davis, oJel Miles and Dusty Schock said there will be no admission charge and the public is invited to view the events.

A parade featuring sorority members will leave the Planetarium paking lot at 1:30 and travel down Franklin St. to kick off the activities.

Derby events include: relay, sack and three-legged races; a limbo contest; Hit the Greek, a pie-throwing contest; a secret event to be announced at the Derby; and a Miss Modern Venus Beauty Contest.

Beautes competing for the title are Pam Hooper, Patricia Rumley, Phyllis Brennaman, Lynn Whitley, Dennie Saunders, Jeanne Payne, Suzanne Micand, Alice Brown, Sally Roper, Kay Hoyle, Melinda Long and Trudy Williams. Other contestants include Carole Miller, Kay Train and Gayle Monroe.

The Sigma Chi Derby is a traditional spring frolic which started at the University of California in the 1930's. The Derby came to UNC in 1944, and is traditional among the 100 Sigma Chi chapters across the country.

All sororities, the Nurses' dorm and the Stray Greeks will participate in events ranging from a three-legged race to a beauty contest and even a mysterious "secret event."

Nancy Culler, Bev Haynes Outstanding Senior Women

By KERRY SIPE

Nancy Culler, of High Point, and Beverley Haynes, of Washington, D. C. were named Monday night as co-winners of the 1964 Irene F. Lee Award to the outstanding Senior woman at the University.

The awards were announced at the 1964 Valkyrie Sing and were presented by Dean of Women Catherine Carmichael.

This was the first time since the establishment of the award in 1955 that it has been given to two Senior women.

Miss Culler, who was named last year as outstanding Junior woman, served this year as chairman of the Women's Honor Council.

Presented also at the Valkyrie meeting was the annual award for the highest scholarship average in a Carolina sorority. The trophy went to the Chi Omega Sorority who had a 2.74 overall average.

The Valkyrie Sing, an annual competition of musical numbers and skits among sororities and fraternities, awarded prizes in four categories.

In the Women's Sing Division, Alpha Gamma Delta sorority was first place winner for their entry of a singing group called "The Algadel Singers." Alpha Delta Pi received honorable mention in this division.

In the Women's Skit Division, Kappa Delta returned to win their second trophy for six straight years of wins. This year it was for a skit called "Much Ado To Do Nothin'."

St. Anthony Hall was first place winner in the Men's Sing Category for their entry, "The Thirsty Thirteen." Beta Theta Pi won honorable mention in the men's division.

Judges for the sing were Mrs. Marion Fitz-Simons, Dr. David T. Lapkin, Mrs. Richard Caswell, Mrs. Wayne Zarr, and Dr. John Parker.

Jubilee

FLATT AND SCRUGGS, (Lester and Earl that is) will provide the country and western style music Saturday afternoon on the GM lawn as they open the second day of Jubilee. Flatt and Scruggs are accompanied by the Foggy Mountain Boys and will go on stage at 2:30. Refreshments will be served.

SG Interviews

Interviews began today to select chairmen for the various Student Government Executive Committees. Interviews will be held each afternoon from 2:30 until 5:00 through Friday.

Anyone interested in applying should call SG offices at 933-1257 or come by second floor GM to sign up for an appointment.

The Executive structure includes Campus Affairs, Cultural and Educational Programs, International and State Affairs and Justice Affairs.

Positions Still Open On Att-General's Staff

The men and women's positions on the Attorney-General's Staff for next year will be filled this week.

There are approximately 50 positions open, but since a heavy influx of applicants has occurred in the past, interested students are advised to sign up early at the GM desk.

The staff is divided into four separate divisions, including the Men's Council, the Women's Council, the Men's Residence Council Court and the Inter-fraternity Council Court. Each person selected will work with with one of these councils.

Each interview will take about five minutes, and will be held on the following days: Monday, 5-6; Tuesday, 4-6; Wednesday, 4-6; Thursday, 4-6; and Friday, 4-6.

Students seeking these positions should make an appointment at the GM information desk. Then they should fill out an application form which can be picked up outside the Council Room on GM's second floor.

A DIFFERENT KIND OF SEGREGATION

(Editor's note: The following article, written by UNC student Cecelia Gajardo of Chile, is the second in a series of four articles written by foreign students now attending the University. The series is running in conjunction with "International Student Emphasis Week.")

By CECELIA GAJARDO

One of the most common questions that I, as a foreigner, have been asked in this country is perhaps that one dealing with the existence of segregation in my country. In Chile, as in all other Latin American countries there exists segregation of a very peculiar type. The amazing fact is that at home we are ready to criticize the problem existing here without fully realizing that our class system implies a high degree of segregation as well as injustice. Although this class division is not quite as rigid and it is gradually changing, there are three definite classes with their own general characteristics and differences. These classes are the high, middle and low; each one with its own subdivisions. In my country, these classes are mainly based upon differences in educational and economic factors, since there are no differences in race or color.

The high class—although less numerous—controls more of the wealth. It's made up of old prominent families. Their educational background is the best, generally enriched by frequent trips abroad. Their houses are beautiful mansions luxuriously furnished and staffed with two or three servants. Many families own big extensions of land in the country (the so-called "haciendas") and rent buildings in town. Right now this upper class is beginning to disappear due to different changes taking place such as land reform.

The middle class is a large one—increasing every day. Middle class people are educated. Many of them have a university degree and the great majority have finished high school. Although not all these families own their homes, they cannot rent good ones. Some families have cars and most of them have telephones, refrigerators and other modern appliances. They also have full-time maids who live in the house. Middle class children can always attend school; even if there is no room in state schools, their parents can afford to send them to private ones.

The low class is unfortunately the largest. This is the constantly suffering class. They live either as starving peasants in the rural areas or as starving citizens in the slums surrounding the cities. They fill the statistics of illiteracy, undernourishment, alcoholism, delinquency, and so on. They can neither own their homes nor rent them; therefore, they build huts in some empty site. It is always possible, however, to evict them for illegal occupation of the land. The education they can get are a few years of elementary school or crafts learned as apprentices.

It is this low class which has been segregated for years. They do not have the chance for better employment because they lack the ncessary education. They cannot buy in good stores because they do not have enough money to do so (they usually wear second-hand garments). They cannot attend cultural performances because of a lack of money. They cannot live decently because nobody without education and a minimum of economic means can do it. Moreover, they are criticized for their sad customs and shameful behavior.

And we are all the same color, all the same race. Therefore, it has been interesting for me to notice that so many of the charactetristics attributed to Negro people here exist in white people of my country, precisely the people who have been denied education and opportunity for a better life for so long.

Frosh Class Merchant Day Is TODAY!

Toay is offcially "Freshman Class Merchant Day" in Chapel Hill.

Hard Labor, Regrets, And Possible Rescue

Several students from this University and other nearby schools are faced with hard labor sentences up to six months in length unless someone comes to their financial rescue by 10 a.m. Thursday. They are currently at the mercy of Judge Raymond Mallard's court, having been convicted of obstructing traffic in connection with the street sit-ins held here earlier in the semester. Now they have received hard labor sentences, suspended on condition that they pay all court costs and refrain from participation in further demonstration of any kind for any reason for periods up to five years.

The sentences themselves probably deserve comment, but that can wait until the current controversy is settled. At hand are the more immediate considerations of the payment of court costs for these students.

The past, however, must remain the past. These students have obviously broken the law, and should be ready to accept punishment under the law. We have long felt that this particular type of demonstration is detrimental to the Civil Rights movement. It seems to bring out the worst in both the demonstrators and the public, and the inconvenience and danger present in such actions are sufficient to alienate many who adhere to the ultimate goals and basic principles of the demonstrators.

Nevertheless, the dark cloud of hard labor that is hanging over the heads of many of our fellow students causes us to sit back and ponder carefully their situation.

We have spoken to a number of these students, and many are understandably regretful of their actions. Others, we might add, are not. Those in the first group belong chiefly to that segment of the movement which participated for the excitement or the idea of nonconformity, without giving proper thought to the possible consequences. The others realized the risks and took them because their intense dedication required it.

It is of course impossible to single out the members of one segment and consider them apart from the total picture, but that is not important anyway. The important thing, as we mentioned earlier, is to momentarily place our own feet in the shoes of those who will stand before the bar of Justice tomorrow. Consider for a moment the implications of six months at hard labor—a college or high school career rudely interrupted, physical hardship, and an emotional experience which might warp a person's outlook on life to the extent that he may never again devote his entire potential to his society.

If you wish to contribute, mail a check to the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee, Box 282. Your contributions could retreive the honor of your fellow students. If you don't wish to contribute, at least take a mental moment to stand in another's shoes—especially if they are regretful ones.

The Highway Patrol Can't Do It All

The Durham Morning Herald

The Highway Patrol is regrouping for a renewed attack on North Carolina's soaring highway death and injury rate. But with all due respect for the Patrol, it can hardly do much on its own.

Increasing numbers of North Carolinians will bleed and die needlessly this year unless the Patrol gets more help from the people responsible for this crime on the highways.

We are now killing each other at a rate of 33 per cent higher than last year's record figure for the state. And here in the Patrol district that includes Durham and Wake counties we have upped our local bloody highway toll by 78 per cent. These figures are shocking. The lifeless and broken bodies they stand for are more shocking yet.

Worst of all, though, there is no sign that the great mass of motorists is shocked enough to play its part in reducing the record casualty rate. Until it is, highway safety can only be a sometimes thing. For the root causes of highway deaths and injuries are driving errors.

Charged with responsibility for 70,000 miles of highway, the Highway Patrol can't eliminate many of our potentially murderous driving errors. By concentrating its limited manpower on heavily traveled highways, it can occasionally discourage many of us from disregarding the common sense laws of highway safety. But only fulltime observance of these laws will significantly reduce the circumstances that can lead to death or injury in the bat of an eye. The Patrol couldn't force fulltime observance with four times its present manpower.

Either we the motoring public must recognize our responsibility for fulltime self-enforcement of safe driving laws and attitudes or we must accept our responsibility for the increasing highway casualties. When we speed, take reckless chances, ignore traffic signals or drive while drinking, we create the circumstances that are killing people. We add to the risk of accidents and to the probability that the number of dead and injured will increase. If this situation is to be corrected, there must be an active determination by each of us that our first concern in driving is to eliminate our own errors and be on guard against the errors of others.

Homosexuals In Flicks

"Lesbian queen! Fresh fruit! Proud slut!" This is an example of the racy dialogue that bounced off the screen in a Swedish movie titled "Lust Ladies," which played several months ago at an "off Times Square" theater specializing in nudist flicks.

Little did it matter that the forbidden (for U. S. movies) words were rendered in innocuous subtitles; it was an indication of a trend in international cinema to capitalize on the increasingly open and liberal attitude toward homosexuality in America, and in the world.

In Gay Paree (and it is very gay) the spirit of live and let live prevails; shocks don't come easy and squeamishness is at a premium. Men walk freely down the boulevards arm-in-arm and tough women jog along in mannish haircuts and men's suits.

Hollywood has not ignored the titillating value of sexual aberration. A few of their more blatant attempts to dramatize abnormality include some of the greatest box-office hits in recent years:

"Suddenly Last Summer;" "The Children's Hour;" "Lawrence of Arabia;" "The Best Man;" "Rebel Without A Cause;" "Victim;" "The Strange One;" "Rocco and His Brothers;" "La Dolce Vita;" "Advise and Consent;" "Cat On A Hot Tin Roof;" "Oscar Wilde;" "The Silence;" "Marty;" "Streetcar Named Desire;" "Tea and Sympathy;" "The Servant;" and a few other less notable epics.

How has homosexuality been treated as a theme? In most cases, unfortunately, it was not with subtlety or taste, empathy or intelligence. There are several reasons for this. The American public is at least fifty years behind European audiences, culturally. Producers and financiers in the movie industry are conservative, not generally interested in illuminating one of man's darkest experiences. Indeed, even with a handful of men who have both the means and integrity to venture into a serious and thoughtful examination of perversion, they are hampered and discouraged by senseless, arbitrary censorship problems.

Even in the metropolitan recesses of Manhattan, where all but orgasms are graphically presented on screen (remember "A Stranger Knocks?") . . . there remains a hush-hush horror if two men or two women lock into a lewd embrace.

The see-no-evil, speak-no-evil mentality infiltrates the majority of film-goers while one of the nation's most tragic social problems degenerates and remains unexplored because of ignorance, fear and a Medieval suspicion that belie and betray citizens of the 20th century.

Notice the abundance of lesbian paperbacks that glut campus newsstands, illustrating women whipping each other. Yet you will search in vain to find a comparable number of "books" on male deviation. Here again is the double-standard, but this time it is the female who is the less-censured.

The point is not that one kind of perversion should be more accepted than another, or that the practice itself be considered desirable. It is only that our news and entertainment media should utilize their vast resources and influence to bring to bear the social concern that is being currently given to more "respectable" ills, namely, racial discrimination, schizophrenia, cancer and a host of other human problems that plague and perplex us all.

Specifically, there are roughly three ways film makers have employed to depict "queers" or male perverts. The most sophisticated and sympathetic form was used in the British picture "Victim," starring Dirk Bogarde as the barrister-lawyer whose brief affair with a young man in his early twenties, Peter McEnery, is seized on by blackmailers. The film avoided stereotyped characterization; neither actor was effeminate or overly masculine; there was a tenderness there nevertheless. "Victim" represented an effort to dramatize the need for revising England's archaic morals laws which breed blackmail and suicide, and interfere with an individual's freedom of choice in his personal sex life with consenting adults.

"The Children's Hour," "Oscar Wilde," and "Tea and Sympathy" came very close to objectivity in showing the pernicious and destructive effects of hypocrisy and hysteria on persons whose only fault is their abnormality.

"Suddenly Last Summer" was notable for Liz Taylor's finest performance and for Tennessee Williams' fascinating if elusive script. Liz's homosexual cousin, Sebastian, and Katherine Hepburn, his mother, formed a bizarre Oedipal alliance while Taylor went through a nervous breakdown recalling Sebastian's strange effect on their lives.

"Advise and Consent" is an example of Otto Preminger's ability to suggest a controversial subject (Don Murray's war-time homosexual affair) without giving it depth. Preminger has an incriminating letter flashed on the screen to indicate Murray's reason for suicide upon being blackmailed. The letter was not in the book; thus Preminger made the episode more sensational.

"Lust Ladies" qualifies as a movie that does absolutely nothing to help the public understand the homosexual problem. There are others too, equally forgettable.

It should be most worthwhile to see the film industry move in a constructive direction in the near future to treat this problem with the dignity and care it deserves. Until this happens, the situation is wretched.

Convention Not A Mockery

Democrats Hit DTH Charges

Editors, The Tar Heel:

We would like to take issue with several statements which appeared in the April 19, 1964, DTH in conjunction with the article and editorial on the 1964 UNC Bipartisan Mock Political Convention.

Mr. Charles Hooks, chairman of the UNC Young Republicans Club, stated that it was difficult to get hold of copies of the Democratic Party Platform, and that he "saw quite a few (delegates) without them." As co-authors of the platform, we can and will state categorically that there were more than enough copies made—700 were printed. These were distributed at a meeting of delegation chairmen, held a few days prior to the convention, as well as the first two nights of the convention (Thursday and Friday). As we were handing out these platforms at the door, many people declined to take one. Furthermore, had we run out of copies, several hundred copies could have been supplied within five minutes. This, therefore, cannot be used as an excuse for withdrawal from the convention—a withdrawal that was later rescinded. The attempted use of this excuse, however, makes it more obvious that Mr. Hooks' attempts to force the reading of the platforms (the Republican platform contained five pages, the Democratic, seven) can only be looked at as dilatory tactics.

Mr. Hooks also stated that the Democratic platform did not have a preamble. This statement is false. The platform, as a matter of fact, contained a basic preamble, clearly labeled as such, and, in addition, one preamble for each of the seven sections of the platform. If Mr. Hooks had asked, these seven sectional preambles could have been incorporated into the basic preamble within a few moments. I assume that Mr. Hooks had seen the platform prior to Friday night, and he could have easily asked us to change the construction of the platform in this manner.

In your editorial, as in the Republican statement concerning the Mock Political Convention, the honor of the chair is cast in doubt, the implication being that the chairman was biased. As we understand it, the selection of the chairman was made by the Executive Committee of the Convention, composed, incidentally, of more Republicans than Democrats. If Mr. Hooks objected to the Committee's choice, then he had ample opportunity to complain ahead of time, rather than trying to wreck the convention by withdrawal.

Your statement that the convention was ". . . a power struggle for the sole purpose of vanity" is a cruel and entirely unjustifiable remark that does no justice to the many people, of both sides, who put considerable effort and time into trying to make this convention work. We respect and admire those Republicans led by Jim Huchens who had the courage and convictions to stay and fight to what was probably a bitter end.

You also mentioned the 450 persons ". . . not in the power elite . . ." not having anything to show for their efforts. This statement obviously shows that the DTH had no idea of what was involved in trying to do the work at hand. For days and even weeks before the convention we were desperate for volunteers to help work on the convention. Meetings were held, and every possible effort was made to stir up interest. What happened? On no night was the convention anywhere near full. These things, it would seem, indicate that there was no "power elite," but, rather, in typical Carolina fashion, a few people were forced to do most of the work.

You also stated that, ". . . petty people do petty things in a petty manner." Perhaps, considering all the people in the world, we are petty. Perhaps, considering all the things done in the world, what we done was petty. Perhaps, considering the way things are done in the world, the way we did what we did was petty. But to those of us, on both sides, who worked hard and long to write a platform, get it ratified, nominate and elect a President and Vice-President, your words are somewhat less than appreciated.

It is statements like yours, made without a complete knowledge of the facts, that do more to wreck or make less effective such activities than all the political maneuvering (after all, this was a political bipartisan convention) that took place on the floor.

Negroes Lacking In Symposium

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Were there no members of the Negro community in government, in education, in law, in economics, or in the arts qualified to speak to us on some topic within the general bounds set by the theme of the 1964 Carolina Symposium?

As a "bystander" in the present controversy, I would welcome the opportunity to judge the Negro community fairly on the merit of its accomplishments, especially in related fields of social responsibility. Members of this community who insist on casting themselves in front of cars, bulldozers, trains, taxis, sedan chairs, camel caravans, snowplows, steam rollers, jinrikishas, and roller coasters succeed in eliciting a negative attitude, to say the least, within many of us toward the entire group. It is my belief that a man like Ralph Bunch can speak with authority on national and international affairs. There also must be others whose expert opinions can counter-balance the distasteful impressions made by radical elements within the Negro community.

I feel the Carolina Symposium might enhance its already distinguished place on this campus by making it a point to invite outstanding Negro speakers who not only can inform us on important issues, but also can play a significant role in helping us to evaluate all the facets of this critical situation which continues to clobber us "bystanders" over our collective head.

Fringe Hurts Rights Bill

By WILLIAM S. WHITE

Washington — The most effective opponents of the administration's civil rights bill are no longer the Southern senators who day by day level upon it an attack which, even if wrong-headed, is grave and responsible and within tohe American tradition of decent dissent.

The true focus of danger to the bill has predictably shifted to a fringe lot of bitter extremists among the Negro leadership who now openly challenge the rule of law and reason.

These are the people who, crying for the redress of wrongs to their race, are themselves doing immense wrong not only to the fabric of civility and order in this nation but to the very legislative cause of civil rights to which they profess so much devotion.

These are the people who compel such a man as Senator Frank Lausche of Ohio, himself a perfect minority-group symbol as a totally "non-Anglo Saxon" politician of Balkan background, to rise in the Senate in memorable courage.

He rises, this man whose whole career has been forwarded by responsible minority groups, in denunciation of so-called civil rights pressures in Cleveland which he solemnly indicts as "chaos and disorder" ordered by men indifferent to the future life of the United States.

These are the people who in New York—that city which of all cities has been sensitive herein denunciation of so-called civil rights demand—publicly threaten to disrupt the World's Fair itself in behalf of "civil rights."

These brutal and senseless demonstrations are not the work—they cannot be the work—of reasonable men seeking reform. These are mob actions meant not to persuade free men in fair debate but to frighten timid men regardless of fairness and reason. These are meant to intimidate, if not to paralyze, great urban centers and, in the end, to intimidate the Senate of the United States.

It is, of course, true that this sort of thing is not the work of the great majority of Negro leaders and Negro organizations. But *the majority of these leaders are sometimes all but help*less before a small and implacable minority within a minority group. Legitimate protest is perverted by violent and reckless men, just as honest anger at a revolting murder can lead to the unspeakable crime of lynching.

Now, in Cleveland, in New York, and elsewhere, the lynch spirit is being loosed. And once loosed, this dreadful thing is surpassingly hard to control or to contain. Here, in the deepest and truest sense of the term, is un-American activity at its worst. Here is "political activity" which has blood in its nostrils.

And, to go from the philosophic to the merely practical, this sort of thing is hardening the atmosphere in the Senate. It is hardening that atmosphere not among the Southerners, who will in any case never accept the civil rights bill, but rather within the decisive non-Southern political center.

This thus far uncommitted non-Southern political center is in no way hostile to civil rights as such. But it will never allow itself to be arrogantly pushed into approving legislation simply by expressed and implied threats that it "must," on pain of seeing widespread civil disorder this summer and fall.

All those who truly wish to see progress in this field will do well to listen, before it is too late, to the Lausches of the Senate, and to heed as well the long warnings of history: The Senate of the United States simply cannot be intimidated in this way. Demonstrations of every kind—now even including those not overtly lawless—are already beginning to work in reverse.

The civil rights bill is now under grave threats, but not from those opponents who are honorably opposing it but could never in the world alone defeat it. It is under that threat from self-styled supporters who seek legislation by force and fear and anarchy.

Freedom Group Needs Funds

A drive to raise $9,000 to pay court costs for civil rights demonstrators was launched yesterday by the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee. The $9,000 needs to be raised by Thursday.

The drive was begun to help keep the demonstrators, who are currently on trial in Hillsboro, from serving active jail terms.

Superior Court Judge Raymond Mallard has suspended many of the sentences with the stipulation that each of the 117 defendants pay court costs, which have been running around $80 each.

Speaking for the Freedom Committee, Pat Cusick said contributions could be sent to The Chapel Hill Freedom Committee, Box 382, Chapel Hill. Checks should be made payable to the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee —Legal Fund.

Contributions may also be sent to Freedom Committee Legal Fund c/o Mechanics and Farmers Bank, Fayetteville St. Branch, Durham, N. C.

Green Sprouts Club

Members of the Green Sprouts Garden Club will see slides of wildflowers found in the Chapel Hill area, and hear a brief talk on the subject by Mrs. Wayne A. Danielson at 8 p.m. Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Earle E. Peacock, Jr., West University Drive.

Tar Heels Nip Blue Devils In 14th Inning

By PETE GAMMONS

"Old Folks" Bill Haywood yesterday pulled off one of the best relief performances in his career at UNC to save the Tar Heels and preserve their unbeaten ACC record by beating Duke, 6-2 in fourteen innings.

Haywood came on in the bottom of the fifth with one on and no out, and pitched ten scoreless innings, limiting the Blue Devils to only four hits. Besides doing the pitching, Haywood linetd a single to center in the top of the fourteenth to break the 2-2 tie and force Duke pitcher Charlie Young to "blow up."

But the 6-2 score was deceiving, for the game was exciting all the way to the last inning. The Tar Heels drew first blood in the third against starting pitcher Merrill Ambler when Dickie Prindle reached second when right fielder Sonny Odom dropped his fly ball, and rode home on Jim Speight's double.

But the Blue Devils came right back with two runs in the bottom of the inning. John Gutekunst singled; Ambler singled, and Tommy Taylor drove home one run with another single. Biff Bracy bounced still another single to right to score pitcher R. D. Carson, running for Ambler.

Bill Brown lined a triple to left center to open the sixth, and tied the game, scoring on Bob Hundley's sacrifice fly to center. UNC got a chance in the ninth to break the tie when Ken Boykin singled and Bill Taylor, running for Boykin, was moved to second on a sacrifice, but Dick Fleming and Haywood both lined out.

Gutekunst was the only man to get as far as second off the "veteran" right hander, getting there via his own single and a walk to Ambler. Otherwise Haywood was overpowering, striking out nine, and walking only two.

When coach Ace Parker brought in Charlie Young from the bullpen in the tenth, the Carolina supporters thought they could wrap it up quick, since Young had made only one previous appearance. But the gigantic righthander thottled the Tar Heels on one hit for four innings before he finally gave out.

Bob Kaufman, who replaced Taylor when he was lifted for a pinch hitter, started the rally off by walking. After Gary Black fouled out to catcher Scotty Glacken, Kaufman stole second base, and held there while center fielder Gutekunst carefully watched Dickie Fleming's fly ball drop three feet in front of him. Haywood then singled to center for the tie-breaking run. But with the pressure snapped, Young cracked. Prindle bounced a single off first baseman Stan Crisson's glove scoring Fleming, and Jim Speight scored pinch runner Buddy Cohoon on a fly to right. Bill Brown then walked, and among a shower of Duke mockeries, Ken Willard drove home the final run with a single to left.

MONOGRAM CLUB MEETS THURSDAY

The Monogram Club will meet tomorrow at 7:30 in the Monogram Club Room in Woollen Gym. New officers will be elected for the coming year, and there will be a financial report on the Alumni-Varsity game.

Big 4 Sports Day Needs Performers

With the Big Four Sports Day looming near, the managers of the respective teams are trying to finish out their search for talent.

Softball captain Al Hamilton has announced that there will be a tryout for positions on the UNC team Thursday afternoon at 4:30 on intramural field eight.

Newly appointed badminton captain Mike Michaels, a member of the championship Phi Delt team, is desperately looking for players. He lost last year's "big three" stars, Jack and Mac Rugheimer and Charlie Ives. He doesn't have as much talent as he'd like, and anyone who considers himself a star should contact Michaels at the Phi Delt House, 968-9147.

Outing Club president Bob Perry needs help in the bait casting, trap shooting, and target rifle divisions. He says he now has a winning archery team, but needs more help. He lives in 325 Avery, and can be reached by phone at 968-9116.

The horseshoe tryouts for the Big Four Day will be held tomorrow night at 8:30 outside the Tin Can.

Except for one game, all softball play has been concluded in the fraternity and dormitory divisions. The Graduates will end their league play tomorrow. Playoffs in dormitory and fraternity divisions will begin tomorrow.

The Fraternity Blues will open the horseshoe finals tonight, while the other three divisions will have their finals tomorrow night. The tennis semifinals will be concluded by the end of this week.

Last year's winner, Sigma Nu, is one of the thirteen entries in the water polo tournament starting this week. They are the favorites again and are the only team to draw a first round bye.

The seasonal Chapel Hill weather has slowed progress in the golf tournament. The second round should be concluded this week. The bowling quarterfinals should be over by Friday.

Hey Boys! Girls Will Play Tennis Here Saturday

UNC's varsity tennis courts will be the battleground once again for the Women's Athletic Association's seventh annual Tennis Day this Saturday.

Women's singles and doubles teams from 11 North Carolina colleges will be participating. Play begins at 10 a.m. and resumes after lunch at two p.m. Admission is free and the public is invited, and that includes all interested males.

UNC's singles entries, Susan Mott and Liz Hutchins, placed first and second respectively at the NC-SC Tennis Day Tournament at Converse College last weekend. Vivian Conklin and Lu Etta Harris will compete in the doubles event for UNC.

The 10 other schools competing are UNC at Greensboro, Duke, Sacred Heart, Meredith, Wake Forest, Appalachian State Teachers College, Queens, Atlantic Chrstian, Western Carolina, and Elon.

Cassius X Seeks September Rematch

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — William Faversham, manager of heavyweight champion Cassius Clay, say Tuesday Clay's sponsoring group is negotiating for a title rematch with Sonny Liston in September but insists on certain conditions being met.

Faversham said Louisville "is being considered," as the site for the fight. He added that he had been assured by Kentucky Boxing Commissioner Bob Evans that the fight would be approved if the conditions specified by Clay's sponsoring group of 11 Louisville businessmen are met.

Faversham listed the conditions as:

—Liston must be reinstated as a top contender by the World Boxing Association and obtain a license to fight. Liston was dropped from the WBA's top ten heavyweight rankings this month after the U.S. Senate investigation into the business affairs of Inter-Continental Promotions, Inc.

—The present criticized return bout contract with Inter-Continental, which Clay signed to get the championship fight with Liston, be canceled.

Yes Friends, It's Here . . . (The Derby!)

It's here at last.

That famous (or infamous) day of gaiety—the Sigma Chi Derby—will rock Kenan Stadium to its ancient foundations today beginning at 2:30.

John Davis, co-chairman for the 19th annual blast, announced that the Sigma Chi's have been overcome with generosity. In short, it's all free and everybody can watch . . . from a safe distance, of course.

A 1:30 parade featuring sorority members will open the activities at the Planetarium parking lot. Also taking part in the events will be the Stray Greeks and the Nurses' Dorm.

The mysterious "secret event" which has shrouded the campus for days will be unveiled at the Derby. Other events include relay, sack and three-legged races.

As if that isn't enough, the inimitable Sigma Chi's have scheduled a Hit the Greek (pie-throwing) contest and a Miss Modern Venus beauty contest. Fifteen lovely coeds will compete for the title.

Judge Stewart Will Step Down May 1st

William S. Stewart, an instructor in Buisness Law, is closing out his 13 year career as Judge of Chapel Hill Recorder's Court effective May 1st.

Stewart gave "pressing personal business" as the reason for his resignation from the elective post, in a letter to Mayor Sandy McClamroch.

The Mayor said the Board of Aldermen will appoint a successor to serve out the one remaining year of Stewart's two-year term.

McClamroch noted that potential replacements for Stewart's post don't have to be lawyers but they must be residents of Chapel Hill.

Stewart's law partner, Robert Midgette, is vice recorder or assistant judge of the court, an appointive position. It's uncertain if he might be in line to succeed to Stewart's post.

Prose 'N' Cons

By HAYWOOD CLAYTON as told to
KERRY SIPE

I, myself, had never even seen the inside of a prison, so when Jim Hess of Atlanta asked us if we'd like to debate at the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary, I had mixed emotions about the whole thing.

Bob Powell and I were representing UNC at the West Point Debate Regionals in Atlanta.

Hess, who was a public relations man in the city, worked voluntarily in the Penitentiary Rehibilitations Program. Between rounds, at the debate tournament, he asked us if we'd like to debate two of the Federal prisoners.

We jumped at the chance.

The prison from the distance looked like something from Eliot Ness' Untouchables. It was built around 1890, and the tall rock towers were mossy with age.

We stopped at the prison gate and were searched from head to foot. They took all sharp objects away from us and emptied our pockets completely. At the time, we thought it was rather silly. We had to wait outside for some time while our admission was cleared through the Warden's Office.

Even after they let us in the gate, an armed guard followed us around at all times. You would have thought we wanted to steal the place.

Our guard followed us up some stairs and into what looked like a typical UNC classroom. We almost felt at home until we glanced out the windows and saw them barred and locked. Man, they weren't out to take chances at this place!

Guards led in the two men who were to be our opponents. One was in his 40's the other about 60. Both were serving life terms for capital crimes.

Contrary to what I had expected, both were very intelligent and intellectually sharp.

They had done a great deal of research on the topic used by collegiate debators all over the nation, Federal Aid to Higher Education. Both our opponents had apparently spent a great deal of time in the prison library. They had some information on the subject that would have stumped a lot of the best teams we met at Atlanta.

What surprised me most, I guess, was the vigor that the two prisoners used against us. They seemed genuinely interested and excited at the chance to debate with us.

Even men from other parts of the prison came to listen to the debate and, when it was over, they all gathered around to ask questions about the debate and about the world outside the prison.

A prisoner photographer came and took our picture. He told us it would be used in the prison newspaper and magazine. Newspaper and magazine! I was beginning to see the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary as the self-sustaining organization it was.

For a long time we sat around with the prisoners, inside a ring of guards with rifles ready, talking about Federal Aid to Higher Education.

It was ironic to me that these men, so far removed from society, should be so interested in the topic, while most of my friends in the Higher Educational System really couldn't care less.

Both our debate and the questions afterwards were taped so that it could be played back later to some of the other prisoners.

We won the debate, but it was a struggle. They were really a couple of sharp men. I'd hate to be a detective trying to pin a crime on one of those guys.

After the debate was over, we were escorted to the prison dining hall for lunch. Here I expected to see rows and rows of long wooden tables with tin utensils at each place. It was, instead, really a very modern room with small tables, and cafeteria style service. The food was even good.

We were given the full tour of the penitentiary. From the 1930's cell blocks to the top of the lookout tower. It just didn't seem authentic without Jimmy Cagney and his pin-stripe suit and Tommy-gun.

In contrast to the rough, violent look of the people and the harsh appearance of the place, though, we were treated like honored guests.

When the Warden himself drove us back to the airport, I thought the whole day over.

We had had a good debate, were treated like kings, and had seen a side of life that had never been presented to us except through the twisted image of a television screen. I was glad we had come.

Demonstrators Chant As LBJ Opens Fair

By EDWARD V. McCARTHY

NEW YORK (UPI) — Presiednt Johnson, speaking against a background of chanting civil rigats demonstrators, Wednesday dedicated the 1964-65 World's Fair with a pela for world peace and equality for all men.

The heavily guarded Chief Executive, speaking under gray skies in a light rain, dedicated the $500 million fairgrounds in ceremonies at Singer Bowl and the U. S. pavilion.

"I prophesy peace is not only possible, I predict it is coming nearer," Johnson said.

"I am sure that speakers at the next World's Fair will look back with amusement at how greatly we underestimated the genius of man," the President added. He recalled that the phophecies of the 1939 World's Fair, held on the same site, had been "far outstripped by reality."

Hundreds of civil rights demonstrators gathered in and around the fair and scores were arrested in picketing, traffic "stall-ins" and subway disturbances.

More than 200 scuffling demonstartirs inside and outside the fairgrounds were arrested. One policeman was injured.

"Just like Birmingham, just like Birmingham," chanted some of the demonstrators as police led them away. This was a reference to clashes between police and demonstrators during civil rights sit-ins at that Alabama city.

The most serious incident took place during the early moments of the Fair's two-year run when 20 demonstrators tried to stall a subway train enroute to the fairgrounds.

Two of them threw themselves in front of the train, lying near the electrified third rail on ties wet from a drizzling rain. It was at the Rooseveit Avenue Station in Queens which is above ground. Other demonstrators lay down inside the train and prevented the door from closing.

Police with night sticks yanked 17 men and three women off of the train and tracks and rushed them to a police station, some in handcuffs and five of them with heads bloodied.

Traffic on the five major expressways feeding into the fair grounds was "light to moderate," hampering the demonstrators' plans to create a chaotic tie-up. Rain forced a cancellation of the New York Mets' baseball game in adjacent Shea Stadium. This lessoned the traffic load.

Several cars ran out of gas, a couple had "motor" trouble, and at least one car stalled with two flat tires. But as fast as the demonstrators stalled their automobiles, police with tow trucks, dump trucks and even bulldozers moved them out of the way.

Kemp Robbery Is Still A Mystery

No new clues were reported yesterday in the recent robbery of Kemp's Record and Art Shop. A total of $16,000 worth of art pieces and records was stolen from Kemp's between 4 and 8 a.m. Monday by thieves who broke in the rear door.

In addition to about 550 records—most of them sterephonic—jade and ivory faces and bowls, 14 Chinese scrolls (Kemp's entire scroll collection, some of them 1,400 years old) a carved ivory Ming vase, and Oriental sacrificial cups were stolen.

Chapel Hill Detective Howard Pendergraph said that "no new clues have turned up to indicate who the thieves were or where they might be at this time.

"The job" Pendergraph said "was obviously a professional one. They knew what they wanted when they went in there. All the things taken were of definite value."

Pendergraph said there was no indication the thieves had been operating in this area prior to the Kemp robbery, believed to be the largest in the town's history.

Everything but the records is irreplaceable. Kemp collected the items while serving as a Marine courier at the American Embassy in Peking from 1932 to 1940. Since 1955, when trade with Communist China was prohibited, the value of his collection has increased considerably. The value of the art items stolen made full insurance too expensive. Only 60 per cent of their value is recoverable.

The thieves apparently were scared off in the midst of their dawn raid on the store, because thousands of dollars of records and other art items were stacked at the back door. Among them was a $1,000 tapestry, several phonographs, an Oriental stone head, and about 400 more records.

"Price didn't seem to matter to them," said Kemp. "They took whatever appealed to them."

Julia Smith Is Dormitory Woman Of '64

Mrs. Julia Davis Smith, a senior from Raleigh, has been selected by the Carolina Woman's Council as outstanding dormitory woman of the year.

The award is given annually to a Senior woman who has "served her dormitory and the University with diligence, faithfulness and loyalty, and has proved herself to be outstanding in character, personality, leadership and scholarship."

Mrs. Smith, a nursing student, has served as president of the Nurses' Dormitory for the year 1963-64. She has also served as president of the Nurse's sophomore class, corresponding secretary of the Women's Residence Council, chairman of freshman counselors and secretary of the Valkyries. Mrs. Smith has also been active in Sigma Theta Tau and is a member of the Order of the Old Lampshades.

Chancellor William B. Aycock presented the award.

Also honored at the Sunday afternoon reception were Judy Frieder of Cincinnati, Ohio; Susan Dellinger of Charlotte; Patsy Leffler of Portsmouth, Va.; and Anne Vick of Alexandria, Va. All were nominees for the CWC award.

International Awareness

(Editor's note: The following article, written by UNC student Masa Nishihara of Japan, is the third in a series of four articles written by foreign students now attending the University. The series is running in conjunction with "International Student Emphasis Week.")

This week is the International Emphasis Week with colorful programs and exhibits for the whole student body, projected by the International Student Board, a Student Government committee.

The aim is, needless to say, to promote our awareness of international affairs and to fix, as students, our responsibility to world peace. The National Student Association has recognized the importance of national understanding to world peace, and believes that student organizations on the national, regional, and local levels must cooperate in bring to their groups an increased awareness of, and sensitivity toward world affairs, and international relations.

Many may ask, why do we students have to be involved in international problems?

We have to see that history has made up a world community of mutual dependency, regrettably, of mutual distrust. We students must be aware that students should join in striving for the establishment of a world community of mutual trust which is imperative for world peace. We students have failed to assume this responsibility in today's world.

Our responsibility is not to become direct policy-makers, but to build up a basis from which a world of mutual trust may become possible. Students have been a "hidden" class, negiecting the potentialities of their own strength. We are responsible, like other classes of people, for getting rid of the basic obstacles to desirable international relations.

Mutual trust will be born only through mutual understanding. Mutual undestanding will come about only through humble and sincere attitudes toward the problems of our world. By sincere attitudes it is meant that we should be open-hearted and open-minded. The humble attitude urges us to develop positive ones of respect for the qualities and potentialities of men and women outside the boundaries of the nation in which we live.

Those who have been brought up in this continent find it difficult, at the outset, to believe that non-Christian, non-democratic, and non-industrial peoples may possess civilizations which, although profoundly different from their own, nevertheless have values that at the very least deserve their respect, and at the most, their admiration and desire for emulation.

To have a positive attitude of respect for non-Western civilizations is not to deprecate or even repudiate the civilization of the West, but, on the contrary, to enlarge and enrich the lives of Westerners. The same thing is quite applicable to non-Westerners. Students of non-Western cultures should learn humbly what the Westerners have achieved and contributed to the world, and at the same time they should see the mistakes of Westerners, and try not to repeat them.

Furthermore, all of us must keep ourselves from the temptation of confusing material poverty with cultural backwardness, lack of hygiene and medical facilities with ethical shortcomings, and the absence of modern industrialization with a primitive mentality.

Those students who make these errors should attend a Cosmopolitan Club meeting.

Those who believe that non-whites are somehow less capable and less intelligent than whites should go to foreign students on campus and check with them.

Prayer Debate Opens

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House opened hearings Wednesday on the emotionally charged issue of religious exercises in public schools. The chief congressional defender of the practice termed it as American as apple pie and ice cream.

The controversy erupted as soon as Rep. Frank J. Becker (R-N.Y.) had finished reading a three-page statement urging passage of a constitutional amendment permitting voluntary prayers and Bible reading in schools and other public institutions.

Becker's is one of 146 proposed amendments seeking to override recent Supreme Court decisions outlawing public school devotionals as being violations of First Amendment guarantees of free exercise of religion.

No sooner had Becker finished than Rep. Roland Libonati (D-Ill.) suggested that his amendment would threaten the Bill of Rights and permit local officials to prescribe which prayers would be recited.

Becker replied that his only aim was to clarify the Constitution. He said he would not mind changing his amendment to include the words "non-denominational" so that no faith could impose its beliefs on another.

'Concerned Citizens' Group Lobbies For Civil Rights Bill

Eleven representatives of the Committee of Concerned Citizens in Chapel Hill contioued their lobbying efforts in support of the Civil Rights Bill yesterday with a visit to the Washington offices of North Carolina's Senators.

They also visited the Senate to indicate that "not every white Southerner is against the civil rights bill." They said they did not feel North Carolina Senators Sam J. Ervin Jr. and B. Everett Jordon were representing them in opposing the bill.

"The South is not a monolithic group of white people opposing this bill," said Dr. Joseph Straley chairman of the Committee. Mr. Straley is a physics professor at the University.

"There are thousands of white people in the South who feel segregation is a national disgrace and that this bill is essential," he said.

Three other UNC faculty members, Phillip C. Tonne of the Mathematics Department, Allen Reddick of the History Department, and Charles D. Wright of the English Department, were included in the group.

Also in the group were Mrs. John Gulick, whose husband is a UNC professor of anthropology. Miss Judith O'Fallon, a math instructor at Bennett College for Negroes in Greensboro, and Mrs. Harry Smith, wife of a Chapel Hill Presbyterian minister.

Representing student opinion were Mr. and Mrs. Burton Segall, graduate students in the UNC School of Public Health, and Mrs. Eleanor Ethridge, wife of former DTH Co-Editor David Ethridge.

The group arrived in Washington Sunday and visited a number of senators' offices Monday and Tuesday. Many senators who support the bill were pleased to see white Southerners speak in favor of the measure, Mr. Straley said.

The 11-member delegation represented about 200 Chapel Hill residents who feel the bill is necessary, he said, adding that other delegations from this group would visit the Senate later.

Mr. Straley said the 200-member group was formed as an outgrowth of efforts to win a public accommodations ordinance for Chapel Hill.

The failure to enact the ordinance also convinced Mr. Straley and his followers that a federal law was necessary, that "persuasion and voluntary action on a local level just won't do the job."

Mr. Straley said they had been unable to see either Sen. Ervin or Sen. Jordan on their visits but had talked with the senator's aides.

In Mr. Ervin's office, he said, they talked with Paul Kitchen, the former 8th District congressman now working for the senator.

"He tried to argue with us about the bill," said Mrs. Smith. "I wasn't convinced by his arguments. We've all read the bill. We know what's in it."

In Sen. Jordan's office the group was met by William Cochrane, who helped arrange some appointments for them.

One For Three Is A Bad Percentage

Class officers fall into many categories. A few, and an extraordinary few at that, are good; still more fall into that grey area of inactivity in which they do nothing constructive but do not manage to make the situation worse by their presence; the remainder (and probably the largest group) are simply terrible.

To hold a class office should be more than an honor. It is a high responsibility as well, and the past has shown that more often than not nothing is done. Fall campaign promises have been long forgotten before the leaves have vanished from the trees, and what was ballyhooed as a good year soon turns out to be indistinguishable from the undistinguished years that have gone before.

We were looking through some old issues of the DTH the other day and ran across a special feature we ran in the fall — "Meet The Candidates." We had gotten the candidates for class office to turn in their platforms and biographies, and devoted some 130 column-inches to this. We hoped to give the campus some aid in selecting their officers, as well as spur interest in the election.

In looking over the promises, we find that very few of them have been turned into reality. Granted, some of them were unfeasible to begin with, but many more were simply cast aside. With one notable exception, which we shall point out momentarily, everyone running for office either said things he didn't mean, or forgot what he said once the votes were in. It is fitting that we resurrect some of these schemes for your scrutiny:

For instance, a candidate for president of his class said, "We will retain the 'Teacher of the Month' and 'Junior of the Month' programs." This would take all of 20 minutes a month.

The gentleman was elected, and that was the end of that.

The candidate for Vice-President proposed a "Junior Day, much like the Senior Class has now. It would take a lot of planning, but if it was done right everyone would have a good time."

It must have taken too much planning.

The secretary sang the praises of a class scrapbook.

"I would like to see one compiled," quoth she, "in order that the records and achievements of our class could be saved." We lose again.

The Treasurer had several ideas, one of which was brought to fruition — a Bake Sale. Unfortunately, she also decided to propose a Merchant's Day and something called a Junior Classics Basketball game. They didn't quite make

The Social Chairman was smart—she didn't make any promises.

But the class produced a few things —there was a combo party, as the president promised. However, he managed to schedule it at the same time as a freshman basketball game and nobody showed up except the president and the combo.

He also promised a Dormitory Communications Committee, which did a great deal of good in the women's dorms. It fizzled among the men, but this is none of the fault of the class' leadership.

Well, they batted about .250, which first-string for the Kansas City Athletics.

Going down to the next class, the president promised five things, none of which materialized; inter-class athletic competition, a sophomore-junior dance, an academic scholarship, a dance with WC and a co-rec carnival.

We hope you weren't looking forward to these wondrous events, because they never happened.

He did, however, accomplish one of the best things a class officer has attempted. He has arranged for a compendium of the majors available at Carolina as seen through the eyes of students.

It will be completed before long, and should prove valuable to entering freshmen and juniors for years to come.

And now, faint hearts, to the single bright beacon of success in this tale of bleak despair — the Freshman Class. Usually the most disorganized and haphazard of all the classes, the Freshmen this year have somehow managed to avoid the pitfalls of laziness and have accomplished at least as much, if not more, than all their counterparts combined.

This success has been due in large part to an outstanding slate of officers, headed by an energetic president in the form of Jim Brame. Brame cannot be given all the applause for the achievements of his class, but he is responsible for much of it. Such things as the Talent Show, which packed Memorial Hall at 75 cents a head; a bake sale; and the Merchant's Day held yesterday at The Hub were highly successful, and the Freshmen should indeed be proud of themselves.

We sincerely hope the Freshman beacon will shed some light on the outlook of our recently elected and future class officers. Some people have been doing their part (and in some cases a good deal more), but apathy and failure are two adjectives which apply in far too many instances. If our "leaders" are not aroused, there seems to be no real reason to bother with class officers, and we might spare ourselves a lot of disappointment and do away with them altogether (think of the saving in campaign posters alone).

Let's hope that we will never reach this stage but rather that the freshmen have started something — something big.

On The Arrival Of Ross Barnett

The Carolina Forum, for all those who never have heard of it or are have forgotten about it, is an organization designed to bring speakers to the campus for the benefit of the students.

It has a budget of over $2,000, and in the past has sponsored such famed people as Malsolm X, William F. Buckley and Norman Thomas.

The first program of the Forum this year comes Monday night, when Ross Barnett, former governor of Mississippi, will visit these hallowed halls for an address in Memorial Hall.

Barnett, you may recall, was leader of that state when James Meredith enrolled at Ole Miss. We are sure that you will find it an interesting evening, and perhaps even an enlightening one.

And while you're there, think about the Forum. When John Ulfelder introduces Barnett, give him a nice hand. He's finally in the spotlight.

The Negro Leadership

"The Negro Vanguard" by Richard Bardolph. Rinehart and Co., New York, 1959. 341 pages.

By HENRY McINNIS

This book is a testament of hope, reaffirmation of the writer's belief in the essential health of the democratic American tradition. It is a study of leadership . . . the leaders of the Negro race from 1770 to the present who fought their way against prejudice, poverty and ignorance to take their places among the country's notable men and women.

In an attempt to answer the question: "What raised these particular individuals above their fellows?," Mr. Bardolph has examined family backgrounds, economic and community environments, educational influences, the role of accident and the importance of sympathetic white people.

As a backdrop for each successive generation of leading Negroes, the main currents of the nation's social development are sketched and the progress of the Negro race summarized. Sound ambitions? It most certainly is, but the book covers a great deal of Negro history, particularly as it points to distinguished Negroes and their achievements and why they, as individuals, were able to stand out above the ordinary.

North Carolina readers will be interested to know that author Bardolph is a professor at Women's College at Greensboro. The book was made possible by a Guggenheim fellowship and the Research Council of UNC at Greensboro.

"The time has come to lodge the Negro movers and shakers of American social history more firmly in the record," writes the author, "and to assemble, while they may still be discovered, the scattered and elusive facts about their social origins." With this purpose, the book proceeds to its mission, often with authority, always with resolve.

Bardolph suggests with considerable persuasion that the data he has accumulated from his extensive face-to-face interviews with 131 of the "most famous Negro Americans" and his intensive searching in the nation's largest libraries have unearthed evidence "that will not only enable us to spell out some of the facts about the rise of the Negro vanguard; it is sufficient also to show that the record is sharply at variance with the stereotypes and facile generalizations from which the image of the tenth Amercan has been compounded by the other nine."

The author discusses the momentous changes in the status of the Negro from 1770 to 1831 and describes the conditions of slave life which varied enormously from time to time, state to state, and plantation to plantation.

"Slave codes differed markedly," writes Bardolph, "both on paper and in practice, and masters varied from brutal tyrants to kindly heads of closely knit households." The effects of emancipation on the Negro race and individual freed slaves makes fascinating reading. While this book offers a sophisticated telling of the Civil War and its aftermath, its power derives from concentration on the Negro and what happened to his race.

One of the most enjoyable and readable sections, at least for this reviewer, contains the contributions and origins of Negro entertainers, musicians and writers whose fame formed the cornerstone by which the white community could tolerate increasing examples of equality and excellence. Such names as Louis Armstrong, Pearl Bailey, Count Basie, Harry Belafonte, Nat King Cole, Dorothy Dandridge, Sammy Davis Jr. and Lena Horne appear in the chapter, "Behold the Promised Land," and the author explains the significance of each one's success story in terms of background, education, personality, opportunities and even skin color!

The ordeals suffered by Marion Anderson and Paul Robeson are examined and contrasted. Anderson encountered segregated audiences on her national tours but in most cases she did not protest until pressure groups forced her to withdraw from Southern concerts. Robeson's fierce refusal to perform under Jim Crow conditions and his subsequent attraction to Communism and socialism in the 1930's is analyzed with fair play and perception not often accorded Robeson by most writers in this country.

The rising influence and function of the Negro press with such examples as Ebony Magazine, the "Negro Life Magazine," and the Negro press in general, is discussed in detail. Booker T. Washington and his conservative leadership is compared with more recent leaders who rejected his perpetuation of the status quo in racial advancement.

Among the more superficial biographies offered in the book include the NAACP's Roy Wilkins, James Farmer of CORE, Harlem Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, Ralphe Bunche and the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. The author could have dug deeper into his subjects if he had not catelogued them too rigidly and pigeon-holed them artificially according to their reputations and professions. Differences between individuals are well appreciated and brought out but there is yet a curious atmosphere of the old March of Time documentaries which lends a forced note to an otherwise beautifully assembled and conceived work.

Esser Makes Statement

North Carolina Fund Selects Its Projects

George S. Esser, executive director of the North Carolina Fund, announced the selection of the community projects for the Fund Monday. This is Mr. Esser's statement at the time of the announcement.—Ed Note

Today, as you know, is a most important milestone in the life of the North Carolina Fund. It marks a time at which we move out of a six-month phase involving preparation and planning and selection and into a four-year phase of actual work in communities to find and show new ways to break the poverty cycle.

But the Fund's work in the past six months hasn't been simply a matter of organization and paperwork. In fact, the past six months has seen a period of activity in North Carolina that in many ways is totally unprecedented in this, or any other state.

North Carolina's communities have surprised people all over the nation by reacting as they have to the Fund's call to action. Acting only on the prospect of getting a few foundation dollars for their communities, leaders in 66 out of the state's 100 counties have met and talked and planned ways to give a better chance to those of our citizens caught in the cycle of poverty.

With a minimum of help and advice from the Fund's professional staff, 50 North Carolina areas have produced documents laying out their hopes and plans for solving their problems of poverty. We are confident that these action proposals are the foundations of a great, general movement against poverty that will be joined eventually by the leaders of the other 34 counties of our state.

After these 50 communities submitted their proposals to the Fund, the Fund in turn sent a team to visit each community and talk about the proposal, the community, and its problems. The fact that all 50 visits were completed in five weeks is in itself a tribute to the dedication of these communities, and the Fund's board of directors, who participated in these all-important, face-to-face, meetings.

From the Fund's earliest days, its board of directors realized the importance of selecting a group of communities that would represent a true cross-section of the state's poverty problems. There had to be projects in the Mountains, in the Piedmont, and in Eastern North Carolina. There had to be projects exploring solutions to rural poverty problems in sparsely-populated areas. And there had to be projects working with the huge numbers of the poverty-stricken living in large cities, many of whom have migrated from the state's rural areas.

By exploring a cross-section of North Carolina's poverty problems, the Fund hopes to learn and show solutions of benefit to all of the state's communities. For all of our communities share this problem, even if the people, the economy and the environment differ.

When the Fund's board of directors sat down a few weeks ago to start deciding which communities should receive grants, they drew on their own experiences from the 50 community visits, plus careful evaluations and summaries of the proposals—compiled by the Fund's professional staff.

Their decisions — the seven communities announced today to receive major grants—represent, in my opinion, the kind of cross-section of communities that is essential if we are to find and demonstrate ways to open up opportunity, and help people throw off frustration and despair.

At the same time, the members of the board, and I, are hopeful that, at a later date, we can find it possible to finance a few more demonstration projects in some medium-sized urban, and some completely-rural areas.

As for the projects announced today, you are asking, "how do we get them started?" The Fund's task is to help each of these seven communities complete the organization of its action committee, select a full-time, professional project director, and re-examine its proposed action program with the help of the project director and special consultants furnished by the Fund.

Announcement letters today are in the mail to these seven community-action committees. This week we will begin a series of conferences with the community representatives, to make specific plans for helping them get their program underway.

The Fund will make a small initial grant, for organizational and administrative costs, to each selected community. This will finance a project director and his office, plus the consultants who will provide special advice on specific phases of the community's program.

Once the community's specific program plans have been decided, and a firm budget has been agreed upon, the initial grant will be followed by a four-year grant for organizational expenses only.

Now, it is obvious that when 50 communities ask for help, and seven are picked for assistance, the other 43 are wondering "where do we go from here."

Since early February, when these proposals poured into the Fund office, we have recognized, and discussed the need for helping each of these communities build on the momentum already started by the committees submitting those proposals.

As a first step, the Fund board already has set aside a small sum for making minor grants to a few counties. This money also would provide training for people already working in those counties, and technical assistance from the Fund's staff and its consultants.

Since the beginning of the Fund, North Carolina's state agencies have been giving attention to ways in which they might work with these communities on their poverty problems. We expect that aid from those sources will be announced from time to time, as these agencies' plans are completed.

Finally, at the risk of counting chickens before they're hatched, we must consider what will happen to our program if the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 — President Johnson's anti-poverty bill—is passed, as there is every indication it will be.

The heart of this bill is title II, which would set aside over $300 million for grants to communities submitting comprehensive, community-action proposals dealing with the problems of poverty, and lack of opportunity.

This language, "comprehensive, community-action proposals," sounds familiar, of course. It has been used from the start by The North Carolina Fund, with the result that leaders of 66 counties already have been through the process of thinking and planning for comprehensive poverty-fighting programs. These 50 proposals represent 50 giant steps by communities of our state—steps giving them a head start toward participation in the sweeping program now being considered by the United States Congress.

I can promise these communities that the Fund will provide every possible assistance in helping them, and the 34 North Carolina counties not originally participating in the proposal process, to sharpen their program and their processes, for participating in forthcoming federal programs.

When the Fund was born last year, the original grants made to it were called "seed money." This has proved to be an apt term. The Fund's money will be used to help our communities take advantage of all of the resources available, inside and out of the state, to help our people help themselves.

A Possible GOP Ticket

By JAY G. HAYDEN

WASHINGTON — Lodge and Nixon (no the reverse).

If ever there was, in terms of the horse racer, "a long winter book bet," this is it, but it may be a good bet, mainly because there is no better ticket for the Republican convention to choose.

Most important there is a give and take, tit for tat, relationship between Lodge and former President Eisenhower, and Nixon was Eisenhower's right hand for eight years. Nixon has said he would accept the vice presidential nomination.

IN 1952 THE THEN Sen. Lodge of Massachusetts took the lead in propelling Gen. Eisenhower into the presidency; and as a result Lodge sacrificed his otherwise almost certain Senate seat.

Ike clearly owes Lodge something for this. There are reports that Eisenhower, approached on that basis, said, "Well, let's see what happens in New Hampshire."

And in that state's March 11 primary Lodge spreadeagled the Republican preference field. Running as a mere write-in candidate against the formally entered and vigorously campaigning Goldwater and Rockefeller, Lodge not only won hands down in popular votes but grabbed all of the state's convention delegates.

ROBERT R. MULLEN, national coordinator of the Draft Lodge Committee, says the whole project began with one man, business executive Irving Salomon.

"President Eisenhower," says Mullen, "appointed Mr. Salomon a delegate to the United Nations." And after the assassination of President Kennedy, Mullen and Salomon conferred with Eisenhower and Lodge and then joined up as leaders of a Lodge boom for presidential nomination.

The Lodge drive has been going great guns ever since, the latest being a prophecy by the respected Harris poll last Monday as to the Oregon presidential primary on May 15, giving Lodge 46 per cent, as against 17 per cent for Nixon, 14 for Goldwater, 13 for Rockefeller, 4 for Scranton and one for Mrs. Margaret Chase Smith.

SAYS THIS POLLSTER: "Lodge is winning almost three times the number of votes of his nearest rival, Nixon, and is within striking range of passing the 50 per cent mark against the entire field."

After Oregon there is really only one important presidential primary to go — California — where Rockefeller and Goldwater presently seem likely to kill off each other.

In the 1952 Republican race, at the opening of which Sen. Taft of Ohio seemed easily ahead; it was Lodge who then journeyed to Paris and brought home the word, revealed in a press conference on Jan. 7, 1952, that Gen. Eisenhower would run for President if he received a "clear-cut call to political duty."

LODGE SAID EISENHOWER had assured him and others that "his voting record was that of a Republican . . . his political convictions coinciding with enlightened Republican doctrine . . . the famly tradition was Republican."

Lodge told the reporters that he was entering Eisenhower in the New Hampshire primary, despite full knowledge that Eisenhower would not leave his job as head of NATO (by designation of Democratic President Truman) to campaign in New Hampshire or any other state.

Further inviting a draft, however, the general issued another statement declaring that, "of course there is no question of the right of American citizens to organize in pursuit of their common convictions . . . . Sen. Lodge and his associates are exercising their right in any attempt to place before me next July a duty that would transcend my present responsibilities."

IN THE NEW Hampshire voting on March 11, 1952, Eisenhower led in popular votes with 46,497 and bagged all the state's convention delegates. Of two opponents for Republican preference who trudged the state's snowy hills and talked themselves hoarse, Sen. Taft received 35,820 and Harold Stassen 6,594.

Lodge today looks to be in much the same position as Eisenhower in 1952, including a diplomatic job abroad provided by a Democratic President and thus protective against the slings and arrows of opponents, Republicans or Democrats.

'Follow-Up Needed To See Symposium's Effect'

Symposium Advisor David Lapkin

By HARRY DeLUNG

Dr. David Lapkin is a short, stocky man with a quick smile and an enthusiastic gleam in his eyes. In the past year, he has had one of the most demanding jobs open to UNC faculty members: faculty advisor to the Carolina Symposium.

The professor of economics has been praised as "the conscience of the Symposium," "the power behind the throne," and "the most indispensable person on the Symposium."

It is not surprising that he has worked so diligently with students on this year's program; it is a project in which he believes strongly. "I think it is the most worthwhile thing students do here," he says.

"Education tends to become compartmentalized in a large university. This is particularly true of fields of high specialization; students are unaware of the controversies that exist outside their own area of studies.

"The greatest value of the Symposium is that it gives students the opportunity to explore subjects that they never knew were significant.

"The approach is simple. We take a broad subject and give it a pompous-sounding title. If we can attract the student audience, our goal is to challenge the old concepts that they have grown up with; this is the way to make people think.

"Certainly the Symposium has its weaknesses. I suspect that we can reach a satiation point during the five-day program. It may be that more programs are being presented than can be absorbed; thought should be given to cutting out the 2 o'clock program and shortening Symposium-week by a day.

"Actually, this is part of a larger problem. We need some follow-up of the program to determine what affect it has on the student body. Here we spend $10,000, and we don't know what change in attitudes and thought, if any, it brings to the campus.

"It would be very helpful to know if we have more than a transitory impact; if people are really moved. It would take a person in socilogy or psychology to advise a method for us to measure this. Naturlly, I think iat is a very effective program, as do most of those who worked on it.

"Some speeches came closer than others to stimulating the kind of intellectual reaction I think we want. Fulbright's was probably the best. As a keynote, it touched on every aspect of our topic; it was as though he had gone over the week's program when writing it.

"His speech was an ideal for this or any Symposium. He said things that needed saying, whether you agree with him or not. He said it understandably and logically; it challenged the audience and gave food for thought.

"On the criticism that some of the speakers didn't like our topic: I don't think this amounts to a thing. In certain cases the speakers disagreed with a thought conveyed by the topic; for example, Irving Howe and Marya Mannes didn't think that the Cold War has an effect on American letters; Hans Morgenthau didn't believe we were in a Garrison State. However, this doesn't mean there is anything wrong with the topic.

"Brinkley gave a fine speech, in which he completely disagreed with the existence of 'news management.'

"In the Program committee, we gave no particularly thought to relative liberalism or conservatism when we chose the speakers we wanted. What do these terms mean, anyway? I don't think it's an important issue.

"What is important, and what we thought about in the committee, is getting persons who are competent and articulate in their field. It would be ridiculous to spend a lot of time trying to consider each speaker in terms of where he fell on a political spectrum.

"I think the Symposium has had a lot of value in bringing the University national recognition. The New York Times did several pieces on things that were said here; Walter Cronkite interviewed Fulbright on TV about his Chapel Hill speech. So often the University is spoken of as being a good Southern school; this sort of thing gives it national prominence. There is high prestige in having this calibre of speakers use Chapel Hill as their rostrum.

"It is significant that so many of the speakers commented on the undesirability of the 'Gag Law.' These remarks, of course, went all over the State, on TV, radio, and in the press.

"I think this year will be an important step in building a better Symposium in the future. Many of our speakers were very important people. The fact that they have been here, plus whatever personal help they may be able to lend, will be extremely helpful in getting equally prominent figures for later Symposiums."

GMAB Interviews Scheduled

Don Chaplin, newly appointed President of Graham Memorial Activities Board, announced yesterday that applications for secretary of GMAB and chairmen of the six standing committees will be available at the Information Desk of Graham Memorial, today through Sunday. Interviews for applicants will be held April 27, 28 and 30.

Graham Memorial Activities Board coordinates and supervises all GM activities. The group also selects and presents the "GM Series" which brings to campus the finest artists and entertainers . . . and terminates its year with the presentation of "Jubilee."

The committees of GMAB include: the Publicity Committee, which keeps the campus and community informed of the many GM programs through the Daily Tar Heel, radio and TV, posters and displays; the Music Committee, which presents programs of jazz, folk, semi-classical and classical music, including "The Petite Musicales"; the Social Committee, which plans combo parties and dances in the Rendezvous Room, bridge and dance lessons, receptions, and holiday parties; the Film Committee, which selects and presents the "Free Flicks" appearing weekly in Carroll Hall and "Sunday Cinemas"; the Drama Committee, which offers dramatic experience as well as entertainment; and the Current Affairs Committee, which presents lectures, debates and panel discussions on topics of local and national interest.

Chaplin New GMAB President

Don C. Chaplin, a junior from Columbia, N. C., has been chosen as president of Graham Memorial Activities Board for 1964-65. He was selected by the GMAB Board of Directors.

He has served as Vice-President of GM in 1963-64 and is currently Vice-Chairman of Region V of the Association of College Unions. In addition to Union activities, he is a member of APO, Delta Upsilon, Alpha Epsilon (honorary pre-med society) and an officer in the College 4-H Club.

In speaking of the appointment by the GM Board of Directors, current President Dan Moore said, "Don has the qualifications and I know that he will do an outstanding job as President of GMAB. His ability to get the job done and his work in the past year points to a highly successful year for GM in 1964-65."

"GM has done a fine job this past year in presenting a wide variety of programs for the students," commented Chaplin. "Next year we are looking forward to the largest GM Series program ever and to an increase in social facilities for the campus."

New officers and chairmen will officially take office in May.

DR. FOUST SPEAKS

Dr. Clifford M. Foust, Professor of History at UNC, will speak on "The Inferiority Complex in Russian History" tonight at the Slavic Club. The meeting will be held at 8 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge on the fourth floor of Dey Hall.

The UNC Slavic Club was formed in the fall by students and faculty of the Russian Language Department.

The public is invited to attend.

STUDY ABROAD

Competition for the 1965-66 United States government graduate grants for academic study or research abroad, and for professional training in creative and performing arts, will open officially on May 1, the Institute of International Education announced.

The Institute conducts competitions for U. S. Government scholarships provided by the Fulbright-Hays Act as part of the educational and cultural exchange program of the Department of State.

The Act provides full grants, joint U. S.-other government grants and U. S. Government travel-only grants.

Interested students may secure information from Dr. Frank Duffey, campus Fulbright advisor.

NEW DINING HALL

Construction is now under way on the Harry W. Chase Dining Hall.

The dining hall, named after H. W. Chase, who served as tenth President of UNC from 1919 until 1930, is being built on the newly developing South side of the UNC campus and will be located in the midst of three men's dormitories.

The new hall will seat approximately 1,000 persons. Square footage of the structure will be 46,500. Cost of the building is $1,110,976. The dining hall will be completed in August, 1965, ready for the fall semester.

Tar Babies Stop Duke, 9-6

By PETE GAMMONS

The Tar Babies came back to defeat Duke 6-2 Tuesday after losing their first game of the year to Louisburg Monday afternoon.

The Baby Heels broke a 2-2 tie in the sixth inning with a solo tally, and then erupted for three runs in both the seventh and eighth to gain the triumph over Duke. Tom Robbins singled in Danny Talbott to snap the tie, and back to back hits by Randy Prindle and Talbott broke the game open in the seventh. Prindle lined a triple to right to score Mike Saintsing, and was driven in on Talbott's liner through shortstop. Talbott's hit then got away from the Blue Imps' center fielder, and Danny circled the bases for the third run of the inning.

Duke closed it to 6-5 in the eighth, but Tommy Kirkman came out of the bullpen again to save Jim Dunlap. Tom Robbins hit a homer, Tom Lampman a triple, Joyner a single, and Prindle a single for the three runs in the eighth. Duke added a final run in the ninth.

UNC scored twice in the third when Lampman, Dunlap and Saintsing walked, and Jerry Joyner and Prindle drove them in with a single and a sacrifice fly.

The Tar Babies got eleven hits off the two Duke pitchers. Robbins had a homer and double, Prindle a triple and single, and Joyner and Talbott each had a pair of singles. Dunlap got the win, striking out twelve.

LOUISBURG GAME

Monday the Tar Heels didn't fare as well as they were defeated by Louisburg Junior College, 5-2. Louisburg pitcher Dave Goodrich scattered eight hits in gaining revenge for an earlier defeat at the hands of UNC. Goodrich scored the first run himself when he walked, stole second and kept going to third on the throw which landed in center field. He scored on a single to center. They added two more in the third and the fifth.

Henry Crowson tripled scoring Talbott and scored himself when the right fielder couldn't come up with the ball. No one got more than one hit for the Tar Babies, although Talbott, Prindle, and Joyner got doubles and Crowson a triple. Grey Clarke was the starting and losing pitcher, and was relieved by Brian Miller in the fifth and Jimmy Dean in the seventh. The Tar Babies record is now 6-1, 5-0 in the Big Four.

Major's Attendance Rises

NEW YORK (UPI) — The two major league presidents decided to set a later starting date for the 1964 baseball season to avoid bad weather. So what happened.

There have been six times as many postponements this season as there were in the similar period a year ago. But, even so, attendance is up.

Through scheduled games of this afternoon, a total of 12 major league games have been postponed, compared to only two for the same period a year ago when the season started five days earlier.

The later statring date was set in an attempt to avoid the to set a later tsarting date for cold weather which cut attendance at April games last year.

Warmer weather has been the case in most instances this season, refelected by an attendance increase of 28,414 even though there were nine more playing dates last year in the same period.

But the warmer April weather has brought showers which have flooded out 11 games .One contest was called because of cold weather.

Those Duke Fans!

By PETE GAMMONS

Duke-Carolina is a rivalry which is, to say the least, heated. Deans virtually break down in the excitement of games like last fall's classic. Student's get riled up. The entire Duke Kappa Sig House stood during the basketball game at Durham last winter and gave the Tar Heels the "Ol' Roger Maris" (listed technically in the N.Y. Times as an obscene gesture).

Carolina Gentlemen are by no means lily flowers. They roared with laughter at Hack Tison and mocked Jeff Mullins in the game although the Tar Heels were losing by forty points.

However, it was in Durham that the last game was played, and the Duke rooters are in for the most recent "foot in mouth" award.

The Blue Devil fans, rested comfortably on the banks of Duke Baseball Stadium, (Ted Mann's original name for the park) and enjoyed the sun. Unfortunately only sunbathers showed up, and the baseball fans stayed in the library, leaving a contingent of fans who knew little more about baseball than the screaming four year old behind me. They were sure that Scotty Glacken is the best player in the ACC, and while Glacken is a fine hitter, his catching leaves much to be desired. The couple of times the Tar Heels tried to steal, they were brushing th dirt off themselves when Glacken's throw landed over their heads in center field.

Biff Bracy, who made some great plays in the field, drove in the tie-breaking run in the third, and hit .388 last year, was barely recognized.

Their unbiased opinion of the Carolina players got increasingly derogatory as the weather got colder, and the "benny-grabbing" was ruined. They continually tormented Willard, and one fan claimed he wasn't really too great in football. When he came up in the fourteenth the roof had already fallen in on pitcher Charlie Young, he was mocked and booed so loudly that I could barely hear Jim Heavner's two-pitches-behind commentary right beside me. He shut them up with a long single to left, his second hit.

One sun worshipper called Dickie Prindle a "sawed off runt who couldn't hit his way out of a paper bag." Another said he didn't think he played last year. That ended that conversation as far as I was concerned, and ten minutes later he got his third hit.

Ken Boykin, whose three hits raised his average to .388, "looks like he's waiving at a watermelon."

Bill Haywood: "The Old Carolina Choke." Ya.

Ted Mann Jr. made it embarrassing for us last March when he scored, and Steve Holloway may get get five hits in the rematch in baseball, and Bill Alverez (who?) may throw four touchdown passes next fall.

But Duke wins the latest latest award, and the joke's on them, 6-2.

TO NEW YORK

Alton G. Sadler left today for New York City to attend a 2-day conference on The Revenue Act of 1964, sponsored by The Institute on Federal Taxation, New York University.

USSR Team Topples USA Again, 79-60

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union's national basketball team crushed the touring United States All-Stars for the second straight night, 79-60, Wednesday night, reemphasizing their threat to take the Olympic title away from the Yanks at Tokyo in October.

A near-capacity crowd of 14,000 at the Lenin Sports Stadium cheered wildly as the Russians outran, outshot, and outplayed the Americans just as easily as they had in winning the fist game between the two teams Tuesday night, 82-65.

The two losses, following a split of two games in Warsaw against a Polish team, left the U. S. team with three defeats in four games on their tour, which goes on from here to Leningrad, Kiev, and Tbilisi for games against regional Soviet teams.

U. S. Coach John McLendon was quick to point out after the game that "Our boys have only been playing together for four games and they are not as coordinated as the Russian team, which has been together a long time."

Cheered on by the fans, the Russians built up an early lead, held a 39-33 margin at halftime, and then increased their lead to runaway proportions in the second half.

Gennady Volnov was high scorer for the Soviets with 18 points and Yuri Petrov was next with 13.

Pete McCaffrey, a member of the U. S. National A.A.U. champion Akron Goodyears, topped the U. S. team with 14 points, only four of them in the second half. Dick Davies of Harrisburg, Pa., was the only other American to score in double figures with 10.

"I still hope that the boys can pull together a bit more and achieve better results in the next games," said U. S. Coach McLendon.

UNC Chosen For Grolier-Americana

The University's Graduate School of Library Science is the recipient of the eighth annual Grolier-Americana Scholarship in School Librarianship.

—And Big 4 Day Still Hunting Entrants

The Big Four Sports Day still needs a lot of players in every category.

Jim Magner, co-winner of the all-campus handball championship in doubles, has announced that handball tryouts and practice will be held between two and four on Saturday on courfts F & G. He can be reached at 968-9017, or 14 Old East.

The Table Tennis team is better off than any other team, having everyone back from last year's champions. But anyone who thinks they can make the team should call Larry Edwards at 3 Vance, 968-9177.

Gene Barrier is hopeful that this year's badminton entry will fare a little better than last year. Last year they lost to both NC State and Duke, and can use some good players. Anyone interested should call Barrier at the Chi Psi House, 968-9072.

Ron Henson reports that this year the horseshoe team should be better than the last few entries. He can still use recruits, and can be reached at 968-9150.

Four members of last year's Big 4 champion bowling squad are back, but Carl Swann needs more men. He lives in 107 Manly, 968-9176.

John McMillan is looking for people who can shoot in the low 70's on Finley. It is important that the competitors be good on Finley, since the competition is at home. He can be reached at the ATO House, 968-9086.

Did DTH Goof Again?

It looks as if the DTH sports staff may have goofed again.

If you'll remember the staff selected pennant winners in both major leagues recently. The infallible prognosticators predicted pennants for the Yankees and Dodgers.

The distinquished sports staff now has only one request to make of its readers. Please do not look at the standings until the Dodgers and Yankees are out of the cellar in their leagues. We do not want to be embarrassed further.

The new staff refuses to take responsibility for any mistakes made by the old staff (although we were responsible for most of them). From now on we will check with our bookies before making any wild predictions.

Each day we look at the standings we think that there is a misprint. The Yankees and Dodgers couldn't really be last! Sandy Koufax won the opening game for the Dodgers, but the Bums have dropped six straight now. Mr. Koufax even lost one of the games, but don't tell the Yankees—they don't think he can be beaten.

Walter Alston thought his job was safe this year, but the writers are about ready to fire him again. Within the week there will be rumors circulating that Alston is going to be replaced by Leo Durocher. Alston has been manager of the Dodgers since 1953, by far the longest tenure of any major league manager. He has brought the Bums through the Duke Snider - Gil Hodges-Pee Wee Reese era to the present Wills - Koulax - Drysdale era. Along the way he has managed to win four National League pennants and three world championships. He is as capable now as he was last year or in any of the other three years he won pennants, but he will be criticized unless he wins again.

The Dodgers made what may prove to be a fatal mistake last winter when they failed to make any major changes in personnel. General Manager Buzzie Bavasi felt he had enough talent on the team to defend their title. By September he may realize that he was mistaken.

The Yankees made only one change over the winter. They named Yogi Berra manager. Yogi has gotten off to a bad start, but he will probably be resting on top of the league by July 4th. Whitey Ford, Jim Bouton and Al Downing all pitched over nine innings in their initial start, but all pitched well. The Yankees' major problem thus far has been lack of hitting, and this certain can't be blamed on Yogi.

The new sports staff feel that they deserve a chance to redeem themselves. We calculated and calculated then finally took the problem over to Phillips Hall and here's the way the predictions turned out:

NATIONAL LEAGUE—1) San Francisco—If their pitching holds up, 2) Philadelphia—Allen could hit .300 and field .800, 3) Los Angeles — Koufax and Drysdale can't pitch every day, 4) Pittsburgh—Bob Bailey hits like he should have last year, 5) Cincinnati—Could finish higher with good years from Robinson, Jay, etc., 6) St .Louis—Groat slumps, Musial not around, 7) Milwaukee—Haven't improved that much, 8) Chicago Cubs—Sorry Ernie, you want finish first, 9) Houston—Runnels comes back, 10) New York—'Nuff said.

AMERICAN LEAGUE—1) New York—We hope not, 2) Minnesota—Oliva could be Rookie of the Year, 3) Baltimore — Bauer makes Orioles tough, 4) Cleveland—Speed and power, but no pitching, 5) Chicago—Could be lots higher, 6) Detroit — Trades may not have helped that much, 7) Boston—Stuart and Yastrzemski need more help, 8)Los Angeles—Need more power, 9) Washington—Hodges leads them out of the cellar, 10) Kansas City — Finley deserves it.

Well, there they are, but please throw this away. We don't want to be getting nasty fan letters.

White Wins Two, Heels Top Wake

Dale White won two events to pace the Tar Heel trackmen to an 82-63 win over Wake Forest Tuesday.

White, a sophomore from Salisbury, won the 100 and the 220 yard dashes to give UNC two of their nine firsts. Wake Forest took eight firsts, but it was the Tar Heel depth which supplied the wide margin.

Bill Graham bettered his best previous toss by 10 inches in the shot put by heaving the put 49'10", only two feet off the UNC record.

Art Maillet, apparently recovered from a leg injury, won the two-mile run with a time of 9:42.3.

The UNC freshmen beat the Deacon freshmen 82-62.

Results:

100-yard dash—White (NC)
440-dash—Dobritch (NC), 49.2

Student Legislature Passes Record Budget For Next Year

Final Session For 'Old' Legislature

By HUGH STEVENS

Student Legislature, winding up its 36th session in a flurry of activity, breezed through the final half of a record $179,984.39 budget in a special session Wednesday night.

It was the final meeting for the old legislature, as the newly-elected members of the 37th Session were scheduled to be sworn in last night following the inauguration of the 1964-65 student body officers. Major activity by the new legislature was not expected before the first full meeting next Thursday.

Wednesday's two-and-a-half hour meeting was only the second devoted to consideration of the hefty (27 page) budget. The two-day wrap-up of the Legislature's buggest annual hurdle was the swiftest within memory of veteran legislators.

With few exceptions, the budget whizzed through the body with only minor adjustments in the figures proposed by the Budget and Finance Committees. The boldest change was the deletion of a $1,260 appropriation for a campus humor magazine.

The financial policy section of the budget was amended to insure that money appropriated by SG will not be spent at establishments which do not serve all students, without authorization from the President of the Student Body.

Arthur Hays, who introduced the amendment for a group of legislators, referred to "unfortunate incidents" in the past, and said "this is the only logical and fair way to insure that each student who pays his fees receives the full benefit from them."

Phil Baddour also spoke for the amendment, along with Mark Lindsay and Darst Murphey. The measure passed with only two dissenting votes.

Hays said later that this was "a sound fiscal policy for Student Government to follow."

Record Figures For '64

The budget passed Wednesday exceeds by more than $17,000 the $162,514.42 appropriated last year. The largest slice, more than $61,000, went to Graham Memorial, which automatically receives one third of the budget annually. The Daily Tar Heel and the Yack each received $30,000—plus slices, and only $3,996.33 of next year's expected income was left unappropriated.

Hays, head of the Finance Committee, stubbornly opposed an increase in the $400 Senior Class appropriation, saying it was time that Student Government stopped subsidizing class projects.

When Phil Baddour corraled enough votes to up the outlay by $120, Hays reminded him, "Mr. Baddour, next year I will be here and you won't. We'll get 'em then!"

When the budget was unanimously approved, Speaker Bob Spearman thanked the legislators for their cooperation during the Session. Baddour in turn extended the best wishes of the body to the Speaker, commending him for "an outstanding performance."

In final action, the body approved a resolution by Rick Kramer to set up the Carolina Athletic Council, and another supporting a basketball court for the Ram Varsity Parking Lot.

Faculty Awards Today

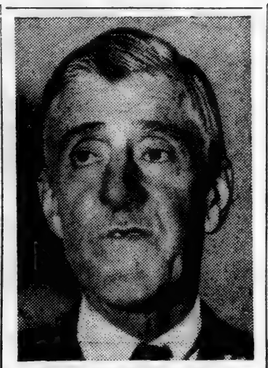
Two different awards will be presented to faculty members at the General Faculty meeting of the entire UNC faculty to be held this afternoon at four o'clock in the Carroll Hall Auditorium.

The two awards to be presented are the Tanner Awards for excellence in the teaching of undergraduate students, and the Thomas Jefferson Award, presented annually to a member of the faculty whose life and work is in the best tradition and spirit of Thomas Jefferson.

The Tanner Awards were first presented in 1956. They were established in 1955 by the Tanner family of Rutherfordton in honor of the late Lola Spencer and Simpson Bobo Tanner. When first presented, the Tanner Awards consisted of $500. Last year, four members of the UNC faculty received the awards which had risen to $1,000 apiece.

Tanner Awards are presented specifically "in recognition of excellence and inspirational teaching of undergraduate students, preferably with reference to their influence on first and second year students."



SEN. SALTONSTALL

. . . Proposes Compromise

Sen. Saltonstall Proposes P. A. Bill Compromise

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R.-Mass.), yesterday proposed a possible compromise amendment to the touchy public accommodations section of the Civil Rights Bill.

The moderate GOP leader's amendment would give the attorney general 90 days to settle, on a voluntary basis, discrimination complaints in public places. If no settlement is reached, the Justice Department and plaintiff could file a civil suit.

Saltonstall's proposal would be a compromise to an amendment offered by Senate GOP Leader Everett M. Dirksen. Dirksen wants state voluntary efforts to precede any federal enforcement of the public accommodations section.

There was speculation that Dirksen might withhold his own amendment and co-sponsor Saltonstall's proposal.

Local Civil Rightists Draw Jail Sentences

By FRED SEELY

Two leaders of the local civil rights movement were imprisoned yesterday by Judge Raymond B. Mallard.

Patrick Cusic, UNC graduate and field secretary for the Student Peace Union, and Quentin Baker, a NAACP volunteer worker, were given sentences of one year and six months respectively after being convicted of blocking traffic and resisting arrest during racial demonstrations here in February.

Another 47 demonstrators received sentences from Mallard in Hillsboro, but all were suspended.

Cusick, 32, received a two year suspended sentence in addition to his jail term. He was also put on five years probation.

Baker, a senior at North Carolina College in Durham, was sentenced to six months in jail, payment of court costs and a $100 fine. A capias will be issued the first of July for him to start his sentence in order that he may complete his senior year of college. He will be required to post $2,500 bond, however, and reports yesterday indicated that he would stay in jail. His six-month term will begin in July whether or not he posts bond.

Arthur Simons, a UNC student, received a 12-month suspended sentence and a fine of $100. Prayer for judgment an another charge was continued for two years.

Five civil rights leaders were detained overnight in Hillsboro for sentencing tomorrow. They were John Dunne, J. V. Henry, Buddy Teagle, Lou Calhoun and John Shively.

William Bullard, 20, and Thomas Bynum, 18, were given probation. Bullard had been convicted on 12 counts of blocking traffic and resisting arrest and Bynum on 15.

Bynum, a Negro freshman, was found innocent by the Men's Council a month ago after charges had been brought citing him with ungentlemanly conduct. Judge Raymond B. Mallard gave him an 18 month jail sentence and $100 fine, plus payment of court costs, but the sentence was suspended in lieu of five year's probation. Prayer for judgment was rendered on another count, continued for two years.

Bullard, a junior, was sentenced to 12 months in jail, a $100 fine and costs. The jail term was suspended for five year's probation.

In both cases, Mallard added the provision that neither could participate in a demonstration during the period of probation.

"I'm not sending you to jail," he said. "Only you can do that to yourself now."

Several other UNC students were sentenced, including Tucker Clark, a freshman from Washington, D. C. Clark was sentenced to jail for 60 days plus costs, the jail sentence suspended for three years on the provisions that he pay costs by today at 10 a.m., partake in no demonstrations during the three years suspension and break no laws other than traffic violations.

Other UNC students included Miss Ellen Abrams, 22, a graduate students here, who was given a six-month sentence suspended for five years. She also had to agree to the three provisions. Christ Munger, a junior, was given an almost identical sentence, as was Sondra Gardner, a sophomore nurse. Ralph Mitchell was also given a suspended sentence.

Mallard several times expressed concern over the apparent lack of interest in the case by the parents of the sudents.

"Only two parents have spoken to me," he said. "This just isn't right." Solicitor Cooper agreed, saying only one parent had contacted him.

Everett Best Dorm

Everett Residence Hall was awarded the best residence hall award for 1963-64 by the Men's Residence Council for amassing a total of 1642 points in competition.

Alexander Hall placed second with a total of 1281 points and Ehringhaus placed third with 1191 points.

Aycock and Ehringhaus Halls were honored as the most improved residence halls on campus for the past year, and Aycock's Sonny Pepper was named outstanding residence hall president.

The best residence hall newspaper was Parker Hall's Jester, and Larry Coleman was given the award as the best Men's Residence Council Representative.

Placing after Ehringhaus in the best residence hall competition were Ruffin, 1064 points, Mangrum, 923 points, Aycock, 911 points, Avery, 606 points and Winston, 550 points.

Chi Omega Tops In Fall QP Averages

Chi Omega Sorority was awarded the Panhellenic Scholarship Trophy at the recent Valkyrie Sing for achieving the highest scholastic average among sororities for the 1963-64 fall semester.

The trophy, presented by Miss Daryl Farrington of the Dean of Women's Office, was in recognition of an overall 2.7045 average. Alpha Delta Pi, with an average of 2.6966, ranked second in the group of seven sororities.

Other sororities and their averages include: Delta Delta Delta, 2.6546; Pi Beta Phi, 2.5612; Kappa Delta, 2.5153; Kappa Kappa Gamma, 2.5143; and Alpha Gamma Delta, 2.5090.

AN OPEN MIND

(Editor's note: The following article, written by UNC student Alain de Fontanay of France, is the final article in a series of four, written by foreign students now attending the University. The series has been presented in conjunction with "International Student Emphasis Week.")

By ALAIN DE FONTANAY

When I entered school in France, France was presented as the mother of all democracies—we had led the world in 1789; we had the "Declaration of Man's Rights" to prove it. Later, I went to England and to my dismay, I was introduced to the mother of democracy-Magna Carta, Bill of Rights. . . .

Then I came to the United States. Once more I had to review my concepts—American Revolution . . . it was self-evident that the United States was the mother of democracy. Finally, I met a Russian who didn't know of any democracy prior to 1917 (fortunately or unfortunately, I never had the chance to go to Greece).

As you can see, I found myself in a delicate situation, when I returned to France. I could not deny it to be the mother of democracy, yet I had to admit that it was not the only one to carry the weight of this title. Therefore, I was in a disadvantage, when dealing with my friends who stayed at home. For most of them, it was still self-evident that France, indeed, was the first democracy. However, a quotation of Socrates came to the rescue: "If you want to argue with me, first define your terms." There was the problem: no one was completely wrong, but no one was completely right either. Each had his own definition for the term "democracy."

I grant you the self-evident character of this concept; however, it is too often the most evident truth which has to be written out, or it might be too evident. Anyway, this introduction is only to show the utility, even the necessity of contacts with people not from home. Indeed, if we always remained with the same group, in the same surroundings, we would receive "toutes faites" notions on most everything, without incentive, or ability to verify their soundness. We would generalize from our particular; our motives, remaining unchallenged, would lose their meaning.

On the contrary, when we travel, when we meet anyone from somewhere else, while being in an open state of mind (I feel, and I want to insist on this idea, that this open state of mind is absolutely prerequisite). Indeed, too many people have pre-conceived ideas on everything, and therefore will not look for facts to confirm them. Thus the cab driver in Paris who received from the American tourist a normal, or small tip might treat him as a "cheap" American, while if he had received from the same tourist a big tip, he would have been confirmed in his original idea, i.e. all Americans are millionaires. I believe the lack of open-mindedness is a main source of misunderstanding in the world: we speak but do not listen. Then and only then, through a confrontation of ideas, of philosophy, of different ways of life, can we begin to understand others better, to get acquainted with their ways of life. And since this confrontation will have forced us to deepen our misunderstanding of our own behavior, we will learn its strength and its imperfections, as well as the strength and imperfections of the other's point of view. Through this better knowledge, we could transcend both sides and, instead of coming to a compromise, we would reach a higher understanding of our own way of life.

I think that this confrontation is hard—it asks a special effort from both sides. I would further point out that it asks an even greater effort from the outsider, in diplomacy and in patience, since he is the one who comes to challenge the "established." Moreover, this effort is vital, not only for our relation with others, but also for ourselves as individuals.

I ask you to think about it: I ask it very specially of those who will go abroad to visit the museum called Europe. I do apologize for all times I forgot it, myself.

Air Force Art On Display Here

United States Air Force Documentary Art, 43 paintings depicting Air Force life throughout the world, is now on display in the rotunda and north gallery of the Morehead Planetarium. The exhibit is under the sponsorship of the UNC AFROTC, and will be on campus through May 3.

The paintings have been selected from more than 2,500 art works in the Air Force collection which have been assembled since the days of World War I to depict the growth of aerospace power.

The display has been compiled by the Society of Illustrators of New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco. The Air Force and Society of Illustrators has developed a program whereby leading artists visit Air Force bases throughout the world, and contribute works to the collection.

Many of these paintings regularly hang in the corridors of the Pentagon, the Air Force Academy and the White House.

The collection has been prepared by the USAF Orientation Group which is responsible for presenting nearly 400 Air Force displays yearly throughout the world.

Coeds, Fish And Ping-Pong Balls

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

After a two year absence, the Sigma Chi Derby returned yesterday with its usual array of coeds, fish, ping-pong balls, Chubby Checker records, and an extra added attraction this year—rain.

Kay Hoyle (Bonnie's sister) was crowned Miss Modern Venus. She was competing against several other coeds who stood in the rain, braving not only the wet weather, but the numerous hoots and catcalls from the admiring males who quite frankly wouldn't have cared if a tornado had swept through Kenan Stadium.

One good thing, though, everybody was happy, especially the Sigma Chi's, who seem to be enjoying the whole thing more than anyone else.

It was a field day for camera bugs, especially during the limbo contest. As Chubby Checker asked, "How low can you go?" many of the fraternity members gave ole Chub some pretty interesting answers which can't be printed here because we would be sued for libel.

The crowd favorites seem to be Punkin Houston and Judy Allen. In fact, they received a lot of encouragement from the bystanders, most of whom somehow managed to get front row seats.

"Inhale, Punkin," someone shouted.

"Come on, Judy, it's all psychological," someone else yelled.

But Punkin and Judy fell by the wayside as Alice Brown came from out of the wild blue yonder, or somewhere like that, and won.

The wildest part of the afternoon was the "secret event" which was a pretty fishy affair (pun intended). A hair net, with two eggs in it, was placed on several sorority girls' heads. Each of them was handed a dead fish and told to climb up on a fraternity boy's shoulders.

The object of the contest was to see who could bust the eggs on the other girls' heads first. But things didn't end there. No siree. People started throwing the dead fish up in the stands, and they in turn started throwing them back down at the coeds, Judy Smith catching one on the side of the head.

Shooo!!

Another highlight of the farce, er, derby, was the Hit the Geek contest. The only trouble was that nobody could hit the Geek (whatever that is) until sharpshootin' Pi Phi, Miss Sis Craver stepped up and she blasted the Geek between the eyes with a chocolate pie. But the poor Geek got mad, and threw a pie at Bonnie

LIMBO—To the sound of a limbo beat and various assorted cheers the limbo contest formed the second event in the Derby. This event was won by Alice Brown, new limbo queen at UNC.

A Step Forward In A Long, Long Search

Student Legislature, in considering the 1964-65 Student Budget, took time out Wednesday night to add a significant amendment to the policy section of the budget. It prohibits any student agency or group supported by Student Government funds from spending its money in segregated businesses without the expressed consent of the President of the Student Body.

Thus, we now have in black and white what has been the expressed policy of student leaders for a significant period of time. The authorization required by the president of the student body gives a "loophole" in cases which make the spending of student money in segregated establishments imperative (as for example, on a student trip in Mississippi).

We have been assured by student leaders, however, that their prime concern is not with what happens in distant Mississippi, but rather with our own local situation. Obviously, all students pay student fees. Obviously, all students should benefit at all times from the manner in which their money is spent.

Some questions have been raised concerning the advisibility of turning an accepted "policy" into an Honor Council violation. We, however, agree with those who feel that, in the long and difficult search for the equality of all students, this action is unique in its orderly and common-sense approach to a sometimes chaotic situation.

Spring Along With Us—To Jubilee

Spring is upon us, and following along with it are the incumbent traditions—beach weekends, beer parties, tennis matches and, perhaps best of all, Jubilee.

With all the talk that is tossed about in the fall elections about All-Campus weekends, the nearest we have come to it is sponsored, not by a class, but by Graham Memorial.

This year's edition of Jubilee promises to be bigger and better than ever. Such groups as the Four Freshmen, the Serendipity Singers and Flatt and Scruggs will be on hand, as well as Charlie Byrd, certainly one of the top guitarists around. Last year some 16,000 people attended Jubilee, and with a bit of help from the weatherman the total should top 20,000 this year.

Combo parties and free flicks are scheduled every evening, and this will be high-quality entertainment as well.

But we also think of the mess that comes with Jubilee. The lawn in front of Graham Memorial resembles a disaster area after each concert, and Howard Henry, in a fit of optimism, has arranged to have trash cans put around the area this year. Hopefully, they will be used.

And we also think of some of the spectators, who get a few too many drinks in them before they arrive and proceed to disturb everyone else, including the performers, before someone has the presence of mind to shut them up. Let's hope they shut themselves up from the start.

Jubilee is a great weekend—it is a time when everyone can relax and watch great entertainment. It is an All-Campus Weekend, and we hope that you will participate in the festivities. And remember, it doesn't cost a cent.

Graduation Is Just Around The Corner

From The Raleigh Times

Oh, to be a graduate now that graduation time is here.

Things have been looking exceedingly good jobwise for college graduates for several years. And this year promises more of the same, placement service personnel in area colleges report.

Salary offers are up two to three per cent above those offered last year. They range from about $400 to $650 per month. And the demand is good in just about every field.

The colleges report representatives of companies and schools from as far away as California and representing both large and small firms are taking part in the recruiting.

A Duke official reported the upcoming graduates are being interviewed so much they are tired of interviews. The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill said the number interviewed this year already has passed the number last year and there is still time to go.

Spokesmen for two of the colleges said anyone wanting to get work can get it. If they don't find work it is because they are too lazy to look, they indicated.

This enviable situation is a long cry from what some of us recall. One of the bits of advice we recall making the rounds when we were first job-hunting was to offer to work for an employer 30 days, at no cost to him, just to show what he could expect from you.

The good offers being made to today's graduates point up the long strides made by the country. It points out the economy is good and that properly trained young people will have no trouble finding work.

And it points out once again the necessity of getting all the education possible. At a time when many people are finding it's hard to find work, college grads are in great demand.

And it's nice to be wanted.

'Breakfast' At Flicks

By RON SPAINHOUR

Jubilee weekend begins tonight with a "jubilee" of a film—Blake Edwards' delightful comedy "Breakfast at Tiffany's" adapted by George Axelrod from Truman Capote's novella.

Realizing the great potential of the American film industry, film critics reluctantly admit that a good American film comes along far too seldom. Even more exceptional is a good American comedy.

Too often a producer grabs a beautiful female star, puts her in some famous Paris fashion house clothes, throws in some sex in the form of a darling male star—and for better or for worse, you've got American comedy.

"Breakfast at Tiffany's" has most of the characteristics of the above paragraph, but it's not the now cliche "birds and bees," Doris Day-Rock Hudson thing. Instead it's a first-rate comedy.

Oh, there's sex. Audrey Hepburn is a pseudo-sophisticated young sprite — Holly Golightly, left Tulip, Tex., as a child of 15, ran away to Hollywood, and ended up in a Manhattan apartment at the age of 18. She soon falls in love with Patrica Neal's gigolo played by George Peppard.

There's sex, but there's a good script and there's Audrey Hepburn. To a large extent, the success of this film can be attributed to Miss Hepburn who won a best actress nomination for this film. Her personality lends just the right glow to the character of Holly. She almost succeeds in making us believe that Holly with her pink cat, apartment with a bathtub sawed in half (to make a sofa), a refrigerator containing shoes, and a telephone (in a suitcase)—really exists.

Patrica Neal and Mickey Rooney also give fine performances in minor roles. Miss Neal's role offers little, but she makes the most of it and proves herself the best actress to hit the movie screens since Geraldine Page.

Rooney, as the complaining Japanese—Mr. Yunioshi — adds some comic slapstick moments. Especially effective is the use of slapstick in the scenes with Rooney and in the drunken cocktail party scene. These scenes almost make up for the slapstick our generation largely missed in Charlie Chaplin.

This is the type of film that's made for technicolor. Director Edwards has made the best of a New York setting. Interior settings are designed to reflect the wild personalities of the characters who live in them. Henry Mancini's music score fits in well with the mood of the film.

Years from now, when film histories are written, "Breakfast at Tiffany's" will probably be forgotten. But if the American people unfortunately expect merely entertainment from their films, then this is the kind of picture they should get.

"Boy, Am I Embarrassing Those Guys!"

SPU, Mad Mouse Roar

Civil Liberties Given Support

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

I am opposed to most of the beliefs put forth by the Student Peace Union. I would like, however, to congratulate Student Body President Lawler and Chancellor Aycock for their prompt reversal on April 11 of the orders by two campus officials that the SPU cease distributing literature on the campus.

These two officials (the Campus Police chief and the superintendent of grounds) seem to be guilty of the same insecurity and lack of intellectual curiosity which characterizes those dull-witted state legislators who support the infamous "Gag Law."

One of the greatest advantages of the University of North Carolina is the great divergence of views on all subjects which are to be found here. Most students are challenged by these divergent ideas and thus are forced to use their newly discovered powers of reasoning to produce well thought out opinions.

By seeking to eliminate those views which challenge us to greater thought the state legislators and their accomplices are attempting to remove the very factor which has helped place the University of North Carolina high among the ranks of the nation's colleges and universities.

Mock Convention Taken Seriously

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I have here before me one of the worst editorials and one of the worst news stories ever printed in the DTH. They both occur in the same issue of your paper, Sunday April 19, and both concern the same subject, the UNC Mock Convention.

I was a delegate from Alexander Residence Hall Friday and Saturday, and have a first hand knowledge of what happened. You, sirs, collectively and individually, do not.

You admit this in the third line of your editorial, but no mention is made of this in the story.

I shall rip apart your story first, for it has the least wrong:

1.) A statement was issued by David Sheps, co-chairman of the Steering Committee Friday night; this is not mentioned.

2.) The Permanent Chairman, Albert G. "Buddy" Schiff, also issued a statement, which was not printed in the DTH, although it was sent out in plenty of time.

3.) Also, at the time of the walkout, Chairman Charles Hooks, of the Young Republican Club, said that the refusal of the YM-YWCA to allow a Goldwater banner to remain (see Saturday's DTH for a semi-accurate account of this incident), was a major reason for the walkout.

4.) The question of the preamble to the platforms was a petty and false one, for the Democratic one had a clear preamble before each plank. The entire GOP platform read like a single, lengthy preamble.

5.) The Republican delegations who walked out of the convention did so after trying several delaying tactics to stall the convention. Chairman Schiff was completely in his rights as Chair- to call down the GOP delegates, as provided for in Robert's Rules of Order, Sec. 40.

As far as the editorial goes, it is one of the most one-sided and unfair I have ever read, and one that surely would have not been even thought of, if the true facts had been attempted to have been gathered by either your or someone on your news staff.

1.) The Executive Committee of the Convention was composed of more Republicans than Democrats, and since the Executive Committee had a great deal to do with the selection of the permanent chairman, why was no objection made at the time of the selection?

2.) The chairman of the Credentials Committee, John Angell, whether he is a Republican or a Democrat, consistently voted with the GOP, and he did not question the Carr Delegation, headed by the chairman of the Young Democrats Club. Therefore, why should you?

3.) Whether the Public Accommodations and FEPC sections of the Civil Rights plank would have failed is a moot question, one that neither you nor I can answer. The Republicans gave up their chance to vote on it when they remained out of the Convention area when the vote on it was in progress.

4.) You have nothing but damnation for the originators and founders of the 1964 convention, yet for the Republicans, merely, non-committal statements. Funny that the Republicans had statements printed in the DTH, but the Democrats didn't. Now who is talking about partisanship?

5.) Friday night, Rep. Jonas, a man I personally respect, commented that this convention was a satire, and was not serious. If this was the case, or should have been the case, then why weren't Brother Dave Gardner and/or Dick Gregory invited instead of the Honorable Representative from North Carolina, and the other distinguished personages on both parties' behalf?

6.) The students who "sat through the thing" learned something about politicking, among other things, including that the minority has a right to express itself, as long as it is around to do so. Once it leaves, that right is relinquished.

7.) You say that the convention showed "petty people do petty thing in a petty manner." May I ask if the Republican walkout on Friday night was not a petty thing???? Weren't the delaying tactics used by the GOP to force lengthening of the convention a petty thing? If this is so, and how can it not be IN THE EYES OF THOSE WHO WERE THERE, weren't your editorial and story pretty petty themselves?

I would like to say that I am a Republican, and have been for the past several years, albeit a liberal one. A liberal plaform was adopted, which was not mentioned in Sunday's DTH, although it happened Friday night; a Democratic nominee for President was selected, President Lyndon B. Johnson; and a Republican vice-presidential candidate was nominated, Henry Cabot Lodge. Doesn't this suggest to you that the 1964 UNC Mock Political Convention was NOT of a Conservative bent, and that there WAS a strong bipartisan element present?

How can you possibly escape the obvious truth, unless you either are not looking for it, or don't care about the truth?

Lenoir Etiquette Turns Stomachs

By BILL STROUPE

The other night we were eating supper in Lenoir Hall when suddenly we saw someone picking his teeth with a fork! We were so surprised that we dropped a handful of mashed potatoes.

We decided we couldn't let this breach of etiquette go, so we corrected him as politely as we could: "Hey, fathead, cut that out."

This sort of thing has been going on too long, so we have decided to set down some rules for dining at Lenoir for the young men on campus. (The girls, of course, are beyond help.) Here are the rules:

1.) Be sure to get a good place in line. This requires that you race girls to the line. You see, it isn't ladylike for them to appear over-eager to eat, so they will actually appreciate your getting in line before they do.

2.) When you select the stew special — oops — student special, don't say, "Gi'me some of that junk." Instead, say, "I would like some of that junk, please."

3.) There is also a proper way to select bread. Poke your finger in the rolls until you find some that are soft enough.

4.) Selecting your dessert requires finesse. Don't insult the maids by taking the nearest slice of pie or cake, which is usually the smallest. Reach way back. And, as your hand slides across the other desserts, don't worry. Your hand won't get dirty.

5.) Perhaps you like coffee with your meal. If you don't get enough cream in your coffee, grab the cup and saucer, put your coffee under the cream container, and give yourself four or five squirts. Sneer at the maid while you do this to show mild disapproval.

(For safety's sake, don't go back for seconds on coffee if you follow rule 5.)

6.) If you drink tea, don't forget the tray of lemon slices provided for you. Reach in and grab a handful. (Don't use the spoon; that's for people who like to get lemon juice from the bottom of the tray.)

7.) When you pay for your meal, argue with the cashier, who enjoys a little excitement. Here are some standard lines:

"You can't charge me for extra slices of lemon. I didn't get but 12."

"What do you mean, sirloin steak isn't on special?"

"But I didn't get extra butter. This is margarine."

8.) If you should sight an old lady with an umbrella about to sit down at the last clean table in the place, head her off with your tray, but delicately. Remember, she's not a coed. Women like a man who is fast, aggressive and daring.

9.) When you unload your tray, don't carry it to a tray rack. Whatever you've spilled on it will run off into the chair you put it in. That makes it more exciting for the next person.

9½.) We aren't going to say anything about eating. Your very existence shows that you know how to do that. Right?

10.) After you're through eating, don't ball up your napkin and throw it into a glass. You'll make more shots if you aim for a cup.

11.) If you're more sophisticated and like to smoke after your meal, good luck. But if you insist on smoking, ignore the ash tray and use your plate. They may serve your food in an ash tray the next time you eat there.

12.) Finally, as you leave Lenior, be careful not to let the door slam in some man's face. Wait for a coed, and let her have it—but good.

Hate A Need For Society

The only real qualification it takes these days to be prejudiced is to have the ability to express biased, slanted or prejudiced opinions. All of the prejudice that runs rampant throughout the country cannot be claimed by Negroes in the South or Negroes in the North. Nor can prejudice be said to be the sole product of any geographical area. It is not confined to Dallas or Birmingham or Jacksonville or Jackson, Miss. And Ross Barnett and George Wallace are not the only panderers of hate, bias and prejudice.

Prejudice is everywhere. It is in every city, town and hamlet in the United States. It is practised by the rich and the poor, the educated and the ignorant, the saint and the sinner. There seems to be an undefined quality in each of us that makes it almost a necessity to hate or look down on others as being inferior.

Shortly after the assassination of President Kennedy, a national columnist wrote that "prejudice and hate is everywhere and is part of man's makeup. The rich look down on the poor as being deterrents to a more affluent society; the educated look down on the ignorant as being lesser beings among us and the Pharisee looks down on the publican as being less worthy."

Harry Golden explained prejudice as being the results of an invasion on what is defined as ours by people who do not belong to us. Speaking at the 1960 meeting of the National Conference of Catholics, Protestants and Jews, Golden explained the phenomena in this way.

On the lower East side of New York, Golden said, the school that he attended as a youth was solidly Yiddish. The teacher was Jewish and spoke Hebrew in the classroom. Every student in the school was Jewish. The teaching of the traditions and customs of the Jewish people were part of the daily routine. Then, as Golden put it, some Italians enrolled at the school and the Hebrew atmosphere had to be abandoned. The Italians were looked down on and were considered to be invaders. Then the Irish came to the lower east side and were hated by the Italian majority. Then the Germans and the Slavs were in turn hated by the Irish. Today the inhabitants of Harlem look down on the Cubans and the Puerto Ricans. The cycle goes on and on both by tradition and implication.

The Irish in San Francisco have a historical tradition of prejudice against the Chinese which dates back to the influx of "coolie labor" to build the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific railroads. The Coolies had invaded a solid Irish area of employment.

The "Yankees" of New England have a traditional hatred of the Jews based on the Jewish invasion of the textile mills of New England. The historical prejudice of the United States goes on and on.

We all seem to spend most of our time attempting to satiate an ego or justify our position in society at the expense of someone else.

As long as we can find someone or something to hate, loathe, criticize or look down on, our position in society seems to be secure.

The prejudice in the South against the Negro is not what those in the North have said it is. It is not the sole product of the "ignorant white trash." It is a product of the South as it is a product of the other areas of the country. The Negro is to the southerner what the Italians are to the Irish, the Irish are to "Yankee Blue Bloods," the Mexicans are to Texans and the Jews are to the Christians—someone to hate. The Negro is a convenient group in the South for people to hate. In this respect the prejudice against the Negro is not unique.

The struggle between the old nativist prejudices and the newer class consciousness of the various ethnic and national groups in the country will continue to germinate as long as ethnic and national traditions are passed on to the young.

When Congress can legislate away "nigger," "wop," "kike," "grease ball," "chink," "papist" and every other word that separates Americans, one individual from another, one group from another, then the granting of civil rights will have some meaning. When Congress passes the present Civil Rights Bill, it will put on paper what can't be put into the hearts of individuals.

When this melting pot of ours really melts, and when individuals are able to accept themselves, then the ethnic and nationalistic traditions that separate Americans will also pass.

The prejudice against the Negro can only take its place as being part of the history of germinate prejudice. It happens to be the most blatant at the moment.

The Geek caught up with Bonnie again and rubbed a pie into her pretty face, which suddenly looked like that of a sunburned Indian.

Everybody cheated on the first event of the day, which consisted of a series of relays in which the coeds: (1) ran across the field with a basketball between their legs (2) blew a ping-pong ball across the field and then (3) two girls made like a wheelbarrow and ran across the field.

All in all, it was a good show, even if it did rain.

University Gets $90,100 Grant

The University has received a $90,100 grant from the National Science Foundation for a study of changes in money supply.

The study, principally conducted by Henry A. Latane of the Department of Economics, will also study how money changes affect the demand for safe assets, such as bonds, and for risk assets, such as stocks.

The project begins June 1 and will continue for about three years.

Ackland Shows Prints, Drawings

A special group print and drawing show will be on display today through May 10 at the Jane Haslem Gallery in connection with the Southern Annual Art Conference this week at Ackland Art Center.

Etchings, engravings, woodcuts, metal relief etchings, lithographs, wood engravings and drawings by local and nationally known artists will be included in the exhibit.

Gallery hours for this exhibit will be 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. on April 23 and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily except Sunday from April 24 through May 5.

UNC Gets Science Grant

Chemstrand Corporation yesterday gave the University $5,000 to be used for visiting science lecturers and for scholarship purposes in chemistry.

Dr. Kenneth Johnson, director of research administration of the Chemstrand Research Laboratories in the Research Triangle Park, presented the check to Chancellor William B. Aycock.

The grant will be administered under direction of the chairman of the UNC Department of Chemistry, Prof. Horace D. Crockford.

Chemstrand, which is one of the leading manufacturers of chemical fibers in the world, located its research laboratory in the Durham, Chapel Hill and Raleigh area as one of the first of the research and industrial organizations to be established in the Research Triangle.

The Chemstrand laboratories are housed in attractive and modern facilities, with colorful and functional architecture suitable to the purposes of its role as one of the foremost industrial research centers in the country. The corporation has brought to central North Carolina a large number of scientists and industrial executives who are staff members of the laboratories. In addition, some of the personnel are adjunct faculty members in sciences at three major institutions in the area, UNC, Duke University, and N. C. State. Others are engaged in advanced study at one or more of the universities.

New Orientation Secretariat

Orientation Chairman Perry McCarty and Women's Coordinator Bonnie Raines, revealed new selections for the Orientation secretariat.

Chosen were Alice Brown, Judy Cowman, Parks Freeze, Madeline Gray, Joanna Houston, Mary Sue Kirk, Ilse Ziebscher, Dianne Littlefield, Holly Mattox, Jerri Moser, Margaret Shackford, Jean Snyder and Anita Strickland.

Debate Team Places 3rd

Two UNC Debate Team members placed third in the negative division of a recent intercollegiate tournament held at Randolph-Macon Men's College in Ashland, Va.

Eric Van Loon and Curtis Branscomb defeated all four of their opponents with a total point value of 78 and 73, respectively, and wins over Penn State, George Washington University, Randolph-Macon, and Hampton Institute.

The Randolph-Macon Debate was the last official tournament of the current season.

Bob Powell, the only freshman to serve on the varsity squad this year, will serve as president. Sam Jackson was elected vice-president; Curtis Branscomb, secretary; and Eric Van Loon, treasurer.

Discussion of a years-end banquet was a top order of business at the Tuesday meeting. Plans for the affair are not final.

Kappa Delta Hosts Workshop

Kappa Delta Sorority will be host for the Beta Province Workshop to be held here today, Saturday and Sunday. Delegates will attend from Kappa Delta chapters at Duke University, the University of South Carolina, East Carolina College, Queens College, High Point College, and Lenoir Rhyne College.

At the workshop, delegates will discuss various topics including scholarship, ritual, by-laws, rush, officer training, and social activities.

Present at the meetings will be Mrs. Edward H. Hill, Beta Province President. Special guests during the workshop will be Miss Katherine Carmichael, Dean of Women; Miss Daryl Farrington, Panhellenic Advisor; and Miss Sue Ross, Women's Residence Counselor.

Triangle Roles Open

Auditions for roles in productions of the Triangle Players of Durham will be held this Sunday.

Roles in "Showboat," "Under the Yum-Yum Tree," "A Streetcar Named Desire," "Auntie Mame" and "Kiss Me Kate" are available. Tryouts will be held at Irene's Dance Studio, 511 Morgan St., Durham from 2-5 and 7-9 p.m. Sunday.

Those attaining roles will be paid for their work.

White Faces Among The Black Ones—Why?

(Editor's note: The following article, written by Jim Clotfelter, a junior in the UNC School of Journalism, first appeared in the Durham Morning Herald on March 26, 1964. Clotfelter was recently awarded eighth place in the William Randolph Hearst Foundation College Journalism Contest for this story. It is reprinted here as an answer to a question many people ask on this campus: "Why do white people participate in civil rigths demonstrations?")

By JIM CLOTFELTER

CHAPEL HILL — What most puzzles many white Americans about the civil rights struggle are the white faces among the black ones in street demonstrations, sit-ins and jails.

In racial demonstrations here in recent months white professors, students and townspeople have risked substantial jail sentences, in some cases risked their careers, dropped out of school, and quit jobs to work with "the movement."

Why?

A Duke University religion professor, with a wife and three children, last week was sentenced to 90 days on the road for taking part in a sit-in demonstration at Watts Restaurant outside Chapel Hill. A University of North Carolina psychology professor, with a wife and daughter, was given a similar sentence.

Two white men — one a former Morehead Scholar at UNC, the other a great-grandson of a Confederate general who organized an Alabama Ku Klux Klan unit —are taking part this week in a protest fast in front of the Chapel Hill post office.

In separate interviews recently these four white men discussed why they are involved in the movement for Negro civil rights.

Dr. Robert T. Osborn, 37, an associate professor of religion at Duke and an ordained Methodist minister, lives in a wooded suburban area of Durham, with his Louisiana-born wife, Dorothy, and their three boys, aged 6, 8, and 10. Dr. Osborn, who has taught at Duke for more than nine years, faces a three-month term on the state roads.

He talked about what he called the Christian obligation to action. "If the Christian is to be concerned about anybody in the South, it must be the Negro. His needs are so manifest and urgent," the professor said. "The only alternative is not to be concerned at all."

By his dual position as teacher and minister, Dr. Osborn said he has been forced into stating publicly where he stands on civil rights. "Because I have been called upon to speak about the responsibility of Christians for the achievement of justice, I have been asked many times to 'put my foot where my mouth is.' "

Dr. Osborn said he has found the Christian church in the South usually unable "to change the moral climate"—and universities "generally ineffective in influencing the basic beliefs of students," because "a preacher or a teacher is paid to talk," and often that is all they do.

"They can always be written off by society as being in an ivory tower, with no contact with the real world," Dr. Osborn said.

Years of experience with the role of "talker," Dr. Osborn said, "have confirmed for me a basic theological insight: The word is never effective until it becomes flesh . . . becomes action."

When asked to participate in a direct action protest, Dr. Osborn said he decided that it "is not enough for the Christian to say there must be justice. An act of some sort is necessary to give some substance to your word.

"If I didn't act, I would have had to shut my mouth about things I'd been talking about," he said, because students would have thought that "in the last analysis I was not willing to act on what I believed."

Also, he said, "I wanted to show that I as a minister mean it when I say that integration is the will of God." He said many Protestant churches in the South have become "irrelevent" to current problems because they "have given moral support to segregation."

His participation in the protest entailed some risk, Dr. Osborn said, "but it was a risk every Christian is called upon to take . . . . We who cal lourselves Christians should not be afraid to bear at least a small cross for doing what we should do."

The professor said he would not call on all Christians to participate in demonstrations. "I would not generalize on my act.

"I had a certain impunity by virtue of my profession. I don't depend on my community directly for my support . . . . And because of my impunity I felt more responsibility to act."

The words came harder from 21-year-old John Dunne, chairman of the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee: "A person cannot be intellectually honest unless he takes actions in accord with his beliefs."

Dunne is a mystery to some whites who reason that other whites go into the movement because they are unsuccessful in their own society and are seeking "a meaning for life" in another society.

Dunne is a graduate of Choate prep school in Connecticut, where he was the School Seal Award winner for leadership, was voted the outstanding musician in his class (violin), and was a star fullback on the football team.

He entered UNC in the fall of 1961 with one of John Motely Morehead's prized scholarships, became a pledge in the Pi Kappa Alpha social fraternity, and was active in student politics and the YMCA.

In the fall of 1963 (when he was a senior, a year ahead of his class), Dunne dropped out of school to work with the Freedom Committee. Since then he has led mass demonstrations which resulted in more than 600 arrests of more than 200 people.

Dunne, whose face shows studied intensity and almost accusing eyes, linked his basic views on race back to his family. "I was brought up in a family which stressed Christian brotherhood, that emphasized that you treat everyone equally, that you don't pick on the underdog. . . .

"The thing that was stressed more at home than anything else was complete honesty. If one believes something, he should act according to it." Dunne said his family has stood behind him through his arrests and are willing to help "whenever they are needed."

He spoke of the moral dilemma he saw in trying to make decisions on the racial issue, as being similar to a man drowning: "If a man is drowning and you have a chance of saving him and you don't, then you may not be found guilty in court, but you are morally guilty of killing him."

ish" reasons why he felt obligated ish" reasons wh he felt obligated to work for the breaking down of racial barriers. "I had the feeling that I was not free; that I could not face a Negro without him seeing white instead of seeing me, John Dunne.

"Why should I back down on my ideals, deny myself love and deny myself friendship on account of my race?"

Dunne said he was "concerned about my future children. I hope that my work in some small way will save us from having to live out the rest of our lives suffering from segregation. . . .

"I want to live in the South. I love the South. This is where my friends are, both white and black."

Ohio native Dunne, some say, is a Yankee come South to deal with things about which he knows nothing. But Pat Cusick is a different story.

Cusick looks like the proverbial "Alabama red-neck." A hefty, red-complexioned man, often dressed in overalls or baggy blue jeans, Cusick could be mistaken for a farmer or a chicken feed salesman.

He was born and raised in Gadsden, Ala. His great-grandfather is reputed to have founded the Ku Klux Klan in Etowah County, Ala., after the close of the Civil War.

Cusick, 32, was in the Air Force for two-and-a-half years during the Korean conflict, when he served as air traffic control supervisor at Templehof Air Force Base, West Germany.

Later he worked for three years with the Computation Center in Chapel Hill and lacked one course to receive a B.S. in mathematics, when he quit both job and immediate prospects for a degree last summer, to work with the Student Peace Union and the Freedom Committee.

Cusick said he was a segregationist as a teen-ager. "I went to a Catholic boarding school in Alabama which taught that segregation was morally wrong. But I led arguments against the faculty in trying to prove it was morally right."

For about two years before he became active in the civil rights movement, Cusick said he worried about whether to become involved. "So this exists, I thought, but I have my own life to lead. . . .

"I was just seeing the wrong done the Negro. I didn't really at that time see that it affected me, that it also restricted my freedom. . . .

"But a person has to do more than sign petitions and talk . . . unless his beliefs are a hollow thing. If I'm going to be moral, then I can't do otherwise. . . .

"It would be just as wrong for me not to try in my own way to do something about this as it is for people like Bull Connor blatantly to oppress people, and maybe it would be more wrong."

Cusick, author of the Freedom Committee's unique "non-violent plege," taken by all people before participating in mass demonstrations, believes in "using all one's resources . . . to resist this evil until it is eliminated."

Cusick, who fasted for two weeks during a 30-day jail sentence in December because he was placed in a segregated prison camp, said, "I as a person cannot cooperate with segregation in any way, whether it be in Chapel Hill or in a white prison camp. . . .

"Segregation is morally evil. If a person cooperates with evil, it is an immoral act."

Both Dunne and Cusick talked about their transitions from "over-coffee liberals," who talked about equal rights, to the role of activists, who tried to do something about it. That transition also was made by William H. Wynn, the other faculty member sentenced to three months on the roads for participating in the Watts Restaurant sit-in.

A native of Texas, Wynn, 35, is an assistant professor of psychology at UNC and is finishing up work on his Ph.D. A slightly-built man, wearing dark-rimmed glasses, he has been at the University since September. He is married and has a one-year-old daughter.

He said his views on race stem from his "fundamentalist religious background — the Church of Christ in Texas, where we took religion and life pretty seriously," and from his experiences as a social scientist, seeing the effects of discrimination.

The Church of Christ, he said, taught that men "should do what we can to establish justice on earth . . . . The individual is called on to question and to search for justice."

The church taught that all secular authority is suspect, Wynn said. "Secular authority, as the church teaches, is not on a par with the Bible as a source of authority."

Wynn said his religious ideas have been modified considerably since his youth in Texas, but conceded that he still was influenced by church "identification with the weak, the underdog, the poor . . . . and the view that the power of the high and the mighty, who on earth are running things, might be prone to wickedness."

When the opportunity came to participate in a Chapel Hill sit-in with six other professors, Wynn aid, "I felt called upon to do something . . . .

"We (the professors) thought we might make it clear that such action could be the action of responsibile people . . . . clearly not youthful and getting our kicks out of an exciting demonstration . . . . We were not irresponsible beatniks, as the students had been misrepresented as . . ."

The sit-in, Wynn said, "is a means that can be used to call attention to the problem, a form of political pressure. It appeared to us the only means left that might be effective . . . . to spur action by the city fathers.

"The action was taken in full awareness of the consequences," Wynn said, referring to Solicitor Thomas D. Cooper's claim in court that the professors were "used" by civil rights forces. "We knew what we were doing," Wynn said.

Under other circumstances he might have acted differently, the professor said. "If I had known more people in Chapel Hill I could have exerted influence of the more usual political type, talking with people. But since I was new in Chapel Hill, that means was closed to me."

Wynn said he was "obligated" to participate in a direct action protest against segregation, "to be true to my commitments and ideals, to keep my own self respect, to show that I could do more than talk about it."

Wynn said he had discussed civil rights in his psychology classes several times before his arrest, and later explained to his students the reasons he had violated the law.

When he entered his first class after his Jan. 3 arrest, Wynn said, he was met with applause from students. "I'm not sure if it was approval of what I had done, or kids just being humorous, or just approval of me having done something."

Wynn — like Dr. Osborn — told Superior Court Judge Raymond Mallard, before they were sentenced for trespass violations, that they would, "under certain circumstances," again violate the trespass statute.

Dunne, Cusick and other whites closely involved in the local movement similarly have indicated no lessening in their consuming zeal, no retreat from what they see as a moral commitment.

The white faces remain.

Famed Film Man Here Next Week

Famed Hollywood film producer, Sam Goldwyn, Jr. will be a guest of the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures here on April 27, 28 and 29. Dr. Wesley H. Wallace, Chairman of the Department has revealed plans for a series of lectures and meetings with the visiting producer.

Accompanying Goldwyn will be Professor George Garrett, a member of the English Department faculty at the University of Virginia. The three day program will be built around a new film, "The Young Lovers," which was produced by Goldwyn and written by Prof. Garrett. From 8:00 to 9:00 on the evening of April 27th, Goldwyn and Garrett will appear on the WUNC-TV feature, "Encounter," which is moderated by Dr. John S. Clayton. From 9:30 to 11:00 P.M., a special class will be held dealing with Critical Analysis of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures. Goldwyn will conduct this session which will be held in Classroom No. 1 of the new Swain Hall Annex.

Between 10 and 12 Noon, on Tuesday, April 28, a special showing of "The Young Lovers" will be held in the Carolina Theatre in Chapel Hill. (All interested students may attend by obtaining a special pass from the office of the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures in new Swain Hall. Admission will be absolutely limited to the holders of these passes.)

From 3:00 to 5:00 on the afternoon of the 28th, Goldwyn and Garrett will conduct a second discussion as a followup to the showing of "The Young Lovers." This will again be held in Classroom No. 1, and all interested students are invited to attend.

Between 10 and 12 Noon on the morning of Wednesday, April 29, Garrett and Goldwyn will hold an informal discussion session with students from the writing classes of the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures in Room 102 of new Swain Hall. Any writing students from other classes may attend this session by contacting Professor William Hardy of RTVMP.

At Noon on the 29th, the two visitors will hold a seminar on Problems of Motion Picture Production in a room to be designated in new Swain Hall. Dr. Wallace stressed the unique opportunity afforded students interested in the art of film by the visit of Goldwyn and Garrett. Further information concerning the program of activities can be obtained by calling the office of the RTVMP Department.

Wake Tops Tar Heels, 11-5

The Wake Forest Demon Deacons soundly thrashed the Tar Heels 11-5 in a charity game Wednesday night.

The game will not count in the conference standings, but will count against the Heels' overall record. The Deacons had previously beaten the Walt-Rabb-coached Tar Heels 6-4 in a practice game in Florida. The Tar Heels remain on top of the ACC with a 4-0 record; Wake has a 4-1 conference mark.

Coach Rabb used four second line pitchers against the Deacons, hoping to get a good performance out of one of them. Little Buddy Cohoon was the only UNC pitcher to hold the Baptists in line, but he pitched only one inning.

Sophomore righthander Mike McLaughlin started on the mound for Carolina, but was once again plagued by wildness. The lanky fireballer, who has the best stuff on the staff, walked six men in three and two-thirds innings. Another sophomore, Danny Walker from Durham, then came on, but lasted only 1/3 of an inning. Senior Bobby Cox was tagged for five runs in his three innings.

All-ACC basketball star Frank Christie, who has been bothered by arm trouble, went all the way for the Deacons and gave up only five hits and two earned runs. The game marked the first time this year that Christie has gone the distance.

Dickie Prindle greeted Christie with a leadoff homer in the first inning. The Tar Heels added another run on two hit batsman and an error before Christie settled down and retired the side.

The Deacons tied the score in the second when Mike Budd tripled and scored on Wayne Martin's double. Martin went to third on a groundout and scored on Danny Loftin's sacrifice fly. The Deacons took the lead with a run in the fourth, then added three in the fifth off Walker.

No NC player collected more than one hit. Catcher John Shaw, Walker and Bob Hume had the other Tar Heel hits.

Heels Leave For Maryland

The Tar Heels left yesterday for their annual trip to College Park, Md. and Charlottesville, Va.

They meet Maryland today at 2:30 and travel to Virginia tomorrow for a 2 o'clock game with the Cavaliers.

Virginia is currently third, and Maryland is fourth in the ACC race.

WCHL Will Air Md. And UVA Games

WCHL will broadcast the Tar Heels' baseball games with the University of Maryland from College Park today, and the University of Virginia from Charlottesville tomorrow.

The station, heard at 1360 kilocycles, always broadcasts the Tar Heel's games played at home and in the Big Four, but expense usually prohibits coverage of games out-of-state. However the outstanding showing of the team to date prompted the station to add these two broadcasts to its schedule.

"Since Maryland upset highly-ranked Wake Forest at Colllege Park last week," said WCHL program director Jim Heavner, "UNC's game with the Terrapins should have particular interest."

Heavner said that the station is interested "to determine the students' interest in our coverage. If enough of them express a desire for more of these out-ofstate games, then we can certainly make arrangements to give it to them. In the case of this weekend's broadcasts, they are made possible by the generousity of the sponsors of the broadcasts."

The Walt Rabb pre-game show will start at 2:20 today and at 1:50 tomorrow with the games to follow ten minutes later.

Finley Will Be Closed On Saturday

Coach Ed Kenney announced that Finley Golf Course will be closed Saturday between 12:30 and 2 o'clock because of the varsity golf match.

Chi Psi Wins Frat Blue In Horseshoes

Chi Psi shut out Kappa Psi Wednesday night to win the Fraternity Blue horseshoe tournament. Gene Barrier was the most important winner for the Lodge, winning the singles match. The other two horseshoe championships were played last night.

Phi Kappa Sig won their first water polo match over Craige A, 6-2. Jay Scattergood led the Phi Kaps to the victory. John Isenburg broke a scoreless tie late in the second period, and then Frank Harper scored four quick goals to give St. Anthony Hall a 6-0 whitewash over Avery. In the only other game played so far AFROTC edged Grimes, 4-2. All three teams move on to the quarterfinals.

A mistake in yesterday's paper listed Gene Barrier as the manager of the badminton team for the Big 4 Day, which is false. He is the volleyball manager, while Mike Michaels is the badminton organizer. Michaels lives at the Phi Delt House.

There will be a volleyball tryout Monday night at 7:30 on the gym floor.

So as not to cause further confusion, a complete list of all managers for the Sports Day follows:

NC Netmen Win

The UNC tennis team won its fourth conference match in five tries Wednesday by blanking Duke, 9-0.

O. H. Parrish was the only man to win in straight sets as the Tar Heels scored their second consecutive shutout after the heartbreaking 5-4 loss to Maryland, which snapped a 47 match winning streak.

Summary:

Singles: George Sokol def. Jerry Mattson, 6-3, 6-3; O. H. Parrish def. Jim Cheek, 6-4, 1-6, 6-3; Ted Hoehn def. Ken McCullough, 8-6, 6-3; Pete Myers def. Doug Jones, 6-2, 6-3; Carl Evans def. Nat Broker, 6-2, 6-1; Ken Oettinger def. Roger Greenwood, 6-0, 6-0.

Doubles: Parrish and Hoehn def. Mattson and Cheek, 9-7, 6-4; Sokol and Evans def. McCullouch and Jones, 10-8, 6-3; Charlie Shaffer and Sam Applegate def. Greenwood and Tony Craver, 6-4, 6-2.

Mallard Sends 4 More Demonstrators To Jail

Two former scholarship students at North Carolina universities were among 12 leaders of the Chapel Hill Civil Rights movement receiving 12-month jail terms for leading demonstrators in street-blocking protests here last February.

John B. Dunne, 20, a Cleveland, Ohio native and former Morehead Scholar at UNC who heads the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee, was charged on 10 counts.

Charged on 23 counts was Joseph "Buddy" Tieger, a 21-year old Durham native and former Angier B. Duke scholar at Duke University. Tieger was described by Orange County Superior Court Judge Raymond B. Mallard as one who serves the cause, whether willingly or not, of "international conspiracy that would destroy this country."

J. V. Henry, whom solicitor Thomas Cooper called a "professional agitator," also received an active one-year sentence.

In addition, 100 other defendants received suspended sentences which can be activated if they violate any law or become involved in racial demonstrations in the next three to five years.

Judge Mallard's action virtually stripped the Chapel Hill rights movement of both its leaders and its rank and file.

All but one of the defendants pleaded no contest to charges of resisting arrest, trespassing and street blocking in similar demonstrations staged on Feb. 1, 8, and 10.

Miss Rosemary Ezra, 25-year old white Chapel Hill resident, pleaded no contest to 16 counts and received a six-month term. She was the only woman given an active sentence.

The session brought to a close the last of five special weeks of Orange Superior Court called for the consideration of approximately 1400 civil disobedience cases stemming from the Chapel Hill racial movement. These cases involved more than 300 persons.

It was reported that all defendants receiving active sentences could be free in four months on good behavior.

Sr. Class Blast Set For May 5-6

Plans for the annual Senior Class festivities have been completed, according to class vice president Woody Harrison.

Activities including a Senior Forum, "Parting Shots" session, picnic and dance will be held Tuesday and Wednesday, May 5 and 6.

The Forum will open the two-day affair at 2 o'clock Tuesday in Gerrard Hall, with the election of Mr. Alumnus, Miss Alumna and permanent class officers. Graduation procedures and alumni participation will be explained at that time and the class gift will also be determined.

In addition, free beer tickets to be used at the picnic will be distributed, along with free movie passes and reduced-rate tickets to Mike Rubish's Golf City and the All - Star Lanes.

Five graduating seniors will speak on topics of their selection at the "Parting Shots" session, scheduled for 8 p.m. Tuesday, in Gerrard.

Both Tuesday and Wednesday will be "Barefoot Day." Seniors will be allowed to attend classes without shoes. Wednesday is also "Free Cut" day, and free class cuts have been sanctioned by the administration, if each absence is approved by the professor.

Hogan's Lake will be the site of a picnic Wednesday from 3-7 with free beer distributed to those with passes. Swimming and softball will highlight the gathering.

Little David and the Wanderers will provide the music for a dance beside Woollen Gym from 8-12 p.m. Wednesday, ending the frolic. Midnight late permission has been extended to all senior girls for the dance, and the results of class elections will be revealed.

NC Volunteers To Choose Men From Over 700

At the close of its six-week recruiting campaign, the North Carolina Volunteers has over 700 applications from college students who want to spend their summer fighting poverty in North Carolina. Next step for the Volunteers is screening and selecting 100 of the applicants and placing them in community-service projects.

Teams of Volunteers, after a three-day training period in mid-June, will be assigned to the seven communities announced April 20 by the North Carolina Fund as sites of projects for finding and showing new ways to break the cycle of poverty. The North Carolina Fund is sponsor of the N. C. Volunteers organization.

Officials of the Volunteers are setting up selection boards in eight centers throughout the state. The boards will be manned by college faculty members, city business and civic leaders and representatives of community-service agencies such as welfare and public health departments. Boards will be located in Durham, Raleigh, Greensboro, Chapel Hill, Winston-Salem, Greenville, Charlotte and Boone.

The selection boards will pick some 200 Volunteers candidates to be finalists. Material on those selected will then go to N. C. Volunteers headquarters, where a small, final-selection committee will pick the top 100 students.

Jim Beatty, director of the NCV program, said yesterday the screening should end May 7; the selectees will be notified soon thereafter.

Beatty and his assistant, Curtis Gans, visited 40 N. C. colleges, travelling 7,500 miles as they criss-crossed the state during the recruiting campaign.

Beatty said that a number of N. C. residents attending out-of-state colleges have applied for Volunteer service. Students from other states attending N. C. colleges are also being considered.

Frosh Weekend Set For May, Says Brame

Jim Brame, freshman class president, revealed plans for the big Freshman Weekend, scheduled for Friday and Saturday, May 8 and 9.

Financed by earlier bake and merchants' sales, the weekend is free to all freshmen and it features several combos and a campus hootenanny.

The Original Clovers and the Vibrators will brighten the Planetarium parking lot from 8-12 p.m. Friday to open the event. In case of rain, the combos will move to the Tin Can.

Saturday a hootenanny featuring all-campus talent will be staged from 2-4:30. Tentative site for the folk singing is the GM lawn.

Guitar Vic and the Swinging Five will close the weekend on the Cobb tennis courts Saturday night from 8-12.

Four Profs Get Tanner Award; Brandis Wins Jefferson Prize

Winners of the 1964 Tanner Awards for excellence in undergraduate teaching and the Thomas Jefferson Award were announced Friday at a meeting of the General Faculty.

Recipients of $1,000 each for the Tanner Awards are: Samuel S. Hill Jr., asst. professor and chairman of the Dept. of Religion; David T. Lapkin, professor of economics; Daniel W. Patterson, assoc. professor of English; and Peter F. Walker, asst. professor of history and modern civilization and adviser in the General College.

Henry P. Brandis Jr., professor and Dean of the UNC School of Law, was presented the Thomas Jefferson Award, given annually to the faculty member whose life and work is in the best tradition and spirit of Thomas Jefferson.

A native of Salisbury, Dean Brandis is a member of the New York and North Carolina state bars. He has served on the Commission for the Improvement of Justice in N.C. and in 1947 served as adviser to former UNC president Frank Graham on a United Nations committee concerning Indonesia.

Dean Brandis was appointed by former Gov. Luther Hodges to a commission to study the State Constitution and to report any recommendations for amendment to the General Assembly.

Appointed Dean of the Law School in 1949, Dean Brandis will resign his position on July 1 of this year to continue teaching classes.

The Robert Earl McConnell Foundation established the Thomas Jefferson Award at UNC in 1961 with a gift of $10,000. This income is used for the annual award.

The Tanner Awards were established by the Tanner family of Rutherfordton in honor of the late Lola Spencer and Simpson Bobo Tanner. They are presented specifically "in recognition of excellence and inspirational teaching of undergraduate students."

The average age of this year's recipients is 36. Hill's teaching specialty is religion in America, especially in the South, and Lapkin specializes in monetary economics. Patterson's specialty is American literature and Walker teaches courses in American History.

The Tanner Awards were first presented in 1956.

Amphoterothens To Give Awards

The Amphoterothen Society, a campus honorary organization, will present a permanent trophy to the winners of the state High School Debate Tournament today at the conclusion of the annual meet.

All district champions will receive a certificate from the organization, according to Haywood Clayton, president.

The four outstanding debators in the state will receive a certificate also.

Not Again!

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Near riot broke out Thursday night in the Lower Quad as an estimated 200 male residents laid seige to Everett Hall in protest to Everett's celebration over winning the MRC "Best Hall on Campus" award.

The demonstration was sparked by a torchlight parade held by Everett residents which filed around the Lower and Upper Quads between 9:50 and 10:05 p.m.

As the solemn procession moved past Graham Hall, irate Grahamites doused the marchers from second story windows with trash cans filled with water, following a pattern set last year when Everett staged a similar demonstration.

The marchers were booed loudly by Upper Quad residents, and a large crowd of hecklers followed the torches back to Everett's west entrance, opposite Lewis Hall.

As the demonstrators put out their torches and entered the building, a group of seven half-naked Lewis residents, brandishing trash cans filled with water and led by the Confederate flag, raced out and soaked them thoroughly.

Other Lewis men manned the windows and helped to splash the entire west end of Everett with water.

Amist cheers, cherry bomb explosions and occasional coarse cries for a panty raid from the rapidly increasing crowd, the raid continued .

A bucket brigade was set up between Lewis's first floor bathroom and Everett's west steps, and water continued to flow until Everett residents closed the windows and sealed the doors.

At one point during the seige, Lewis attackers managed to pry the door open and pour a large amount of water down Everett's first floor hall, but swift and menacing action by one Everett resident, reportedly an advisor, sent them sprawling to safety.

Lewis men attempted to attack the building from the north side twice during the fracas, but defenders with clubs, led by Ed Crews of Everett, forced them back.

The water battle lasted from 10:05 to 10:25 p.m., when cries of "the fuss" and "here comes John Law" scattered the curious.

Everett was inspected by Dean of Men William Long and Assistant Dean Mat Ott, while Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont watched the crowd break up.

The last of the spectators returned to their residences at 10:35, but not without voicing the ominous prophesy, "Just wait till the nights get hotter."

Old Problems Face New SL

By HUGH STEVENS And JOHN GREENBACKER

Student Legislature opened its 37th Assembly Thursday night in a session that featured inaugurations, elections, and a legislative surprise.

The surprise came with the introduction (by Bob Wilson, SP) of a bill calling for a campus-wide referendum on the controversial student boycott.

The inaugurations were for the recently elected student body officers for 1964-65, while the elections filled the chairmanships of the various legislative committees.

Pete Wales, Honor Council Chairman, swore in Bob Spearman (President), Don Carson (Vice-President), Madeline Gray (secretary), and Jim Light (Treasurer). Earlier, Spearman had stepped down as speaker of the old legislature, and was presented a gavel in appreciation of his services by the SP and UP floorleaders.

Following the installation of the new officers, Carson took over the speaker's post for next year. The Assembly which he will head shows neither the UP nor the SP in firm control. The SP has 23 members, one more than the UP, but there are five seats held down by Independents.

SP Leads Committee

SP members captured virtually all of the important committee chairmanships, most of them by narrow margins. Chuck Neely was approved by acclamation as Speaker Pro Tem. Dick Akers was named to chair the important Finance Committee, Frank Hodges won the Judicial Committee chairmanship, and Bob Wilson took the top post for the Ways and Means Committee.

Only Teddy O'Toole (Ind.) who was named to head the Rules Committee, prevented a clean sweep of the chairmanships by the SP.

Don Wilson (SP) was elected Sergeant - At - Arms, and Alice Brown (UP) was named File Clerk.

President Spearman also announced the appointment of Mike Chanin, former UP chairman, as presidential assistant.

Wilson's Bill Surprises

The referendum bill introduced by Wilson came as a surprise to many legislators, most of whom had expected bi-partisan action on the matter at the first full session next week.

The bill will be sent to the Ways and Means Committee for hearings, and is expected to come before the body in about two weeks.

President Spearman, in his inaugural address, cited the problems facing the University today, including a rising enrollment, crowded living conditions, inadequate academic facilities and external difficulties such as the Gag Law and integration.

"Surely we may say tonight," Spearman said, "that no other student generation has ever faced the challenges of defending freedom and advancing opportunities which lie before us in this year."

He proposed Student Government committee investigation of ways to upgrade living conditions and physical facilities and to develop a stronger sense of community life.

Stressing the necessity for a "new climate" to implement academic endeavor, Spearman proposed a reading day before exams, a course evaluation booklet, a Fine Arts Festival, decreased class size, expanded independent and honors study and increased foreign exchange programs.

Spearman called on students to make "an individual commitment" in the area of civil rights, but encouraged them to join him in boycotting segregated business establishments.

"We must also turn our attention to the problem of our relations with the State of North Carolina," he said, and he pledged a utilization of the mass media to explain the needs of the University to the State.

The Civil Rights Movement Starts Over

Whither the local civil rights movement?

With most of its leaders in jail and almost all "regulars" pledged not to participate in demonstrations, the movement is in trouble. Judge Raymond Mallard has carefully selected the leaders for jail terms, releasing those who he considered the followers on suspended sentences.

So what will happen? As we see it, any of three things: no movement at all, demonstrations led by the Committee of Concerned Citizens or violence.

Of the three, the second seems the most likely. The CCC, which has lobbied for the Civil Rights Bill in Washington, picketed, raised money for bail and circulated petitions, is a responsible group, and the need for responsibility at this time leads us to believe they will step into the vacant shoes.

Demonstrations will be confined to marches, and sit-ins and hit-and-runs will be forgotten, if the CCC takes over.

Violence could come about if extremists managed to muscle into the new leadership before it can get organized This would include adherants to the doctrine of ACT, which includes such reasonable people as Adam Clayton Powell, Gloria Richardson and Malcolm X.

We hope that those who believe that action is the only way to push integration will be watchful for those who are in the movement for their own glory.

The fact that all the sit-ins have done almost nothing to further the cause (no restaurant has integrated, the Public Accommodations Law is still distant) should cause the new leadership to sit back and consider future actions.

If demonstrations are considered a must, so be it. But don't go any further.

It's Almost Your Turn—Be Patient

The long-awaited referendum on the boycott has started its journey to the polls, and students will finally be given an opportunity to express their views on the subject which has been roaring about us for the past two months.

The bill was introduced by Bob Wilson Thursday night in the first session of legislature under the new regime. We have our doubts on the motives behind the introduction of the bill, as we thought it would be done in a bi-partisan manner. We also haven't been able to find too many Student Party legislators who knew about the bill before Wilson assumed the rostrum. But more on that another time.

If the bill gets to the polls in its present form, it will consist of two questions:

1) If the voter would patronize establishments that serve all students, and,

2) If the voter follows the boycott, that is, if he refuses to patronize places which do not serve all students.

The first part is an effort to get a consensus of opinion on a touchy subject—would you go to a place that served Negroes? Or, in grosser terms, would you mind eating lunch next to a Negro?

The second question simply asks if you are for or against the boycott.

The bill needs rewording, as it is somewhat confusing. We are fortunate enough to have a candidate for Phi Beta Kappa in the office, and he managed to interpret it enough so that we could explain it. But the legislature will work on the wording, and the voter will know what he's doing.

So, what are the reasons for having the poll?

We must emphasize that the referendum is only a poll. It has no effect other than as a point of information, and will affect no Student Government policy.

The legislature has already taken a stand on the issue, so don't expect them to change around if the vote is overwhelming against the boycott.

The vote will serve as an indication to those merchants who would like to integrate, but are afraid they will lose business if they do. After all, they are risking a trade from a possible 10,000 plus students in order to be able to serve an additional 57.

One example that comes to mind is the Carolina Grill.

It won't make any difference to Clarence or Carlton, as their only consideration is the cashbox and as long as it is healthy they will remain as they are. Of course, it is doubtful if either of these establishments would serve Negroes if they were the only people in town.

But most of all, it gives each and every student the opportunity to express his views on this matter. This has been long overdue, and we hope that a record vote will be the result of these months of waiting.

Radical Education And Georgia Schools

From The Knickerbocker News

In a Georgia community the other day the board of education voted to fire a junior high school science teacher who had managed to alienate quite a few parents and (it will be seen why) quite a few students as well.

And no wonder. He was charged with:

- Speaking a strange language called midwestern—believed to be a dialect of American English.
- Being too humorous about his work, such as when he encouraged his students not to become "wall-to-wall idiots."
- Giving 37 of his 93 pupils failing grades for the first semester.
- Being in essence a radical in that he sometimes departed from the text and introduced outside subject matter in his teaching. In one instance he went several miles to get books not available in his own city.

Obviously no one wants THAT sort of person teaching our children.

Defense Of Chairman, Mom

Cigar-Smoking Mother Revered

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel,

I can fully share the revlusion Miss (?) Montgomery experienced watching our student leaders. I too was brought up in a sensitive home atmosphere. In fact, among the fondest memories of youth was my lady-like mother standing on the veranda of our Southern plantation arrayed in orange hat and red dress. As she squinted through the smoke rising from a cheroot clamped in the corner of her mouth, she admonished us boys, never, NEVER, to chew gum because it is uncouth. She always hit the children on their heads with her dainty parasol when we transgressed. Ah, she was a true gentlewoman of the old school!

What we need today at UNC are more of these cultured ladies like Miss Montgomery and others to keep us ever aware, with their exemplary conduct and letters, of the paramount necessity for manners and decorum. Keep up the good fight, Myrtle Montgomery!

Schiff Replies On Convention

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

In response to questions raised concerning the handling of the Chair at a recent session of the UNC Mock Political Convention, I feel it incumbent upon myself to clarify a few matters.

The Democrats were in the majority. No Republican in attendance would deny this fact, the most representative unit vote being a 24 to 18 decision. Hence it is understandable that the Republicans would object to the decision of the Chair to conduct the Convention in the most expeditious manner possible. Strategic factors are not the concern of the Chair. "The chairman should not permit the object of a meeting to be defeated by a few factious persons using parliamentary forms with the evident object of obstructing business."

Suggested rules of procedure had been decided upon by the Executive Committe previous to my appointment as Convention chairman. These rules were brought before the Convention. Amendments were proposed by Republicans and Democrats alike. The amended rules made no stipulation for the reading of individual planks. The lengthy discussion surrounding the foreign policy planks prompted the chairman to entertain a motion that in the interest of expediency the reading of the planks be eliminated or included in the allowed debate. The platforms of both parties were in the hands of all delegates and the reading seemed to the Chair to be superfluous. The Convention agreed.

As it was, the Convention finished the business at hand within a half hour of the limitation extended to the women delegates. Discussion of the planks carried on for nearly four hours despite the rather dramatic walkout of the Convention's most factious elements. The Chair feels that without its actions the business at hand could not have been concluded within the time alloted to women delegates who consisted of one third of the Convention.

In summary, the charges lodged against the Chair disregard the basic fact that the will of the majority did prevail, the minority element was given more opportunity than they frequently availed themselves of to state their case, and the business at hand was accomplished. For this, after all, was the purpose of the Convention, or so the Chair regarded.

Class Officers Are Worthwhile

Editors, The Tar Heel:

"To hold a class office should be more than an honor," and more than a responsibility. It is a heck of a lot of work, often to no avail. The Daily Tar Heel usually helps class officers appear to do little, probably because past editors have had the same opinion that you do. Last year the "20-minute job" of choosing the junior Teacher of the Month consisted of contacting every junior we possibly could and taking ballots on their favorite teachers. The first two articles made the front page of the DTH, but I almost missed the others myself and I was looking for them. The College Bowl series which ran every Sunday for more than a semester got no publicity except that which I wrote myself. And talk about a flop, the Junior Class Essay Contest got practically no publicity except in the campus briefs, consequently only two essays were written. Our sophomore year we were in the hole $92 due to a freshman picnic which had no publicity. Working to raise money, our sale at the Town and Campus, originated by Freshman President Watts Carr and continued every year since, was a success though this particular year publicity came from posters alone — not the DTH. That year we also had a car wash, and I am glad we got no publicity. For the six of us who washed them really would have been busy. There have been many projects that people who did not help with them never knew about, such as selling food for the Campus Chest Carnival, and this year it was the Campus Calendar that several of us worked on very hard for three weeks only to have it fall through. The Junior Class every year has had at least one big event; Junior Classics Basketball, Faculty Variety Show, and now the Powder Puff game. There are always the combo parties and if you think they are not a lot of work, ask any social chairman. There have been class projects that have come and gone such as open class meetings, Sophomore of the Month, and the Inter-Class Council.

In your article of April 23, you complained of one class which sponsored a dance at the same time as a freshman basketball game. That was my idea and my flop. I thought that the "Inter-class Council" should do something since so many of the candidates (not myself) always harp on it during elections. The basketball game, according to the DTH and the schedule, was originally planned for 7:30 p.m. which meant it would be another drawing card for the dance at 9 p.m. The dance had everything other class dances had never had; a well-known combo, "The Fabulous Five," it was within walking distance in the Woman's Gymnasium, and it supposedly had four class cabinets working for it. I am sorry that the game was switched and also that three sophomore officers and myself were the only sponsors to show up. Therefore do not blame any one class, we all went down together at my request.

I hope I have shown you that class officers do work or at least most of them try. Your complaint of not following platforms was wrong for we have a two-party system and the slate is often split. The president is the boss and if he wants to follow his platform, others are dropped. The Freshman Class that you praised so highly, has a slate of officers who planned their platform together during elections and I dare say has done an excellent job of following and adding to it. I am sorry that all classes can not be as successful but having one that is should show you that class officers can and often do serve a worthwhile function. I am proud to be a member of the Class of 1964 and I think the main reason is because of the people in my class that I have met and worked with during the last four years.

Whicker Craves Recognition

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Although I was not a participant, I am certain that the thirty-five boys who did participate in the Delta Upsilon skit in the Valkyrie Sing entitled "Coffee Break" would like a little recognition of the fact that they won the men's skit division. These boys worked long and hard on the skit and put on a good show. They were the only group that was not announced as being a winner in a recent article on the Valkyrie Sing in The Daily Tar Heel. I feel that The Daily Tar Heel owes them this recognition.

Micksup

By Mickey Blackwell

There is a serious flaw in Student Government's judicial procedure. That is keeping secret the names of parties in trials.

Under the present system, a student may be accused, convicted and suspended from the University for an offense against a student body that doesn't even know he's being tried.

The entire trial is secret. The names of the accuser, the defendant and the witnesses are not divulged. A small group mets out judgment without public knowledge and without public sentiment.

Secrecy is always a desperate threat to democracy. The American tradition is one of open courts. The public must be aware of and control the solution to its own problems. When the students do not know, they cannot control.

Those who say "keep the names secret" doubt the integrity of the student body to give justice to those brought to trial. They believe that a student, once suspended, stands a better chance of returning to school and becoming a good Carolina citizen if he does not face a certain social stigma. Much can be said for this argument.

The advocates of publishing names point out that the truth about the cases is far less dangerous than the rumors which invariably circulate. Founded upon partial fact and colored in word or mouth transition, these rumors cast the offenders in a completely false light. The "social stigma" under such circumstances is much worse.

Students must be "in the know" if this is to be a real Student Government. And a student who is accused of an offense against the student body should be known to that student body, as should his accuser.

If any offense is serious enough to warrant suspension of a student from school by other students, it is serious enough to be brought to the attention of everyone.

As it stands now, a convicted student is marked as such on his permanent record—records that follow him forever. A mistake now, in school, can cost him a job and a livelihood for his family for many years hence.

It would be far better to publish names at the time and forget the permanent record. Then the offender receives a temporary but deserved punishment in ostracization that is more in keeping with his years and experience. Unless, of course, an offender repeats. Then a student has indicated his incapacity for change and should be marked as of doubtful character.

These arguments tend to balance each other in their consequences. The fundamental question is whether the students shall know what is happening in this government they supposedly run themselves.

Can the students be trusted? Can the student public afford to trust its sovereignty to secrecy from itself?

Rights Bill Faring Better Than Expected For LBJ

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Contrary to all the gloomy speculation about the civil rights filibuster in the Senate, the battle is going far better for President Johnson today than seemed possible when it started.

The reason for this unusually optimistic forecast won't be found in the Senate debate. It lies in the elaborate and unprecedented system of check and cross-check between Senate and House Republicans that now controls the principal actors in the congressional drama.

For example, consider the well-publicized move of Sen. Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois, the Republican leader, to water down the Fair Employment section of the bill (FEPC). Some amendment is essential to win over enough Republicans so that if cloture (the forcible ending of debate) becomes necessary, a two-thirds majority of the Senate will vote for it.

Behind the scenes, Dirksen is shrewdly exploiting the system of check and cross-check to hedge in those who want a very tough FEPC and those who don't want any at all. To the businessmen who have swarmed into this office the past few weeks to lobby against the FEPC section, he patiently explains that this particular provision was written not by wild-eyed Democrats in the administration but by moderate Republicans in the House, led by self-effacing Rep. William McCulloch of Ohio.

THUS EVERY CHANGE that Senator Dirksen would like to make, under pressure from conservative Republicans, he cross-checks with McCulloch, the ranking Republican on the House Judiciary Committee. McCulloch in turn checks with Rep. Charles Goodell, the New York Republican who helped draft the original language of the FEPC section in the House Labor Committee. Changes that would gut the section are rejected by McCulloch and Co., and their veto gives Dirksen just the leverage he needs to withstand the conservatives.

The important restraints on Dirksen, in other words, do not come only from the White House or the liberal Democrats and Republicans in the Senate, but from a handful of moderate Republicans in the House.

None of these vital restraints would be operating today if the bill as it passed the House had not been truly bipartisan. The origin if this bipartisanship goes back to last fall when Presdent Kennedy, confronted with a runaway liberal coalition in the House Judiciary Committee, appealed to McCulloch and Rep. Charles Halleck, the Republican leader, for help. Halleck and McCulloch delivered.

As a result, these middle-of-the-road Republicans, who have never been civil rights zealots, have almost as much at stake in the Senate version of the bill as the all-out civil rights partisans. Perhaps never before in Senate history has a handful of minority-party congressmen in the House held such a whiphand over the Senate.

A YEAR AGO Dirksen might have been far less willing to cooperate with his House colleagues.

It was only last summer that Dirksen extracted the heart from a Republican statement of principles on civil rights that Sen. Jacob Javits, the New York liberal, tried to push through the conference of all-Republican senators.

But today, as the Negro revolution moves on an ever-ascending scale from one crisis to another, Dirksen knows that a strong bill is essential. And there is only a handful of senators in either party, north of the Mason-Dixon line, who haven't been driven by the force of events to the same conclusion. As a result, practically every objective in Javits' statement of principles last summer is found in the House-passed civil rights bill.

Accordingly, the long and windy talk in the Senate is a charade that should not be confused with reality. The first major break may come late this week when Dirksen, McCulloch, Halleck, Goodell, Javits, and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, the Democratic master strategist in the Senate, agree on the FEPC provision.

Once this agreement is reached, Senate managers of the bill will be able to move with the assurance of help from Dirksen, whose support has always been absolutely indispensable for final action.

By RON SPAINHOUR

Tonight's free flick, "The Innocents," is one of the more successful horror films. Hitchcock could take some lessons from its talented British director—Jack Clayton.

The film, based on Henry James's "Turn of the Screw," involves two children whose uncle (Michael Redgrave) employs an English minister's daughter (Deborah Kerr) as their governess.

William Archibald and Truman Capote's adaption of the James novel has added some Freudian overtones. Is the governess mad or just seeking to get the attention of the children's uncle? Or are the children haunted by the evil spirit of their former governess who appears as one of the apparitions? Are the ghosts real or part of the children's imaginations?

Director Clayton, who directed the superb "Room at the Top," has almost succeeded in making a high-brow "scare show." He has everthing working for him but the story and the length of his scenes. His climax is shattering and tragic, but he takes too long to get there. As a result, the film becomes monotonous. However, Clayton's ability, the quality of the photography, and the acting make the film a "must."

Clayton has been most successful in his use of black and white photography, lighting, and the settings to create an eerie atmosphere. He has allowed the English countryside, a lake, a garden, the Georgian mansion, its stairway, corridors, a curtain blowing in the wind and mist on the windows to act for him.

"The Innocents" will probably never be as popular as some of Hitchcock's films, even though it's a lot better.

Tom Jones — Follies, Vices And Oh So Laughable

A REVIEW
By
MICKEY BLACKWELL

Forget the kind of England you've been seeing in films lately — the one of ashen, smoke-

Jones," is one of the most resoundingly funny film comedies of the decade.

What makes such follies and vices so laughable on screen is the sheer, free-wheeling inventiveness of Richardson's directing.

But Osborne's screenplay seems to have lifted the best and lustiest from Fielding's novel, leaving most of the wordy philosophizing where it lies. And the performers, headed by Albert Finney in the title role, enter so obviously into the spirit of the farce that one can imagine no other players in their roles.

The picture begins with Jones' bastard birth on the estate of the good Squire Allworthy (George Devine), leaps to his 20th year of life and pursues him through a series of adventures, mostly amatory, from the haystacks of Somerset to the boudoirs of London.

Jones is the eternal innocent, good-heartedly beyond corruption but not in the least free of animal appetities, all of which he satisfies, repeatedly, with the greatest artlessness.

Uncomplex, naively gallant, he is at once the delight and despair of his foster father, who is determined to raise him as a gentleman. Yet Tom would rather poach and wench than attend to the wisdoms of his sanctimonious tutors (Peter Bull and John Moffat).

For fun he elects the company of an unwashed local trollop called Molly (Diane Cilento); for love he chooses blond and delicious Sophie (Susannah York), daughter of a neighboring landowner.

And between his pleasures with the one, his idyllic flirtations with the other, and the hunts and stack hellscapes and social realism.

Look back not in anger but with joy upon a thigh-pinching, hoof-thudding, sword-whacking, ale-guzzling, bed-hopping, port-swilling, dog-snarling, grease-on-the-jowls, food-in-the-hair England of the mid-18th century.

Observe there an assortment of characters — some virtuous, some villainous and all but the worst of them endearingly innocent. Watch them frolic their way through a plot that lacks both rage and rancor. For what you'll be witnessing, thanks to Tony Richardson and John Osborne, the creators of "Tom drinking bouts in between, he has little time for virtuous contemplation.

This serves but to heighten the enmity of his saintlier-than-thou foster brother, Blifil (David Warner), a thoroughly stuffy and adenoidal young prig. Yet Tom's real sin, in the eyes of the neighborhood, is his illegitimacy.

Squire Western (Hugh Griffith), father of Tom's true love, has a fondness for the young dog. The squire is a countryman of the old school—a prodigious drinker and wencher himself. But that Sophie should marry a bastard . . . why, unthinkable! And Tom is thrust, in disgrace, into the world.

What he finds there, you can be sure, is not a bit less tempting to a lively young rip than the diversions of Somerset.

There's a red-headed doxy (Joyce Redman) to defend with swordplay for the sake of a little bedplay later on. There's a jaded courtesan (Joan Greenwood) who introduces Tom to London society, then offers her society in a more private basis. There's even the arrival of Sophie in London, just in time for Tom to rescue her from a superbly bumbling old rogue (David Tomlinson).

And anyone who can't guess the outcome of the tale is either conditioned by 20th century realism or insufficiently aware of the dei ex machina to which 18th century writers could resort in resolving their plots.

Suffice to say that all ends well for almost everyone concerned, and that in the meantime, one is hugely entertained by everything that transpires. For the movie's creators, with artistry and enormous good humor, have seen to it that the film neither descends into routineness nor takes itself the least seriously.

To Richardson, the director, there was an obvious challenge in "Tom Jones." On the one hand was the requirement of reality to set it apart from standard, glossy costume comedy. On the other hand was the need to create, at times, a quality of hyperbole consistent with the spirit of the farce.

To fill both requirements, without seeming to compromise either one, Richardson stages most of his scenes in naturalistic (sometimes horrible) detail, while using camera and editing to make them fanciful. It isn't what you see, after all, but how you see it that counts.

And the whole has been edited with every trick of the trade—stop shots, fadeouts, turnarounds and rollbacks, diminishing images and fastmotion sequences—to the end that mind and eye are constantly surprised.

But it is apparent that Richardson also has virtuosity in handling actors—in evoking the perfect response, the precise gesture and expression at precisely the right moment. And the players in "Tom Jones" as it happens, are entirely ingenious in their own right.

But perhaps, as much as any characterization, one remembers individual scenes. For "Tom Jones" is a picaresque story — a fragmented assemblage of separate adventures. And Richardson has drawn each of them to perfection.

To punctuate many of the film's better moments, Richardson has introduced a sly technique—the intimate expression or aside delivered directly at the audience. Sometimes it is only a winked exclamation point, a shrugged question mark. At other times words are spoken as a parenthetical comment upon the screen action.

But in every case the effect is deliciously funny, and oddly flattering. Treated as an equal by the players, the viewer is thus better able to equate their favorite follies and vices with his own —and to laugh them all away with equal merriment.

Opera Workshop Features Mozart

The UNC Opera Workshop has been busily preparing for two performances of Mozart's great opera "Cosi Fan Tutte" to be presented in Hill Music Hall on May 12th and 13th.

These performances will be fully staged and will be accompanied by a special Mozart orchestra composed of members of the University Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Wilton Mason, director of the Opera Workshop.

Six well-known singers will be heard in the leading roles of this work. All are familiar to local audiences through their performances in past operatic productions. They include Rebecca Carnes, Martha Gibbs, and Marilyn Burris in the female roles and Wayne Zarr, Bert Adams, and Joel Carter in the male roles.

The opera, which will be sung in English, is a sparkling satire on the fickleness of women. Two young soldiers agree to test their sweethearts' fidelity by pretending to leave for war, then returning in disguise to pursue ardent courtships which finally result in the ladies' yielding to them. Around this basic plot are woven some of Mozart's most delightfully comic scenes, with pretended suicides, magical cures, mistaken identities, and all the standard situations of Italian comic opera.

Tickets for the productions will go on sale at the Music Department on April 15th.

Of course, a lot of people do pour beer down the side of the glass. They say it keeps the head down.
It sure does. And we think that's a shame.
Maybe it sounds silly, but we spend more dollars on just the bubbles than any other brewery in America. Instead of pumping them in mechanically, we let Budweiser create its own bubbles with our exclusive Beechwood Ageing and natural carbonation. It takes a lot longer to do it this way. But it's worth it.
When those bubbles get together at the top of your glass you've got a better head, a cleaner taste, a smoother, more drinkable beer. Budweiser even smells better (really . . . just take a sniff next time you pour).
So let that Budweiser fall right down the center of your glass. Let it splash around and froth and foam. We went to a whale of a lot of trouble brewing the finest beer on earth, and we'd hate to think you'd missed even one little bubble.
Budweiser.

Davis Shuts Out Terrapins On Four Hits, 7-0

Jerry Davis's four-hitter and the wildness of Maryland starter Jerry Vezendy gave the Tar Heels a 7-0 victory over the Terrapins at College Park yesterday.

The victory, the fifth straight in the ACC, kept the Tar Heels on top of the conference.

The crafty southpaw was in control throughout the game as the Heels tallied four runs in the third and added three more in the fifth.

Dick Fleming led off the third with a single and went to second on a pass ball. After Davis flied out, Fleming scored when third baseman Henry Bowen bobbled Dickie Prindle's grounder. Vezendy then walked Jim Speight and Bill Brown to load the bases. After whiffing big Ken Willard, the big Maryland lefthander walked Ken Boykin to bring in the second UNC run. Catcher John Shaw then rifled a single to center to bring Speight and Brown home. Boykin was thrown out on an attempted steal of home to retire the side.

In the fifth, Prindle led off with his second hit. Speight then attempted to sacrifice, but when Vezendy elected to go to second with the throw, all hands were safe. Prindle and Speight both advanced when Vezendy uncorked a wild pitch. Brown struck out then Willard was safe on a fielder's choice to load the bases. Vezendy then walked Boykin for the second time to bring in the Tar Heels' fifth run. Speight scored ahead of the throw to home on Shaw's fielder's choice. When Shaw attempted to steal second, Willard scored as second baseman Ed Bichy threw the ball over the catcher's head. Gary Black struck out to retire the side.

Davis's performance was his second consecutive brilliant outing and did much to ease Coach Walt Rabb's worries about his pitching.

The Tar Heels are in Charlottesville, Va. today for a game with the Virginia Cavaliers. Spence Willard will probably be on the mound for the Heels with "old reliable" Bill Haywood in the bullpen.

Frosh Stop Ferrum Behind Pitching, 2-0

By PETE GANNON

John Hubble and Tommy Kirkman teamed up to pitch the UNC Freshmen to a 2-0 win over Ferrum Jr. College.

Though Hubble's stint was certainly impressive, it took another herculean relief job by Kirkman to preserve the shutout. Hubble struck out eight and allowed only three hits in the first five innings, but ran into some trouble in the sixth. An error and a bouncer past first with none out brought a hurried call for fireman Kirkman. He retired the first two men on a pop to the shortstop and a strikeout, but he walked the third batter to load the bases. Don Wooten then tried to steal home and was tagged out by Tom Robbins three feet from the plate.

The Tar Babies scored early when Jay Schwartz walked to lead off the first, advanced to second when pitcher Dick Koziel slipped trying to field Jerry Joyner's bunt, and scored on Randy Prindle's single.

They added an insurance run in the fourth in a wild inning. Prindle walked, and made it to second when Koziel threw wildly to the base after fielding Danny Talbott's tap to the mound. Then Koziel held on to Mike Knowles's bunt too long, and the bases were loaded. After one out, Tom Lampman walked, forcing in Prindle. Then Tom Harris, the Ferrum catcher, tried to pick Talbott off third, which resulted in a low throw with the ball getting away from Dick Wade. Talbott then tried to score, and was thrown out easily, and while he was dashing for the plate Knowles broke for third, and got caught in a rundown.

The only Ferrum threat other than the one in the sixth were in the second and the eighth. In the second the first two men singled, but Hubble bore down and retired the side on a force out and two strikeouts. Against Kirkman in the eighth Ferrum got two men on with two outs, but he forced Howard Dunn to pop out.

Prindle had two hits to continue his hot streak, while Knowles, Robbins, and Hubble also collected hits, all singles. The shutout was the second in a row for the Baby Heels, and the eighth in nine games. They will host the NC State Freshmen on Tuesday, and Duke on Wednesday.

Line Score:
UNC ..... 100 100 00x 2-5-2

Tar Babies Defeat State Thursday, 7-0

By JOHNNY STUBBLEFIELD

UNC's Tar Babies skinned the Wolflets of N. C. State in their own den 7-0 Thursday afternoon gaining their seventh victory of the season.

The score, however, does not indicate the actual closeness of the game. For eight innings the teams engaged in a bitter pitching duel between Tom Gauntlett and Jimmy Dean of UNC and Tom Haas of State.

Gauntlett, a 6-4 left-hander, started on the mound for the Tar Babies. During the six innings he pitched he gave up four hits, struck out five and walked three. Right-hander Jimmy Dean came on in the seventh inning for UNC. He pitched the final three innings without yielding a hit. He walked none and struck out five, three in the ninth inning.

Righthander Tom Haas, State's starting pitcher, allowed only three scattered hits during his eight innings on the mound. He didn't walk a man, and struck out four. UNC's first four runs were unearned.

With the score 2-0, the pitching duel ended in the top of the ninth when Dean reached base on Jimmy Coats' second throwing error of the game. Haas then threw wild to first on Mike Saintsing's roller back to the mound, sending Dean to third and Saintsing to second.

Merv Cutshaw then came in for Haas and promptly walked Jerry Joyner to fill the bases. Randy Prindle's single to left scored Smith and Saintsing and sent Joyner to second.

Peacocks Take Shoe Title

The Peacocks added horseshoes to their long list of Graduate School victories by defeating the Physics Phynx, 2-1. Benny Williamson and George Hook won the first doubles 2-0, while the second doubles team of Don Roth and Mike Shaberly also won via a shutout. Charles Cook won the singles for the Phynx over Harry Johnstone.

Air Force and Manly, seeded fourth and third respectively in the tournament, have reached the finals of the Bowling. Air Force topped Pi Lambda Phi, 1941-1925. Forrest Jamison (523), Bill Lain (421), Bob Crissman (409), and Phil Lambeth helped upset the favorites.

Manly River Rats upset the Alexander Poobahs, 2049-1851, to earn the right to meet the Air Force. Carl Swann (575), John Roth (510), Jack Weirb (466), and Don Calvert and Don Ferrior together (498) were the winning kegsmen.

Monday at 4:30 on field 8 is the new time and place for the softball tryouts, since yesterday's were rained out. Table tennis tryouts are Tuesday at 7 in Graham Memorial.

Merrill, Roberts Named Co-Captains Of Mermen

By PERRY McCARTY

Harrison Merrill and Davis Roberts were elected co-captains of next year's swimming team.

The elections were announced when coach Pat Earey assembled his troops, both varsity and freshmen, in the Carolina Inn banquet room for the annual awards banquet.

Jack Hayden and Pete Worthen were named honorary freshmen captains. The Dick Jamerson Outstanding Swimmer Award went to Thompson Mann on the varsity, and to Pete Worthen on the freshmen. This marked the 25th anniversary of the Jamerson award.

In addition, Mann received a wrist watch donated by the Educational Foundation of America to the outstanding senior swimmer. Special guests included Athletic Director Chuck Erickson, sports publicist Bob Quincy, chief starter George Coxhead, and equipment manager Sarge Keller.

Coach Earey congratulated both squads on their splendid showing throughout the entire season commenting that the two teams are fully deserving of the many accolades they have received. Six varsity stars, Rick Forum, Fred Lipp, John Sheldon, Davis Roberts, Mann and Merrill, are almost assured All American recognition. Merrill and Mann were All-Americans last year.

Commenting on the most successful season of his seven year tenure, Earey had this to say: "It is almost beyond my imagination you take in doing well both for yourself and for Carolina.

"Carolina teams have developed a national attitude toward swimming. We now think along national lines and feel we can do as well as any club in the country. This is vital for you can only do as well as your competition pushes you. Here at UNC we think we have achieved a program that will take a boy as far as he wants to go in the swimming world."

Erickson commended the extraordinary spirit, dedication, and achievement among the entire squad. "It is no accident that swimming has come on as fast as it has."

A Freudian Analysis of the Remington Lektronic II

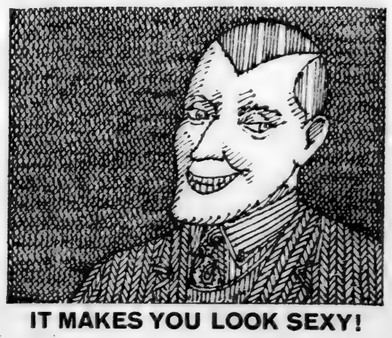
It's a mature shaver. There's no unnatural dependence upon a cord. Built-in, rechargeable energy cells let you shave cordlessly. In case you forget to recharge, there is a cord. Plug it in. Shave on the spot. That makes you feel secure.

And you'll feel secure about your appearance, too. 348 cutting edges of durable high-carbon steel slice whiskers off cleanly. They're honed on an angle so that skin doesn't get ploughed up and irritated.

The LEKTRONIC II will give you a superiority complex. It has a big head. Shaving head, that is. 756 whisker-gathering slots feed whiskers to the cutters faster. Make short work of shaving.

Now here's the part masochists hate: the Roller Combs. They make shaving pure comfort. Roll skin down. Pop whiskers up into cutters, so they're stroked off gently.

What's the greatest Freudian benefit of the REMINGTON® LEKTRONIC II?



IT MAKES YOU LOOK SEXY!

The LEKTRONIC II may cost a little more than most electric shavers. That's because it's worth more.

Ross Barnett Speaks Here On Civil Rights

By DENNIS SANDERS

Ross Barnett, controversial former governor of Mississippi, will speak on "States Rights and the Constitutionality of the Civil Rights Bill" tomorrow evening at 8:30 in Memorial Hall.

A leading actor in the James Meredith-University of Mississippi drama a year ago, Barnett is the first speaker to be sponsored by the Carolina Forum this year.

Last September, Barnett openly defied federal action and mandate when he attempted to prevent James Meredith, a 29-year-old Negro, from becoming the first of his race to attend a state institution in Mississippi.

Meredith was later admitted to the University of Mississippi, but only after weeks of tension which saw numerous injuries, the death of a French reporter and an Oxford man, and riots and gunfire directed toward National Guardsmen.

On September 20, 1963, the Mississippi State College Board, which normally has the final word in such a case, voted to back Barnett in his actions. Two days later, the board signed over all its power to Barnett.

Barnett turned Meredith away when the latter appeared at Ole Miss to register, by establishing himself as registrar. An NAACP attorney later testified, ". . . the registrar, dean and chancellor were prepared to register Meredith." Barnett denied Meredith's application, saying, in effect, ". . . in the interest of peace and safety, I deny your application, James H. Meredith."

When federal troops were ordered to the Ole Miss Campus, Barnett swore to be jailed rather than see the University of Mississippi integrated. He further ordered that any federal officials trying to superimpose federal mandates over Mississippi laws be arrested.

Calling upon his deep knowledge of historical and sociological trends, Barnett said, "There is no case in history where the Caucasian race survived social integration."

Barnett then openly defied federal authority on Sept. 24 by standing in a doorway to a state office building and denying entrance to Meredith, a U.S. attorney and U.S. marshals. He also, at that time, refused a federal summons.

Meredith was later admitted to Ole Miss.

James Wadsworth—KO'd By A Boxer

Wadsworth: Bikes Shells, Astronauts

By KERRY SIPE

"When I quit the University boxing team in 1932, I thought I'd never have to tangle with another boxer."

But UNC Housing Administrator, James Wadsworth was mistaken. Two weeks ago he was K.O.'d by another boxer. This one was chasing a squirrel.

With one arm in a cast and the other in a sling from injuries sustained in a recent dog-bicycle collision, Wadsworth leaned back in his leather chair and talked about himself.

"I'm really in terrific shape. At least I try to keep that way. I've been riding a bicycle to work for years. There's no better exercise."

Mr. Wadsworth came to Chapel Hill as a freshman in 1928. He received his masters from UNC and taught science at Durham High School before going into the Navy.

On the wall above his desk was a certificate acknowledging him as a permanent commander in the United States Navy.

"The service taught me a lot. While I was in the Pacific during World War II, I picked up this hobby," he said pointing to a glass case of marine specimens near the wall. "I collect seashells.

"It's a hobby that allows me to keep up with a little of the science that I taught at the high school in Durham. It's really a fascinating way to pass time."

He is past president of the North Carolina Shell Club which holds its meetings here four times a year.

"I try to keep in touch with the world of science as much as I can," he said.

Mr. Wadsworth has two pet projects which help him with his interests.

"I am narrator of a weekly program on science which appears Wednesday over WUNC-TV. It's a challenge to put together a live, unrehearsed show.

He has many memories of unusual things that make the television series a delight to him.

"One day Professor Brecht of the University was giving a lecture on the program explaining what happens when a person faints. The girl assisting him grew warm under the bright lights and passed

French Papers Call Pompidou Heir Apparent

PARIS (UPI) — Georges Pompidou, the wealthy banker whom President Charles de Gaulle hand-picked as premier of France, emerged Saturday as a probable presidential contender if De Gaulle does not run next year.

Two French newspapers—the liberal "Combat" and the conservative "Le Figaro"—touted Pompidou as "De Gaulle's heir-apparent after the premier talked down two sharp-tongued critics of De Gaulle's program in parliament Friday.

De Gaulle was reported making rapid recovery from a prostate operation eight days ago. But sources said he probably would not leave the hospital before next Tuesday or Wednesday.

The illness threw the whole issue of De Gaulle's successor and next year's presidential elections into sharp focus.

Johnson: Cautious, But He Must Go Meet The People

WASHINGTON (UPI) — With Harry Truman murmuring dissent from the sidelines, President Johnson declared Saturday that he was not unduly concerned about his safety in milling crowds and would continue to meet the American people on a man-to-man basis.

At a stop-and-go news conference, the President also announced that he would send Congress, Monday, a new program to aid Appalachia — the poverty-stricken area he toured Friday amid enthusiastic crowds that prompted increased concern for his safety.

Truman, who sat on Johnson's right during the press meeting in the President's office, said on arrival at the White House, that he did not want Johnson to "take chances." The salty-tongued former President added: "The Secret Service used to give me hell for taking chances."

When the question of presidential safety in crowds was raised at the news conference, Johnson said he tried to take "reasonable precautions." But, he added, a U. S. President must go out and meet the people. He could be harmed just as easily making a speech as he could be riding in an open car.

Fresh in mind was Johnson's five-state, campaign-style tour of Appalachia. In Pittsburgh, he rode in an open car for the first time since the late President John F. Kennedy's assassination.

But the President insisted to newsmen: "I was in no more danger yesterday than I am in now."

The news conference was the President's second in three days. Reporters tried three times to end it only to be called back. It produced these other major developments:

The President described as "must legislation" the wide-ranging program he is sending Congress to help the Appalachia region. He said the program, to cost $220 million in the first year, would provide more roads, develop water resources, improve land, and make new use of human resources by re-training men and women. His program is based on recent proposals by a federal-state commission.

In foreign affairs, the President disclosed that the United States is disclosed that the United States is discussing several matters with Russia as part of his attempt to bring "peace in our time and in this world." He said it would be premature to give details, but noted that talks have been under way on an aviation agreement, a consular agreement, and exchange of various kinds.

The President announced that he had cancelled a May 1 deadline for choosing a manufacturer to build America's first supersonic transport plane. He said none of the bids submitted had met government requirements, especially for economical operation of such a plane. A special advisory committee will study the problem and submit recommendations to the President.

Awaiting Trial

KKK Leader's Home Bombed

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (UPI) A bomb blast shattered the home Saturday of a Ku Klux Klan leader who is awaiting trial on charges stemming from the dynamiting of a young Negro boy's home.

The explosion, which occurred at 12:45 a.m., turned the five-room frame house into a blazing inferno and sprayed the neighborhood with debris, but no one was injured.

Barton J. Griffin, 35, exalted cyclops president of Klan Klavern 13 and the apparent target of the blast, was at work when the explosion occurred. His wife and four children were visiting her mother in Moultrie, Ga.

Griffin told United Press International his life had been threatened at least 100 times since his arrest on charges of conspiring to blow up the home of Donald Godfrey, a six-year-old Negro boy wha was admitted to previously segregated Lackawana Elementary here last fall.

An Anderson, Ind., mechanic, Sterling Rosecrans, Jr., has been sentenced to seven years in prison for carrying out the actual bombing of the Godfrey home, but the government charges he was simply the "tool" in the plot. Griffin and four other klansmen have been charged with conspiracy in connection with the crime.

The klan leader said Saturday that carloads of Negroes have been driving past his house "at all times of the day and night" since the time of his arrest.

Griffin says he has had klansmen protecting his family every time he has had to leave them alone in the house.

The explosion and fire left the Griffin home a charred hulk and the contents were completely destroyed. One outside wall was burned through and in places the ceiling and floors were burned out.

"It makes me feel like I've been tried and convicted before I ever get to court by whoever did it," Griffin said.

"This house represents 16 years of married life. It may not look like much but everything we owned was in it. It has a lot of sentimental value." Damage to the house was estimated at $4,000.

Asked if he thought the bombing was connected with the federal conspiracy charge he now faces, the muscular klansman replied, "I can't think of any other reason."

Griffin was arrested March 12 on the conspiracy charges. No trial date has been set in his case, nor the cases of the other four klansmen charged in the crime. All have pleaded innocent.

The Godfrey home was bombed Feb. 16. No one was injured, although the house was heavily damaged.

Episcopal Bishop Will Preach Here

Di Phi's To Debate God's Existence

The existence of an omnisicent and omnipotent God will be debated by five-man teams of the Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic House in their annual debate Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. on the fourth floor of New West.

Judges for the event will be Chancellor House, Professor Maurice Natanson and Dr. Donald Spirngen.

The Di-Phi is the oldest collegiate debate society in the country, and its senators follow strictly the form of parliamentary debate described in "Robert's Rules of Order."

Its list of members includes many prominent figures in state and national history.

Though the societies, both founded in 1795, have separate chambers in New East and New West, they have been meeting in joint session for several years because of membership problems.

Enrollment in the joint organization has increased markedly since the beginning of this academic year, according to current President Charles Neeley, and the two societies are aagin starting to split their ranks.

Despite their lean years, the two organizations have managed to maintain the annual debate in their schedule, and this year as usual, the event will be governed by standard, formal debate rules.

The public is invited to attend and stay for refreshments afterwards.

Governor Barnett Comes To Chapel Hill

The Carolina Forum kicks off its 1963-64 speaker-schedule tomorrow night in Memorial Hall with the appearance of Ross Barnett, former governor of Mississippi.

Barnett gained fame, or some measure of it, with his attempt to keep James Meredith, a Negro, out of the University of Mississippi. Meredith finally gained entrance after a long legal battle and a good bit of personal danger.

John Ulfelder, chairman of the Forum, tells us that the format of the program will be the same as it was last year —a speech and then a short question-and-answer session. There will be a short reception afterwards and Barnett is then scheduled to meet with the Carolina Political Union.

We hope to see Memorial Hall filled tomorrow night, and we also hope that Mr. Barnett will receive the respect that is due a former governor of one of the 50 states. We recall the embarrassment of the Duke officials when demonstrators disrupted a speech by Governor George Wallace of Alabama last fall.

You may not agree with Mr. Barnett, but at least listen to what he has to say.

A reception for him such as the one Gov. Wallace received can do absolutely no good.

Records Were Made To Be Broken, Eh?

We picked up a copy of Guinness' Book of World Records yesterday and soon were overwhelmed by the huge number of facts. Not just only like the world's longest bridge and the oldest living man, but real goodies. Such as:

"The greatest number of lions mastered and fed in a cage by an unaided lion-tamer was 40, by Captain Alfred Schneider in 1925."

A footnote tells us that 25 lion-tamers have died this century.

Or, "The face-slapping contest record was set in Keiv, Russia, in 1931 when a draw was declared between Vasiliy Bezbordny and Goniusch after 30 hours."

Better yet, "A world record for nonstop knitting has been claimed by three women outside Bristol University, England, in March, 960." They went for 48 hours.

You can also find the record for the most consecutive roller-coaster rides (303), the most fingers on one person (26), most number of bombs defused by an individual (8,000) and the highest stilts ever mastered (22 feet).

All this is most interesting, but we would like to add a few records of our own.

How about "The greatest number of pacifist pamphlets distributed in one day was 3,450,678, by the Peace Union in Y-Court at Chapel Hill, N. C."

Or, "The greatest number of speeches on one subject in one month by an individual was 250, by Governor Terry Sanford of North Carolina on the subject of 'The War on Poverty'."

And, "The greatest number of campaign buttons distributed in one day was 3,987, by Nicky Nicholson of Chapel Hill, N. C., April 21, 1964."

Also, "The most drunks assembled in one place was 4,000, during a concert by the Four Freshmen at Chapel Hill, N. C., on April 24, 1964."

Now it's your turn. Try your hand.

Politicians Love Us

By BILLY ARTHUR
In The Chapel Hill Weekly

There's a time to wake and a time to sleep. There's a time to laugh and a time to weep. There's a time to work and a time to play. There's a time for everything they say. But the time of times in North Carolina is the Democratic Primary.

In Raleigh last week the Democrats gathered for the Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner. None of them were unemployed. They were busy finding fault with each other.

As James Larkin Pearson once wrote, we'll "sing a song of convention, candidates galore. Some with bellies full of pie and a-wanting more. Hot times in the counties now, right along till fall. Where do you and I come in? Gosh, we pay for it all."

Last Saturday the politicians milled around the Sir Walter Hotel lobby, and I know they were a sight to behold.

The way they shook hands and the way they smiled would make a fellow, who doesn't know these things, believe they were the first ripe strawberries in the patch.

They moved from one to another, and ten minutes later had forgotten whom they'd shaken hands with.

It's strange how some people can move along in this state undecided as to their calling, and then suddenly find it.

Raleigh was full of such people last Saturday. I'll bet everyone of them had concluded that God had created him especially to hold political office.

* * *

What confuses me are the reactions of gubernatorial candidates to occurances in the campaign. Editorials against one are said to react in his favor. Newspaper stories about another are said to improve his opponent's chances, and speeches by a candidate harm him more than anything he could have done. That's what they say. In other words, nothing done, said, or printed for a candidate is directly good for him or will help him.

But he keeps on running because he loves everybody. And he loves everybody because he's running.

Children would recognize that. I remember one time the Henderson Dispatch reported a man asking a child if his father were home and if he had guests.

"He has," the boy replied. "There are two gentlemen and a politician with him."

I have only this counsel to all candidates:

Do your best till the primary is over. It's traditional in North Carolina to drown all the pups but one when they're through barking.

* * *

Overheard at Spencer Hall: "Dr. Zorba must do her hair."

* * *

They're telling a story about three men going to Heaven and St. Peter asked the first what he had done on earth. And the man replied that he had been a salesman, and St. Peter directed him to Hades. The second said he had been a merchant, and St. Peter sent him down below also.

The third man said, "St. Peter, I was a member of the Chapel Hill police department."

And St. Peter said, "Step right on in sir. You've already had enough hell."

* * *

And here's one for Red Marley about the man coming home from a business trip unexpectedly and catching his wife in the arms of another man.

"Just what do you think you're doing?" he demanded.

And the wife said, "See, I told you he was stupid."

At The Flicks

Jubilee Ends With 'Spring'

Ed. Note: This is the last of three reviews of the free flicks being presented during Jubilee Weekend. Tonight's film, "The Virgin Spring," will be presented at 6:30, 8:30 and 10:30.

By RON SPAINHOUR

There are two modern foreign film-makers who stand above all others—Ingmar Bergman and Federico Fellini. Bergman's brilliant academy-award winning "The Virgin Spring" ends Jubilee weekend today with a tour de force.

Bergman is not one to shy away from controversial subjects. In "The Virgin Spring," he presents a brutal rape-murder, tackles the themes of revenge, evil and innocence, and contrasts the paganism and Christianity of 14th century Sweden.

The film, based on a medival folk songs (Tores dotter I Vange), begins with a horrifying rape and ends with a scene of such power and beauty that the viewer almost forgets the horrors of the first scene.

A young girl, Karin, and her foster-sister start out through the forest to church. The foster-sister purposely falls behind and leaves the girl to continue alone. The girl soon meets two herdsmen and a young boy, talks and jokes with them and shares her food with them. They in turn rape and kill her while her foster-sister looks on from a distance with satisfaction.

Later that same day, the herdsmen find lodging at an old farmhouse. Unaware that they are at the home of the young girl, they offer to sell the girl's clothes to her father. Realizing what has happened, the father kills the herdsmen in a ritual-type murder and then travels through the forest to find his daughter's body and to repent before God.

As was most of Bergman's films, "The Virgin Spring," is subordinately concerned with religion. As film critic Hollis Alpert recently noted: "Bergman's case seems to be that of an artist who will not accept religious answers to man's moral dilemmas, but nevertheless mourns the absence of security that a solid faith would have provided."

The film is a parable ,a kind of miracle play in which good and evil, Christians and pagan powers unite in a divine rebirth illustrating the continuing power of love. What Bergman seems to be saying is that the way to God lies through love, suffering and death.

Taken as a whole, the film is excellent. Bergman has managed to present the medieval period to such an extent that we wonder if this couldn't be a documentary. The cast, as with all Bergman casts, is of top quality. Max Von Sydow (who will soon be seen as Christ in "The Greatest Story Ever Told") is extremely good as the father.

However, the film is not without some flaws. The story must be accepted as myth. The revenge-murder scene of the father is too long and should have been cut. And the rape scene is especially shocking to American audiences. Yet, the scene is artistically justifiable and its brutal force is necessary to justify the revengeful actions of the father .

Above all, the film is Bergman, and no one can do what Bergman can do with a camera. No one has been able to capture the sense of life, the beauty of nature on celluloid with such clarity as Bergman. It is as if he commands the sunlight and outdoors to act for him.

And it is especially amazing that Bergman can deal with such a horrible subject, such a primitive time in such a beautiful manner. Once you see "The Virgin Spring," you will never forget it.

Beware The Bare Bodies

The nicest part about the sun coming out again for a while is the charming young female forms that come out to bathe in it.

Alas, the annual spring joy attached to coed-watching has been all but destroyed for the Carolina gent.

Carolina ladies, who have rules for almost everything that doesn't matter and none at all for the things that do, are now being subjected to a long list of stringent rules for sun-bathing.

The rules, drawn up by the officers of individual dorms, restrict bathers to inconspicuous side roofs and yards. Women must wear full coats when not actually sunning and their bathing suits must "modest" and "not skimpy."

In some cases, efforts are being made to construct fences to keep out prying eyes.

The real question in this matter is: Whom are the rules designed to protect?

Is it the virtue and/or modesty of the sweet young things? If so, what in the world will they do when asked to the beach for the weekend?

Is it the lewd impression that indiscriminate sun-bathing engraves in the minds of visitors to Chapel Hill? If so, what do these same visitors think when they go to the beach?

Or is it the golden image that every young man has formed of his sweetie concealed in her wrap-around skirt, blouse and spray-net? Surely, here, there is indeed a grave danger.

The most ridiculous part about it all is that the coeds receive far more harassment from men who are forced to keep their distance than they do when their male friends are allowed to come up and speak to them.

Cobb women have reported that groups of male students are continually gathering on the sidewalk near the sun-bathing area to shout cat calls and insults. This sort of conduct is disgusting and inexcusable, and yet, would there be the inducement for it if a set of more natural rules were enacted?

Men would look quite stupid indeed, shouting foul words from a distance while other men were sitting next to the women, talking. And they certainly would not be so bold with their language face to face with the coeds.

The unfortunate thing with the sun-bathing rules, as with so many of the women's rules, is that they have been concocted to fit a particular situation without consideration of the context.

The students who made these regulations didn't consider the hypocrisy of being overly modest and even prudish in one area, while many other University rules allow almost complete freedom.

It would seem that the Carolina Lady is grown up enough to live fully under the more mature approach of the Campus Code. Certainly she knows enough to be discreet about where she sunbathes without having to be penned in like one of so many cattle.

By way of a postscript, perhaps we might be more fair to the ladies if we enacted a set of rules for male sunbathers.

Surely visitors to Chapel Hill are repulsed by the sight of fraternity men working in their front yards with their shorts off. And what about those horrid pale bodies lounging about the lower quad.

Dean Long, get busy. It's time to clean out the sun-worshipping infidels.

Beatle, Squirrels Hunted

'Who Is Babu?' Myrtle Asks

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The younger generation of today is very active, and for that reason I enjoy their company very, very much. Living near a great university such as this is indeed an enlightening experience, and I look fondly back upon students of the past, as well as those who are here today.

However, sometimes they lose me, if I may use one of their expressions. New vocabulary seems to appear every day, and sometimes I have trouble finding out exactly what some of the words mean. Usually I am successful, but now I am stumped.

Do you, or any of your readers, know what a "Baby Beatle" or a "Babu" might be? I certainly don't.

'Murals Lacking DTH Coverage

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

It has been a perennial campaign promise of prospective Tar Heel editors to provide sufficient coverage of intramural activities. It has been a perennial fact that the caverage has been far from adequate. As president of the Joint Intramural Council and therefore representative of the over 5,000 students who participate in intramural activities, I would like to urge that the Tar Heel provide continual, day by day reporting of the many types of intramural events. Undoubtedly there are myriad problems connected with this task (I cannot believe that the Tar Heel could be maliciously responsible for its neglect of intramurals), but I feel that the importance of this program necessitates the solutions of these problems. Intramurals involve more people on this campus than does any other extra-curricular activity, 60 per cent of the student body to be more exact. The reporting of intramurals would be biased toward neither residence hall, fraternity, or graduate men, for it includes them all. The Carolina Gentleman has indicated his support by voting for the referendum on paid managers and by participating in the activities. Why neglect this tremendous area of student life in a student paper.

Co-Chairmen Hot For Lodge

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

We would like to take this opportunity to express our appreciation to all of those who helped us in having HENRY CABOT LODGE nominated for one of the two positions at the Mock Political Convention last weekend. In many cases party lines were forgotten in recognition of the outstanding qualities and the great leadership of Henry Cabot Lodge. His winning the convention's Vice-Presidential nomination on the first ballot clearly indicates that, were he to be nominated for President at the Republican National Convention in July, he would receive much support in North Carolina in November; not only from Republicans, but also from many Democrats who are unsatisfied with the present Johnson administration.

It was a great pleasure to watch a Republican do so well in a Democratically controlled convention in a traditionally Democratic state. Congratulations to all who recognized a truly outstanding choice for the next President of the United States!

Anti-Squirrel League Sought

Editors The Daily Tar Heel:

Have you ever read a defense of squirrels? I don't think any right-minded person can furnish any reason for their existence!

Let us organize a Society for the Extermination of Squirrels and the Encouragement of Birds. We who love birds order bushels of bird seed and presto, you look out your window and see fat bushy-tails greedily gobbling.

England decides to offer a bounty for grey squirrels and reports an increase of fruits and birds.

On with the slaughter.

Indifference: The Cancer Of Mass Society

Ed. Note: Milburn P. Akers is the editor of the Chicago Sun-Times. The column below was reprinted in the Albany (N.Y.) Knickerbocker-News.

By MILBURN P. AKERS

Sweeping condemnations of a social order are seldom, if ever, justified. But two recent happenings should, at least, concern Americans.

In Albany, N. Y., a group of persons—many of them teenagers—stood on a street and taunted a youth, subsequently determined to be demented, because he stood on a 12-story building ledge in a state of indecision. He was repeatedly urged to jump. Fortunately, he finally yielded to the plea of a relative and was saved from self-destruction.

A little more than a month ago 38 respectable, law-abiding citizens, safe in the security of their own apartment homes in New York City, stood at darkened windows and watched a killer stalk and stab a woman to death in three separate attacks.

Not one of the watchers sought to intervene. Not one of them called the police. Presumably, they were fascinated by the spectacle even as the Albany street crowd was fascinated by the dangerous position of the demented youth. Both groups, as intent on the "kill" as if that which they watched was but a TV melodrama, reverted to the jungle. Human life was at stake. But they were indifferent.

The Albany and the New York City episodes, pinpointed, as they were, are not isolated cases. They are not exceptional cases. They merely chanced to be possessed of a somewhat morbidly dramatic nature. The indifference demonstrated in those cities is duplicated in many ways in many localities many times. This past January a man stood on a narrow 7th-floor ledge inside the U. S. Courthouse in Chicago for more than an hour. He was not taunted to jump. His plight was not ignored. Firemen gathered below with lifesaving nets to catch him at the risk of their own lives. Men pleaded with him not to jump. He ignored them. When a minister attempted to assure him with the simple words, "God loves you," the man answered with the question, "What God?"

There are other examples and demonstrations of our collective indifference. The annual slaughter on the highways is one such. Before each holiday the grisly warnings of death are repeated in newspapers and over radio and television. They are ignored. It is always the other fellow who gets killed. Children burn to death in tenement slum buildings every winter. There is no public outcry. They are someone else's children. The victim of the narcotics peddlers are condemned to but a slower death than by auto or fire. No one rally cares.

In many ways a self-centered American society is indifferent to the preventable death in its midst.

Many demonstrations to the contrary can be cited, of course. Hospitals, welfare services, churches, and numerous institutions attest to an opposing viewpoint. Everyone isn't indifferent and calloused. But demonstrations such as have taken place in Albany and New York City create the impression of a people indifferent to the lot of others.

The Albany street crowd crying for the self-destruction of a terrified, mentally disturbed youth is a bestial sight, one more fitting, if fitting at all, to the Salem witchcraft days.

The watchers in the New York City apartment house, awakened by the cries of a mortally wounded woman, watching as her killer returned again and again to seek her out as she tried to hide from him, are one with the crowds that gawked at the tumbrils as they rolled through the streets of Paris bearing their pitiful loads to the guillotine.

It is all too easy, in these days of international nuclear tension, in the continual struggle for economical survival in a difficult world, to take shelter within a cocoon of indifference. As a society we are dependent, one upon the other, for food, for shelter, for mutual safety.

As individuals in that society we shrink from the responsibility of facing down a crowd when it calls for blood. We let someone else call the police while murder is being done because we don't want to get "involved."

We are already involved.

The affairs of the community are our affairs, not the affairs of strangers. It it who who get killed on the highway, not someone else. It is our children who died in tenement fires, our young men and women who go to certain destruction because of narcotics.

A sweeping condemnation of a social order is seldom, if ever, justified. But recent happenings give evidence of a need for a re-examination of our social conscience.

As John Donne, an English poet and divine, once wrote: ". . . any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind; and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee."

RESEARCH GRANT

The National Science Foundation has approved a grant for an Undergraduate Research articipation (URP) program at UNC.

Dr. James C. Kellett Jr., assistant professor of pharmaceutical chemistry and program director, said, "I'm after the best students I can get. I want superior undergraduate students with a genuine interest in graduate work."

The URP program considers any student with an over-all B average and highest grades in sciences as a superior student.

Selected students will recieve a stipend of $50 per week for 12 weeks, with all equipment and supplies furnished. They are given a junior colleague status and a maximum degree of independence in their research.

The summer program will involve research in pharmaceutical chemistry on an undergraduate level. Seniors are given priority in URP selections, but juniors are also eligible.

KRESS FELLOWSHIP

Two UNC graduate students are to receive the first Kress Fellowships in the history of art.

Mrs. Nancy de Grummond of Lake Charles, La., and Charles S. Davis of Burlington will share a $5,000 grant established by the Samuel H. Kress Foundation. For a 10-year period, UNC will receive $10,000 annually and half of this grant will be awarded to one or more grad students for the study of art history.

The remainder will be used to purchase equipment essential for art history instruction.

Mrs. de Grummond studied at Louisana State University for three years prior to graduating from UNC with a classical language major. Davis graduated from Carolina with honors in political science.

Mrs. de rummond specializes in antique sculpture and Baroque painting; Davis, in painting from 1500-1900.

SYMPHONY GIVES CONCERTS

The University Symphony Orchestra will present two concerts in Hill Hall of Music on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 5 and 6 at 8 p.m.

out right on the air.

"There was nothing seriously wrong, thank goodness, but, as Prof. Brecht explained to the audience later, it was the first time he had ever brought his own victim with him to a lecture."

A second outlet for his scientific interests is the Morehead Planetarium Series, in which he is a regularly scheduled lecturer.

"I really wish I could get my hands out of these bandages and start rehearsing for the new show at the Planetarium.

"Here's a picture taken with a few friends of mine." He handed me a photograph of John Glenn, Alan Shepherd, and Gus Grissom.

"I wouldn't have taken anything for the opportunity to meet those fellows when they were here a few years ago," he said.

Besides science, Mr. Wadsworth's interests run in a number of other directoins.

"I can play as many as 36 holes of golf a day if time permits. We have a usual foursome that gets together quite often. I like to play golf with Dean Cathey. He's left-handed too, and our balls always go into the woods on the other side of the course."

"I'm probably the best director of housing that this University ever had." Mr. Wadsworth said, chuckling to himself. "As a matter of fact, I'm the only one they ever had."

Wadsworth is a man who likes the work he is doing. "This job is the most rewarding one I could have ever found. I've never been able to work at something that I didn't like.

"I was an Eagle Ecout and a Scoutmaster for several years. I like to do a good turn every day.

"This is a job that lets me help people. Just last week a lady came up to me and said, 'You know when I came to Chapel Hill I asked you to find me a small cottage to live in and you found a perfect place for me. I've been living there for seven years and I love it."

"It really makes you feel worthwhile when something like that happens.

"I love to meet people. I consider it a challenge and a thrill to try to solve their problems for them in some small way. You can please some of them, some of the time, but you can never please them all."

Taking a curved, horny seashell from his glass case he added, "If we were as lucky as some of the animals—noticeably the chambered nautilus—we wouldn't have to worry about the housing problem."

But, then, Mr. Wadsworth, you would be out of a job.

Prayer Amendments Opposed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Commission on Social Action of Reform Judaism said Saturday it is launching a nationwide effort to defeat proposed constitutional amendments to legalize prayer and Bible reading in public schools.

The commission is a joint body of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the Central Conference of American Rabbis.

It called upon all of the 657 Reform temples n the United States to rally support for the 1963 Supreme Court decision banning religious exercises in public schools.

The announced opposition to the series of proposed prayer amendments came as the House Judiciary Committee ended the first week of hearings on legislation that would, in effect, nullify recent Supreme Court decisions.

AN OPEN LETTER

TO THE YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN OF SOUTHAMPTON'S DEBUTANTE PARTY

WE READ A STATEMENT in the Press made by one of the young defendants after the court case involving alleged damages at a debutante party in Southampton, Long Island: "Everyone knows there is too much drinking in this country, but what can you do about it? Everybody knows the morals of this country are going down the drain."

WE THE UNDERSIGNED believe we have the answer to the young man's question. We believe it is time our generation stopped self-righteously deploring this state of the nation or irresponsibly contributing to it. The time has come to change it.

WE REPRESENT hundreds of young Americans across the nation who have committed their lives to create a new society in America and the world with the global program of Moral Re-Armament.

WE ARE IN REVOLT against a society which creates the climate of immaturity and lawlessness that leads to such a debacle and to such a cynical statement. We have got to stop it.

WE ARE IN REVOLT against the gutlessness of "good" Americans who lack the courage to explode the corruption existing in all levels of our society, who sit silently while one woman forces God out of our schools, who permit men committed to atheism and anti-God to proceed unchecked, who proclaim one set of standards and live another.

WE ARE IN REVOLT against the line of the "new morality" which is forced down our throats by books, magazines, television, films, professors and some churchmen. Sex, violence, lust and godlessness are taking over the nation. When venereal disease among young Americans rises 130% between the years 1956 and 1961, when 13,000,000 children come from broken homes—who is responsible? We are.

WHERE ARE THE YOUNG AMERICANS who will pay the price in their own lives to stand up for what is right in the country? Where are the fighting Americans who will cure the hatred, bitterness, impurity and selfishness which divide families, destroy races, deaden youth, split nations?

THE FREE WORLD looks to us for leadership. The captive world looks to us to make freedom a reality again. We know that if America fails the world fails.

WE ARE OUT TO BUILD A NATION where families teach mankind how to live together, where industry—management and labor—teach the whole world how to work together, where all races, colors and classes learn together with all nations how to lead the whole world forward. We are out to create a force of young Americans more dedicated to building a world that works than any Communist or materialist. We will create an America to whom the whole world will turn and say, "That is the way men are meant to live."

WE BELIEVE IN MODERN AMERICA. We believe she will rise to the challenge of the times. We believe she will demonstrate the great reality that free men will accept of their own accord the discipline to be governed by God, so that millions on the earth will never be ruled by tyrants.

THE CHALLENGE facing the American youth is not to go backward to the decadence that destroyed the Roman Empire, but to go forward to the revolution of Moral Re-Armament.

WE CAN REBUILD THE MODERN WORLD. Let us go forward to absolute moral standards for all men everywhere: absolute honesty, purity, unselfishness and love, not as an end in themselves, but as a means for giving us the energy, the maturity, the responsibility, the clarity that will take humanity forward to the next stage in human evolution.

THREE THOUSAND OF US are meeting this summer in a Conference for Tomorrow's America at the Moral Re-Armament Center, Mackinac Island, Michigan, to shoulder that task together. We invite every young American who has the courage and spirit to care for his nation and the future of mankind to join us.

Haywood Shuts Out Cavs On Three Hits

By LARRY TARLETON

Bill Haywood shut out the Virginia Cavaliers on three hits as the Tar Heels took their sixth consecutive ACC triumph, 1-0, yesterday at Charlottesville.

Haywood pitched to only 28 men while winning his sixth game of the year without a defeat, and stretching his scoreless inning streak to 19. Louis Seabolt collected the first hit off Haywood leading off the fourth after Bill had retired the first nine men to face him. After Seabolt was sacrificed to second, Haywood picked him off with a brilliant move to second. The Heels' co-captain had retired nine straight again when little Jay Lambiotte singled in the seventh. Lambiotte was stranded when John Pincavage struck out and Larry Tate flied to Gary Black in center.

Max Wilcox led off the ninth with a single against Haywood, but pinch-hitter Chris Tisdale hit into a Prindle-to-Speight-to-Brown double play.

The Heels' scored their lone run in the sixth when Haywood led off with a bloop double to right. Bill Taylor, courtesy running for Haywood, went to third when Dickie Prindle rapped a sharp single to right and scored on a passed ball by Virginia catcher Wilcox. However, Speight struck out, Ken Boykin flied out and Ken Willard grounded out to third to end the inning.

Cavalier righthaner Larry Gammon kept the Tar Heels in check except for the fatal sixth. Gammon allowed only six hits, and left only five Tar Heels on the basepaths. He was in trouble in only two innings, the sixth and the second.

In the second, Gary Black led off with a deep fly to left which leftfielder Gene Angle caught against the hedges. Haywood then rapped a single to left, and Taylor ran for him. Taylor stole second and went to third on a passed ball. After Prindle popped out, Speight walked, and when he and Taylor tried a double steal, Taylor was caught in a rundown to retire the side.

Frosh Roll With Depth And Speed

By LARRY TARLETON

This has been a banner year for freshman sports at Carolina, and the baseball team has been upholding the tradition.

The Tar Babies have won eight of their nine games, the only loss being to Louisburg, a team they had defeated earlier. Coach Bill Lovingood's team have found thmselves being compared favorably with the 1962 freshman team which produced Ken Willard, Ken Boykin, Dickie Prindle, Dick, Fleming, Merle Kruer, Jerry Davis and Bill Dannemann for the varsity.

Of course the purpose of freshman sports is to prepare the players for the varsity and Lovingood feels that he has "between eight and 15 varsity prospects." He says that it's still a little early to judge some of the players but by the end of the season, he should know which players will help the varsity.

"This is the most balanced team I have ever seen, said Lovingood, "We are three deep in almost every position. There is a lot of competition for starting positions, and this makes the boys work harder. I have been playing between 15 and 22 players in all the games to give everyone a chance."

With Bill Brown and Jim Speight graduating, first base and shortstop will be the weak spots on the varsity next year. Jerry Joyner has been playing short for the freshmen and has done "a creditable job." Tom Lampman has been the first baseman, but hasn't hit as well as expected. Joyner, Lampman and Lawson Baker give the Tar Babies plenty of speed on the basepaths. Lovingood has used this speed to his advantage all year. The stolen base has been one of his most effective weapons.

Lovingood has six pitchers whom he feels can win in college ball. He considers Jimmy Dean, Tommy Kirkman and Jim Dunlap his "big three," but says basketball star Tom Gauntlett, Tim Clarke and John Hubble are close behind them. The 5-9 Kirkman has been the most valuable pitcher so far. He has been used exclusively in relief and has won two games and saved three more.

Randy Prindle, Dickie's brother, and Danny Talbott have been the leading hitters for the Tar Babies. Lawson Baker, Mickey Lienau, Hal Wells and Hank Crowson are the long-ball threats for the freshmen.

Catcher Tom Robbins is given much credit for the team's success thus far. "He makes everyone hustle," said Lovingood. "He has kept this team together." Mike Knowles has been alternating with Robbins behind the plate.

Business Must Join Poverty Fight — Johnson

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Johnson told the nation's business leaders Monday that nothing they have is safe so long as hunger and ignorance are allowed to exist.

The President, in an amazing performance interrupted repeatedly by applause, talked tough to the 52nd annual meeting of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Apparently his audience loved it.

He told them they had a bigger stake than any other group in fighting poverty, discrimination, disease, illiteracy and slums, and "I ask aren't you willing to take a penny out of every dollar to make taxpayers out of tax eaters?"

Recites Corporation Profits

He reeled off an impressive knowledge of various corporation profits and followed up with a barb: "All of you have a martyr complex. All of you are feeling sorry for yourselves."

Johnson had prepared a 3½-page speech scheduled to run for 15 minutes. Once started, however, he drawled on for one hour and 30 seconds, was applauded 30 times and interrupted 27 times by laughter.

He began with a glowing picture of the economy and what his administration is doing to combat waste and inefficiency in government.

The President said he has invited Walter F. Carey of Birmingham, Mich., president-elect of the chamber, and about 100 chamber members to the White House Tuesday evening to discuss his earlier requests for a hold-the-line policy on prices and wages. He will do the same with a representative labor group later this week and give labor the same message.

"Whatever else you have," Johnson said, "you have an independent, tax-paying light-bill-saving President in the White House—one who has faith in American enterprise."

But his major appeal was for all-out business support of his anti-poverty program. He said that if a "peaceful change is impossible," a violent change is inevitable."

Library Holds Amnesty Day

University Library officials recently announced Thursday, April 30, will be observed as an Amnesty Day or "fine-free" day by Wilson Library and the departmental libraries.

On this day all overdue books may be returned with no fine to be paid and with no questions asked. Library officials stressed that this will hold true regardless of when a book was due, 2 days ago or 2 years ago, and they urged students to return any books they are not using.

Jazz On A Sunday After noon With Charlie Byrd

Jubilee A Smashing Success, Except.....

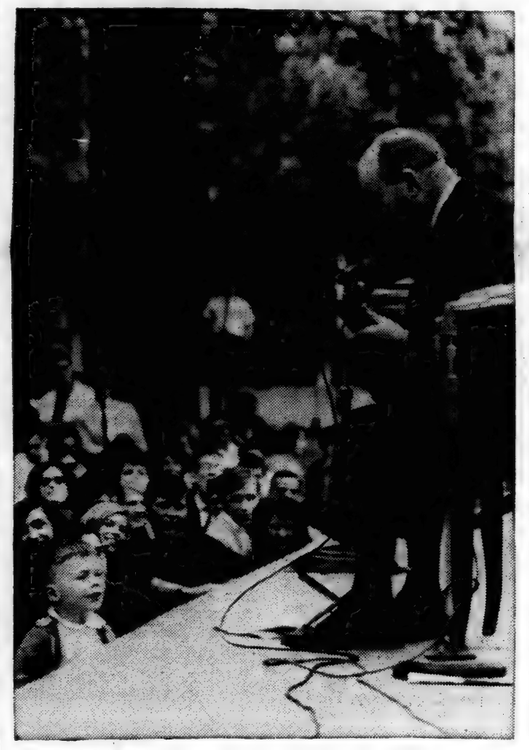
By DENNIS SANDERS

Jubilee is over for another year, but the afterthoughts which usually accompany such a campus event are just beginning.



BYRD AND YOUNG FRIEND—During the Charlie Byrd concert Sunday winding up Jubilee Weekend, this little'un became completely absorbed in Byrd's guitar work and wandered back and forth in front of the stage putting on a little performance of his own to the amusement of both Byrd and the audience.

Dean of Men William G. Long and GM Director Howard Henry agreed the event, on the whole, was a success. Long, however, wasn't pleased with the behavior of some non-students.

"There were some people present," he said, "who were not students here and they showed little regard for others in their behavior.

"However, on the whole, I was well pleased with the behavior of students at what I consider a truly outstanding campus function," he added.

Continuing his feeling on Jubilee, Long said, "I would compliment Graham Memorial on the planning and carrying out of a fine event."

When such a large number of students get together for fun and frolic, it's almost inevitable that the site—in this case, the GM lawn — will be covered with debris after each performance. Such was the case after Jubilee.

"The mess was really anticipated," said Henry. "The students didn't utilize the trash cans some wanted set up, but it's over for now."

Henry was quite pleased with the attendance at the four concerts. "We haven't computed it yet," he said, "but it was roughly 25,000, which is the best we've had in the two years we've sponsored Jubilee."

The talent presented, which ran the gamut from a jazz guitarist to a hillbilly quartet, with a pair of folk-singing groups included, was "very well received," Henry said.

"A lot of people have commented favorably on the talent we presented, and we hope to continue to get the best possible talent available for future programs," he concluded.

Henry also revealed the dates for next year's Jubilee, which are April 30, May 1 and 2.

NEW SORORITY HERE

By FRED SEELY

Carolina's long-awaited eighth sorority became a reality this weekend.

Some eight girls have pledged Phi Mu, and national officers in town yesterday expressed hopes of landing 30 more before the end of the semester. And the only real problem—finding a place to live—should be settled soon.

The chapter will be named the Gamma Lambda Chapter of Phi Mu. Temporary headquarters will be set up in a private home at 215 Cameron Ave., and meetings will probably be held in the basement of the Congregational Church next door.

Mrs. Stephen Pugh, district president of the sorority, commented yesterday that "we have several places in mind, including Finley Golf Course, and we should know something definite soon.

"Plans have already been drawn up for a house at the golf course, if we decide to go there. No decision has been made so far as to how much money will be spent."

She has been in town for several days to aid Phi Mu's here in informal rush. There are six members of the sorority who have transferred from other schools at UNC now, although all but one will graduate in June.

Joan Prescott, a junior English major, will return next year. She has been elected president of the colony. Other Phi Mu's include Susan Dellinger, president of McIver Dormitory; Polly McAboy, a member of Phi Beta Kappa; Sandra Milstead, a graduate student; Grace Mconnell; and Ellen Ann Edenfield.

Mrs. Pugh asked that names of the eight pledges be withheld until alter in the week.

Phi Mu was invited by the Pan-Hellenic ouncil several years ago, but housing difficulties made it unfeasible until this year. The national sorority has 86 chapters, and UNC will be the third in North Carolina.

High Point College, Queens College and Duke also have chapters. Founded in 1852 at Wesleyan College in Macon, Ga., Phi Mu has over 40,000 alumnae and some 200 alumnae groups.

Jean Dillin, president of the Pan-Hellenic Council, said yesterday that the new colony would participate in rush next fall.

"We will make no changes, and will have the usual five rounds of rush," she said. "I believe that the addition of Phi Mu will help our sorority system here, and that all sororities on campus will be strengthened by their presence."

Executive Committee Spots Open

Student Body President Bob Spearman has asked all interested students to apply for executive committee positions. Interviews for committee appointments will be held in Graham Memorial from 2:30 to 5 p.m. today through Friday.

"It is these committees that will make the decisions and do the real work so that Student Government will be meaningful for the entire Student Body," Spearman said yesterday.

"I would urge all students to apply for these committee positions. The only real requirement is a willingness to work for the betterment of the Student Body and the University.

"I hope that you will take this chance to participate in Student Government," he said. "It is a significant part of the total educational experience here at Carolina."

Information of the positions available may be obtained by calling 933-1257.

LBJ TOPS IN POLL

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. (UPI)— President Johnson has scored an overwhelming victory in a nationwide student poll which accurately forecast both the 1956 and 1960 presidential election results.

Johnson topped the list of 10 candidates on the poll ballot with 510,125 votes, 53 per cent of the 961,801 votes cast. His closest competitor was U. S. Ambassador to Viet Nam Henry Cabot Lodge with 130,551 votes.

Lowenstein Follows Barnett; Speaks In Rebuttal Tonight

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Al Lowenstein will rebut former Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett's views on the Civil Rights Bill tonight at 8:30 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Lowenstein, who led voter registration drives for Negroes in Mississippi last summer, is Assistant Professor of Social Sciences at N. C. State.

The Carolina Forum, which sponsored Gov. Barnett's speech last night, is also sponsoring Lowenstein in order to present both sides of the controversy.

Lowenstein called Mississippi a "police state" in a speech before the Di-Phi earlier this year, and subsequent publicity prompted attacks against him by North Carolina conservatives.

Lowenstein's picture of Mississippi is a state in which public authorities and police murder Negro citizens who attempt to obtain their civil rights.

He related to the Di-Phi incidents in which students who had come to Mississipp to help register Negroes were thrown in jail by police for "resisting to resist arrest" and parking in non-existant no-parking zones.

Lowenstein is currently the national coordinator for a March on Mississippi to be held this summer.

He has solicited funds and student volunteers at Stanford, Oberlin, Harvard and Yale Universities, and will attempt to arouse support for the movement here in Chapel Hill.

Establishment of "freedom schools" for remedial education of Negro children and a more intensified voter registration drive among qualified Negroes are the main goals of the march.

The marchers will also set up community welfare centers and cultural programs for Negro citizens.

The registration drive will be aided by a team of lawyers who will challenge state officials on civil rights policies, and a special research team will study the economic and political plight of Mississippi Negroes.

Lowenstein will speak to coeds in Cobb Dormitory after his speech at Gerrard Hall.

EDITOR'S NOTE

Because of the late hour of former Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett's address last night in Memorial Hall, the DTH was forced to postpone its coverage of this speech. A full account of Mr. Barnett's talk will appear in tomorrow's DTH.

Greek Cypriots Break Ceasefire

NICOSIA, Cyprus (UPI) — Greek Cypriots broke a ceasefire agreement Monday and launched a major assault with mortars and machine guns on medieval St. Hilarion Castle, last major Turkish Cypriot stronghold on northeastern Cyprus.

United Nations officials said they arranged a cease-fire at 2:30 p.m. but it collapsed 30 minutes later when about 138 Greek Cypriots opened a barrage against the castle which dominates the pass on the Nicosia-Kyrenia road.

There was no immediate report of casualties but up to a dozen Greek and Turkish Cypriots have been killed there since the Greek Cypriot offensive began Saturday. The castle is located on a rocky crag and the Greeks are lobbing mortars over the walls and sending concentrated streams of small arms fire at the gun slits in its ancient walls.

While fighting flared in the north, President Makarios was intervening in the south to halt firing at the village of Ayios Theodoros where Greek Cypriots have seiged a group of Turkish Cypriot women and children in a schoolhouse.

BULLETIN!

Charles Albert Barton, a UNC sophomore, was charged with arson last night in connection with a fire at the Phi Delta Theta fraternity house on the morning of March 22.

Barton, 19, is a Morehead Scholar from Charlotte and a former member of the fraternity. He was deactivated in the spring semester of last year for scholastic reasons. He is a resident of Ehringhaus Hall.

The Orange County Grand Jury, after hearing evidence presented by fire department officials, returned a true bill of indictment ordering Barton's arrest late yesterday afternoon. Bond was set at $7500.

Harrington To Visit Campus

Michael Harrington, 36-year-old author whose book, "The Other America," is credited with having sparked the Kennedy-Johnson administration's "War on Poverty," will speak at the University on Thursday, May 7, at 7:30 p.m. on "Politics, Poverty and Social Change."

The address will follow a dinner in the South Room of Lenoir Dining Hall. Tickets to the dinner-address, at $2 apiece, will be available from Mrs. Helen Hammond at the YM-YWCA on campus.

Harrington will be visiting the campus from Tuesday, May 5, through Saturday morning, May 9. He will address several classes and a joint meeting of the YM-YWCA Cabinet. He also will meet with faculty groups.

His visit is sponsored by the YF-YWCA and the Student Association of Social Workers.

GMAB INTERVIEWS

Interviews for GMAB chairmanships will be held today and Thursday. For an appointment, sign up at the GM information desk.

Southern Politics: An Odd Democratic Inter-Marriage

By BOB O'STEEN

Is there a difference in the Democratic and Republican parties in the South?

"They's a difference, Lawd, yes," said a retired Southern carpenter. "The main difference is the Republicans believe in a lot of hard, harsh things and the Democrats in good living, good jobs, and good times."

This was a typical reply found by two University of North Carolina political scientists in their large-scale analysis of the South's changing political face.

Recent surprising election results, urbanization, and industrialization, have brought the once "solid" South into question about changes and trends of concern to national politicians and southerners alike.

Is there a party realignment going on in the South? A Republican upsurge? How are white and Negro voting habits changing?

To answer some of these questions Dr. James Prothro and Dr. Donald Matthews have made a study of white and Negro political attitudes and habits in the South which is one of the most extensive ever made.

The two UNC professors found, among other things: (1) an odd political inter-marriage. Though Negroes and whites are sharply opposed on the smouldering segregation issue, both races identify preponderantly with one party, the Democratic.

(2) Though less educated, the Negro has as well developed political attitudes as the white.

(3) Both races see the Democratic as the party of the little man, typified by the opening quote.

The research project began following a $190,000 Rockefeller Foundation grant in 1960 to the University's Institute for Research in Social Science. Attitudes toward political parties is a part of the whole project: "The Changing position of the Negro." A more extensive interpretation of the study will be made in a book by Professors Matthew and Prothro, to be published next year.

By interviewing 1,312 subjects scientifically selected as a representative sample, the two UNC political scientists came up with some interesting figures.

Of the whites with any political affiliation, 60 per cent "think of themselves" as Democrats and 14 per cent as Republicans. Fifty-one per cent of the Negroes consider themselves Democrats and 10 per cent Republican —a ratio of about five to one in both races.

The surprising aspect of party identification is that, of those who are "strong" Democrats, 73 per cent of the whites are strict segregationists and 77 per cent of the Negroes are strict integrationists.

One explanation for this might be in the separation of identity that takes place in the individual's mind.

The study found that white Democrats identified closely with the South as a region and were twice as likely to "feel close to" other Southerners as were Republicans; whereas Negroes of either party felt closer to Negroes than to other people.

Strangely enough, the stronger an individual identified with the Democratic party the stronger was his attitude for segregation if he was white, or for integration if he was a Negro.

* * *

Using the University's UNIVAC 1105 high-speed computer to analyze massive statistical data on U. S. Civil Rights Commission registration figures resulted in further anomalies.

Though a majority of Negroes have political attitudes, only a third were registered to vote, whereas three-fourths of the whites were registered.

One-half of the "strong" Republican Negroes were, nevertheless, registered as Democrats and voted more in greater numbers for Kennedy in 1960 than did the white Democrats.

In addition to party identification, Drs. Prothro and Matthews studied party "image," the way a party is pictured in the mind of the individual, as "liberal," "honest," "bad," and such.

About a third of both races could not name a single thing good or bad about either party. For these people politics apparently has no meaning whatsoever.

For whites, the Democratic party had about four times as strong appeal as the Republican party; and for Negroes it was even stronger.

The Democratic party's main appeal and its basic image is found in the consensus that it is the party of the

Mississippi Law Comes To Hillsboro

When one commits a crime, one should expect to pay the consequences. Pat Cusick, John Dunne, Quentin Baker, Lou Calhoun, Rosemary Ezra, J. V. Henry and six others all committed a crime—they blocked traffic and resisted arrest—and all expected to pay for it.

But the punishment for a crime should be no more severe than the crime itself, and the 12 had every right to expect a reasonable penalty. You and we would probably draw a suspended sentence and costs for a crime such as they committed, but because they were guilty of other charges, they received an active sentence of a year in jail and a fine, as well as having to pay costs of court.

Most have already started serving their sentences—the rest will begin as soon as the school year is terminated.

It is said that all men are equal before the law, but the handling of these 12 cases leads us to believe they were no more equal than a Negro in Mississippi. The very severity of the sentences Judge Raymond B. Mallard handed down is Mississippi law, not North Carolina law.

But there were other things. Judge Mallard, before sentencing Buddy Tieger, called him a "member of an international conspiracy that is treatening to destroy America."

In no way can this be construed as a judge's lecture — it is an accusation, pure and simple. And accusations are meant to be backed up by fact. We have seen no evidence of any "international conspiracy", and we seriously doubt Judge Mallard has either.

But Judge Mallard has accomplished his purpose—to destroy the civil rights movement in Chapel Hill — and he has gone to every extent to do so.

The pitiful demonstration on Sunday is an indication of this, as the 35 participants were mostly white, several being persons who had come into town for the weekend. There had been extensive publicity about the march, and the woeful turnout convinces us that until new blood is brought in, there will be no real "movement."

If the 12 behave while they are in jail, they will be paroled within four months. Even ten, they will not be able to associate with "unsavory persons", i.e., those who have participated in demonstrations, and they will not be able to break any laws.

We do not protest the fact that they were sentenced. But we do protest the severity of the sentences.

Mississippi law has prevailed.

The Morning After The Weekend Before

Jubilee for 1964 is now history, and fairly successful history at that. Carefully squeezed in between a damp Thursday and a dull, gray Monday, the entire show—from the Four Freshmen to The Virgin Spring—went off with few hitches. The hundreds of Carolina gentlemen and coeds who arose yesterday with that "morning - after - the - weekend-before" feeling probably decided that their headaches were, for the most part, worth it. So even now, as the temporary stage disappears beneath the workmen's hammers, the Graham Memorial directors who plan and execute this remarkable project are turning their thoughts toward next year.

Before they hustle off to recruit acts or decide on long-range plans, however, there are a few things about this year's presentation that will probably be reviewed carefully. Certainly one item for discussion will be the behavior of the weekend audiences.

Actually, it is tiring to discuss once again a problem that seems to occur repeatedly on this and similar college campuses—the actions of a few becoming injurious to the group as a whole. But such things do occur, and it is good to bring them out for discussion before they become completely destructive.

Primarily, the response and the behavior on the part of the majority of each audience was good, especially in light of the size of Saturday evening's crowd, which was nothing short of enormous. The few who got out of hand, moreover, were in some cases persons not affiliated with this University. But there will certainly be questions posed soon about the future advisability of conducting an event (with a minimum of restrictions) at which certain people see fit to drink excessively, harass the entertainers, or engage in ardent affectionate activities in public places. It seems to be the old question of being given an inch and taking a mile.

Certainly we were given the inch. University officials graciously saw fit to allow the concerts to be held on the GM lawn in order to accommodate the huge audiences and still maintain a relaxed and congenial atmosphere. There were few (if any) hard-and-fast restrictions on alcohol, presumably because those in charge realized that it is the inalienable right of college students to have a few beers, and they trusted those present to use a little common sense. And someone even went so far as to provide an army of workers to clean up the mess that was senselessly strewn about the grass for public scrutiny after every performance. But with all this, some still saw fit to abuse the privileges.

It is not our place to assess their reasons for their misconduct—we'll just chalk it up to sheer irresponsibility. But we can raise a question or two about the future of Jubilee if such behavior continues, or worse yet, increases.

For example, consider the effect of holding the whole thing indoors (and remember, we'll soon have a gymnasium-auditorium almost large enough). Springtime concerts inside (with NO drinking, blankets, etc.) leave a lot of atmosphere to be desired, not to mention the anguished crys from those who can't get in. Even a simple increase in the regulations for the event would be a case of hampering the majority because of the actions of a few. And then there's the ultimate decision—dropping Jubilee altogether. All of these steps are bad, but some of them may soon be necessary unless some people grow up.

If the planners of Jubilee knew that the students didn't care about the weekend, they would probably throw up their hands and forget the whole matter. But they know the interest is there—thousands of people proved it. So now the planners must decide how to best conduct an all-campus weekend and still avoid incidents which were injurious to the University's reputation. The actions of a few children have made that decision much more difficult than it should have been.

Pragamtism Vs. Idealism

By JOHN GREENBACKER

In a small but well-furnished motel room in Greenville, N. C., two regional delegates of the National Student Associaton sat down to talk. A small dressing table in the corner of the room lay littered with empty beer bottles, evidence of a recent reception at the Kappa Alpha fraternity house.

"But you don't understand what I'm saying," one delegate said with a tone of friendly exasperation. "We're not trying to pressure this thing through or force the white man to accept us; we're trying to make America aware of itself."

He looks just like Cannonball Adderly, the white delegate thought, as he scrutinized the Negro's tan-colored, fat features and his scraggly moustache and goatee. From the Negro's coat shown the black and white symbol of the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee.

"Either the white Americans realize the true spirit of the Constitution and accept the American Negro as a full citizen, or they will undermine the basis of American democracy," the Negro continued.

"If you really think the consequences will be that serious, then why don't you work harder to make your ideas accepted by all Americans?" asked the white boy.

"Why should we?" the Negro replied. From the recesses of his soft, massive face two small brown eyes flickered, and a cynical half-smile broke over his lips. Under his passiveness there was a hint of contained impatience.

"Democracy is almost a religion; if a person doesn't want to learn about or believe in the true spirit of its philosophy, then why should we force him to it?"

"Do you mean to say you don't advocate the pressure of civil rights demonstrations?" the white boy asked.

"For the most part, yes," the colored boy answered. "Most of the demonstrations today don't emphasize the true reason for integration; they're involved in petty goals based on shortsighted reasoning."

"Well then, what do you think about the Civil Rights Bill?"

"I'm not really in favor of it. I don't think it's necessary, and it bypasses the essential issue of the problem too much.

"You see, with the laws presently on the book, and, of course, the Constitution, the Federal government shouldn't feel obligated to try and pass the bill. Going by the principles of American democracy they have the power to deal with the matter directly."

"I think I see what you're driving at," the white boy said, "but you know very well that the nation won't accept that kind of action."

"If they want American democracy to work they will. Like I said, we're trying to make America aware of itself."

The white boy sat back in his chair. What an interesting point of view, he thought. He realized how little he knew about the aims of the various integrationist factions.

"I don't agree with your ideas," he finally replied. The colored boy nodded his head in friendly submission, looking rather like Buddha as he sat on the edge of the bed.

"You've got to compromise and cajole people into doing things," the white boy replied. "That's the only way you're going to get any social progress. You've got to work things out step by step, even if it means putting off the hopes of the Negro for a long time or deceiving and pressuring the white."

"Now here's where I don't agree with you," said the colored boy. "I don't even think the white man should be tricked because the Negro knows how it feels to be tricked and we don't want to see it happen to anyone. After all, if we didn't feel this way, we too would be going against the spirit of the Constitution.

"You see, you're a pragmatist; I'm not. Your outlook is too Machiavellian to suit, me. I'd rather stay true to my ideals than constantly shift around in the manner you suggest."

"I don't feel I'm betraying any of my ideals by compromising," the white boy answered. "I put most of my emphasis on attaining my goals as quickly as possible, even if it means being Machiavellian about it."

"Now see, there's the difference between us," the colored boy concluded. "Before you die, you will fear whether you have best served your goals by sometimes disregarding those ideals behind them, whereas I will know I have always been firm in sticking to mine."

"When I die," his companion said, "I think my goals will have been attained."

As he walked down to the end of the court, the white delegate felt a cool late evening breeze across his face, and he couldn't help but think what a marvelous and enlightening day it had been.

"I Swear, You've Changed Since I Went For A Drink!"

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Negro Murdered In Statesville

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

On page 17 of Friday's (April 24) Greensboro Daily News was a story of the murder of a Statesville, N.C. Negro, Benjamin Carlton, who had seven days previously filed as a candidate for the Iredell County Board of Commissioners. The article itself was somewhat hidden by its placement beneath a feature story on North Carolina holly trees, but I don't think its significance can be so easily overlooked. For Mr. Carlton's death is the reason for street demonstrations all across the South: both the legally peaceful and the deplorably violent. His biography, I'm afraid, is our near future.

Here is a man who was legally filing for an elective office. He was not leading street demonstrations; nor was he forcing his presence in anyone's cafeteria. He was not, in fact, doing anything which the local and national press have, in many cases rightly, called "lawless and "irresponsible."

Instead, he sought to work for progress from within the system: peacefully, legally. For this he was shot in the chest and killed with a .410 shotgun.

No wonder so few Negroes vote in many of our Southern states. No wonder their decisions on juries echo dominant white sentiments. And no wonder so many willingly risk the jeers, spittle, police dogs and jail sentences in street demonstrations. It almost seems to be the "safer" way to express themselves: in a group, with photographers around.

And this, I think, is tragic for all of us. Because as long as the Medgar Evers' and Benjamin Carltons are murdered for working towards peaceful progress through legal means, we can hardly blame the Negro for going outside the law for his own protection and constituted rights of self-expression. And when this point is reached—when it becomes necessary to throw tea in the Boston Harbor because the King's law allows no other safe redress of grievences — the law becomes as guilty as the demonstrators, and we are all losers.

And yet, until our laws and their enforcement improve, we can hardly expect the Negro to risk his life to work within them!

Fine As Is Voting Age

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Once again there has been renewed agitation for allowing 18-year-olds to vote. There are many sincere man and women who feel that nothing is too good for a man who must fight for his country, as some are doing now.

On the other hand, many clear-thinking people, including a good proportion of 18 and 19-year-olds believe that a man who is good fighting material isn't automatically an intelligent voter or a good citizen.

The average 18-year-old, under ordinary circumstances, isn't interested in or capable of rendering an intelligent vote. The franchise should be given only to those who will exercise it intelligently. Without a doubt, many who now may vote do not qualify on either count. But this is no reason for extending the franchise to others like them.

There are good reasons why the 18-year-old doesn't particularly care one way or another about voting. He is a teen-ager more immediately concerned with his own particular social affairs and trying to decide what to do when he becomes a man. Until he has decided upon his course in life and launched himself upon it, he has little occasion to wonder or worry much about matters of state or national import.

He is busy enjoying life as he matures. He does not have the responsibility of a family of his own, his own property, and is usually not even paying his own way. He is, generally, a dependent.

This is as it should be. During the late teen years a young man must have the chance to decide what he is going to do. He must not be rushed too soon into doing something immediately beyond his scope. And with modern society requiring more time than ever in the preparation of a man to take his position as an adult, a man is older than ever before when he reaches the point of being independently responsible for his actions.

And why should the 18-year-old be allowed to vote just because he is old enough to fight? The beginner in a big corporation works for his company without having a vote on the board of directors. The son of a farmer works long and hard hours in the field without having much to say about running the farm.

But the diehards insist. After all, they repeat, the 18-year-old should have a voice in a government that sends him off to fight.

That makes poor sense, that play on the emotions. The franchise isn't a reward and shouldn't be a right. It should be a privilege, restricted to those who can and will use it intelligently and conscientiously.

A good fighting man isn't necessarily a good voter. And a good voter isn't always a good fighting man. They each meet a different set of qualifications.

The move to give 18-year-olds the vote wouldn't serve the purpose intended. On the premise that a man who has to fight should have the right to vote, all the young men and women not in the service wouldn't have this "right" anyway.

And those who are fighting won't have the time to vote.

Allies' War Crimes Over Dresden: Review

By WADE WELLMAN

David Irving, "The Destruction of Dresden." Holt, Rinehart and Winston. $4.95.

Ed. Note: Wade Wellman is not on the DTH reviewing staff. The following review does not necessarily reflect the views of the editors.

We Americans—more so than the British—find it hard to face facts. Today the West Germans, not shrinking from the terrible realities of the Hilter era, are prosecuting Nazi war criminals with courage and candor. It is most regrettable that we of the Anglo-Saxon world are not frank enough, or courageous enough, to prosecute our own war criminals and admit the truth about what we did. For the last phase of World War II, the period of January-May, 1945, was a phase in which the Royal Air Force waged a campaign of extermination against the German people. From the German side much has been written about this sinister episode in the war, but now the principal massacre is described with cold, restrained detail by David Irving in his book "The Destruction of Dresden." This was frist published in London in April, 1963, and re-issued by an American company in February, 1964. The fact that the London edition is now in its third printing testfies, I think, to the general acceptance by the Brtish public of Irving's message.

In briefly retelling this ugly story we must take January, 1945, as our point of departure. About January 5, the German line crumbled in the west; their startling counteroffensive in Belgium was now completely shattered. Thereafter the Anglo-American penetration of Germany faced only scattered pockets of resistance. On January 12 the Russians opened a powerful offensive along the eastern front, advancing so rapidly that all observers saw that the war would be over by summertime. Yet still the British continued with their terrior raids at night, bombing towns which had no military objectives, despite the increasing criticism in the neutral press. And the eastern Germans, drven by millions from Silesia and Pomerania, moved in terror-stricken flight through a cruel and savage winter. The behavior of the Russians in the occupied German provinces was indescribably atrocious; the western powers who knew good and well what the Russians were doing, remained silent, serene in their assurance that "the Germans had it coming." By hundreds of thousands the terrified Germans poured into Dresden, a city which, having no military value, had never been bombed even at the height of the Bomber Offensive.

Yet even now there were grisly premonitions of what would happen. By late January, Berlin had been so flattened by air attacks that it was known to be a futile military target. But on February 3, the American Eighth Air Force once again pounded the shateered capital, killing 25,000 civilians in a single day. And still the ragged, starved, frostbtten hordes of Germans swarmed into Dresden, the city which everyone regarded as a sanctuary. Refugee trains, loaded with aged, inform, children and women, were ready to move on the night of February 13. This was the night that Dresden ceased to exist, for Churchill, already disturbed by the increasing political arrogance of the Russians, had decided to frighten Stalin by a demonstration of Anglo-American airpower. Secretly, the Prime Minister and his advisers resolved to obliterate Dresden at the time of the maximum influx of refugees — deliberately choosing this time to kill the largest possible number of people.

So on February 13, 1945, while the city pulsed with fugitives, and while overcrowded trains prepared to move westward, the R.A.F. Bomber Command struck into the very heart of the German exodus. The first wave passed over Dresden at 10:35 p.m., releasing bombs and incendiaries on the central part of the city. So inflammable were the old buildings that a firestorm rose within minutes, dooming almost everyone caught inside its perimeter. At 1:22 a.m., February 14, a second wave of British bombers struck, scattering firebombs and explosives over wide areas, sometimes deliberately pouring them into the crowds of people who were swarming like terrified ants into hitherto unmolested districts. All night the fires raged uncontrollably, a multiple tempest of howling flame; and at dawn the survivors, numbed with exhaustion, streamed from the blackened streets into the Elbe meadows and the highways out of Dresden.

Those who escaped the city had escaped the firestorm—a conflagration in which a minimum of 120,000 human beings perished. But the streams of refugees moving along the highways made easy victims for the American fighter planes, P-51 Mustangs which had been sent to Dresden for this very purpose, and which now soared low over the streets and meadows, wings sparkling with machine gun fire. By thousands the terrified screaming victims fled wildly across the meadows, human beings threatened with destruction at the moment of absolute helplessness, the moment when a fighter plane catches you unarmed and on foot in the wide open spaces. The people who ran in groups furnished target practice for the Mustangs' cannon fire: typically a fighter plane swooped low in a dive-bombing maneuver, blazed forth with 20-millimeter cannons, and then lunged away from the bloody masses, some of which were still screaming as the fighters tilted upward. Others hurled themselves into the Elbe River, threw themselves onto the ground, or lay on the banks in stoical resignation till the bullets ripped into their bodies. They danced and jolted grotesquely as the bullets struck them; they tumbled like weeds cut down by scythes, bounced and bobbed like toys upon the ground as the Mustangs turned back, again and again, in timeless demonstrations of American courage.

Even as the fighter planes made rabbit chases along the highways, U. S. bombers winged over the tattered shell of Dresden for two major attacks, in daylight, on February 14 and 15. damage was slight: the city had been obliterated. After this final bombing there were no more strafing attacks on the highways; our pilots had wearied of the game. Ten of thousands of German fugitives headed for Chemnitz, a town not far from the grave of the Saxon capital. British reconnaissance quickly marked their path, and the Lancaster crews had scarcely returned to England when their commanders assembled them for a new briefing.

Intelligence officers instructed Bomber Group No. 1: "Tonight your target is to be Chemnitz. We are going there to attack the refugees who are gathering there, especially after last night's attack on Dresden." No. 3 Group crews were briefed: "Chemnitz is a town some thirty miles west of Dresden . . . . Your reasons for going there tonight are to finish off any refugees who may have escaped from Dresden."

The attack on Chemnitz was not too successful. Of the rest, what more can be said? David Irving's book is the first English-language book devoted to the Dresden annihilation. This is a good book, restrained and calm; but it's not enough. The story will be told again, many times over, as the full truth about these last months of World War II gradually emerges.

"common people and the working man." This and traditional support ("I've always been a Democrat") are the main images of the Democratic party.

The most unfavorable aspect of the Democratic party was its being "too good to Negroes."

As for the Republican party, "the 'party of Lincoln' is now seen as the party of depression, big business favoritism, and mistreatment of workers."

Foreign military policy is the most favorable aspect of the Republican party's image.

But for getting votes, the "bread and butter" association with the Democratic party seems to be an unshakable force.

The conclusion is that "image" has a strong influence on voting and parties would do well to capitalize on their existing strong points and cultivate new images in the other areas.

The study showed further that there is no real Republican upsurge in the South and no great realignment. An equal number of people switched from either of the two parties to the other.

It was concluded that the Democratic party would make furture gains as the unregistered Negro voters are stirred into activity.

The Republicans may gain some support from a small group of independents who have left the Democratic ranks. But for the greater long-range trend the authors of the study see a possible gradual inclination of whites toward the Republican party based on demographic changes.

They feel that urbanization, in-migration from other regions, increased college education of Southern whites, and middle class upsurge will moderate the number of traditional Southern Democrats in favor of the Republicans—but this will take time.

Meanwhile, Drs. Prothro and Matthews continue their study.

Meanwhile, the changing face of the South continues to be the subject of speculation by politicans, Southerners, voters—and two UNC political scientists.

You'll never lose it in a parking lot.

You can see where a Volkswagen Station Wagon comes in handy.

You don't have to tie a handkerchief to the aerial to find your way back.

But it wasn't made to stick up just to make it stand out.

It was made that way simply because it made sense.

When you make a wagon that tall, it will hold more. Almost twice as much, in fact, as conventional wagons.

And when you put the engine in the rear, you can lop off the hood and have four feet less wagon to park.

There's also less gas to buy. (You should average 24 miles per gallon.)

And absolutely no antifreeze. Our engine is air-cooled.

But what's really nice is that something so flagrantly practical is such fun to drive.

Even if you take it around the block to the supermarket.

O.K. So you stick out a little.

Maybe it's time?

Heels Begin Crucial Week Tonight At State

By LARRY TARLETON

The league-leading Tar Heels begin their most crucial week of the season today when they travel to Raleigh for a night game with NC State's Wolfpack.

The Heels play four conference games this week. Following State, they are at home on Thursday against Wake Forest, Friday against Maryland and Saturday against Virginia. The Thursday game with Wake Forest was previously scheduled for April 14, but was rained out.

Coach Walt Rabb's men are enjoying a full two-game lead over the Demon Deacons after their successful northern trip. The Baptists were upset by South Carolina Friday, 11-7. Virginia, defeated by the Tar Heels Saturday, 1-0, are in third place with a 5-3 mark. Maryland and South Carolina are tied for fourth place, and are followed by Clemson, State and Duke.

The Tar Heels have now defeated every team in the conference except Wake Forest. Bill Haywood handcuffed State on four hits on April 10. The Wolfpack lost two squeakers to Virginia and Maryland last weekend and now have a 6-10 overall mark.

Buck Johnson, who pitched well against UNC in the first game, will probably be on the mound for the Pack again tonight. Virginia defeated him 2-1 Friday. Willard Dean, Warren Lineberger and Wendell Coleman lead the Wolfpack attack.

Thanks to brilliant pitching by Bill Haywood and Jerry Davis, Carolina racked up three straight conference games last week. Haywood pitched 19 scoreless innings, 10 against Duke and 9 against Virginia, and Davis shut out Maryland. The coming of age of Davis has eased Rabb's pitching problems considerably, but the moundmen will be pressed hard this week. Spence Willard, who has been having his problems this year, will probably start tonight.

Unfortunately the hitters haven't kept pace with the pitchers. Only Dickie Prindle, Ken Boykin and John Shaw have hit as well as expected. Ken Willard, Jim Speight, Gary Black and Bill Brown all saw their averages dip suddenly last week. Black suffered the biggest loss. He went 0 for 14 on the week and his average dropped from .296 to .195.

Speight and Brown, who were expected to supply much of the batting punch for the Heels, are both in deep slumps. Their batting famines have dropped their averages to the low .200's.

Shaw has wrested the starting catcher's job from Hundley with his hot hitting on the Northern trip. He collected two hits in both games and did a good job behind the plate.

A victory over Wake Forest Thursday would put the Tar Heels in a comfortable position. The Deacons have already lost two games in the conference and another loss would practically put them out of the running for the championship.

. . . leads Heels into crucial week

Haywood Pitching Stops Opponents

Co-Captain and star pitcher Bill Haywood continues to be the shining light for the league-leading Tar Heels, at least as far as the statistics are concerned.

Haywood pitched 19 shutout innings, winning two games and allowing only seven hits last week to bring his season record to 6-0. Besides the phenomenal pitching record, he has raised his batting average to .320, fourth on the team. His singles broke the 2-2 tie with Duke in the 14th inning, and it was his courtesy runner who scored the only run against Maryland.

Dickie Prindle brought his average up quickly to .338 with a 9-21 performance for the week. He is now second behind catcher John Shaw, who evidently has taken over the first catching position with his .421 average. Ken Boykin is the other regular above .300 with a .321 mark.

Unfortunately the rest of the team is falling off badly. Ken Willard dropped from .300 to .265, and Jim Speight, considered by many as the best hitter on the team, has fallen to .239. Bill Brown (.213), Dick Fleming (208), and Gary Black (.195) show disappointing marks.

Jerry Davis improved his record to 2-1, with his shutout over Maryland. The pitching as a whole was sharp in the three conference games, allowing only two runs in 32 innings.

Mural Softball Games Routed By Monsoons

Yesterday's four o'clock softball games were all called off, and will be played as scheduled today. Those teams which had postponements will meet on the same fields at the same time.

The Big Four Day table tennis tryouts are scheduled for tonight at 7 in the basement of Graham Memorial. The tryouts will be under the direction of captain Larry Edwards.

The All Campus Horseshoes tourney will be Thursday night, with the Peaccoks meeting Old East at 8, Lambda Chi meeting Chi Psi at 8:05, and the winners meeting in the finale that same evening at 8:45.

Floyd Patterson: A Man With Purpose

By DENNIS SANDERS

Floyd Patterson, former world heavyweight champion and the true Gentleman of the Ring, made one of his rare public appearances several nights ago before an audience of millions.

The sofe-spoken boxer was a guest on Johnny Carson's "Tonight" show and the money Carson paid him to appear on the show was well spent.

A devoted family man and a deeply religious person, Patterson spoke with humble eloquence on Cassius Clay, civil rights and his current comeback attempt. He also tossed a few verbal blasts in the direction of the press.

Floored twice, both times in the first round, by former champion Sonny Liston, Patterson praised Cassius Clay: "He's young and good-looking and he has terrific ability. In fact, Cassius, or Muhammed X, or whatever his name is may have the ability to hold the title for a long time."

Asked what he thought about Clay's affiliation with the Black Muslems, Patterson said, "I don't respect his affiliation with the Muslims, because I jersonally do not agree with what they stand for. I think that when Clay matures a little, he'll realize his mistake and resign."

"How do I feel about the press? Well, many of the sportswriters say I have no fighting ability . . . they say I'm a bum . . . but that's their opinion, and they're entitled to it. But they misquote me and write things that aren't true about my personal life, and I have lost all respect for most of them, not only as writers, but also as men," Patterson stated.

Floyd Trains 10 Months A Year

A stickler on conditioning, Patterson trains 10 months of the year. Currently, he is training for a July 5 bout with Eddie Machen in Sweden. "I perfer to fight over there," Patterson said. "I love my country, but the people have always been nice to me there and I feel, for some reason, close to them."

He also hinted that the winner of that July match is likely to get a shot at Clay for the title. And make no mistake—Floyd would like to show the sporting world that he isn't washed up.

Assuming Patterson were to fight brash Cassius, the inevitable question, "What style would you use?" arises.

"I would probably use my own style. He's (Clay) a boxer and I am too; he can punch, and so can I; and he's fast, but I think I'm faster.I think any style would be successful—hope so anyway," he concluded.

Talking was a quiet, somber man by nature, hardly the type one might expect to see in a boxing ring. Patterson choses his words carefully, and if he can't answer a question correctly and fully, he'll spar with it or toss it aside gracefully. He is neat and articulate in his dress and manners, and his personality has a magnetic quality.

Doesn't Like Sportswriters

Floyd Patterson is the type of person who will judge his fellow man carefully, giving him every chance. When he makes his judgment, Floyd will then stand beside his friends. He purchased a restaurant for his brother and then loaned him money to keep it up several months later. Althought one New York sportswriter columned that Patterson had refused his brother a second loan, Floyd said "If he wanted a loan, he never came to me about it."

This is the type of error that turns Patterson against the few people he disrespects. This is what an ex-champ turn challenger faces in his climb to regain the title he held so well.

A North Carolina native, Patterson represents the opposite extreme from Clay, a loud-mouthed, would-be poet who claims to be "the greatest . . . too beautiful to be a fighter . . .the king." Should a Patterson-Clay fight transpire in the future, it will be a clash of personalities in the minds of many. In one corner will stand the quiet, serious and dedicated man who held the title with a regal humbleness for so long. In the other, a screaming idiot whose boxing skill and stamina may just equal his loose mouth.

In one corner will stand the man who faced a big, hulking Bear twice and was crshed on both occasions; in the other, a youngster who faced this same giant once and emerged the victor.

How would you bet?

Hill Rise Is Choice In Kentucky Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — Hill Rise, the Kentucky Derby favorite, headed a field of seven entered Monday for the 37th running of the $5,000 added Derby trial in which he will race over an "off" track for the first time.

Hill Rise, winner of the Santa Anita Derby and successful in a prep race last week at Kennelland, nevertheless ruled an even money favorite in his final warmup for Saturday's running of the $125,000 added Kentucky Derby.

Also named for the mile event were Roman Brother, Clem Pac, Mr. Moonlight, He's A Gem, Robair and Grand Garcon.

For Mr. Moonlight, winner of the Gotham Stakes at Aqueduct, Clem Pac, and Grand Garcon the trial is a "must race." Unless they turn in a promising race against Hill Rise they will not come back in the Kentucky Derby.

Nor do prospects look bright for Robair, a maiden owned, trained and bred by J. W. Burton. But Roman Brother and He's A Gem, along with the Hill Rise appear headed for the first of the Triple Crown classics.

World Series Share Voted To 5th Team

NEW YORK (UPI)—The World Series pool will be expanded to include the fifth-place team in each league, it was announced Monday by baseball Commissioner Ford Frick—a move that makes fifth place officially part of the "first division."

In a poll conducted by each club during spring training, the players voted by an overwhelming majority of 478-58 to support the proposal of including the fifth-place teams in the cut. At present, the World Series money is split among the top four teams in each league.

"This proposal will have to be passed by the major league clubs at our mid-summer meeting," Frick said, "but this should be a mere formality. We told the players that whatever they decided we would do."

According to the plan revealed by Frick, it would be a simple matter to switch to the new system. A flat two per cent would be removed from the players' pool with the fifth-place team in the American League and the fifth-place team in the National League each receiving one per cent.

After this two per cent is taken off, the rest of the spoils will be divided as before with the two pennant-winners sharing 70 per cent of the total, the second-place teams getting 15 per cent, third place 10 per cent and fourth place five per cent.

The club owners' and the commissioner's office shares would not be affected by the new split and they will continue to receive their same percentage of the gross.

"I estimate that the share for a player on a fifth-place team will range from a low of about $275 to a high of about $350," Frick said.

Soccer School Set For Washington 2nd Week In June

A "Student International Soccer School" will be held at Howard University this summer from June 14th-20th.

Prominent foreign and American coaches with a "learn by doing" approach will teach a practical course on the latest soccer technique, skills, and tactics. It has been sanctioned by the United States Soccer Football Association and will bring in both American and foreign students of all talents.

Since Howard is located in Washington, D. C., there will be a full sightseeing program of the historic city and the nearby areas.

Enrollment Sunday morning, June 14th, at Carver Hall, on the Howard campus, the registration fee is $10 and the room and board $28. The registration fee should be made out to Sports International, Inc., Mills Building, Washington, D. C., and the room and board to Howard University.

Anyone wishing more information should contact Mr. A. C. Howell, the Advisor to Foreign Students.

Linkmen Tie Terps, Fall By 1 To Wake

The Tar Heel golfers tied Maryland and lost to Wake Forest in their joint meets Saturday at Finley.

Maryland walked off with the team honors as they won over Wake Forest, 11½ to 8½ and tied Carolina. Wake defeated the Tar Heels 11-10.

Les Fleischer gave Carolina some consolation by winning both his matches, including an impressive 3-0 win over former National J.C.C. champion Jay Sigel of Wake. Tommy Arnold also won both his matches by identical 3-0 scores, while George Reams won over his Maryland opponent, 3-0, before losing 2-1 to his foe from Wake.

Other Tar Heels who didn't fare quite as well were Skip Tucker at number 2, Ed Hoopes (3), and John Baldwin (5).

The third and final round of the Medal Play Classic was played yesterday at Finley between UNC, Wake, and Duke, and because of the late time the scores cannot be reported until tomorrow.

NC Mermaids Finish Third

A group of Carolina coeds finished third in the third Annual Invitational Synchronized Swimming Meet held Saturday at Converse College in Spartanburg, S. C.

Agnes Scott College placed first in the meet, and Queens College of Charlotte finished second. Four other colleges, Greensboro, East Carolina, Converse and Winthrop, participated in the meet.

Carolee Arey, Holly Frost, Shirley Ann Travis and Lynn Wellington represented UNC in the events. Arey placed third in the solo event, and the coeds finished second in the group event.

Barnett Denounces Rights Bill As Students Hiss And Applaud

Negro Voting Trends

By BOB O'STEEN

Few men know more about Southern Negro politics than Prof. James W. Prothro.

He and another University of North Carolina political scientist, Prof. Donald R. Matthews, have completed the largest such study ever made of "Negro Political Participation in the South," which will result in a book by Prothro and Matthews to be published next year.

Question—Is there anything new or unusual about your study and its purposes?

Prothro—Well, two things, broadly speaking. First of all, we were trying to gather not only the surface facts about such things as age, voting, and registration, but the kind of information that could lead us to the real question of WHY Negroes and whites vote and think a certain way.

The second thing was the kind of approach involved. Our study was large not only in the number of people interviewed, but in the variety of information obtained. I'm referring to data on their social and political environments as well as their attitudes — specific conditions which might play a part in forming the "why's" of political behavior.

Q—What conclusions have you drawn, then, about Negro politics?

Prothro: Of course it's all very complicated, with the different levels of activity from talking, to voting, to leading and so on.

But, for example, we found syndromes, that is, activities linked together. At the talking level of politics, 9 per cent of the whites and 36 per cent of the Negroes at least talked of politics, though doing nothing further about it.

And at the same educational level the Negro has a higher interest in politics, though the white is generally more active in joining groups and voting.

Q—And is there any explanation of this?

Prothro: Yes, there is one interesting factor, among others. There seems to be an inhibiting system in the Deep South states. In the peripheral states such as North Carolina, Florida, Tennessee, the Negroes have a consistently higher active participation than do Negroes of the same educational level in the Deep South states like Mississippi, Georgia and Alabama.

Q—In other words?

Prothro: In other words, statistically speaking, a particular Negro in North Carolina would be more likely to join a group or vote than he would in Mississippi. The Southern Negro is inhibited in taking real action beyond talking.

Q—Is there any change or trend in this area?

Prothro: Yes. Urbanization and industrialization are making the peripheral states less Southern and the Deep South states more like the peripheral. So I believe there will probably be a gradual decrease in the inhibiting factors in the Deep South states.

Q—Your study showed a lack of communication between races. As desegregation takes place and communication improves what changes do you see in politics?

Prothro: Two main things, which are related. Education and relaxation of inhibition. Right now, what we call artificial barriers stop many Negroes from voting. They feel they'd better not, or they just aren't used to voting, though they legally can.

And as the young Negroes are educated these artificial barriers will dissolve.

Q—What about practical politics — How does the Democratic party manage to get both the Negro and white vote in the South?

Prothro—You know the old cliche about politics making strange bedfellows. In this case there are so many aspects to the parties that you can disagree on one point —even a central one—and still vote for your party.

Besides, the segregationists has no real alternative. Neither party will adopt an outright segregationist position, and tradition leaves the Southern vote to the Democrats, the "working man's party."

Q—What about the so-called Republican upsurge in the South?

Prothro: There is no change. The most impressive thing is the continuing party loyalty. Most of the Democrats who voted for Eisenhower said he wasn't really a Republican at all. There is a small trend toward independent voting, away from the Democrats, but it is small and gradual.

Q—What can the Democrats do to gain in the South?

Prothro: Get the Negroes registered and voting since they are vastly Democratic. This is being done for them by groups like NAACP and CORE, and Democrats at the national level are well pleased by it.

Q—What can the Republicans do?

Prothro: The Negro vote is an issue-oriented vote. The Republicans would have to take a clear-cut stand favorable to the Negro and this would then alienate many whites.

Major changes come only gradually and no one can rush them. The South is changing, but slowly and by itself.

Parent's Day: Something In Store For All

A full day of activity awaits parents of UNC students scheduled to converge upon Chapel Hill Sunday for Parents Day.

Local churches welcome the visitors to attend 11 a.m. services.

Weather permitting, parents may enjoy a picnic lunch someplace on campus. Chapel Hill restaurants and UNC's Lenior Hall will also be available.

The color and precision of UNC's Air Force and Navy ROTC units will greet parents at 1 p.m. as they watch the latter perform a "Pass-in-Review" and make an awards presentation.

Morehead Planetarium will display an Air Force Art Exhibit as well as other art and science exhibits from 1 p.m. to 10 p.m.

From 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. men's residence halls and fraternities will hold Open House, and from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. women's dorms and sororities will do the same. Beginning at 2 p.m., Ackland Museum will be open to visitors until 5 p.m. and Louis R. Wilson Library will display departmental exhibits until 6 p.m.

Vocal entertainment will be provided by the Varsity Men's Glee Club and Watts Hospital Nurses' Chorus at 2:15 p.m. in Hill Hall.

Chancellor William B. Aycock and other members of the administration and faculty will be on hand to greet parents at a 3:15 p.m. gathering around the Old Well. Following Chancellor Aycock's address here, the UNC Band will give a concert directed by Dr. Herbert W. Fred.

Everyone is invited to join in a 4:30 p.m. "Hootenanny" on the lawn in front of Graham Memorial featuring local campus talent. Contributing to this session will be Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House with a few numbers on his "Happy Harmonica."

At dinner time, visiting parents may wish to join Student Supper Forums in various Chapel Hill churches.

As a final point on the day's schedule of events, St. Mary's Glee Club and the UNC Gleemen will sing at 8 p.m. in Graham Memorial Lounge.

In addition to the planned activities, all departmental buildings and Graham Memorial Student Union will be open to parents, and public programs will be held at Morehead Planetarium starting at 2, 3, 4, and 8:30 p.m.

With the full arrival of spring on campus, parents may enjoy visits to Coker Arboretum, Forest Theater, Kenan Stadium and the sundial and gardens in front of the planetarium.

In case of rain, the hootenanny and the Chancellor's address will be held in Memorial Hall, and the Band Concert will be held in Hill Hall.

Former Gov. Ross Barnett Speaks On Civil Rights

One Hundred Stage Protest; Walk Out

By GARY BLANCHARD

Former Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett was alternately applauded and hissed Monday night as he denounced the civil rights bill pending before Congress in a speech to some 1200 white and Negro UNC students and townspeople.

About 100 whites and Negroes, mostly students, walked out of Memorial Hall when Barnett used the word "nigger" in answering a question at the end of his hour-long speech. They stood outside the building, singing freedom songs, until the program ended a few minutes later.

Their departure was greeted with applause by another 100 or so members of the audience, one of whom waved a small Confederate flag. After the speech ended and the freedom singers departed, they broke into several stanzas of "Dixie" in front of the auditorium.

Nine members of the campus police force were on duty, but no incidents were reported.

Barnett's 18-page speech was interrupted several times by lusty applause and hearty boos.

In it he cited recently-released testimony by FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover that "Communist influence does exist in the Negro movement," and recalled that he had said the same thing to the Senate Commerce Committee last July.

Hoover's words, Barnett said, "back up what Southerners have been saying all the time."

Barnett charged that Communists are using civil rights demonstrations "to divert the attention of our people from Communist activities in other parts of the world."

He said he is "encouraged" by recent signs that the American people are beginning to realize this.

Passage of the pending civil rights bill "would destroy local self-government and would result in a powerful federal government with unlimited authority to intervene in private affairs among men and to control and adjust property and business relationships," Barnett said.

Barnett was met at Raleigh-Durham airport by three members of The Carolina Forum, which sponsored his address. They were Chairman John Ulfelder, and members Bill Schwartz and Nicky Nicholson.

Several hours before Barnett's 7:50 p.m. airport arrival time, Ulfelder received a telephone call asking when Barnett was to arrive. Fearing demonstrations might result, Ulfelder declined to specify the time.

Barnett was driven here in a State Highway Patrol car at the request of the Forum representatives, who rode with him.

Barnett told one of the students that one North Carolina man he had always admired was Willis Smith, "who ran against some college professor" for the U. S. Senate in 1952.

The "college professor" whom Smith successfully ran against was Frank P. Graham, former President of UNC and now a UN mediator.

A local police car trailed the state car to the auditorium from the outskirts of town.

UNC President William C. Friday came backstage to officially greet Barnett, but he had begun speaking. After a 20-minute wait, Friday left to go to another meeting, asking one of the Forum representatives to relay his greetings to Barnett.

Barnett attended a reception at Graham Memorial following his speech. It was cut short when the impromptu question and answer session began to grow heated.

Barnett then met with members of the Carolina Political Union for about an hour.

He left Tuesday morning to return to Mississippi, after a speech he was to give Tuesday at Temple University in Philadelphia was cancelled.

House Ends Anti-Poverty Bill Hearings

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A House Committee ended six weeks of public hearings Tuesday on President Johnson's $962 million anti-poverty program and prepared to begin drafting a bill on Thursday.

Rep. Peter H. B. Frelinghuysen of New Jersey, ranking Republican member of the education and labor committee, introduced a Republican anti-poverty bill as a "major alternative" to the President's plan. It touched off an icy exchange with Peace Corps Director Sargent Shriver, who would head the poverty fight under Johnson's bill.

Frelinghuysen said he would offer his three-year $1.5 billion proposal to the committee when it goes into closed session Thursday "to see if there is a willingness among Democrats to be open-minded about this."

Committee Chairman Adam Clayton Powell, D-N.Y., said he expected a bill would be approved by the committee during the week of May 4-8.

Frelinghuysen's bill would emphasize state and local action rather than federal concern and would allocate state poverty aid according to population.

"This program is in respect to people, not states," Shriver said in criticizing the Republican proposal as "wooden" and "stiff."

Shriver and Frelinghuysen clashed over the probable number of persons to be included in the proposed "Job Corps" in President Johnson's bill. Frelinghuysen said his bill "does not include a federal Job Corps program."

Charged With Arson, Barton Out On Bond

Charles Albert Barton Jr., UNC Morehead scholar, was released on $7,500 bond Monday night after he was charged with arson in the March 22 fires at the Phi Delta Theta Fraternity.

Max Boxley, Phi Delt president, said that Barton was an initiated brother of the fraternity, but he had been deactivated by national fraternity when he failed to make his grades second semester.

"It goes without saying," Boxley commented, "that we were surprised. Everybody was suspected because we knew there were about 12 people around the fire, and most of them were being considered."

Damage from the six separate fires at the Phi Delt house was estimated at $3,000, according to Chapel Hill Fire Chief J. S. Stewart. There were 38 students asleep in the house when two brothers came in and discovered the fire.

Although fire extinguishers were used, three windows in the living room were burned and curtains and woodwork damaged. A smaller fire was discovered in a bar in the basement, but was quickly put out. Investigators found several charred rake and broom handles in a broiler in the basement.

Boxley also said that plans were underway for repairs to the house.

"The singed walls have already been painted, and we have ordered new furniture and carpeting. We had planned to remodel soon anyway, and insurance covered most of the damage," he added.

Barton, who lives in Ehringhaus dorm, was seen leaving the fraternity house at 5:45 a.m. He was identified by two fraternity brothers who were returning from an evening out.

He is the son of Charles A. Barton Sr. of 4120 Walter Rd., Charlotte.

"THE LESSON"

Eugene Ionesco's "The Lesson," a short play directed by George Gray, will be produced tomorrow and Friday at 8 p.m. in the Graham Memorial Lounge. Featured in the cast is Anne West, George Gray and Cara Landry of the School of Dramatic Art.

Book Prize Award Given To Sparrow

Roy L. Sparrow of Route 1, Chapel Hill is one of 11 undergraduates who were given book prizes for excellent word done in German during the 1963-64 academic year at the University.

Selected by their individual instructors, the students all maintained at least a B plus average in German, and proved outstanding in both spoken and written German. The winners were announced this week by Dr. John J. Kunstmann, chairman of the Department of Germanic Languages.

ZOOLOGY SEMINAR

Dr. Max H. Hommersand of the Department of Botany will address the University Zoology Seminar tomorrow at 4:45 p.m. in room 105 Wilson Hall. His topic will be "The Light Reaction in Photosynthesis." Coffee will be served at 4:30.

A Brand New Chapter In The Long Story

By KERRY SIPE

All he could talk about was his new baby boy.

University Dean of Men William G. Long leaned back in his chair with the inevitable gleam of pride in his eye and took from his wallet the inevitable snapshots of the red-faced bundle in the maternity ward window.

"He sort of looks like me, don't you think? All my babies look like me until they get hair on their heads," he said.

David Robert, the youngest of four little Longs, was born to Mrs. Long and the Dean last Saturday, April 25.

"The four kids really are beginning to look like stairsteps," said the Dean. "They were born in girl-boy-girl-boy order. Their ages are six, four, two and zero. It's almost too mathematical for comfort."

Dean Long is not taking bets on that kind of mathematical consequence, though. "We think that four is a nice size for a family. I think we'll keep it that size for awhile."

How are Kathy, Chris, and Michele taking the arrival of their new baby brother? "They seem to be adjusting very well," said the Dean. "I had a copy of this picture made for each of them.

"Kathy took her picture to kindergarten with her and showed it to the other kids. She told me that the teacher let her pass the crackers out at snack time. This is some big status thing with the kindergarten set.

"The other day Kathy stopped us just before mealtime and said she had to get something for the table. She ran and brought back all three pictures of David Robert and put them beside each plate.

"I think when the baby finally gets to come home, the other kids will be well used to the idea."

What Are They Really Like?

. . . the people in South Building? . . . the fellows who give quizzes? DTH deuce reporter Kerry Sipe, in his new series of faculty and administration profiles, will tell you. Sunday it was Jim Wadsworth. Today it's Dean Long. Who will be next?

All of the Long children are native Tar Heels. The Dean and Mrs. Long have lived in North Carolina for seven years, now.

He just celebrated a birthday of his own last week. It all started for the Dean on April 18, 1929, in Morgantown, West Virginia. His education consisted of three degrees, two from West Virginia University and one from Yale.

He spent three years as a 1st lieutenant in the U. S. Signal Corps and for a time taught Political Science, his college major, at New Haven College in Connecticut.

In 1957, he was ordained to the Christian ministry in the United Church of Christ.

Dean Long first came to Chapel Hill from N.C. State in Raleigh and served from 1957-1959 as assistant Dean of Student Affairs here.

It has been the Dean's varied and various political, religious and educational accomplishments which earned him a listing in the latest edition of "Who's Who in America."

What does a man like that do for fun?

"I don't have too much time for hobbies," he said upon hanging up the telephone receiver after the third interruption of our conversation.

"When you consider the work I do and the fact that the telephone rings almost constantly six days a week, it's not surprising that I don't find time for hobbies. There's a lot to be done around a University this size."

When he does manage the time, Dean Long likes to delve into politics and the political party system. "I guess you could call that a hobby. I don't get paid for it," he said.

He was a delegate to the State Democratic Convention last year.

"I also enjoy singing, both with a choir and with a quartet," he said in his clear bell-baritone voice.

Barnett Brings Out The Worst In UNC

The epitome of a Southern Politician has come and gone, leaving in his wake serious questions about the existence of the Carolina Gentleman.

Ross Barnett was no different than we expected. He obviously did not care for Negroes, he obviously did not care for Communists and he obviously did not care for Bobby Kennedy. He was, pure and simple, a politician from the Deep South. He did not speak in either the sublime or the ridiculous, and we did not expect anyone in the audience to be either impressed or revolted by the visitor.

But most of the audience quickly managed to divide itself into two dramatically opposed groups, and the result was that those who managed to remain somewhat neutral were subjected to one disturbance after another.

There are certainly better spokesmen for the South than Ross Barnett. We expected that all True Southerners would mildly applaud Gov. Barnett and let it go at that.

But it was not to be. They lept upon the occasion to vent their dislike for the Negroes present, and even before the Governor's arrival the makings of a race riot were floating about the floor.

And all through the speech they cheered and stamped in idolation of this "patriarch" who had come to town to tell us just what those nasty people in Washington were doing to sell us down the river to the Communists.

The other side was no different. Some 20 Negroes and their white friends entered Memorial Hall about 7:30 in order to get the front row seats. We would like to think they came to the speech with open minds and to perhaps consider what Gov. Barnett might say, but it was rather obvious that it was just another Great Protest.

During the question and answer period, when Governor Barnett said the word "nigger," all arose and left in indignation to assemble on the front steps and sing "We Shall Overcome" in highly indignant tones.

If they did not expect the Governor to say such things they were sadly mistaken, for to the white Mississippian the word "nigger" is as natural as if we were to say "if", "an" or "but". We agree, it is offensive. But it was to be expected.

Carolina definitely is not the liberal paradise it is reputed to be, nor is it the University of Mississippi. But there was a little bit of each present Monday night, and the total effect was to nauseate us.

Governor Ross Barnett has ridden off into the sunset on his white horse, but he has left many riders behind. We hope they won't venture from the stable again.

On A New Sorority In Swaddling Clothes

Gamma Lambda of Phi Mu sorority, like a newly arrived infant, has taken its first toddling steps on the UNC campus, and from all appearances they have been successful ones. If Phi Mu manages to overcome the many stumbling blocks that rise up to beset new Greek organizations here, they will provide a welcome addition to the fraternity and sorority systems at Carolina.

It has been five years since a new sorority implanted itself on campus, and the last successful fraternity arrived more than 11 years ago. In the intervening years, one fraternity has gone down the drain, and another has stalled in its attempts to colonize. Thus, the enthusiastic entry of Phi Mu into the local Greek picture represents important progress to those who, like ourselves, have long held that such groups can and do make a positive contribution to the campus. Indeed, as the campus continues to grow and the number of interested students increases, we would hope that other colonies, just as enthusiastic and dedicated, will appear to enable the Greek system to maintain its significance.

For there are many areas in which such groups can prove themselves beneficial, as the wide-spread interest in Phi Mu should indicate. The new sorority will have a long road to travel before it is firmly and finally established, but it has taken the first carefully considered steps. We wish them every success.

A Plug For Our Rivals—And A Hope

This seems to be the era of curing the ills of the Residence Halls. Proposals about fixing up the social rooms, getting two-man rooms for everyone and having a strong MRC fill the air, and every politician on campus vigorously pursues these goals with visions of the next elections dancing in their heads.

We have a pet project which, for all the attention it has received, is a project of very few people other than us. It is the Editor's Roundtable.

The idea has been kicked about Student Government for several years, and it wasn't until the Lawler Administration that it came to fruition. Jefferson Davis was appointed chairman, and meetings were announced with high hopes.

The editors of the Residence Hall newspapers would gather once a week for the Common Good, and all would benefit. But only two or three editors showed up.

The Roundtable starts again this week, and Davis has consented to lead it again. We hope the newly-elected editors show more interest.

Sanford Gets CR Praise

By JOHN GARCIA

CHARLOTTE (UPI) — It's an unusual, if not a rare situation in the South today when a leading civil rights spokesman has something good to say about his governor.

In a day when most Southern governors are under constant fire from the Negro community, Gov. Terry Sanford enjoys an almost honeymoon-like relationship with the Negro leadership in North Carolina.

One of his admirers is Kelly Alexander, state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He has lauded Sanford's efforts almost from the day he took office, and he hasn't let up in his praise for the Tar Heel chief executive.

"I think one of the noteworthy things about Gov. Sanford is that he has established, to a greater degree, basic and fundamental avenues of communications between the Negro leadership and his administration than has ever been done in the history of this state," said Alexander, owner of a Negro funeral parlor in Charlotte.

However, Alexander does not have the entire Negro leadership behind him in his praise of the governor and he realizes it all too well. There are some with lesser rank who feel Sanford is proceeding entirely too slowly, but even their criticism comes less often than is heard in other Southern states.

Alexander brushes aside severe criticism of the governor, noting that "I think he took a personal interest in meeting the problems that Negroes are faced with in his state.

"Under his administration, there has been more social change within the framework of state government than in any other administration," said Alexander.

But Alexander is quick to point out that not everything is coming up roses in North Carolina.

"There are some things on the bad side of the ledger," he said, "that could precipitate some racial tension during the long, summer months. Negro leadership will not sit idly by and ignore communities which have failed to do anything in eliminating discrimination."

Alexander emphasizes that notable gains have been made in about a dozen of the state's larger communities, which haven't "done enough in approaching the problem as objectively as the urban centers."

In short, Alexander makes it clear that North Carolina has not seen the last of its demonstrations. More are on the way, he assured, and the "summer is the best time to hold them."

'Jerks' Superior To Twist

Old-Time Orgies Better: Otelia

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Well, I think Graham Memorial can feel very happy that their Jubilee was such a success. The biggest crowd I have seen on the lawn was present on opening night for the Four Freshmen, and it did my heart good to see so many couples taking part in the combo party in front of Graham Memorial. I wouldn't call it a dance for there is no dancing to it. Instead, it reminds me of the account of the "Jerks" which took place at the religious camp meeting in pioneer days in the midwest.

There was no excitement in the lives of these isolated people. So they came from far and near, by wagon and horseback, and by foot each summer to the camp meetings which lasted for several weeks. They slept on the ground or in wagons. But that was the least of their worries. This was the occasion for letting off steam, for relaxing and letting themselves go. They went into emotional orgies, the most extreme of which took the form of the Jerks. They jerked so violently that they had to hold on to trees. A stranger passing through asked why all the sappling trees had been topped and shorn of branches, and were told—for the benefit of those siezed with the Jerks.

But I am not against whatever it is the young folks are doing now, for the couples who have had no opportunity to acquire skills in dancing can get on the floor and shake and twist and jerk, thus becoming participants in the Jubilee and not just on-lookers. Let us see more couples getting in the act.

I am just delighted to see the efforts to bring the dormitories into a fuller social life paying off. Happy people do bettter work than unhappy people and I am sure a happy atmosphere around the dormitories has increased immeasurably this year, and all those who have had a hand in bringing this about are due a rising vote of thanks.

SL Partisanship Clouds Issues

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

The referendum bill introduced by Bob Wilson (SP) in the first new session of Student Legislature last Thursday night amusingly surprised me. I was one of those SP legislators caught napping.

Both parties appear to be trying to outdistance their adversary. The elections are over! One can foresee no immediate benefit the Student Party could reap. Each party's hegemony believes in getting its party's name on a bill, and regards bipartisan endorsement with mild contempt.

Many of my constituents are dissatisfied with both parties—the UP, for having introduced their bill a week before the April 14th elections, and the SP, for its action last Thursday night.

The leadership of either party should realize that students are tired of this bandying around and that some immediate action should be forthcoming. Frankly I would like to see both parties concur on one agreeable bill and let the legislative calendar summon forth something more important.

Economic Means Proposed For Wooing Satellites

By PETER RANGE

Ed. Note: Seniors Sam Himes and Peter Range represented UNC last week at the Fourth Annual Naval Academy Foreign Affairs Conference meeting with leaders from government, business, universities, and the military, 160 conferees from about 70 colleges across the nation discussed "American Foreign Policy in the European Community" in roundtable sessions for three days.

One of the most encouraging reactions to the Sputnik scare has been the renewed intensity of preparation of politically-minded American students for competence in the fields of foreign policy and diplomacy. Schools of international studies are flourishing, Fulbright exchanges swarm about the globe, and conferences are held.

While—as usual—the South is yet to join the trend, an increasing number of conferences for the discussion of American foreign policy are being held at academic institutions around the nation each year. Because of their access to funds, their inside contacts with government officials and their freedom to get things done by simply giving the order, the nation's military academies have taken a leading role in sponsoring such meetings.

Our meeting in Annapolis last week was surely one of the most stimulating I can remember. Top students, top moderators, top speakers and urgent topics gave us grounds for fruitful discussion and friendly controversy for every minute of the three-day conference. The Naval Academy simply organizes, sponsors and participates in the conference (NAFAC)—by no means does it dominate. If anything, the military viewpoint was under-represented in our discussions, though two midshipmen participated in each roundtable discussion.

Discussion areas were divided into ten roundtable groups ranging from the Common Market and NATO to Soviet policy and British positions regarding Europe, from Germany and European Colonialism to the satellites and the neutrals.

On the whole, thinking was progressive and turned up policy rather close or slightly "ahead of" that advocated by the State Department. The liberal tendencies of the group were most clearly evidenced in the controversy which roared when ultra-conservative Congressman H. R. Gross (R-Iowa) spoke to NAFAC. Gross demonstrated what most conferees considered the need for a course in elementary economics, advocated a "positive program" of foreign aid by simply abolishing it, and generally got himself into a polemical fireworks display for the rest of the evening with young America.

Perhaps the greatest point of divergence with the Sttae Department came over the current proposal for the Atlantic Multilateral Force, which was cogently presented and supported at NAFAC's first plenary session by Foreign Policy Consultant Gerard Smith. After three days of strong argument, our NATO roundtable dismissed with the MLF summarily for a variety of reasons. In their eyes it could attain none of the goals for which it is worth founding (strengthening the Western deterrent, inhibiting the proliferation of nuclear arms, drawing the Western Big Four closer together). Some of the members felt that NATO should be re-examined and perhaps dismantled entirely.

Ambassador Clare Timberlake presented a positive program of foreign policy towards the Eastern European nations which corresponded to that which our roundtable turned up. U. S. policy towards these countries has been all too vague in the past. It was agreed that the Sino-Soviet split is giving rise to conditions which afford the satellite nations greater bargaining power with Russia than anytime since the Iron Curtain was forged.

The United States must maximize the power of these nations to assert their autonomy and polycentric tendencies in so far as possible through active and imaginative trade agreements, long-term loan and aid programs and strengthened cultural and diplomatic ties.

The nations of Eastern Europe are ultimately European and hence traditionally and by their own wish Western-oriented. The more they can join in the mainstream of Western prosperity, styles, modernization and trade, the more they like it—especially if it helps release them from Soviet domination. If they can begin to look to the West for certain of the goods and advantages now provided them by the USSR, the Kremlin will have far looser reigns and economic reprisal methods for controlling the political fabric of the satellites.

Nationalism is running high in the satellite countries, Khrushchev is treading softly and carrying pots of goulash, Tito continues to play it cool, and Gomulka presents a plan—now is the time for the United States to show the satellites exactly how far she will go in backing them economically, through trade as well as aid.

Khrushchev needs the satellites' votes when the showdown with Peking comes to the fore and will have to pay a price for them. If we are really interested in the liberation of the satellites, granting the probability that they will remain socialist even if they can escape Sovietism, then we must give the Eastern Europeans trump cards to use in calling for a high price for their votes in Moscow.

So it went at the Naval Academy Foreign Affairs Conference this year. The efficiency and richness of the whole Conference would serve as an excellent model for our efforts on this campus. There are many areas in which we could present an equally fruitful weekend if we incorporated more organizational know - how with successful fund-raising efforts. UNC could and should become the intellectual meeting grounds of the Southeast.

Picket Rights And Mallard

Serious questions have arisen as to Constitutionality as well as the motivation for the sentences passed last week againt the civil rights demonstrations by Judge Raymond Mallard in Hillsboro.

What Judge Mallard did, in effect, was to completely cut off the civil rights movement in Chapel Hill by jailing the leaders and giving suspended sentences to most of the followers.

Those with suspended sentences kept themselves out of jail by agreeing to "not engage in or be a part of or physically assist in demonstrations or physically accompany any person or persons engaged in any demonstrations for any cause on any public street, highway or sidewalk or at any public place."

This could reasonably be interpreted to mean that no person under suspended sentence can watch or participate in a July 4 celebration or a Memorial Day parade.

"Demonstrations for any cause . . . at any public place" includes a vast number of perfectly normal and completely patriotic everyday activities.

It is perfectly possible that one of the students under suspended sentence might be arrested and put in jail for taking his little brother to a cub scout jamboree.

More important than these evil transgressions is the ban this sentence poses against legal picketing or parading. This is a right guaranteed in the First Amendment of our Constitution.

It is no more legal for a defendant to agree that he won't picket than it is to sign a paper saying that he won't vote. The only way his voting rights may be taken away is by placing him in jail. Thus the defendants are not allowed under the Constitution to accept these terms.

A word should be said also about the poor planning of CORE and the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee in this matter.

The leaders, most of whom were jailed, are some of the most conscientious men and women to be found in this state. They committed their acts of civil disobedience in the full knowledge that they would be tried and sent to jail, although there was no way of knowing that the sentence would be as harsh as it was.

However, a large number of the students and young instructors who participated in the demonstrations had little or no idea of what they were getting themselves into, despite the efforts of the leaders to inform them of the consequences.

As a result, the purpose of their demonstrating has been largely defeated. They have only contributed to state coffers with the money paid in court costs to avoid jail sentences.

Had they been ready to go to jail, as they should have been when they disobeyed a Constitutional State law (obstructing traffic), they would have put the State in the embarrassing and financially difficul position of having to jail and take care of hundreds of them.

At it now stands, they have put no pressure on the State prisons (only 11 jailed), they are forbidden from further demonstrations and they have paid the State for their trouble.

The movement in Chapel Hill now finds itself without leaders or active members and little has been accomplished.

Whereas the principle of civil disobedience is a noble one, backed by two centuries of American tradition and history, it has been badly bungled here.

With a man as effective as Judge Mallard in wiping out this form of civil protest through court action, Constitutional or not, demonstrators are forced to act more intelligently and with more foresight.

More will follow in in this column on the way in which the sentences were given and how those that were sent to jail were actually treated.

There has been talk by in formed observers that a "deal" was struck between the demonstrators' lawyers and Judge Mallard. This has been vigorously denied on both sides.

The "deal" rumored was that Judge Mallard would let the bulk of the cases go by granting a motion of nol-pros with leave if the defendents would plead nolo contendere. This plea prevents the defendant from appealing his verdict.

Whether or not there is truth in this rumor, the feeling remains that the same suspended sentences might not have been given and that the defendants might not have pleaded nolo contendere if it did not exist.

Questions have also been raised in connection with the opinion that Judge Mallard's sentences were motivated by political action.

More on this tomorrow.

The CPU Meets With Ross Barnett

CPU Guest Book—It Runs Gamut From FDR To Ross

After the reception in Graham Memorial Monday night, where did Gov. Ross Barnett go?

Well, he visited with the Carolina Political Union, one of UNC's most unique organizations.

The history of this group is as colorful as any about, and the past has been full of high points.

In 1936, several political science students of Prof. E. J. Woodhouse founded the Carolina Political Union in the belief that both they and the campus had much to gain from a weekly discussion and debate of the current political questions. Their success grew to proportions never imagined.

During the era before, during, and after World War II, the most active years of the Union, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Rep. John F. Kennedy, the German Ambassador to the United States and many others visited the university and met the members if the Union.

The Carolina Political Union will hold interviews for new members tomorrow and Friday. Interviews will be held in Graham Memorial, and sign - up sheets will be available at the GM Information Desk.

In the wake of the re-organization of Student Government under a new Constitution, the organization of the Carolina Forum (which duplicated the Union's function of securing speakers) and the general apathy of the McCarthy Era, the Union went defunct in 1954.

The Union was revised, dusted off, and re-organized this Spring, after urgings were received from members of the faculty, administration and distinguished alumni such as Dr. Frank Porter Graham.

Last month, as in 1936,, the Union was organized by interested students. A Charter very similar to the original one was adopted, and the membership was set at 30 members. Meeting every Sunday night at 9 p.m., the Union will occasionally bring speakers itself and will work closely with the Carolina Forum, the Carolina Symposium and YM-YWCA in bringing speakers. Often they discuss an issue within the membership. Under the Charter, no votes are taken, no resolutions are passed, no position is declared publicly by the body. The purpose of the Union is to discuss the important questions of the day, and in that way, hopefully, to serve the University.

Thus far this year, the Union has met with Prof. Raymond Dawson of the UNC Political Science Department, Prof. Daniel Pollitt of the UNC School of Law, Dean William S. Barnes of the Harvard School of Law, Rep. Frank Thompson (D-N.J.) and Governor Ross Barnett.

The future of the CPU, modeled on the Unions of Cambridge, Oxford and Dublin, depends on the interest of the Student Body in its purpose, and the devotion of members to its principles.

Anyone in the graduate or undergraduate student body may apply for membership. The Union tries to maintain within its membership students of any and all political convictions to provide a diversified forum for discussion.

Placement Service Dispels Confusion

J. M. Galloway, Director of UNC Placement Service says his office can dispel the confusion of the most unsure job-seeking student.

Last year employer recruiting visits totaled 440 with 3,404 individual interviews held between students and employer representatives.

In addition to arranging interviews, the Placement Service also notifies the student of vacancies and mails his personnel folder to prospective employers upon request.

Galloway's annual report of June 1962 through May 1963 shows that out of 514 senior registrants, 181 were employed through the Placement Service.

Any student who has satisfactorily completed two full semesters in residence is eligible for registration with the Service. Once registered with the office personnel folders will become a permanent record, and the applicant may receive assistance in jobs immediately after graduation, after returning from military service, or as an alumnus.

The median salary for 1962-63 BA-BS men graduates and returning veterans accepting their first jobs in North Carolina was $436 per month. For those accepting jobs out of state the median salary was $464.

Galloway feels the goal of the Placement Service is to "help the student find an appropriate career, not just a job."

UNC Glee Club To Make World's Fair Appearance

The UNC Men's Glee Club has really been busy lately.

The oldest music organization on campus, the 50-voice group recently elected officers, received an invitation to the New York World's Fair and scheduled a joint concert for Parent's Day.

Also selected to fill other positions with the Glee Club were Alvin Tyndall, concert manager; Jim Kennington, public relations director; and Spencer Tinkham and Frank Minard, librarians.

Ted Davis, Travel Development Administrator of the Dept. of Conservation and Development, offered the group the chance to appear at the World's Fair "on behalf of the state of North Carolina." The Glee Club and the String Quartet will leave Chapel Hill early June 1 and will return late Wednesday evening, June 3.

The N. C. Day Concert will be held at the fair Tuesday, June 2, and Dr. Joel Carter, Glee Club director, has planned a program of sacred and secular works.

On Parent's Day, this Sunday, the Glee Club will appear in a joint concert with the Watts' Hospital Nurses' Chorus in Hill Hall at 2:15 p.m.

The groups will perform separately during the first half of the program and will then combine voices for the remainder of the afternoon.

Dr. Carter and Robert Allen, director of the Nurses Chorus, have planned a program of light and semi-classical works for the Parents's Day concert.

A second point concert will be presented at Watts' Hospital on Wednesday evening, May 6, at 8 o'clock.

Eighth Inning Rally Lifts Frosh By State

By PETE GAMMONS

The UNC freshmen rallied for five runs in the bottom of the eighth to defeat the NC State Frosh, 10-6.

State had come from a 5-0 deficit to a one run lead by scoring five in the seventh and one in the top of the eighth, thanks to the leaky Tar Baby story.

The Heels scored first in the second when Danny Talbott singled, advanced to third on Tom Robbins' single, and scored when catcher Lenny Price threw the ball into center field attempting to return it to the pitcher. They added four more in the fifth on a triple by Lawson Baker, a single by Robbins, a walk to Tom Lampman, and singles by Jim Dunlap and Jerry Joyner.

In the top of the fifth State thought it had the lead, when trailing by one run, pitcher Mike Helthauser lined a two-out double down the left field line for two runs, only to miss first base and nullify both runs. They did break into the scoring column in the seventh, and did it in a big way. Jim Dunlap had been coasting along on a two hit shutout when with one out, Tom King singled to left. Then Jim Spangler singled to left, and the ball got by Hank Crowson, allowing Spangler to reach third, and scoring King. Bruce Trautman then hit a sacrifice fly, and was followed quickly by a single and an error, which prompted Coach Bill Lovingood to bring in Jimmy Dean. But two more singles and another error brought home three more runs and the game was tied.

An error and a hit batsman brought on Tommy Kirkman in the eighth, but Spangler singled back through the middle to put the Wolflets ahead, 6-5.

Tar Heels Fall In Medal Play

In the third round of the UNC-Duke-Wake Forest medal play tournament, Wake Forest increased what had been formerly a 19 stroke lead into a 28 stroke margin to capture the championship.

The official scores haven't been released yet, but the Deacons' 28 stroke margin has been verified.

Three Demon Deacons, Jay Sigel, Ken Folks and Don Hedrick, finished one-two-three in the competition. The Tar Heels took four out of the next five places to capture second place.

Skip Tucker, who was challenging Folkes for the individual title after the first two rounds had a disastrous 80 Monday and fell to a fourth place tie with teammate Billy Stephenson. Ed Hoopes and Les Fleisher placed sixth and seventh for the Tar Heels.

Coach Ed Kenney says that the bad weather contributed heavily to the high score of the golfers.

The Tar Heels now have an 8-3-1 record on the season. They have two matches remaining before the ACC tournament. Both remaining matches will be played on Finley. Virginia is here tomorrow, and the Duke match will be played Monday or Tuesday. The tournament will be played next Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the University of South Carolina. Maryland and Wake Forest will be the tourney favorites.

TENNIS RESCHEDULED

Rain forced postponement of the State-Carolina tennis match scheduled for Raleigh Monday. The match has been rescheduled for Thursday afternoon.

The Tar Heels will be home on Friday and Saturday for matches with South Carolina and Clemson. They wind up their season Tuesday with a match with Davidson on the Varsity Courts.

Avery, Chi Psi Win In Softball Upsets

The Avery Avengers and Chi Psi pulled off upsets in rain-soaked intramural softball action Monday.

The Avengers beat the dorm favorites, Alexander Poobahs, 10-0 behind the two-hit pitching of Andy Wells. John Seeman rapped a home run for the Avengers against Poobah pitcher Gene Faircloth.

Chi Psi scored five runs in the third inning off Phi Delt pitcher Charlie Battle to edge the Phi Delts 9-8. Steve Painter, Bob Carithers and Mal Dunlevie led the attack for Chi Psi, while Jack "Crazy" Crane was the winning pitcher.

Rain once again washed out the Big 4 Day softball practice Monday. The practice has been rescheduled for tomorrow at 4:15 on field 8.

Roger Davis' two singles and Sam Milner's three hits paced the Craige Greens over the Parker Peons 11-6.

DU defeated Zeta Psi 14-4 behind the pitching of Ted Edwards and a 12-hit attack. Norm Brunson had three hits for the DU's, and Steve Dennis collected a double and home run.

In other games ATO beat Phi Delta Chi 13-3, Junior Skeen paced AFROTC Golds over the Winston Skirtchasers 10-7 and the Winston Blues forfeited to the Victory Village.

Talbott, Prindle Lead Frosh Batters

Danny Talbott and Randy Prindle are leading the freshman baseball team in hitting over the first half of the season.

The Tar Babies have compiled a 9-1 mark through their first 10 games. The team batting average is .283 and the pitcher's earned run average is a fantastic 2.72.

Basketball star Tom Gauntlett paces the Tar Baby moundsmen with an 0.84 ERA, and a 2-0 record. Jimmy Dean and Tommy Kirkman also own 2-0 records. Grey Clarke has absorbed the only Tar Baby defeat thus far, but he boasts a creditable 3.00 ERA for six innings.

Talbott is the team leader in hits, runs and RBI's. He has 13 hits, scored 12 runs and has 9 RBI's. Prindle is second in RBI's and hits, while Mike Saintsing is second in runs scored. Saintsing is hitting .305.

Martinsville 500: 'Not Proud Of It'

Doug Yates of Chapel Hill doesn't have much to say about the Martinsville 500 stock car race Sunday.

"It wasn't a day to be proud of. When you don't do something you can be proud of, you don't have much to say."

Mr. Yates would have finished eighth if he hadn't torn out the rear end of his 1963 Plymouth. As it was he finished 17th, and collected a hardly noticeable $225 prize.

He qualified for the race Friday, and practiced Saturday. Saturday the track was in good shape, and the low gear ratio rear end in his car was right for the track.

Orlando Cepeda Will Be Out For Two Weeks

CHICAGO (UPI)—Orlando Cepeda glumly took the dim view Tuesday about his knee injury which will pull him out of the lineup of the San Francisco Giants for perhaps two weeks.

"It's a shame," he mumbled grimly, en route to the airport to catch a plane back to San Francisco where he will be sidelined until a re-examination of the knee Monday.

"This is a great ball club," he said. "Everybody was playing together, and now with me out, everything will change. It's a shame.

"I hope I'll be able to get back before two weeks, maybe a week, or 10 days. I'll be praying for it."

Cepeda's injury came when the Giants were only a half a game out of first place in the National League, and manager Alvin Dark pondered what he could do to make up for the loss of a player batting .500.

"I haven't figured out what I'll do," he said. "Probably I'll use Willie McCovey at first base all the time."

Editor's Notebook

By FRED SEELY

Yesterday I noticed an item in the Raleigh News and Observer announcing the election of officers for the local chapter of the Young Democratic Club. Being a Dan Moore supporter, I was a bit unhappy at the overwhelming number of partisans of L. Richardson Preyer who had gained high offices. Before going further, this was the news story:

CHAPEL HILL — Bill Wichard of Durham was elected president of the 400 member University of North Carolina Young Democratic Club here Tuesday night.

Other officers, elected were Tom Bolch of Hickory, graduate vice-president Neal Jackson, of Raleigh, undergraduate vice-president; Barbara McKenzie of Laurinburg, secretary; and Frances Pegues of Monroe, treasurer.

Outgoing president, Lane Brown of Albemarle was elected by acclamation a member of the executive committee. Other members of the executive committee elected were Phil Baddour of Goldsboro, Charles Robson of Chapel Hill, Richard Hughes of Parkton, George (Nick) Nicholson of Chapel Hill, Frank Montgomery of Salisbury, Charles Brown of Albemarle and David Kitzmiller of Greensboro.

Being a dues-paying member of that organization, I wondered why I had not been informed of the meeting, especially since it was the most important of the year.

No Mention Anywhere

Fearing that it was my fault, I thumbed through the DTH editions of the past few days, and found neither story nor mention in the Campus Calendar of the meeting. I asked the News Editor, the Associate Editor, the Managing Editor and all the secretaries if they had seen an announcement, and made a search of all unused copy after they replied in the negative.

No mention was to be found.

So I contacted Lane Brown, the past president, who told me that he had called the DTH offices earlier in the week and told the person who answered the phone to tell Mickey Blackwell to be sure and put something in about the elections, and then to have Mickey call him back.

Of course, if Brown was so interested in the meeting being announced he certainly would have contacted Mickey when he did not receive a return call, because, alas and alack, the message was never received.

Brown also told me that he had made a public announcement of the meeting. Where? At a speech given by L. Richardson Preyer (where else.)

Why No Notices?

Brown says the reason notices were not sent out to members was that very few had responded to an invitation to a debate on the Little Federal Plan and 'it just didn't seem to be worth it."

No YD members I have talked with received a notice of that meeting. Perhaps it was the campus mail acting up again.

Also, Brown hastened to add, "undergraduates are more interested in student government and don't have much interest in a semi-permanent organization such as the YDC."

I discovered a few more interesting facts about the election and, to be sure, the YDC.

To start with, a grand total of approximately 25 people attended the meeting. At the meeting, Brown chuckled that the low attendance was due to 'the editor of the Tar Heel being a Dan Moore man, so he didn't put in the story we gave him."

Yesterday he brushed this off by simply saying, "it was only in jest." Sure, and no publicity was given because the president was a Preyer man?

Yes, I am a supporter of Dan Moore. But no one would know it from the newspaper, because Hugh Stevens, my co-editor, is for L. Richardson Preyer and we have decided to confine our views on the gubernatorial race to presonal columns (such as this) when the elections draw nearer.

Now, as to the implication that I wanted to see the meeting "attacked" in order to get Dan Moore supporters elected. A quick check of the newly-elected officers (some of whom were not even present) shows that only one, Richard Hughes, is a supporter of Dan Moore.

Preyer For Governor?

The rest, including Brown, are supporters of L. Richardson Prey-

Batting Clean-Up — Bill Friday!

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Bill Friday never played center field for the New York Yankees, but then Mickey Mantle never became President of the Consolidated University of North Carolina.

Today, at 43 years of age, bespectacled Bill Friday, the state's top educator, still remembers his ambitions on the ball diamond.

"When I was growing up in Dallas, N. C., I played baseball for the American Legion team in Cherryville. You see this knuckle here," Friday said holding up his left hand. "It was broken while I was playing ball, and it is a constant reminder of my baseball days. But you know, I wouldn't trade those experiences for anything."

Friday, who still has the shiny black hair as well as the broken knuckle left over from his youth, went a step further and tied in baseball with his specialty—education.

"It's activities like American Legion baseball, Hi-Y and church functions which help to build self-confidence in our younger generation," he said.

"Youngsters today should keep in mind the importance of two things—studying hard and trying to make something out of their lives."

Friday encourages every boy and girl to go as far as his or her mind and talents will allow.

"The person with the untrained mind is going to be the displaced person in the next generation," said Friday. "Therefore, I would say the best investment a young person can make now is to put in a good day's work on his school subjects.

"However, the student should not become frightened about his work," warns Friday. "The important thing is to do what has to be done to the best of one's ability."

This advice to the younger generation came slowly and with tnought. When Bill Friday talks, the words float through the air as lightly as the puffs of smoke which ascend from his pipe. The pipe itself belongs—it is at home with the dignity of the man. So is the white handkerchief which protrudes from a coat pocket.

The picture of his wife and three daughters behind his big, orderly desk, the spacious office with its fireplace, the rows of books in a case across the room —they all are part of the man.

"Time really has a way of slipping up on you," Friday said crossing his legs as he sat down on a mustard-colored couch across from his desk.

"My graduating class at Dallas High School had 12 students in it. That was in the late depression years. To see what has happened since that time and to see what people have done with their lives is most gratifying. I am just glad to have been a part of it. I consider it very rewardnig."

Being president of the three-fold University takes up most of Friday's time, but he does manage to squeeze in a few hobbies.

"I enjoy golf and fishing, but I am strictly an amateur. I get a real pleasure out of reading, too," Friday said. "But here lately, I have been refinishing furniture. I once bought some second-hand furniture to re-furnish . . . and now my wife keeps me supplied with stuff to do."

"Frances is 12 now and is in Junior High School, and I might add that she found it quite a change," Friday said. "Mary is in the wonderful world of the second grade, and our youngest, Betsy is 'a senior in kindergarten.'

"I treasure every hour I can be with them," Friday said. "They are a real joy in my life."

There has been much speculation concerning Friday's future. Will he ever run for Governor? Will h move on to another university? In Friday's own words, "I have never entertained the thought of doing anything other than what I'm doing right now.

"I've never put my mind to anything else. My work with the University has so totally consumed my time that I haven't thought about doing anything else."

BILL FRIDAY (right) gets briefing from Secretary of Commerce Luther Hodges, who served as Governor of North Carolina from 1954 to January, 1961. Friday replaced Harris Purks as Consolidated University President in 1957.

Little Dallas Fondly Recalls Favorite Son

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

DALLAS, N. C.—When William Clyde Friday became president of the University of North Carolina, it was no great surprise to the folks back home. To the people of Gaston County, and particularly those of Dallas, Bill Friday's success seemed almost inevitable from the start.

During Friday's school days at Dallas High, his teacherss and principal quickly noticed young Bill's eagerness to learn and to participate in various school activities.

Mitchell Carr who has been principal of Dallas High School for the past 32 years remembers Bill Friday very well.

"Bill was very active in extra curricular activities, yet he maintained an above average scholastic record," Carr recalled.

Carr remembers "Bill's extreme popularity with the other students. All the other students and teachers liked Bill, and I believe that I am safe in saying that this popularity has carried over in his work with the University."

One of young Friday's instructors at Dallas still teaches there. Mrs. Clyde Thornburg recalls "Billy was always eager to learn, and no challenge was too hig for him.

"He would always ask questions about anything he didn't understand. Billy was in my civics classes in the fifth, sixth and seventh grades, and his scholastic record was well above the average."

Both Carr and Mrs. Thornburg stressed the important parts young Friday took in extracurriculars both in the school and in the community.

"Friday was an active sports enthusiast," Principal Carr recalls.

"He played varsity baseball, was active in other sports, had an unequalled school spirit and still maintained a steady flow of sports news for publication by the Gastonia Gazette."

Perhaps Friday's most important attribute during his boyhood days in Dallas was, as Mrs. Thornburg states "his natural flair for public speaking.

"When Billy was in my fifth grade civics class, he would enter the various declamation contests that were sponsored at the time by the Gaston County Civitan Club.

"He was quite a little speaker. He was active in all school productions, and took important parts in many of the school plays."

Mrs. Thornbury produly noted that young Friday was always active in church work.

"His family attended the Dallas Baptist Church, and you could expect to see Billy at Sunday School almost every Sunday."

Another man who knows Bill Friday well is Gastonia businessman Warren Gardner. Gardner and Friday have been life-long friends.

Of Friday, Gardner says, "He is one of the most dedicated, most conscientious, most outstanding young men in North Carolina."

Gardner noted in particular Friday's work in establishing Gaston Community College. Gardner also stressed the point that Friday tries to get home and see his parents and friends whenever he can.

"Whenever Bill is in the vicinity—whether it's in Charlotte for a meeting with the Charlotte College trustees, or in Stanley making a speech plugging community colleges, he always tries to find time to visit back home even if it's for just a few minutes."

Feelings of pride for this local boy who made good run high high in this small Gaston County town. But these feelings are shared by others, including the State's number one citizen, Gov. Terry Sanford, a close friend of Friday's.

"William Clyde Friday is taking his place alongside outstanding leaders of the Consolidated Unviersity of North Carolina like Frank Porter Graham, William D. Carmichael II and Gordon Gray," Sanford said of Friday.

"Bill Friday is a laywer who speaks the language of his clients —the students and the citizens of North Carolina.

"He is an administrator who understands that people are more important than paper work. He is an educator who believes that education must be offered to the people from Nags Head to Natahala and not restricted to 'Ivy Tower.'

Focus On Friday

The two stories on William Friay which appear on this page today are the first of a two-day installment on the President of the Consolidated University. Today DTH Associate Editor Mickey Blackwell, author of the special series, gives you a personal and informal look at UNC's youngest president, plus quotes from Friday's hometown friends in Dallas, N. C. Tomorrow there will be a biography and a story on Friday's views on education.

LOWENSTEIN SAYS ROSS 'DECEPTIVE'

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Former Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett's description of the Civil Rights Bill is "deceptive," according to Dr. Allard K. Lowenstein.

Lowenstein, Assistant Professor of Social Sciences at N. C. State, refuted Barnett's remarks Tuesday night in a speech before over 100 students in Gerrard Hall, sponsored by the Carolina Forum.

Saying Barnett had stretched certain passages of the bill in order to cite extreme cases, Lowenstein cited Barnett's example of newspaper editors who would be "put in jail for writing segregationist editorials."

"The only title of the bill that comes near to this," Lowenstein said, "is one which prohibits a newspaper from publishing an advertisement for segregated jobs."

Noting that the First Amendment of the Constitution protects editorials in the freedom of the press clause, Lowenstein said, "Maybe the First Amendment doesn't have any force in Mississippi."

He asked why Mississippi didn't pass laws prohibiting segregation, if the state was against federal laws against it.

"It is not indeed the question of federal power that they are disputing," he said, "but the right of the Negro to seek his privileges as a U. S. citizen."

Lowenstein said Barnett's charges of Communist infiltration in the civil rights movement, like the use of the Negro crime rate and other criticisms, were being used as "a vindication of segregation.

"If Governor Barnett feels the Negro is inferior to the white, then why is he afraid of giving the Negro equal opportunity?

"According to the voter registration records in Mississippi, 95 per cent of the Negroes of voting age are illiterate," Lowenstein continued. "That says a lot for their separate but equal school facilities."

Lowenstein attacked those who feel property rights are inviolate.

"I'd like to remind the people who object to public accommodations that private property is circumscribed by ordinances, zoning regulations and community rules.

"Barnett feels the federal government should not force this law on the taxpayers of Mississippi," Lowenstein said, "but statistics show that Mississippi taxpayers return to the Federal Government one-third of the federal funds spent in Mississippi annually.

"Federal funds are being used to construct segregated facilities in that state."

Lowenstein also cited numerous instances of lawlessness committed by Mississippi whites against Negroes and called for efforts to relieve the social and economic plight of the Negro.

Chancellor Naming Not Until Late May

It will probably be late May or June before the University's new chancellor is named, says President William C. Friday.

The special advisory committee formed to select three candidates for the position will not meet its self-imposed May 1 deadline, Friday revealed Wednesday.

"I don't expect to get their recommendations for several weeks or more," Friday said.

Upon the committee's selection of the final three choices, Friday will choose one name subject to approval by the UNC Board of Trustees. The new chancellor will succeed William B. Aycock, who retires July 1 to resume teaching in the School of Law.

University officials had hoped to have a candidate selected by the May 25 meeting of the Trustees. But Friday said the choice may not be made by that time.

"There's nothing to prevent us from calling a special meeting of the Trustees in June on a matter as important as this," he said. Friday also added that a new chancellor will definitely be selected by July 1.

William C. Medford of Waynesville is chairman of the advisory committee, which was named last September by Frday to study and interiew potential candidates for Chancellor. There are 17 members on the committee.

The committee has talked with a number of educators both within and outside of the state. Friday said he knew of no one being consiered for the position who would be unable to assume duties in July. He further discounted any possibility of anyone being selected as an interim chancellor as was done in the mid-1950's.

"I want to get on with things and get a chancellor selected," Friday said.

There is no major disagreement among committee members concerning the candidates, Friday stated. "The reason the committee is taking as long as it is," he added, "is due simply to the amount of work that must be done. It is not because of differences in opinion."

Wall Street Editor Gives Lecture

Vermont C. Royster, editor of the Wall Street Journal, will deliver a formal "Journalism Lecture" tonight in Howell Hall at 8.

A native of Chapel Hill and graduate of UNC, Royster will speak on "The Political Problems of Mid-Century America." The public is invited to attend.

Royster is a Pulitzer Prize winner for editorial writing and has been a member of the Wall Street Journal staff since shortly after his graduation in 1935. He is the second outstanding national speaker in the School of Journalism's lecture series, presided over by Dean N. N. Luxon.

Royster was elected first vice-president of the American Association of Newspaper Editors at the recently concluded convention in Washington, D. C.

He received the honorary Doctor of Laws degree from UNC in 1959.

CPU INTERVIEWS

The Carolina Political Union will hold interviews for vacant positions today in the Grail Room from 2-5 p.m. and tomorrow from 2-4 p.m. Sign-up sheets are available at the information desk of Graham Memorial. There will be a meeting of the Union, Sunday night at 9 p.m., in the Grail Room to consider applicants for membership.

LBJ Makes Strong Plea For Rights Bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Johnson said Wednesday Congress would be kept in session all summer if necessary to pass the civil rights bill because justice and morality demand its enactment.

He appealed to 150 religious leaders to help shepherd the bill through Congress, telling them: "It is your job, as men of God, to reawaken the conscience of your beloved land."

The President's words drew vigorous applause from the Protestant, Catholic, Orthodox and Jewish clergymen, members of the national inter-religious convocation on civil rights now meeting in the capital on behalf of faster action on civil rights.

Catholic Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle of Washington told the President that an inter-faith rally Tuesday night, sponsored by the convocation and attended by more than 2,500 people, "expressed our common conviction that civil rights deeply involve the moral and religious conviction of our nation."

Speaking to the clergymen in the East Room of the White House, the President jabbed his fist for emphasis as he declared that the "problem of racial wrongs and hatreds is the central moral problem of our republic."

He told the clergymen it was their task to "direct the immense power of religion in shaping the conduct and thoughts of men toward their brothers in a manner consistent with compassion and love."

The President defended the civil rights bill now before the Senate against charges that it was a federal power grab and would infringe on the rights of businessmen and others.

"None of these provisions would interfere with the rights of businessmen to setup their own standards for the dress, conduct and qualifications of their patrons and employes," he said.

There were several "amens" from among the clergymen as the Chief Executive concluded on his benediction-like note:

"As the Old Testament pleads: 'Let there be no strife, I pray, between you and me, and between my herdman and your herdman, because we are brothers.' So do we plead today."

Appalachian Legislation Gets Support

WASHINGTON — (UPI Legislation to carry out President Johnson's pinpoint war against poverty in Appalachia was introduced Wednesday and won immediate bipartisan support for its effort to end "despair and hoplessness" in the 10-state area.

A day after Johnson sent the program to Capitol Hill, Sen. Jennings Randolph (D-W. Va.) formally offered a bill embodying the President's recommendations.

Two Kentucky Republicans, Sens. John Sherman Cooper and Thurston Morton, co-sponsored the measure and spoke on the floor on behalf of proposal.

Joint Statement

The legislation was referred to the Senate Public Works Committee, Randolph and Cooper, top-ranking party members on the committee, issued a joint statement which declared: "The prompt action of the President must be matched by speedy and decisive action in Congress."

Some Republicans, however, were reserved in their reaction to the program.

In the House, Public Works Committee Chairman Charles A. Buckley (D-N.Y.) announced that hearings will begin on the legislation May 5.

Buckley appointed a special nine-man committee headed by Rep. Clifford Davis (D-Tenn.) to conduct the hearings.

Buckley and Davis, as well as other members, introduced bills in the House embodying Johnson's proposals.

Promises, Promises, Promises, Promises

The on-again, off-again television debate between the major Democratic gubernatorial candidates has made all three look so foolish that some people may have switched over to Ray Stansbury.

Almost every day another roadblack arrives—if it's not Kidd Brewer, it's a rally in Charlotte for one of the candidates.

This has been a fairly worthless campaign so far, anyway. About the only qualification the three candidates seem to have for the job is that they have enough money to run a fancy campaign, and perhaps a TV debate will stimulate them to say something.

It has been a campaign of promises —of far-off roads, of a purge of Communists, of higher wages. It has not been a campaign of important issues—of the Speaker Ban, of cures to the racial problem, of aid to the depressed areas of the state.

Statewide polls have shown that about 50 per cent of the voters are still undecided. The time is running short, and they will have to make up their minds soon.

We realize that the candidates must be politicians, and we realize that they may have good intentions. But within six months one of them is going to be a statesman, and it behooves them to show some qualification for this job.

If not, someone may get fooled.

Our 'Peanuts' Crop Has Had Some Bugs In It

Our "Peanuts" have disappeared. For about a week now, as thousands of our readers are no doubt aware, we have somehow omitted "Peanuts" and given you a double dose of "Pogo" instead. Now, like many of you, we have nothing against ol' Pogo. Indeed, that strip is composed of some of the finest satire now flourishing in America. But our day is just not complete without Charlie Brown and Lucy and Snoopy.

Our problem has been that no one has been willing to take the blame for the situation (after all, would YOU admit that you were the person responsible for leaving out "Peanuts?"). The ad staff didn't do it (THEY said). The printer didn't do it (HE said). But the important thing wasn't who did it, but that SOMEBODY did.

Well, after extensive checking, we finally rounded up the delinquent strip, and if it doesn't appear this morning, it should be reinstated within a day or two.

You might be interested to know one further fact about "Peanuts." The daily segments which appear in the DTH have somehow gotten out of date a little, and we are currently ahead of schedule. Now it is considered good journalism to scoop the competition on news stories, but "Peanuts" . . . well. We intend to correct this little error if possible in order to retain the strip for your future enjoyment.

Oh yes, one final word. Thank you all so much for the many phone calls, letters, rocks through our window with notes attached, threats, "Charles Schultz for President" buttons, canceled subscriptions, bribes, sympathy cards, Voodoo dolls (ouch!), poison cakes, "I love Lucy" bumper stickers, and the bags of salted peanuts.

Brewing Bitter Wine From Sour Grapes

The Charlotthe Observer

Never let it be said that columnist William F. Buckley and the National Review can't hold a grudge.

The magazine's April 21 issue contained this item:

"Down at Chapel Hill, they're just wild about Senator William Fulbright, though they do rather regret that he believes in keeping the Nigras in their their place. But they are willing to overlook this, inasmuch as the Senator promises to cooperate in any program to keep the peoples enslaved by the Communists, whether white, black, or brown in their place, so he really isn't guilty of discrimination, if you see what we mean, and if you don't, why you weren't educated at Chapel Hill."

The slap at Fulbright is predictable enough, since he and the National Review couldn't be much further apart on their views.

But why the dig at Chapel Hill?

Back in late 1962 Buckley and The Carolina Forum at Chapel Hill got into a rather angry disagreement that spilled over into 1963.

It concerned a $450 lecture fee that Buckley had asked but which the Forum didn't want to pay when it turned out that the lecture appeared in article form in Playboy magazine before Buckley delivered it at Chapel Hill.

Forum representatives said the talk not only was warmed-over magazine stuff but that it was in bad taste anyway. Buckley retorted in a long and angry letter that Chapel Hill was a provincial "Old Lace Society."

Aside from the merit or lack of merit of these two viewpoints, there's a lesson to be learned here. You shouldn't be too surprised to learn that some of the "color" in National Review is furnished by the stain of sour grapes.

— The Young Democratic Club Does It Again, And Again —

er. No more than three Dan Moore people were present, and Hughes must have really pulled the wool over the collective eyes of those present to even gain a seat on the Executive Committee.

To top it all off. Wichard, the new president, is not even a student, having taken a leave of absence for this semester to work for (you guessed it) L. Richardson Preyer.

The law school has long had an iron grip on the YDC. For the past 10 years the presidents have come from the law school, and usually they have been unopposed. Last year an undergraduate tried to break into the bloc, but the Big Wheels managed to pack the convention and emerged victorious—the other candidate withdrew when he saw the house packed.

The meeting prior to last year's election drew a grand total of eight members. It was at this meeting that the other candidate revealed his plans, and some 220 people appeared a week later. I am sure all were vitally interested in seeing the YDC get good leadership (especially of the Law Schol variety.)

Onward And Upward

But there is no space for that. The future of the YDC? It's not hard to guess.

Before too long there will come an endorsement of the UNC-YDC for L. Richardson Preyer, unless this attempt at an expose is successful. Following that, the Law School will retain its grip next year with the election of another Law School member to the presidency, probably Phil Baddour.

And the undergraduates will have to be satisfied with Student Government.

A Plea For Quiet Pilots

AT 35,000 FEET—The airlines have a new public relations gimmick. Just as you get bedded down in your seat for a cross-country flight and start to snooze, a voice comes over the loudspeaker. "This is your captain speaking. We are flying at an altitude of 35,000 feet and on our left is the city of Palm Springs."

You peer out the window and all you see is a mass of clouds.

"Of course you can't see it so good at the moment," he says, "but it's a wonderful town."

You doze off again to be suddenly awakened by the friendly voice. "We have just passed into Arizona," the pilot says.

You start applauding until the other passengers stare you down.

All is well until 15 minutes later when the voice is back again. "We will soon pass over the Grand Canyon, which will appear off our right wing. The weather should be clear."

Several passengers take out their cameras and one of them asks if we wouldn't mind moving so he could get a picture. We move over to the left side of the plane.

"Before arriving over the Grand Canyon," the voice says again, "I would suggest you look out the left side of the plane at the glorious mountain range."

The passengers with their cameras rush back to the left side windows and we're asked to move again.

The camera-toting passengers reverse themselves and they're back on the right side.

Just as everyone is in position, the friendly voice says, "We may be hitting a little turbulence. I would suggest everyone fasten their seat belts."

Word reaches the pilot that we will soon be passing over Oklahoma City and he just can't keep it to himself.

When the pilot isn't informing us about geography, he's telling us what the weather is like in Chicago. He also fills us in on his latest engine change, explaining why the motors will sound different. Then he tells us he's going up 5,000 feet to avoid a rainstorm, and 25 minutes later he informs us they have hurricane warnings over Florida but, since we're not going there, we have nothing to worry about.

For 45 minutes we hear nothing and we start to worry. We call over the stewardess and ask her, "Is there anything wrong with the pilot?"

Before she can go up front to check, he's back again.

"We've just passed over Lima, Ohio," he announces triumphantly.

We breathe a sigh of relief.

We guess it's a good idea to keep everyone informed on how the pilots are flying the plane, but we can't help wishing for the good old days when they were busy up front with the stewardesses and left the passengers alone.

SEE THE LITTLE PUFFERBELLIES ALL IN A ROW, CHUG, CHUG! TOOT, TOOT! OFF THEY GO...

Mallard Decisions Blasted

Southern Justice In Chapel Hill

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

In January an all-white Birmingham jury found a white youth guilty of slaying a Negro boy following the church bombing last September; he was sentenced to seven months in the county jail. Currently, Mississippi indicates that the alleged assassin of Medgar Evers, NAACP leader in Jackson, probably won't be retried because no jury could be found to convict him. This is Southern Justice!

On the other hand, as a result of having blocked traffic during civil rights demonstrations in Chapel Hill, several young men have been sentenced to a full year in prison and an additional two year suspended sentence (with FIVE years probation). Three years for blocking traffic? Mallard has made a mockery of even Southern "Justice."

He has used the power of his position to vent his personal prejudices—which he so clearly expressed in a recent public speech. By this behavior he has disgraced the entire State of North Carolina and made a travesty of the concetp of Justice in North Carolina courts. Perhaps the Federal Judge who could not question the "fairness" of courts in this county might have second thoughts after Mallard's ludicrous performance.

What is so incredible to me is that the editors of this paper appear to accept these exceptionally harsh and unusually cruel sentences as reasonable and just! Mallard applies the law in an arbitrary and capricious manner to satisfy his personal whims and prejudices, converting the legal system into a mechanism of unreasonable abuse—all in an attempt to end the civil rights movement in Chapel Hill, and NOT for the purposes of administering fair and just punishment. Because the editors are apparently also in hopes that this portion of the movement will end, are they willing to ignore and even applaud the gross miscarriage of justice being perpetrated?

Contrary to the implications of your news item, these people were not found guilty and sentenced for many charges. Most of their charges remain charges, and they can be prosecuted at the whim of the court. The one year sentences are for SINGLE charges of blocking traffic and resisting arrest! These youthful idealists were willing to accpet just punishment for their willing and conscientious violation of the law; but the unusually punitive sentences handed them are far from just. Mallard's conduct is an outrageous offense to the very principles of his position.

Who Is McInnis? Sweetie Queries

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Now that spring is in the air and the sockless wonders are out in full force, along with the leaves and crab grass, the entire campus is asking a mighty question. A question of interest to very few, but still as important as Otelia's opinions and Mike Lawler's verboseness. Ready?

Who is Henry McInnis?

Who is this expert of experts, this critic of critics, this all-around cultural king? One day he reviews music, the next, opera, the folowing day he is an expert on hair styles and today he is a crusader for the homosexuals. What a guy.

It was only last week that my girl-friend Frieda said:

"Marc, sweetie, who is Henry McInnis?"

And how was I to answer? What am I to tell my 12-year-old mistress? What a predicament for 20-year-old sociology major to be in. But I did my best to quench her thirst for knowledge, I answered:

"My dear sweet Frieda, Mr. McInnis is the moon and the stars, the sun and the holy triumvirate of the Seven Seals, the waitrel of the bakery called Thells and the whole THING. See honey?"

"No" . . . she answered.

So I was stuck. Please help me find out who Mr. McInnis is, please. Frieda has flooded the Volkswagen with tears of anguish.

Acting A Saintly Endeavor For N. C.'s Barbara Loden

By HENRY McINNIS

Ed. Note: To Mr. McInnis, Barbara Loden is the moon and the stars, the sun and the . . . (see Letters).

"I want to be a saint," purred North Carolina born actress Barbara Loden, adding . . . "in my acting, of course."

Barbara, from Marion, has made several Hollywood movies, among them, "Splendor in the Grass" and "Wild River." She plays the controversial and much discussed role of Maggie, the "Marilyn Monroe part" in Arthur Miller's "After the Fall."

She was in Raleigh to appear last weekend as guest of honor at the Wake County Mental Health Association's Charity Ball at Memorial Auditorium.

Calling her room at the hotel, this writer heard a sexy voice answer, saying, "Come on up. I'll be ready."

"Acting is so hard for me," the 27-year-old blonde beauty explained, "but it's what I've been trained to do and I want to be as good as I can at it. Every night I have to go through with it . . . an ordeal if you strive for perfection."

Her husband, Laurance Joakim, is a film distributor and producer. They brought their two young sons, Leo, 2, and Marco, five months, out of the bedroom and the photographer said to them, "Look in the mirror." Leo, the one with the long blond locks, pointed to the mirror in childish astonishment and exclaimed, 'That's Marco's mommie!"

Recently acclaimed as "the toast of the theatrical world" because of her performance in Miller's play at Lincoln Center, Miss Loden was as modest and approachable as she was perceptive and lovely.

"She knocks herself out every night with that play," her husband said. Barbara added, "I try to bring out the inner meaning of the Marilyn role because there is so much there and I feel it."

Arthur Miller, regarded as the embodiment of detachment and reserve, interviewed her for the Maggie part. After selecting her, he had what Barbara described as a "joyful fit. He was worried about the casting.

"Arthur worked so closely with director Elia Kazan, Jason Robards and me. It was wonderful to work with Elia in 'Splendor in the Grass' because he isn't mechanical as most directors are.

"Acting in movies frustrated me because the actor has to do exactly as the director says. He tells you where to stand, how to look. There's no room to interpret a role or give something of your own inventiveness. You're a puppet," she said sadly, without bitterness.

"Arthur," she added, "was at rehearsals every night and he asked me for my thoughts and suggestions." Miss Loden felt intense about giving her role depth and understanding because she regards "After the Fall" as a very personal and moving creation.

The actress, whose part was fashioned by Miller from his marriage to the late Marilyn Monroe, said she had never met Miss Monroe.

How does it feel to be famous? Barbara Loden doesn't really know, although she is the recipient of strong critical reception by the New York critics and the national magazines. "I haven't read all the reviews. I'm afraid to," she laughed.

Hollywood now knocks at her Central Park apartment house door, offering roles. "Some I find quite attractive," she said, but they don't challenge her creative needs and abilities. "My values are just somewhere else than what they've offered so far."

The actress' curiosity was recently stimulated by the prospect of directing and participating in an experimental, "documentary-like" independent film. "I might do this some time," she said.

Reclining on a sofa, Barbara's clear, bright blue eyes glowed with life. "My figure hasn't changed since high school days." She looked fine.

Barbara thought she had shocked the writer when she told him where and how she had met Mr. Joakim, but it sounded very natural. "He and a friend saw me walking down a street in New York. They pulled over and gave me the typical wolf's line, 'Are you a model?' I dated Laurance two years before we married."

Barbara guessed they had been married "oh . . . eight to ten years. You know how time goes. It's hard to say."

She was thrilled to announce that she had been included in the 1964 edition of "Who's Who," an honor she shared with only one other actress, as far as she knew. The actress . . . Hayley Mills.

Life Magazine was to have featured Miss Loden's portrait taken by Arthur Miller's wife, Inge Morath, but "something important happened in Tanganyika and I guess I got put in a file," she mused, not looking too disappointed.

"I was saturated by publicity at the same time the play opened, so my picture did get on the cover of Saturday Evening Post and Newsweek along with the text of Miller's play inside the former publication."

What was so striking about Barbara's new success was that she didn't "feel famous." She believes there is always that striving for personal and professional fulfillment that persists no matter how "successful" or acclaimed you get. "But we search all our lives for who we are, don't we," she said plaintively.

Odd Events In Hillsboro

There is much surrounding the court decisions in Hillsboro last week that smacks of out and out bigotry and misuse of the courts of justice.

Unusual procedures led to unusual sentences from a man, Judge Raymond Mallard, who apparently would put an end to all forms of protest, legal or not, in Chapel Hill.

Whether or not one agrees with the aims and methods of the demonstrators, one can not allow one's principles to slip so far as to tolerate the use of a court of justice, sacred to democracy, as a means for a political end.

Several of Judge Mallard's actions are in question:

1) He made a speech in Chadbourn April 20, during the trials, denouncing the demonstrators and falsly stating that many of them had been sent from the North and paid $6 a day for their work. Few of the leaders are paid anything, not to mention $6 a day, and certainly none of the students are paid.

Furthermore, it is generally considered unethical for a judge to speak his opinions of a case or of the defendants outside the court while the case is in progress lest he appear prejudiced.

2) He stated in court that the demonstrators would only be sentenced on the charges which were brought up in court and which received guilty verdicts.

Yet he asked Solicitor Thomas Cooper to go through a brief history of each of the demonstrators, mentioning how many charges had been filed against each and asking about offices held in civil rights organizations.

When the sentences were given out, they appeared far too harsh for a simple misdemeanor. If the defendants were convicted of all charges against them (several had over 20), then they deserved harsh sentences. But persons convicted of only two or four charges were given as much as one year in jail and a two-year sispended sentence.

Floyd McKissick, one of the lawyers for the demonstrators, said that Mallard's sentences were the harshest ever given in the state to demonstrators.

3) One defendant, J. V. Henry, requested Friday morning that his plea be changed from nolo contendere to not guilty. His request, a normal one for a defendant in any case, was denied.

4) Defendants identified as leaders in the movement by Cooper were given active jail sentences while other defendants convicted of identical offenses, and in some cases with more charges against them, received suspended sentences or probation.

Lou Calhoun, a UNC student, received a six months sentence after being described by Cooper as fifth in command. John Dunne, a former Morehead Scholar, received one year for the same offense. Others, not described as leaders and not identified with the national movement, did not receive active jail sentences.

It should be reiterated here that these people were not being tried for work with or affiliation with any illegal movement or organization. They were all found guilty of similar charges, yet received different sentences, apparently for varying degrees of participation in a perfectly legitimate movement.

5) Rosemary Ezra, a wealthy white resident of Chapel Hill and friend of the movement, was given a much higher fine than the rest and a six-month jail sentence despite the fact that she was not described as a leader and had only half as many charges against her as the others who received jail sentences.

When Miss Ezra's case came up, Mallard said that he understood she was well-do-to. She was described as financially aiding the demonstrators and letting her car be used. Had she been tried for conspiracy, these facts might have had a bearing on the case. But she was not.

5) Lastly, Mallard said and asked certain things during the trial indicating his prejudice in the matter.

He described Duke graduate Joseph "Buddy" Tieger as one who serves the cause, whether willing or not, of "international conspiracy that would destroy this country." Needless to say, Tieger is unaware of any foundation for this Birch-like charge.

Mallard continually remarked incorrectly that all the leaders were from out of the state (remember Point No. 1, when he spoke in Chadbourn about how all the leaders were paid to come down from the North. "We must not let anyone come along and destroy our minds and sell us a bill of goods," he said. Was the evidence presented in court all he thought about when reaching a sentence?)

What happens to our revered scales of justice when the weights are so inequally distributed on one side?

Tar Heels Roll Over State With 18 Hits

By BILL LEE

Combining an 18-hit attack led by Ken Boykin with a strong pitching show by Beattie Leonard, the steam-rolling Tar Heels mowed down NC State, 14-5, Tuesday night at Raleigh.

Leonard, making his first appearance since March 17 when he broke his hand fielding a ball, allowed only four hits and one walk while striking out five in seven innings before tiring. Spence Wllard finished up the game to preserve Carolina's seventh conference victory without a defeat and running the season record to 14-5.

In leading the offensive attack, Boykin singled twice, doubled ,and tripled, plus drawing a walk and reaching first on a fielder's choice in six times at the plate. The entire team broke out of a slump at an opportune time as Wake Forest, Virginia, and Maryland remain to be faced this week. Catcher John Shaw raised his average to .440 with a 3-for-6 show, and Dickie Prindle upped his to .351 with two hits in three trips to the plate.

The Tar Heels scratched in the third inning when, down by one run, they jumped on State starter Buck Johnson for two hits and four runs. Leonard started it off by drawing a walk and was replaced by Bill Taylor as a courtesy runner. Prindle drew another walk, and Jim Speight advanced both runners on a sacrifice. Boykin then grounded to the shortstop who elected to try for Taylor at home, but threy high, leaving runners at first and second. Prindle was forced by Ken Willard before Shaw singled to right scoring Boykin. Willard moved to third on the hit and scored on the rightfielder's bad throw and Shaw wound up on third. Bill Brown then singled to center, knocking in Shaw, to end the scoring for the inning.

Carolia added three more in fourth as Prindle beat out an infield single with two outs and Speight followed with a double to right center. Boykin beat out another infield hit to score Prindle, and Speight tallied on the shortstop's desperation throw. Willard finished Johnson off with a single to left scoring Boykin.

They added their final four runs in the ninth as Prindle was hit by a pitch to start it off, and Boykin unloaded his triple to deep left center. Willard then drew a walk and moved to second on Shaw's infield safety. Bill Brown then came through with his third hit of the night to score Willard and move Shaw to second. Dick Fleming knocked in the final tally with a single to center. State added three runs in the bottom half of the ninth before the three-plus hour marathon finally ended.

Two Chi Psi Teams Move To Net Finals

Delta Upsilon, Chi Psi Blue, Chi Psi White and DKE Jets advanced to the finals of their divisions in tennis Tuesday. The final matches will be played today on the varsity courts.

DU defeated Zeta Psi 2-1 to advance to the final bracket. Brick Oettinger started the DU's off by smashing Howard Manning in six straight sets. Morgan Dennis then gave DU their winning margin by beating James Barrer 6-5. The DU doubles team of Buddy Thompso and David Howe lost to Pete Rankin and Chuck McMillan 6-0.

Pi Kappa Alpha forfeited two matches to the Chi Psi Blues, and Chi Psi won the other match for a 3-0 victory. Steve Painter beat Tom Harris 6-1 in the only match played.

The Chi Psi Whites, the tourney favorites, defeated TEP 3-0. Jeff Ruday and Sandy Reider won the singles matches and Wyatt McCallie and Stu Ball teamed to win the doubles for the Chi Psis. Ruday defeated Dave Robbins 6-2, and Reider beat Bill Griffin 6-3. McCallie and Ball smashed Nate Leder and Jon Camirez 6-3.

In Tuesday's softball action, Teague scored four runs in the 10th inning to edge the Avery Avengers 12-8. Five straight singles by Don Dobson, Larry Smith, Jim Melvin, Tom Hamlin and Don Raines pushed across the four runs for Teague.

SAE tallied five times in the seventh to nip Kappa Alpha 7-6. Doubles by Ned Martin and Jim Durston were the big hits for the SAE's in the seventh.

In a real donnybrook, Delta Sig squeaked by ATO by the football score of 16-15. The slugfest lasted only four innings. Don Creech slammed a homer in the fourth as the Delta Sig's came up with nine runs to counteract the seven runs the ATO's scored in the inning.

WAKE HERE TODAY

The Tar Heels put their perfect ACC mark on line today when Wake Forest visits Emerson stadium for a 3 o'clock encounter.

The Demon Deacons are in second place in the conference with a 4-2 mark and a 160-5 overall mark. The Deacons were last year's champions, and were expected to repeat this year. Lou Howard, with a 7-0 mark, will probably oppose Bill Haywood, 6-0, in today's game. Bill Scripture, Wayne Martin and Mike Budd head the powerful Deacon slugging attack.

Dean Throttles Duke, Freshmen Win Tenth

By PETE GAMMONS

The UNC Freshmen ran their season record to 10-1 Wednesday by edging the Duke Freshmen, 6-4.

Jimmy Dean was the big hero, coming on in the fifth inning and stopping the Blue Imps on one hit the rest of the way to get credit for the win.

The Tar Babies drew first blood in the third when Tom Lampman singled to center, and Mike Saintsing lined a grounder through the legs of third baseman Joe Barrett which rolled all the way to the left field corner, scoring Lampman from second with Saintsing pulling up at second. Bill Newsome singled to left center to score Saintsing and give UNC a 2-0 lead.

Duke bunched their four runs together in the fifth. John Hubble walked the first two batters in the inning, and then was tagged for a run-scoring single by Tom Jarrand. Coach Bill Lovingood then brought on Dean. Carter Hill bunted back to Dean, who threw the ball into right field scoring one run, and the third run of the inning scored when Harold Wells's throw from right bounced away from Lampman. Jack Hines singled to center for the fourth and final run, and then Dean slammed the door.

The Tar Babies rallied in the sixth for the go-ahead runs. Jerry Joyner singled, Randy Prindle walked, and Danny Talbott got an infield hit to load the bases. After one out, Mickey Lienau bounced a single off Barrett's glove into left center, scoring Joyner and Prindle, and moving Talbott around to third. Lawson Baker scored Talbott with a long fly to left.

Carolina added an insurance run for Dean in the eighth thanks to a nap taken by catcher Butch Hughes. Prindle popped up right above the plate, and Hughes wandered around, only to let the ball drop foul. Prindle then walked. Talbott singled inside the third base bag, sending Prindle to score.

The Heels will meet Louisburg, the only team to beat Coach Lovingood's team this year, at Louisburg Saturday.

Mrs. Kennedy To Attend At Kenan

Kennedy Library Service May 17

By HUGH STEVENS

UNC students will play a large part in the huge memorial service for John F. Kennedy set for Kenan Stadium on Sunday, May 17.

The service, which will feature a tribute by Billy Graham and a message from Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, is expected to attract thousands of North Carolinians at $10 per person. The proceeds will be donated to the Kennedy Library in Massachusetts.

The state has pledged more than $230,000 for the library, but leaders of the project are hoping for a much higher figure, perhaps as much as $500,000.

Ray Farris, former football star and Senior Class president at Carolina, is leading the ticket sale campaign on campus.

"Every state has undertaken some project designed to honor the late President," Farris said, "but ours is by far the most ambitious. Mrs. Kennedy has called this her favorite project."

Counties Have Quotas

Farris said that county chairmen have been appointed throughout the state, and every county has a quota based on population, retail sales, and distance from Chapel Hill.

"We hope to have the stadium filled for this service," he said. "A color movie will be made and sent to the library."

"This University was the first to award President Kennedy an honorary degree, and one of the few at which he made an address," Farris continued. "We hope to sell a number of tickets to dorms, fraternities, and similar groups on campus in order that the students will be well represented at the service."

Farris announced the following student appointments to handle campus ticket sales: Cris Waterman, women's residence halls and sororities; Pete Range, men's residence halls; Grant Wheeler, fraternities; and Subir Roy, special sales in Y-Court.

"The majority of the undergraduate population will be contacted by these people," he said. "Graduates, faculty members and others can purchase tickets at Y-Court."

Fraternity Sales Urged

Fraternities, sorities, and other groups will be urged to purchase two or three tickets each and select members to represent them at the service, Farris indicated.

A list of all contributors to the fund will be given to Mrs. Kennedy and the library.

All ticket purchasers will be eligible to bring a child under 15 with them free of charge.

Appearing on the program with Dr. Graham and Mrs. Kennedy will be Governor Terry Sanford and Secretary of Commerce Luther Hodges.

Hugh Morton of Wilmington is chairman for the state drive. Dr. William C. Friday, University president, is a member of the state committee, along with a number of other state figures.

The members of the committee, in a recent press release, expressed their desire for the service to be a "living memorial" to Mr. Kennedy, and thus of greater significance than the renaming of a bridge or structure, or some similar project.

Spearman Issues Statement

Bob Spearman, student body president, yesterday issued a statement urging all UNC students to participate in this tribute to "a great American."

"It was in Kenan Stadium only a year and a half ago that President Kennedy made a major address and received an honorary degree from our University," he said. "It is particularly appropriate that he be honored on our campus this spring by the people of North Carolina."

Attacks Prayer Ban

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Roman Catholic Bishop Fulton J. Sheen today criticized the Supreme Court ruling on prayer in schools, saying the decision should be a responsibility of Congress.

In testimony before the House Judiciary Committee, Sheen said the theory that the use of prayers was an effort to eliminate the separation of church and state was a "myth." Neither the Catholic, nor the Protestant churches in the United States want an established religion, Sheen said.

Other congressional news.

Pay Raise: The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee today approved a new $512 million federal pay bill. But the bill called for pay raises of $7,500 for congressman rather than $10,008 as proposed earlier. The bill would also provide salary hikes for workers in the three branches of government, including postal workers.

L. J. Phipps Named To Local Recorder's Court Judgeship

L. J. Phipps, former Orange County representative to the N. C. General Assembly, was named by the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen yesterday to the judgeship of Chapel Hill Recorder's Court.

Phipps will serve out the final year in a two-year term of Judge William Stewart, who resigned recently in order to devote more time to his law practice.

Stewart left the elective post after serving for 13 years.

Phipps is currently State Commander of the American Legion, and served as judge of the Orange County Recorder's Court in Hillsboro for 17 years.

The names of Phipps and local attorney Robert Cooper were submitted to the full Board of Aldermen by a special three-man committee. The Board deadlocked 3-3 on the decision, and Mayor Sandy McClamroch cast the deciding vote in Phipp's favor.

The special committee had originally considered all available attorneys in the area. They pared the list down on the basis of experience and interest in the position.

The Recorder's Court has two weekly sessions, one of which deals only with traffic violations. The other hears minor criminal and civil cases, including trespassing and similar misdemeanors. All persons arrested in recent civil rights protests appeared first before the Recorder's Court.

See You At Library On Saturday Night!

The Undergraduate Library will continue to stay open on Saturday nights after a successful three week experiment.

The hours have now been extended until midnight every night of the week, including Sunday.

The experiment began as a project of the University Party Campus Action Board to see if a significant number of students would use the Undergraduate Library and Newspaper Room on Saturday night.

It started April 11 after being delayed one week by a temporary staffing problem.

"This many people in the library on Saturday nights surprised us," said Undergraduate Librarian William A. Pease.

The number of students "certainly jolts us to seriously consider very long opening hours for our (new) undergraduate building," he said.

The average number of people in the two rooms over the last three Saturdays has been 72 at 9 p.m. and 38 at 11 p.m.

"It seems to us, this is a clear mandate to keep the rooms (UL and Newspaper Room) open on Saturday nights," said Pease.

SP Says Caucus First

The Student Party floorleader will be required to call for any proposed bills in caucus, it was ruled Wednesday night at the Student Party's first meeting since spring elections.

Reaction among party members over the method in which the controversial referendum bill was introduced in legislature caused the action. The bill had not been discussed in caucus, and a large number of SP legislators were unaware that it was to be introduced.

The referendum bill, which would direct the Elections Board to conduct a campus-wide opinion vote on the controversial boycott issue, was a campaign issue during the spring elections. The University Party attempted to pass a similar bill in the final session before elections, but could not get enough votes to suspend the rules and get it passed.

Paul Dickson was reelected party chairman, and Larry Ford was again named vice-chairman. Other officers were Ann Belcher, secretary; Dan Stoddard, treasurer; and John Brennan, sergeant-at-arms. All were unopposed.

Elected to vacant seats on the SP Advisory Board were Juan Carvajel, Dave Rendleman and Jim Johnson, who defeated Suzy Sterling, Steve Hockfield and Alvin Tyndall. All were elected for one-year terms.

Arthur Hays gave the legislative report, and Ford the treasurer's report in the absence of Jeff Davis, former SP treasurer.

Friday On Education

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

When you want to talk about growing tobacco, you find a tobacco farmer. When you want to talk about education, you go to Bill Friday.

As president of the three-fold Consolidated University of North Carolina, Bill Friday serves as one of the State's foremost authorities on education.

In reviewing his past six years as head of the University, Friday said "the effectiveness of the teacher is still most important in education.

"It is the teacher who instills drive in the student and opens the students' minds to the knowledge and appreciation of the world around him."

Friday said more is being required of prospective college students today simply because of the world we live in.

"Today the single most important factor in gaining admittance to a college or university is the student's high school record. This is the controlling factor for admission.

"I would say that continued determination is very important for success both in high school and in college."

Friday listed two major issues confronting the University today —maintenance of a high-caliber faculty and more opportunities for post-high school work.

"To maintain a qualified faculty, we must be able to pay them a sufficient salary," Friday commented.

"The Legislature has given us money to increase faculty salaries, and this process must continue."

Friday said that UNC must always remain in a competitive position in the procurement of qualified faculty members.

"The reputation of the University really turns on the faculty and the quality of the staff," Friday declared.

Through the years, he said, UNC has managed to build a strong faculty and today, "we are managing to hold our own."

As a possible solution to the problems of post-high school facilities, Friday cites "the important role that community colleges are playing.

"It is true that North Carolina was late in getting this program under way," Friday said, "but now there is a good response to the program coming in. Cities like Gastonia, Mooresville and Leaksville have done a wonderful job in setting up plans for a college.

Friday said community colleges would provide one or two years of college preparatory work, all of which can be taken in the students' home environment.

Here again, Friday stressed the importance of being able to hire quality instructors and emphasized the necessity of high faculty salaries.

"However, with these six or eight Community Colleges, we have to figure out where these students are going to go if they decide to transfer after two years," Friday said.

"Many of them will want to go beyond their Sophomore year, and the question is, 'Where will they go?' "

Other questions will come up, Friday said. Should entrance exams be devised for the transfer student? How much responsibility should the state supported institution take in finding room for these students?

"These are all very real and pressing problems," Friday said. "We must try to solve them with great speed.

"I hope the University can keep its doors open to every resident of North Carolina who can qualify for admission. But that will depend on the availability of adequate housing as well as the availability of faculty members to teach them.

Another thorny issue that bothers the UNC president is the Speaker-Ban Statute which bars anyone who is a Communist or who has taken the Fifth Amendment or who advocates the violent overthrow of the government from speaking on any state supported institutions.

"The University intention is that we be free to communicate with scientists, engineers, doctors, scholars and others from all areas," Friday says in reference to the controversial law. "We would like for them to come here to debate, and to discuss new ideas, inventions and thoughts.

"We are not afraid of people coming here from anywhere in the world to see what we have accomplished through free enterprise, the arts and through service.

"The University does not desire to have speakers on campus who would advocate the overthrow of the State or National government. But when it comes to new ideas, we must have the privilege of meeting with the scientists, farmers and scholars from around the world.

"As we change, we must examine the status quo. I think the people believe in the right to express themselves, and we must not let discussion creep over to question a man's integrity or motivation. There must always be a give and take of ideas."

The Bill Friday Story Part II

Eight Students To Participate As State Interns

Accepting Gov. Terry Sanford's challenge "to take a more active role in the governmental affairs of the state," eight UNC students will participate in the 1964 North Carolina Summer Internship Program in State Government.

Bringing fresh ideas and a capacity for hard work to their assignments in state agencies, the eight from UNC will be joined by 16 other college students. All participants must have completed at least two years of college and are either attending North Carolina schools or are North Carolina residents studying at out-of-state institutions.

UNC students going to Raleigh this summer for an 11-week internship in state government include: Vance Barron, Jr., junior, Chapel Hill; Linda Cogdill, senior, Asheville; Robert Lee Griffin, junior, New London; Harold Martin Lancaster, junior, Goldsboro; Michael Henry Lawler, senior, Chapel Hill; Elmer Oettinger, III, senior, Chapel Hill; Robert Worthington Spearman, junior, Chapel Hill; and Hugh Stevens, Jr., junior, Burlington.

The program, now in its second year, is designed not only to appeal to students who may be interested in state government as a career, but also to those who, while planning to become businessmen, teachers or members of professions, "desire to participate fully in the political and civic life of the state." It is hoped that this program will help "develop the quality of leadership which will be demanded if North Carolina is to forge ahead."

The interns completed extensive applications as well as interviews with the six-member Selections Committee at the Institute of Government before receiving letters of appointment from Gov. Sanford.

Specific assignment of interns to positions with the various state departments will be announced this month. During April each intern was interviewed by five or more of the participating agencies.

The Internship Program is financed by the cooperating agencies and coordinated by the office of the Governor. After one week of orientation in N. C. history and government, the interns will begin earning $75 a week for their work on special governmental research projects and/or as administrative assistants. Assignments will begin June 15 and continue through August 21.

Performed At Jubilee

Who And What Are The Sinfonians??

By DAVID PRATHER

Direct from an appearance, as the cliche goes, at Graham Memorial during Jubilee weekend, are the Sinfonians.

Who and what are they?

The Sinfonians, named for the Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia musical fraternity, are a 15-piece jazz orchestra, for those of you who weren't among the 150 catching their Sunday night Petite Musicale performance.

The membership is composed of Carolina collegiates: graduates and undergraduates, Phi Mu Alpha members and non-members. There are seven North Carolina residents in the group and the others range from Vancouver, British Columbia to Miami, Florida.

The group has been around for a long time, but the Jubilee concert was their first appearance at a campus function this year. Last year the group was the private industry of Sto Fox, now graduated.

The group reassembled this year and became connected with the fraternity, which in turn gave them a grant to buy new equipment. In reorganizing the band, they hoped to achieve a jazz sound similar to the Duke Ambassadors.

Keith McClelland, the pianist, is also the musical director of the group. He, a sophomore, and Errol Gay, a graduate student, do most of the original arrangements for the group.

McClelland got the part in the Jubilee program for the band when he found that the Petite Musicale had an open date.

"We wanted the part for two reasons," McClelland said. "We felt we had an organization equal to or better than the Ambassadors, and we thought there should be a Carolina group participating in Jubilee.

"Now that we are affiliated with the fraternity, we feel that many of the problems of runing such a large band will be alleviated and that we will be more capable of participating in campus projects.

"As for future work," McClelland said, "we are assured of a part in next year's Petite Musicale. We also want a part in the Fine Arts Festival next spring and more UNC engagements next year."

Friday—A Tar Heel Through & Through

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

In 1937, Bill Friday graduated from Dallas High School, and prepared to enter college the following fall.

"I entered Wake Forest College in the fall of '37 on a $50 scholarship," Friday said. "I would not have been able to have attended college if I had not received this scholarship."

In 1938, Friday transferred to North Carolina State to study textile engineering. He was one of N. C. State's most distinguished graduates in the class of 1941.

While at State, Friday was president of the 1941 senior class, president of the N. C. Federation of Student Government and a member of the Golden Chain.

While Friday was attending school at N. C. State, he met his future wife, Ida Willa Howell of Lumberton who was attending school a few miles down the road at Meredith. They were married in 1942 and have three daughters.

Between his student careers at N. C. State and the UNC Law School, Friday spent four years from May, 1942 through April, 1946, at the Naval Ammunition Depot, Portsmouth, Va. as a lieutenant.

Friday returned to North Carolina in 1946, and entered Law School at Chapel Hill that same year. Here again, the Gaston County native showed his worth. He was president of the UNC Law School Association, and was a member of the Golden Fleece.

Friday received his law degree in June, 1948, and passed the North Carolina Bar in August of the same year.

In 1948, Friday began "a most enjoyable association with a great university." Friday served three years as assistant dean of students at UNC. In 1951, he was appointed assistant to President Gordon Gray and in 1955 he acquired the title of Secretary of the Consolidated University.

When Gray resigned in 1955 he was succeeded by the Provost, Harris Purks; and when Purks also resigned to become director of the State Board of Higher Education, Friday, on March 1, 1956, became Acting President of UNC.

On Oct. 26, 1956, William Clyde Friday was elected President of the three-fold University, and on May 8, 1957, at 36 years of age, he was inaugurated.

The Wavering Prince And The Minstrels

A FABLE OF OUR TIMES

Once upon a time, in the far-out land of Wake, there lived a little prince named Moody the Wavering. He was a peer under King Clarence of Rockingham, who ruled the land of Wake as well as most of the surrounding area.

Moody the Wavering was constantly badgered by his province administrators, who always wanted to know if it would be acceptable for some alien to come to their province and speak, sing, educate or visit the serfs.

For the domain of King Clarence was ruled by a law which said that no aliens could speak to the serfs of any province. The King had decreed this law because he did not want the gullible serfs to have a chance to hear evil things. He called it "protecting them from themselves."

So it came to pass that the province leaders of Greenville asked Prince Moody the Wavering about a group of alien minstrels who were passing through his area and wanted to perform for the serfs. Prince Moody tried in vain to locate the King but could not find him, so he was forced to make a decision by himself.

"Let them perform", he decreed, and the minstrels performed. Prince Ralph was very proud, as he had done something on his own.

He was so proud, in fact, that he also said the minstrels could talk to the serfs.

We do not want other aliens to speak, he added, "because we have the ruling that strikes at active subversion and solicitation" of recruits into the alien movement.

The Prince did not mention the time he and King Clarence had denied admittance to the alien Sir Petrov of Redland, even though he was only a scientist.

But that did not matter, because the minstrels sang and danced and talked with the serfs of the province of Greenville, and everyone lived happily ever after, except perhaps Prince Moody when King Clarence returned home.

MORAL: Vaudeville beats education any day, especially when it can be backed up by the law.

That Nasty Old U.S. Does It Again

It was a petition signed by 87 young men of draft age who proclaimed they would refuse to participate in any war in South Viet Nam because it "is for the suppression of the Vietnamese struggle for national independence, and we see no justification for our involvement."

The other side of the page had a story from the New York Times telling about the 87—where they were from and exactly what they stood for. Among the names was Phillip A. Luce, who is under Federal indictment for taking part in the trip to Cuba last summer. Several more suspicious names were present.

Of course, we don't think that the people of Viet Nam who are having their freedom suppressed by the nasty old United States would particularly want these young lions.

They would much rather have them on the other side.

So would we.

One Agreement, But They'll Need More

The major gubernatorial candidates have finally agreed on a date for the Great Debate. Hooray.

Now they can't figure out what format to use. Someone suggested following the Kennedy-Nixon debates of 1960, but they were reminded that those weren't debates at all. Then they made the mistake of trying to agree on something, and this soon proved to be impossible.

So they must turn the whole thing over to the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters.

I. Beverly Lake's campaign manager, Allen Bailey, wanted the program to follow the normal debate pattern — opening statement, rebuttals and so forth. Mike Silver, a Moore supporter, said that this was a bad idea because it had never been tried for political procedures. And the idea that the 1960 debates weren't really debates bothered him.

So Nat Townsend, L. Richardson Preyer's campaign manager, suggested they turn it over to a neutral group to set the format.

The only problem with this is that if one of the candidates does poorly in the debate he will immediately attack the Broadcasters Association as being secretly behind the candidate who did best.

And whenever they ever get around to having the debate, or whatever it is, we will be subjected to an hour of more roads, more pay and less communists.

And then they will hit the trail again with promise of more roads, more pay and less communists, and the people of the state will be left to their thoughts.

Republican thoughts, probably.

Frat Image Is Improving

The Sigma Chi Derby of the past week brings to mind a healthy image of the fraternity system, and as everyone knows this is not its most widely known face.

The riotous stunts were remarkably free of the vulgarity which one usually expects at campus spectaculars, but the crowd loved it anyway. Even the limbo contest, with flocks of straining groundlings as close as the judges would permit, prompted few objectionable comments. It proved to be a pleasant afternoon.

But what was really proved was the ability of a fraternity to act responsibly. No doubt the troubles of the "Beat Dook" Parade and the Minataurs had something to do with the decision to clean up the Derby, and the Sigma has heeded the warnings well. They presented a well-planned afternoon of lively events and lovely contestants.

Maybe this is indicative of a new attitude in the fraternity system. Of late, the once-dormant IFC has become interested in governing itself without the stimulus of the Faculty and Administration. It has set up its own system of regulations for inactive members, and it appears that a workable solution has been obtained for the problem of scholarship in fraternities.

There is now an IFC Court which actually functions; moreover, it has assumed jurisdiction over individuals as well as houses—a perplexing task for an organization with strong internal ties of friendship. The court members still lack judicial experience and temperament, but sensible decisions have been reached in the early cases.

Finally, Ned Martin, president of the IFC has taken steps to eliminate some of the more offensive aspects of pledge training. Unfortunately the patrols and warnings came too late in the year to alter a great deal of the illegal activity, some of which is unknowingly done since nobody bothers to read the rules. Even if one does bother to do so, he will recognize the need for revision in the curious blend of specifics and generalities which are now prohibited.

All shortcomings considered, it is apparent that the leadership of the fraternity system is aware of its powers and obligations. Transferring this awareness to individual house members is another matter, however, for communication hierachy and the rank and file is haphazard.

And maintaining the present initiative will be difficult in the face of the crazy stunts which seem to occur every other weekend.

Wellman, System Criticized

Dresden Review Too Emotional

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Assuming that Wade Wellman, in his review of "the Destruction of Dresden," is doing justice to the work, it seems that he is confusing opinion with fact. His statement that, the fact that this book is in its third edition in England tsetifies "to the general acceptance by the British public of Irving's message," neglects the fact that mere public acceptance does not attest to the veracity of the opinions expressed in this work.

First, Mr. Wellman states that a Russian offensive commenced in January, 1945. This in itself should explain the reason for the bombing of Dresden. If Mr. Wellman would have seen fit to indulge in some preliminary historical research, he would have discovered some very interesting facts concerning the cities of Dresden and Chemnitz during this period. These cities did, in fact, possess a great deal of "military value." For Dresden and Chemnitz were military and civilian communication centers for the direction of the German war effort in the East. Both cities were railroad junctions; both possessed marshaling yards; and both were along the direct route for the movement of troops from the western front to the east.

Secondly, if Mr. Wellman cares to read some very interesting documents in the British Air Ministry, he will discover that the Allies also wished, through these bombings, to maintain, if not to increase, the chaotic situation among the civilian population, in order to further burden the already hard-pressed German military.

Besides, it is very difficult to distinguish soldiers from civilians, or to hit a tank or any other military vehicle without doing damage to the people surrounding it, be they soldiers or civilians. It is true that the allied fighter pilots were very skilled in their profession, but it is too much to ask of them the skill of a sniper.

Thirdly, as Mr. Wellman rightly states, "Observers saw that the war would be over by summertime" of 1945 due to the vise-like drive by the Allies. Then is it not understandable that the bombing of this strategic area would insure the war's culmination by this time, if not earlier?

Let us face facts. "War its hell." The civilian populations were not innocent bystanders, by any stretch of the imagination, in the conflagration of World War II, whether German, British, American or Russian. They were a part, a very vital part, in the maintenance and furthering of the war efforts.

Mr. Wellman, in viewing this period of the war from the safety of the distance of time and from the ease of an armchair, permits his emotions to speak louder than the objective analysis of the situation. It is very easy for one in peacetime, and especially fashionable in our time, to criticize the actions and necessities of war without any clear understanding of the highly charged emotional state of the participants.

And finally, we must commend Mr. Wellman on his extremely humanistic and highly emotional style of reviewing. It in itself reveals a possible ulterior motive other than the mere writing of a book review. Truly the story of Dresden "will be told again many times over" and "the full truth about these last months of World War II" will "gradually emerge." We are all vitally interested in the truth. But truth will never be served by such emotional undertakings.

Micksup Came Much Too Late

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

The only fault of Micky Blackwell's "Micksup" column in the 25th April Daily Tar Heel is also the collective fault of anyone associated with Student Government and the Honor Council; it should have been written much sooner. The Honor Council deals with acts which are dishonorable. Why then, is every possible step taken to assure that the public honor of some otherwise dishonorable person remains spotless? That rehabilitation will come more easily for these people is a weak defense. Although this may be true in some cases it is not true in all, and as such this policy is completely unfair to the student body, which has a right to know the names of the dishonorables in their midst.

The obvious solution to the problem of having one's name appear as a dishonorable is to be at all times honorable.

Those people who value their honor will see that it is kept clean. The person convicted by the Honor Council certainly has no grounds for requesting that his name be withheld. No one is less entitled to an honorable name than an Honor System violator. The very nature of his conviction ought to carry a greater stigma than a conviction in criminal or civil court.

Perhaps it would be wise to withhold the names of all except those who are convicted. It is certainly true that the Honor Council moves in a mysterious way its wonders to perform, and, most unfortunately, a great many people do not consider people innocent until proven guilty; withholding the means of people who are tried and releasing to the press the names only of those convicted ought to be a sufficient safeguard for the innocents and simultaneously allow our student society the knowledge it so rightly deserves.

Johnson Is Battling Wallace In Maryland And Indiana

By ROBERT S. ALLEN and PAUL SCOTT

Washington — President Johnson is personally intervening in the presidential primaries in Indiana and Maryland to help "favorite son" candidates oppose Alabama Gov. George Wallace.

Faced wiah tre possible loss of one of these "swing states" to the segregationist leader, the President has assigned Clifton Carter, his top political trouble-shooter, to direct and coordinate administration help for Senator Daniel Brewster, D-Md., and Indiana Gov. Matthew Welch.

Mr. Carter already has assisted Senator Brewster and Governor Welch—both running "scared"—in raising $100,000 for their campaigns to assure pro-Johnson delegates to the Democratic National Convention in Atlantic City.

On directions from the President, Mr. Carter loaned two staff members of the Democratic National Committee to Senator Brewster as speech writers and advance publicity men to bolster his sagging campaign.

Mr. Carter arranged to have Governor Welch and Senator Brewster individually photographed with President Johnson in the White House for their use on TV during the closing days of the Indiana (May 5) and Maryland (May 19) primaries.

The President's unannounced decision to intervene in these hotly contested primaries was made after polls by the Democratic National Committee showed that Gov. Wallace will make a stronger showing in both states than he did in Wisconsin, where he unexpectedly polled 33 per cent of the vote.

The poll in Maryland startled President Johnson by indicating that Governor Wallace is running "neck and neck" with Senator Brewster and has a possible chance to win the primary unless the present trend is reversed.

Senator Brewster, with an original campaign budget of $75,000, is now seeking $50,000 for additional TV appearances during the final weeks. Governor Wallace, who always seems to have plenty of money, purchased $50,000 worth of prime TV time for the closing of his campaign. A Wallace aide estimates the governor will spend $250,000 in Maryland and another $150,000 in Indiana.

The side show — The Brewster-Wallace battle in Maryland is being complicated by a ding-dong battle for the Democratic senatorial nomination between former U. S. Attorney Joseph D. Tydings, son of the late Senator Millard Tydings, and Louis Goldstein, state comptroller since 1959.

In his campaign, Comptroller Goldstein is giving Senator Brewster his full support at the private request of President Johnson; while Mr. Tydings, being backed by Attorney General Robert Kennedy, is taking a neutral stand and staying completely out of the Brewster-Wallace contest.

The irony of Mr. Tydings' campaign is that it is encouraging some of his campaigners to make deals with Wallace supporters for votes at the same time that Tydings is traveling about the state "mimicking" the speech manner of the late President Kennedy. From watching old Kennedy movies, Mr .Tydings not only tries to talk like the late President, but uses a jabbing finger to drive home key passages of his speeches. He also changed his hair style to have a lock cover his forehead like President Kennedy.

Big-money campaign — Despite these outward emulations of the late President, Mr. Tydings has shown no indication that he plans to follow White House hints to openly support Senator Brewster against Governor Wallace, who is opposing the Kennedy civil rights program.

Money also seems to be no serious objects in young Tydings' campaign. His stepgrandmother is Marjorie Merriweather Post May, one of the richest women in the world. She helped the former federal attorney purchase $150,000 in prime TV time for the campaign.

In addition, Mr. Tydings has purchased a $40,000 full-page advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post for statewide distribution, and a $32,000 five-page spread in a Baltimore newspaper. One of Mr. Tydings' speech writers is being paid more than $20,000. Opponent Goldstein has budgeted less than $100,000 for his campaign.

Political Fallout — Supporters of Defense Secretary Robert McNamara are planning stories that President Johnson is considering making Mr. McNamara his vice presidential nominee and offering the Defense Department post to to Attorney General Robert Kennedy. The latter's interest in "counter-insurgency" warfare is being cited as one of Mr. Kennedy's qualifications for the McNamara post . . . Senator Barry Goldwater is so enthused about his chances of winning at San Francisco in July that he is organizing a special train to bring his supporters to the Republican convention from the East Coast. The train is to leave Washington, D. C., on July 10, and make stops in Pittsburgh, Akron, Chicago, Kansas City and other cities to be named later. The senator's two sons, Mike and Barry Jr., will be aboard, as well as other celebrities. Goldwater backers are also planning a national rally at Madison Square Garden May 12 to step up the tempo of his campaign . . . Bill Haddad, former associate director of the Peace Corps, is circulating a folder of photographs showing his close association with the late President Kennedy, in his bid for the Democratic congressional nomination from the 9th District in New York.

LBJ Must Fill His Role

Harry Truman once called the white House "that great White Jail" on Pennsylvania Ave. More than a jail, living in the White House is like existence under a microscope with millions of eyes trying to detect the slightest movement.

Every position of responsibility has an image and a role to be played along with it. The Marine drill instructor at Paris Island has to give an image of being the meanest man on the face of the earth. He has to play the role.

Perhaps, the position that demands role-playing more than any other in the world is the office that is held by Lyndon Johnson. For 32 years Johnson has more or less acted and done as he pleased. As a page, an administrative assistant, a Congressman and a senator, Lyndon Johnson did not have to answer to anyone for his actions.

He is a gregarious, like all Texans, and is what you could call a folksy individual. However, the time has come for the President to realize that he can no longer act in the manner that he pleases. His balcony bantering with newsmen, his hosting of a foreign dignitary in blue jeans, as he did when Chancellor Erhard visited the country, is not in the image of how the President of the United States should act.

Now the President has made himself the object of a continuing amount of press criticism as a result of his "hot rodding" around the Texas countryside and discussing such esoteric subjects as the "sex life of bulls," and in the company of reporters, both male and female.

Driving at speeds up to 90 miles an hour the President showed complete disregard for his responsibility to the American people.

When Johnson assumed the office of the Presidency he lost all of his rights to a private life. Like all other men in public office he is open to public comment on his public acts as well as his private that reflect on his public responsibilities. Since Nov. 22, 1963 Johnson's life has belonged to us, the people of the United States.

The President did not have the right to put his life in jeopardy as he did in Texas with his driving antics . . . let alone driving to endanger the lives of those who were riding with him.

If he does not care for his own life and safety, he should remember that he has a responsibility to the country. This country cannot afford to have its governmental process upset again because of the personal whims of the man in the White House.

The entire world looks to the United States for leadership, at least we like to think they do, and when the President of the United States acts in such an immature and reckless manner, the image abroad is tarnished.

Johnson is neither a John Kennedy nor a Dwight Eisenhower. Both Kennedy and Eisenhower had an innate dignity that reflected in their every act. They had this by virtue of background and training. Johnson is not the product of an aristocratic background nor has he had thirty years of military life which is rigid and disciplined. When Johnson acts in the manner that he has since taking office, he does so because he has not adequately made the transition from the rough and tumble life of the Texas politician to the more dignified life of leadership and diplomacy. The President has got to learn to play the role and create an acceptable image. It is in fashion these days . . . and should be more so for the President of the United States.

While at UNC Maddox will major in radio, teleision and motion pictures, working toward a career in one of these areas.

The Jefferson Standard Broadcasting Foundation scholarship, valued at $625 annually for four years, is awarded each year to an outstanding North Carolina high school or preparatory school student planning a career in broadcasting.

Nixon Rejects Briefing By LBJ

DAYTON, Ohio (UPI) — Former Vice President Richard M. Nixon Thursday rejected President Johnson's invitation to be briefed on classified material.

Nixon, here for a Republican fund raising dinner tonight, told newsmen he believes Johnson's invitation to brief all possible presidential candidates "is a bad precedent."

He said it would widely disseminate secret information.

"It should not be so," he said. "Briefing should be offered when the GOP nominee is chosen. It is a mistake to make the offer at this time."

CR Demonstration Scheduled

A Civil rights demonstration sponsored by a group of non-affiliated UNC students will be held here Saturday at 1:30 p.m., a spokesman announced yesterday.

The march will leave St. Joseph's Methodist Church on West Rosemary Street and follow a route through Chapel Hill. There will be no arrests.

"Saturday's march is specifically aimed at a protest of the harsh and unjust sentences handed down last week by Judge Mallard of Orange County Superior Court," Bill Hicks, a member of the group said.

"I have never been arrested," Hicks continued, "but it seems to me that the actions of Judge Mallard cannot be allowed to stand without some sort of protest. Without this protest, the whole problem of segregation in Chapel Hill, which Judge Mallard's sentences have in no way alleviated, may well be forgotten by white students.

"We as students have an obligation to keep Chapel Hill from forgetting that many of its citizens do not have even a few of the opportunities that we, as college students, take completely for granted," Hicks said.

Students which are currently on probation by the University will not be allowed to participate in the demonstration.

Roosevelt Raceway Sets New Record

WESTBURY, N. Y. (UPI)—Four men, one a millionaire, drove up to Roosevelt Raceway in a big, black late-model Cadillac Thursday and cashed in a mutuel ticket for $132,232.80.

This represented the payoff on Tuesday night's twin double at the raceway, the largest ever for a $2 ticket in horse racing history. The winners had remained silent until Thursday.

Seven men, all from New Jersey, held shares on the lucky ticket but only four made an appearance at the track. They were William Bresnahan, 31, John E. Saker Jr., 30, Joseph Saker, 35, and Michael Sherman, 51.

Two of the other members of the syndicate are fathers of two of the winners and did not make the trip to Roosevelt Thursday because they have bad hearts. The seventh member did not want to go and refused to be identified.

Bresnahan, the two Sakers, who are brothers, and Sherman all are from Freehold, N. J. The Sakers and Bresnahan are among the owners of Fair Acres Farm in Freehold and all own trotting horses.

Asked why they waited two days to cash in their ticket, Joseph Saker explained: "We knew the Internal Revenue Service would be on it and we wanted to make doubly sure everything was proper.

"Uncle Sam is our eighth partner and he'll be the biggest one."

Morris Landis, who is accountant for the Fair Acres Farm, estimated that the taxes would amount to about $70,080.

"THE LESSON"

Mother! I'd rather do it myself!

"I'd rather ask Ardis Veltman to the Freshman Follies. She's got wit and sparkle. (She also has 3 fraternity pins, and her own Thunderbird.)

Most of all, she likes Schlitz. When we're at the Elbow Room with the gang, we order Schlitz together. Then we all sing the school song.

I always sing: 'I love thee, Ardis Veltman.'

She smiles over her glass of Schlitz.

I know she hears me."

Speight's Long Single Nips Deacons In Ninth

By LARRY TARLETON

Jim Speight's long bases-loaded single in the bottom of the ninth gave the Tar Heels a 4-3 victory over second place Wake Forest yesterday.

Speight's hit went over the head of Deacon centerfielder Bill Scripture and bounced under the wire fence. It would have been a ground rule double, but could only be ruled a single since the winning run had already scored.

The lead had see-sawed back and forth until Speight collected his third hit of the game.

Speight, Ken Willard, Scripture and Mike Budd all collected homers in the game. Speight's blast came in the bottom of the third. With a two-strike count, Jim caught a Lou Howard fastball and rode it over the centerfield fence to bring the Tar Heels into a tie for the first time.

Willard connected for the distance in the sixth to give the Tar Heels their first lead of the game. Ken blasted another Howard pitch over leftfielder Budd's head to put the Heels ahead 3-2.

Scripture's and Budd's homers were both of the "freak" variety. Batting against lefty Jerry Davis in the fourth, Scripture slashed a ball over first baseman Bill Brown's head which barely landed fair. The ball hopped into foul territory and rolled into the bushes near Lenior Hall. Ken Boykin couldn't find the ball and Scripture circled the bases.

In the ninth, Budd came up with the Deacs trailing 3-2 and lifted a Bill Haywood pitch high toward rightfield. Boykin came in and Dick Prindle went back. Suddenly Boykin realized that the ball was going over his head. He slipped as he turned, and the ball hit the top of the mesh fence and fell over to tie the score.

Jerry Davis started for the Tar Heels and got off to a rocky start. Davis went four plus innings before Bill Haywood came in to finish up and get credit for his seventh win without a loss. Lou Howard went eight and one-third innings for the Deacons before being relieved by Bobby Biddix who came in and pitched to Speight in the ninth.

The Demon Deacons threatened in the first when Dave Miller reached first on a swinging bunt down the third-base line. Walt Noell then laid down a bunt single, but Miller was thrown out trying to go to third. Davis got out of the inning by getting the stocky Scripture to ground into a Speight-to-Prindle-to-Brown double play.

The Deacons scored in the third when, with one out, Jim Israel singled to center. Miller then grounded to Brown at first. Brown threw to second to force Israel, but Speight's throw to first was wild and got by Davis sending Miller to second. When Miller attempted to steal third, catcher John Shaw threw the ball into left field and Miller came home for the first run of the game.

After Speight and Scripture had homered to make the score 2-1, the Heels tied it up in the fifth when Gary Black walked to open the inning. Black scored on Haywood's long double to center. Homers by Budd and Willard then set the stage for Speight's blast in the ninth. Howard had walked three men to load the bases when Speight came up.

Lacrosse A Sport For Best Of Men

By LARRY TARLETON

Long before Columbus ventured onto the shores of the West Indies, Indians in Canada were playing a brutal sport which was supposed to determine who were the best warriors.

As many as 800 to 1,000 warriors participated in these fun and games which sometimes lasted for several days. The warriors had large sticks which they were supposed to use to move a little ball from one end of the field to another, but more often than not, they used the sticks on their oppponents instead of the ball. Many warriors were killed in this so-called sport which was supposed to be a test of the warriors virility.

The old Iroquois tribes of the Northeast used the sport to train their members for war. Finally the French trappers picked the game up from the Indians and called it "baggataway."

This was the early beginnings of lacrosse, "the fastest game alive." Today lacrosse, which in French means, "the stick," is the national sport of Canada and is played in colleges and universities all along the Eastern seaboard.

Now Has Varsity Status

This year marks the birth of lacrosse as a varsity sport at Carolina. The game had been played here for several years, but always as a club, not as a varsity team. Last year plans were made to make it a varsity sport. One of the first steps was the appointment of Conrad J. Steele as Coach.

Steele, who strikes you as a smaller blond-headed Steve Reeves, willingly took the job although he knew about as much about lacrosse as I do about Einstein's theory. He had never played before, and in fact, had seen it played very little.

The team did surprisingly well last year, and at the end of the year, it was announced that the sport would be given varsity status.

This year was designated as a building year, and several good freshmen prospects arrived on campus.

Today at three o'clock all students can get a look at some of these freshmen and varsity players when they meet each other on the Navy Field. Coach Dick Purdy has done an outstanding job with the freshmen who have won two games from Duke by scores of 15-6 and 14-5.

The varsity has been less fortunate. They have dropped all five of their games, some of them by large margins. But this can be explained by the caliber of teams they have played. Three teams, Maryland, Virginia and Washington, are in the nation's top ten.

We Have A Long Way To Go

"It has been a building, learning year for us," said Steele, "We've had some bad breaks. All our games except one has been played in the rain. Considering that this is our first year as a varsity sport, I think our performance has been satisfactory, but we still have a long way to go."

Of the 22 men on the Carolina squad, 15 of them had never played lacrosse before they came to Chapel Hill. Of the seven who had played previously, Jeff Parker, the leading attack man, and Harvey Stanley, the goalie, have been outstanding.

Stanley, a sophomore from Baltimore, Md., has been nominated for All-American. Today, Coach Steele will have Stanley playing with the freshmen so the varsity will have to work harder for their goals.

"I think lacrosse can be a success here," said Steele, "It'll take a while, but if we keep playing the caliber of teams we've played this year, we will improve. Good competition breeds good competition."

Who knows, someday the Wingate trophy, given annually to the best lacrosse team in the nation, may find a place in the trophy case at Woollen Gym.

And between innings of the baseball game today, why don't you wander down to Navy Field. You may want to stay.

Linksmen Top UVa, Tucker Leads With 70

North Carolina's golf team ran its season record to 11-3 with a 15½-5½ win over Virginia on Finley yesterday.

Skip Tucker fired a 70 for the day's top score to lead the Tar Heels. Tommy Arnold, Ed Hoopes, Bill Stephenson, John Baldwin, and George Reims all won over their opponents.

Dave Jones and Jay Yoder won for Virginia, but their teammates couldn't follow suit.

Next Wednesday's match with Duke has been moved ahead to Tuesday, so that the team can leave after class Wednesday for Columbia, S. C., where they will compete in the 36-hole medal play competition for the ACC championships, starting Friday.

Results:

Dave Jones (UVa) over Les Fleischer, 2½-½; Jay Yoder (UVa) over Harvey Hill, 2-1; Tommy Arnold (UNC) over Jon Verity, 3-0; Skip Tucker over Pete Hudson, 3-0; Ed Hoopes (UNC) over Carig Hemphill, 2½-1½; Bill Stephenson (UNC) over Henry Warner, 3-0; John Baldwin (UNC) over John Osberne, 2½-½; George Reims (UNC) over Bill Linsford, 2½-½.

Fiends Top Fouls For Tennis Title

By BILL LEE

In intramural action Wednesday, the Physics Fiends downed the Physics Fouls to win the graduate division tennis finals. The action saw Dick Sanders over Don Thaxton, 6-2, 6-1, and Pat Rickey over Jack Griffin, 6-0, 6-1. In the doubles match, Mac Rugheimer and Tom Lewis defeated Jim Donaghy and Jim Kusmess, 6-2, 6-2, for the championship.

In other tennis action, the Parker Paupers beat the Alexander Poohbahs in the dorm division semi-finals. Rick Fahrer beat John Hoyle, 6-3, while Jack Writer topped Dave Hollander, 6-4. The doubles match was won by Don Jackson and Larry Dean by forfeit.

Also in the dorm semis, the Navy Admirals topped the Winston Blues, 2-1. Henry Tonn took Winston's only win 7-5 over Gene Carpening The Navy sewed up the victory however, on Dick Newcomb's victory over Don Long, 6-3, and the doubles win of Francis Christopher and Bill Poteat.

In softball competition, Kappa Psi defeated ATO, 17-9, in the Fraternity White Division semi-finals. Kappa Psi picked up nine big runs in the second inning on three walks, three ATO errors, and singles by John King, Jimmy Matthews, Frank Freeman, and Bill Orander.

In Fraternity Blue semis, Chi Psi topped Delta Upsilon, 15-7, Mal Dunlevie knocked a homer for Chi Psi, while Bud Thompson did the same for the DU's. Delta Sigma Pi topped SAE in other semi-final action led by George Lockhart with a home run and two doubles.

Al Hamilton, softball manager for the Big Four Day reported today that he can add one or two more to his squad which is looking good overall but has been plagued by rained-out practices. Practices will be held today at 4:15. Also, more bait-casters and target shooters are needed for rod and gun competition. All managers express optimism for the field day.

UNC Faces Terps In Crucial Game

By PETE GAMMONS

Coach Rabb's league-leading warriors, their confidence bolstered by the big win over Wake Forest, meet the Maryland Terripens this afternoon at three with either Bill Danneman or Spencer Willard facing John Klvac.

Although the Tar Heels won the first game 7-0 last week the Terps certainly aren't going to roll over and play dead. Going into this week they had five regulars hitting over .300, including the ACC's top hitter.

Centerfielder Jimmy Pitt, who had three of the four hits off Jerry Davis at College Park last week, is the league's top hitter at .571. Catcher Bill Seidling and second baseman Tom Richy are trailing Pitt with marks of .412 and .378 respectvely. Dave Johnson (rf) and Doug Kreissig (ss) are also over .300.

John Klvac probably will get the nod as the starting pitcher. Thus far he has a 2-2 record with a 3.90 earned run average. He has won his last two starts over NC State and Duke, and was sharp against UNC last year. Other possibilities are Jerry Vezendy (1-1,4:10) and Jack Lund (1-0,1.80).

Rabb is hoping that either Danneman or Willard can silence the Terps. Danneman hasn't seen too much action this year, but has compiled a 1-0, 1.80 record in the ten innings he has worked. Willard has been a bit disappointing, but then last year it was in the stretch that he was so effective. The stretch run starts now. (hint!).

Virginia will be at Emerson Saturday, and then the team goes on the road to Wake Forest, Clemson, and South Carolina in another crucial week.

Editor's Notebook

With HUGH STEVENS

Your Student Legislature is currently embroiled in a situation so muddled, so confused and so controversial that it would take a veritable genius to unwind it.

In recent weeks, three different attempts have been made to present a bill acceptable to the body which would set up a campus-wide special referendum on the student boycott and other aspects of the local civil rights squabble.

Historically, the situation looks like this:

1. The first bill was introduced by George Ingram (UP) at one of the last sessions of the 36th Assembly, only a few days before the recent Spring elections. It met with miserable defeat, and went on to become the only really heated issue of the entire campaign.

Suspension Called

When an attempt was made to introduce Ingram's bill under a suspension of the rules, the Student Party leaders immediately cried "foul." They saw the move as a political trick, designed to enhance the fortunes of the UP slate in the elections, since they realized that a referendum would have wide-spread appeal among the members of the student body. The UP said it was just an attempt to give the students an opportunity to have their say on this vital issue (though only one or two UP members actually knew about the bill beforehand).

To a certain extent, the UP members were probably truthful, since the students have been practically begging for a referendum. But the fact remains that such a move would have been beneficial to the UP campaign, assuming it could have gotten through Legislature. (In retrospect, it appears that this was a pretty poor assumption for any responsible politician to make. What's more, it later turned out that the Elections Board could not have gotten the question on the ballot anyway—though in light of later developments this hardly seems noteworthy.)

At any rate, the SP mustered the necessary votes to prevent the bill from reaching the floor, and the issue became a hot one. Charges and countercharges were filed by members of both parties, with the UP claiming that the SP had let partisanship deprive the students of a referendum, and the SP charging that the whole thing was a political stunt in the first place.

Elections Change Picture

Only a few days afterward, however, the elections were held, sending in a new legislature for its 37th Assembly. The SP again had dominance over the UP (by one seat) but the balance of power was left in the hands of five Independents who nailed down seats for the first time. Begin round two.

2. At the very first session of the new Assembly, almost before the new legislators had settled in their chairs, Bob Wilson (SP) introduced the second referendum bill. It fell among his fellow legislators like a bomb. Everybody in the room seemed surprised except Wilson and Arthur Hays. There was good reason—nobody else knew the bill was going to be introduced.

Nothing was done, really, because the bill simply fell into the usual legislative committee process. But many legislators on both sides of the aisle left in a huff, accusing the SP of doing exactly what the UP had done earlier.

In addition, many of those who saw the bill after its introduction were unable to decide exactly what it said. The questions proposed for the referendum were couched in such vague terms that we saw fit to make editorial comment about them (DTH, April 25th). But whatever the reasons which they gave for their opposition, it was obvious that many were opposed to the bill. Begin round three.

Wilson's Bill Introduced

3. Among those unhappy with the Wilson bill were a group of legislators — UP, SP, and Independent—who had decided to introduce a bipartisan measure at the first regular meeting of the new Assembly this week. They felt that the best way to end the controversy over partisanship was to gather up a large group of people from both parties, introduce a compromise bill and attempt to kill Wilson's of-

3rd VOTE BILL IN SL

By HUGH STEVENS

The introduction of a third bill calling for a campus-wide referendum on the controversial student boycott highlighted the first full session of Student Legislature's 37th Assembly Thursday evening.

The latest bill is a nonpartisan one, introduced by Mal King (UP), Dick Akers (SP), Teddy O'Toole (IND), Jim Brame (SP), John Harmon (UP), and John Froneberger (SP).

The action came on the heels of a bill introduced last week by Bob Wilson (SP). Wilson's bill has been the object of criticism from legislators in both parties who are displeased with its content and the manner in which it was introduced.

No action was taken on Wilson's bill Thursday, as no committee hearings had been held on it. The new legislature committees were appointed Thursday night.

Hearings on both bills will be held by the Ways and Means Committee next Monday at 3 p.m. in Graham Memorial.

The first referendum bill, introduced by George Ingram (UP), was introduced in the old 36th Assembly shortly before spring elections. It failed to gain the floor when Student Party leaders labeled it a "political trick" and mustered the votes necessary to prevent a suspension of the rules.

The sponsors of the latest bill called it "an attempt to clarify the issue and remove the stigma of partisan politics from a vital matter."

Don Carson, Speaker of the legislature, said the introduction of a non-partisan bill is "a big step in getting this issue before the campus.

"The sponsors of this bill include three members of the Student Party, two members of the University Party, and one independent. Their action represents a sincere desire to present this issue to the student body. I believe that all concerned are weary of seeing this issue pulled through the meat grinder of partisan politics," Carson said.

Other Bills Introduced

In addition to the referendum bill, seven other bills were introduced, most of them concerned with financial matters.

Don Wilson (SF) introduced a measure calling for the State Student Legislature Committee to be made a permanent committee of Student Government.

Five legislators were elected to represent the body on other Student Government committees. Jeff Pickett (UP) and Jim Little (SP) were named to the Publications Board. Sandra Burden (SP) and Mal King (UP) will serve on the Consolidated Student Council, and John Froneberger (SP) will be the legislative representative on the Graham Memorial Board of Directors.

The appointment of Mike Chanin as Presidential Assistant to Bob Spearman was approved.

Spearman also submitted the following names for approval as chairmen and co-chairmen of the various SG standing committees:

Campus Affairs — Faryl Sims, Lanny Shuff; Editors' Roundtable—Jeff Davis; Co-op Committee — Lloyd Coley; Communications—Armistead Maupin, Clark Crampton; Orientation Reform—Judy Grape, Roger Davis; National Merit Scholarship—Wyall McCallie, Jim Smith; Student Committee on Honors — Vance Barron, Jane Dallen; Consolidated Student Council—Hugh Stevens; Student Credit Commission —Gordon Shapiro; State Affairs —Al Snead, Hubert Wooten; Residence Hall Improvement — Don Carson; Carolina Forum—George Nicholson, William Schwartz; Fine Arts Festival—Henry Alridge, James Meriweather; Budget—Frank Martin; Student Audit Board—Bill Kirkland.

The new Attorney General is Tim Oliver.

Law Association Names Thornton To Presidency

William Thornton, rising third year Law student from Asheville, was elected president of the UNC Student Bar Association Tuesday, defeating J. Hoyle Stultz Jr. of Draper and Harry S. Cline of Stony Point.

Thornton is a graduate of Washington University of St. Louis, Mo.

Law students voted overwhelmingly in favor of an amendment to the Law Students Association bylaws to change the name of their organization to Student Bar Association.

Other officers elected were Sheldon Fogel, rising third year student from Chapel Hill, vice president; Owen Cook, rising second year student from Fayetteville, secretary; Robert Chandler, rising second year student from Rocky Mount, treasurer; and Barry Osmun, rising second year student from Glen Ridge, N. J., chief justice of the SBA Honor Court.

Elected Honor Court justices from the second year class were: Charles P. Brown of Albemarle and H. L. (Al) Allison of Asheville; third year: Mark Hudson of Wilson and Rueben Moore of Atkinson.

Prof. Eleanor M. Horadam will address the UNC Mathematics Colloquium Thursday, May 7. at 4 p.m. in 383 Phillips.

She will speak on "Clifford Matrices, Groups and Geometry."

The following Thursday, Prof. Alwyn F. Horadam will address the Colloquium.

A 3:30 reception in 277 Phillips will proceed each meeting.

Overflights Bring New Cuban Crisis

From DTH Wire Reports

A new Cuban crisis flared Friday.

Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev and Cuban Premier Fidel Castro, in almost simultaneous statements, warned the United States that further U. S. reconnaissance flights over Cuba could bring world disaster.

The U. S. State and Defense Departments restated President Johnson's insistence that flights by U2 and other such planes would continue for the sake of the United States' security. Johnson said recently that Cuban armed efforts to halt the flights would have "serious consequences."

Khrushchev, speaking at the traditional May Day banquet in the Kremlin, said the continued flights could have disastrous consequences and denied there had been any understanding with the United States that they would continue.

"We have always said and declare once again that a threat to Cuba, the continuation of the violation of her sovereignty, the intrusion into Cuba's air space, can have disastrous consequences," Khrushchev said.

Castro made his threat in a

George Finishes Second Edition Of BA Yearbook

By HENRY POOLE

Claude S. George, associate dean of the School of Business Administration here, has completed the second edition of his widely used textbook, "Management in Industry."

Professor George, an authority on management and time-motion studies, is a former member of the management staff of Western Electric Company in Burlington, serving from 1946 to 1950, when he returned to UNC for advanced study which led to his Ph.D. degree in business. Dr. George is a native of Reidsville.

"Management in Industry" presents a thorough and up-to-date revision of one of the best accepted books in the field. Critics declare that Dr. George's book "is a well-organized and concisely written text covering the most important aspects of manufacturing enterprise."

Among features in the revised edition are completely new chapters on decision-making and the use of electronic computers in busines management.

Dr. George also used the case method in giving full and explanatory comments on facts of managing a business. The text also includes study questions—and answers—as guides to teachers and students.

Prof. George joined the faculty at Chapel Hill in 1954. He Received his B.S. and M.S. degrees at Chapel Hill and his Ph.D. at the State University of Iowa. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Beta Gamma Sigma, Sigma Iota Epsilon, the Order of Artus, the Academy of Management, and the American Institute of Management.

HEAD CHEERLEADER — Dick Goldman, a sophomore from Richmond, Va., has been named Head Cheerleader for next year. He announced yesterday that cheerleading tryouts would be held Monday at 4 p.m. in Kenan Stadium.

Royster Backs CR Bill In Journalism Lecture

By DENNIS SANDERS
And DAVID PRATHER

The central problem in America today, according to Vermont C. Royster, is that the people have not reconciled the the role of the government in preserving liberty, order and security.

"Americans are groping to reconcile each of these governmental duties without giving up either one," the editor of the Wall Street Journal and alumnus of UNC told an audience of 200 in an 8 p.m. Howell Hall address Thursday.

Royster, a Raleigh native, also predicted that the national civil rights bill will pass in one of the next two sessions of congress.

Discounting reports of growing northern white dissatisfaction with the bill, Royster said, "The sense of the House, the sense of the entire country is that we should have a civil rights bill.

The editor said it would be an "illusion" for anyone to interpret as a genuine opposition to the bill "the white backlash" resulting from northern civil rights protests.

Speaking on "The Political Problems of Mid-Century America," Royster said that before World War II, the government's function was "liberty and the maintenance of order." The atomic bomb, though, took America from "behind its ocean moat and military security became a major responsibility."

Royster also said the government and the people have to choose which of the three needs is most paramount.

"The American people are undecided. We have rejected simple solutions, such as whether to bomb Russia or give in to her wants. Either decison," he added, "would be incompatible with one of the national needs."

This undecideness has led to "fuzziness in our foreign policy and conflict between the welfare state and individual security."

"The country is marking time," Royster said, "unwilling to make up its mind one way or the other."

He cited government spending as an example: "Large government spending would bring inflation or high taxes, yet the public is not willing to support anyone who would cut the budget so much that it would do away with governmental services."

How long can this stalemate exist?

"The record of history is against the maintenance of this balance," Royster said. "Our problem is can we make them compatible, and, if not, which will we choose?"

Following his address, Royster took part in an informal discussion with journalism students in the Howell Hall journalism lounge. He outlined the policies and commented on the format of the Wall Street Journal.

Royster was the second speaker in a series of journalism lectures this year.

MEN'S COUNCIL SEATS VACANT

Bob Spearman, Student Body President, announced yesterday that he will hold interviews for vacancies on the Men's Council and Women's Honor Council on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of next week in the Student Government office.

The Men's Council vacancies are in Men's District I—all of the area outside of the corporate limits of Chapel Hill and Carrboro; Men's District VIII —Winston, Connor, Joyner, and Alexander; and Men's District X—Ehringhaus.

The vacancy on the Women's Council is in Women's District V, Cobb Dormitory.

All of these seats are for a six month term except for Cobb and Men's District I which are one year seats.

Spearman urged all students who have had experience with the judicial branches of Student Government or who have taken the Honor System quiz, to interview for these positions.

But, Spearman added, "Although experience is desired, it is not a prerequisite. Ability, willingness and desire are the basic qualities that Council members should have.

"I hope that students interested in the Councils will take this opportunity to interview for the positions."

MOSQUITOES

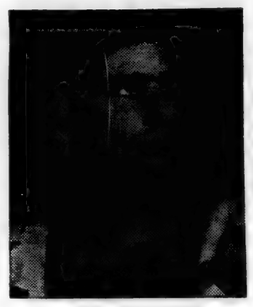
Dr. Phillip S. Corbet of the Entomology Research Institute of the Canada Department of Agriculture, will address the University Zoology Seminar Tuesday on "Aspects of the Ecology of Tropical Culicine Mosquitoes." The meeting will be held at 4:45 p.m. in room 105 Wilson Hall. Coffee will be served at 4:30.

Basketballers Are Featured In Playmakers Final Show



TOM BENENSON

Zarro Joins Galanti And Cunningham For 'Braggart Soldier'

Roman slaves, courtesans, and soldiers will invade the Forest Theatre for four evenings this week as the Carolina Playmakers present Plautus' wild and racy farce comedy, "The Braggart Soldier" May 7 through 10.

Director Kai Jurgenson has been putting his cast (which includes UNC basketball stars Billy Galantai, and Rick Zarro as slaves) through their paces for the last two weeks in preparation for the May 7 "Student Night" opening at the Forest Theatre. The three performances on May 8, 9, and 10 will play to the general public.

Graham Pollock of Gatesville, last seen as the unforgettable Indian in the Playmakers' production of "The Fantasticks," has been cast in the title role of Pyrgopolynices, a Roman soldier of questionable valor who has an ego as long as his name. Also appearing in major roles are Lise Knox of Chapel Hill and Margaret Cathell of Lexington as Philocomasium and Acroteleutium, two Roman courtesans.

With the exception of the playwright, who lived a few centuries too early to qualify, "The Braggart Soldier" promises to be a one hundred per cent UNC effort. The translation being used is that of Dr. Albert I. Suskin, chairman o the Department of Classics at the University, and the cast is made up entirely of UNC students.

"Student Night" tickets for "The Braggart Soldier" will go on sale on Tuesday of next week in Y-Court, and the sale will continue through Thursday, if tickets are still available. These general admission tickets, for UNC students and dates only, may be purchased for one dollar (half price) for the Thursday performance only.

Jane Craige Gray Award To Be Given

The Jane Craige Gray award tea honoring the outstanding Junior girl will be given Sunday afternoon by Kappa Delta Sorority. The winner will be announced at the tea.

The award based on outstanding scholarship, leadership, and service to the University, is given in memory of Jane Craige Gray the wife of Gordon Gray who was President of the University from 1950-1955.

Mrs. Gray who died in the summer of 1953 was a Kappa Delta. Last year the award was given to Miss Beverly Haynes who this year received the outstanding Senior award.

Vito And Slocum To Perform Here

The University Symphony Orchestra will feature Edward Vito, harpist, and conductor Earl Slocum, flutist, at two concerts in Hill Hall during National Music Week.

Vito will appear as a soloist in the concert Tuesday and join the North Carolina String Quartet and members of the Music Department in a Chamber Music Concert on Wednesday.

He has long been associated with the NBC Symphony and Arturo Toscanini. All of the harp solos on their recordings are his.

He has appeared in recitals at Town Hall in New York and with leading orchestras of America. He has made numerous recordings with Columbia, Decca, MGM, Cook, Period and others.

First Lecture By Hill Set For Sunday Night

Prof. Samuel Hill, Jr., chairman of the Dept. of Religion, will deliver the first of two lectures on "Southern Protestantism in Transition" Sunday in Gerrard Hall at 8 p.m.

Hill is a recent recipient of the Tanner Award for excellence in undergraduate teaching and will spend next year at Harvard doing study and research in American intellectual history.

WITHDRAWS RESIGNATION AS PHARMACY SCHOOL DEAN

Dr. Edward A. Brecht, Jr., has withdrawn his resignation and will continue as dean of the School of Pharmacy.

Chancellor William Aycock announced that Dean Brecht's decision to withdraw his resignation has been accepted and "we are looking forward to the continued progress of the School of Pharmacy under his leadership."

Dean Brecht announced last month that he would resign his deanship to return to full-time teaching and research in the pharmacy school. His resignation was pending final acceptance by University trustees.

Rights Demonstration Set For Today

The second Civil Rights demonstrations since the close of Orange County Superior Court will take place today at 1:30 p.m.

Last week's march attracted only 35 participants, and it was expected that there would be a larger turnout today. The march will begin at St. Joseph's Methodist Church on West Rosemary Street.

"Today's march is specifically aimed at a protest at the harsh and unjust sentences handed down by Judge Raymond Mallard in Orange County Superior Court last week", commented Bill Hicks, a member of the group organizing the march. The group is not affiliated with any organization.

"I have never been arrested", Hicks continued, "but it seems to me that the actions of Judge Mallard cannot be allowed to stand without some sort of protest.

"Without this protest, the whole problem of segregation in Chapel Hill, which Judge Mallard's sentences have in no way alleviated, may well be forgotten by white students.

"We as students have an obligation to keep Chapel Hill from forgetting that many of its citizens do not have even a few of the opportunities that we, as college students, take completely for granted."

Students currently on probation from Judge Mallard's court cannot participate in the demonstration, and this will hamper efforts at a large turnout, according to several persons who have been affiliated with the local integration movement.

Mallard last week gave suspended sentences to many local residents on the condition that they not participate nor associate with demonstrations or demonstrators.

In addition, he sentenced 12 members of the local movement to jail terms ranging from four months to a full year. Those sentenced included Pat Cusick, field secretary for the Student Peace Union; John Dunne, chairman of the Chapel Hill Freedom Committee; J. V. Henry, field secretary for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee; and Rosemary Ezra.

Who's On Second? Who Knows?

Lost in the hulabaloo surrounding the gubernatorial race is one which is every bit as interesting — the campaign for Lieutenant Governor.

Three candidates are battling it out, and doing a pretty fair job considering that they don't get any space in the newspaper.

For the state papers have become enamored with the actions of L. Richardson Preyer, Dan K. Moore and I. Beverly Lake that they have failed to tell us much about those who seek the state's second highest post.

The three are Clifton Blue, an Aberdeen newspaper publisher who was Speaker of the House in the 1963 General Assembly; Robert Scott, former Master of the North Carolina Grange and son of ex-governor W. Kerr Scott; and John Jordan, one of Raleigh's representatives to the General Assembly for many years and a prominent state lawyer.

All have good qualifications for the job, though in the case of Scott it is more his drive and determination than his experience—he is only 34.

We have known Blue for several years, and he produces an excellent newspaper (The Sandhills "Citizen") as well as a weekly newspaper column, which is distributed statewide. He did a capable job in the General Assembly, and he is currently leading all the polls.

We have also known Jordan for several years. Last year he introduced a bill in the General Assembly which had a rider calling for civil court trials of all students who had violated the honor code at a state school.

We prodded him a bit at the time, and it was taken out. We think that he did not realize the full implication of this rider, and he acted in good faith when he learned exactly what it would do to the student—double jeopardy and all that.

As we have said, the three are qualified. Now the trick is to find out, despite the efforts of the state press, exactly what the three stand for. We know that Scott is against the Gag Law, which is nice but it's not really enough to go on.

Blue did an excellent job in a tough post, but that's not enough. And Jordan, we are sure, is more than competent.

Perhaps the state press will calm down enough to tell us about these three. For all we know, they may be discussing issues, which is certainly more than Preyer, Moore and Lake are doing.

But there's always the chance that if we ever do find out something about the candidates for the state's second post, it will be that they only stand for more roads, more pay and less communists.

The Lone Ranger Rides North

The Cheraw Chronicle

Gov. Wallace has chosen his primary targets with skill.

First, there was Wisconsin, home of the late Senator Joe McCarthy, whose liberal image has been blurred in recent years.

Second, there is Indiana, northernmost outpost of the Ku Klux Klan during that organization's heyday of the 1920's. Indiana was a border state during the Civil War and many parts still have a southern accent.

Third, there is Maryland, another border state which has been the scene of bitter racial strife in recent months. Cambridge and parts of the Eastern Shore may even give the Alabama governor a majority of the votes.

There are several factors weighing in Wallace's favor. First, there is the large "copperhead" vote which has always existed in the North. Second, there is the band wagon psychology. Third, there is the inept quality of opposition to his candidacy.

To the extent that Wallace's campaign unmasks the hypocrisy on civil rights up North, it may be a healthy thing. It takes the issue out of its Southern regional setting and places it squarely in the national arena where it belongs.

The Democrats needn't grow too depressed over the Wisconsin showing. That state went against Kennedy in 1960 by a wide margin. So did Indiana. While Wallace's 240,000 votes looks impressive, the fact remains that 75 percent of the people voted against him.

When a liberal politician runs for national office, he has always gotten a better percentage vote than that in Alabama. If the governor of Wisconsin had run on a civil rights platform in Alabama, he probably would, given the colored vote, won at least 25 percent. So one can read in election results almost whatever he wants to see. Since Goldwater apparently has lost his lead in the race for the GOP nomination, and since the convention apparently will settle either for Ambassador Lodge or Richard Nixon, and since both of these men stand just as four-square for civil rights as does Lyndon Johnson, there really isn't much place for the Southern extremist and his copperhead counterpart in the North to go.

— The Referendum Bills And The People Behind Them —

fering on the basis of its wording. So they did just that at Thursday night's session.

There was just one complication left to develop. Arthur Hays, one of the authors of Wilson's bill, decided after talking with a number of students that the wording on the bill was unclear. So he changed it, so much that it hardly seems to be the same bill at all.

Now, then, after three rounds the situation is this—two bills are currently in the committee process, and will be discussed in hearings next week. Out of all the complications, someone must extract a bill which is worded in fair and clear terms, yet will be passed in the legislature by those who just might be interested in slanting the question in one direction or another. And still hanging over the whole thing is the question of partisanship.

There seems to have been absolutely no excuse for our ever arriving at this snafu in the first place. The referendum issue is a vital one, for most of the students are clamoring for an opportunity to be heard on the civil rights question. But the efforts of many of our less astute legislators have so clouded the question that it has really gotten out of the realm of a simple referendum. The parties seem to feel that their entire futures rest on this lone issue.

Hays' Rewording

For instance, the rewording of Wilson's bill by Hays is more than it seems. He has taken a carefully (and poorly) worded set of questions and revamped them so that they will meet the approval of most students. Has Mr. Hays compromised himself? Probably not—but for some reason he seems to be doing everything in his power that his conscience will allow to prevent the bipartisan bill from being passed.

Knowing Mr. Hays, I am certain that his primary aim is to send the best possible referendum to the students, but that aim seems to be qualified by the restriction that the bill must carry his own, and his party's, label. Such a restriction seems to be supported by one significant fact: even though he knew that his original bill was a poor one and that a number of legislators wanted to introduce a bipartisan bill, he declined to work with them to obtain a good bill, and revamped his own instead.

Hays, of course, has an answer. He steadfastly clings to the statement that he cannot support any bipartisan bills, of any kind, for any purpose—unless the entire legislature is threatened by an outside force. He says that bipartisanship should come in the voting process—in the acceptance by individual legislators of the best proposals, whatever their source.

As far as these thoughts go, I must agree to a certain extent with Mr. Hays and his logic. However, there are occasions when they become almost completely unrealistic—and this is one of them. This referendum issue has gone too far, too fast. The student bodyw is rapidly losing faith in the ability of the Legislature to do anything constructive about a referendum, and the time has come for action —preferably through bipartisan action.

It really doesn't matter, say the students, who introduces the bill, so long as one is passed. The questions are probably going to be amended to read as the majority of legislators want them to read anyway, and any attempts to hold up a good bill for personal reasons will consist of placing personal opinions above the good of the students. I sincerely doubt that a matter so complicated and so controversial could be successfully exploited by either party—certainly it should not be. And now that each party has fallen over its own feet while attempting to kick the ball away from the other, we would humbly suggest that the Legislature try the game as it should be played—as a team sport. Otherwise, there seems to be no way to salvage either a good referendum or the prestige of the body.

Finally, one other aspect of the situation should be mentioned. The talk among certain legislators is now to put the referendum off until next fall, if indeed it is ever held at all. In my opinion, any question postponed that long, and entrusted to the large number of new students who will arrive here next fall uninformed and unconcerned, is better off forgotten.

European Travel Easy And Cheap

By PETER RANGE
DTH Survival Editor

I am continually astounded by the notions most American students have about the cost of travel in Europe. Doubtlessly misled by travel agencies and that gargantua of a world bank, American Express, everyone seems to think they cannot consider a journey to Europe on less than $1500 as a base.

As a rather radical point of departure, let me say I'm planning to return to Europe this summer on $250. This does not include the transatlantic passage.

First of all, transportation; one can travel round-trip to Europe for $300. Either you fly with the Graham Memorial planes ($325) or you book round-trip passage as a first-class passenger on a freighter—average cost: $150 one-way. Accommodations and food are excellent, the trip is quiet, and it takes about ten days. (The place to write is W. J. Browning Co., Royster Building, Norfolk).

So now you know that any talk of $400 or $500 for the transportation is based on ignorance or excess love of luxury.

While in Europe, you can travel and live like most European students for 60 to 80 days on $250. And with that you'd have twice as much as most of them. But I'm allowing for mistakes, one or two gifts and American difficulty in reducing your living standards.

To live on this amount you need to plan for yourself a bread-wine-and-cheese summer. And, to my way of thinking, this is half the reason for a trip to Europe in the first place. If you want a hotel-and-restaurant experience, you can get that in these United States.

Bread-wine-and-cheese means you make your own food all the time or eat the stew served in the youth hostels. I always carry some bread, cheese, sandwich meat, fruit, butter and a bottle of wine (or milk) when traveling and survive rather well on it. Occasionally one must take a good meal in a restaurant to retain ties with a balanced diet.

For your accommodation you should plan to stay in the youth hostels all over Europe. This costs $.25 to $.40 per night and affords you countless contacts with other students of every nationality who are engaged in the European student's favorite summer pastime—travel.

In the hostels you get a double-decker in a huge room with everyone else (boys and girls in separate rooms, of course), use of the big, communal bath rooms (usually no hot water), and the option of supper and breakfast (European) for another $.25. You must have your annual youth hostel membership card ($5) and you'll need a traveler's dearest friend, the International Youth Hostel Handbook ($1), to find all the countless hostels.

For transportation, hitchhiking or cycling are least expensive and as common in Europe as cornbread in the South. This applies, as does everything in this article, equally to girls as well as boys. Girls usually hitchhike with another girl or a boy and, in fact, get rides much faster than a single boy does.

If one has some capital, motor scooters and motorcycles are excellent, slightly dangerous and much fun. I had three during my first sojourn in Europe. A decent, used scooter would run about $150 to $200 and could be resold for almost the same price. New ones are around $300.

Finally, if you are a real capitalist and can buy a car, fine. There are numerous systems for re-selling them to the dealers at the end of the summer.

Most uninteresting of all, in my opinion, is travel by public transportation—mainly, of course, the train. This method would also change my $250 estimate for a summer in Europe. The Eurrail pass runs more than $100 now, I understand.

We American students tend to be so very unresourceful in this matter of travel when compared to our European counterparts! A German friend of mine has traveled southern Europe for a month on $25. I personally hitchhiked about 40,000 kilometers around Europe before investing in my first scooter. We are too used to high standards—motels, restaurants, first-class bathrooms and luxuries the European student would never dream of.

If you can get up the gumption to dive into the summer circuit in Europe as I have described it here, you'll find it one of the most exciting experiences of your life. No other method opens up so many human contacts as this. No other method gives you a closer look at the way Europeans really live and think.

I was invited home countless times for dinner by families who picked me up hitchhiking. I made friendships with students in youth hostels which last still today. And it puts you out of your own in a unique way — a healthy experience for each of us to have before settling down in our bourgeois affluency, begetting a family and resigning ourselves to such respectable things as motels and summer cottages.

Udall Rouses NSA Group

By STU EIZENSTAT

Rep. Morris Udall (D-Ariz.), brother of the Secretary of the Interior and a possible candidate for Barry Goldwater's senatorial seat in 1964, gave a stirring speech on America in the 20th century to the Carolinas-Virginia NSA Convention, April 17-18.

America, he said, is a part of a rapidly changing world whose watchwords are revolution and nationalism. The 20th century is witnessing a revolution in science; in population, with the world's population increasing by 40 million a year; in politics, with 73 new nations in the United Nations since its inception; and in economy, with two of the three billion people in the world living in poverty, their average incomes around $100 a year. Although the Communists are exploiting these revolutions, these sweeping changes and the problems they create would exist with or without Communism.

Nationalism is the second key to an understanding of the forces shaping the world. The "revolution of rising expectations" in the underdeveloped countries has brought along with it an increased sense of nationhood. Furthermore, with the decreased fear of a nuclear war, small nations are finding they have a greater freedom of movement in international affairs and thus refuse to obey the mandates of the superpowers or of their former colonial masters.

Domestically, Udall felt two issues were of overriding importance to the United States. The first of these is the assurance that all citizens be given the civil rights to which they are entitled, so that there would be no second class human beings in our affluent society.

The second great problem is the increasingly complex problem of automation, jobs and poverty. He said that in one year one million jobs would be eliminated by automation with the one and a half million more who will be seeking work next year, the economy must thus provide two and a half million jobs just to stay even.

Udall then castigated the myths which existed in 20th century America. The first was the myth that the United States was going down the road to socialism. He stated that there was no major nation in the world with less socialism, i.e., government control of production and distribution, than the United States.

The next myth he attacked was the view that the Federal Government was debt-ridden and over-powerful. Although there has been an increase of 30 million people in the United States since 1952, all needing government services, there are actually fewer Federal employees today than in 1952. The debt per capita in 1946 was $2100 while today it has declined to $1600. The Federal Government is thus not an overly debt-ridden, monolithic, bureacratic monster.

Congressman Udall was most disturbed over the lack of knowledge of democracy which exists. Some 57% of those interview in a high school survey felt the average citizen should remain aloof from "dirty politics," yet democracy needs the best minds in the nation in politics. He was also concerned over the suspicion and fear which existed among those who called such men as Earl Warren or Dwight Eisenhower Communists. He forcefully concluded with a quote from Plato: "The punishment of wise men who refuse to govern is to be governed by unwise men."

YOU LOAD SIXTEEN TONS, WHAT DO YOU GET?
ANOTHER DAY OLDER AN' DEEPER IN DEBT..."

Wallace Has Good Chance In Maryland

By SAMUEL LUBELL

Resentments stirred by the civil rights battle are building up a heavy vote for Alabama's Governor George Wallace in Maryland's presidential primary.

My interviews through much of the state show Governor Wallace is drawing more than a third of the registered Democratic voters, with another 15 to 20 per cent still torn in conflict about which way to go. This would mean that, as of now, a full majority against the segregated governor is not assured.

In Wisconsin the significance of the Wallace vote was obscured by a sizable cross-over of Republicans into the Democratic primary. But in Maryland there is little question of what is at stake. The May 19 primary has been transformed into a virtual referendum on how Democratic voters feel about the Negro and the civil rights struggle.

None of the Wallace supporters with whom I talked looks on him as a serious contender for the presidency. Many declare flatly, "I'd never want a man like that for President," but go on to say, "This is a chance to protest against Negroes pushing too far" or, "Maybe a vote for Wallace will cool those Negroes down."

Continued Negro demonstrations, it seems clear, are likely to alienate the more moderate-minded white voters and strengthen Governor Wallace's showing. In every community I visited some voters echoed the comment of a 58-year-old seaman who said, "Right now I'd go against Wallace. But if the Negroes keep making trouble, I'll give him my vote. This has to stop."

Perhaps no state in the Union could provide a more sensitive testing ground for popular feeling on integration. A microcosm of the national electorate, Maryland has its "big city vote" in Baltimore; growing suburbs outside of Baltimore and Washington, D. C., and a group of "little Dixie" counties on the Eastern Shore of the Chesapeake Bay, which are Southern in tradition and racial customs.

The reaction along the Eastern Shore suggests that President Johnson is in for much more political trouble in the South than is generally assumed. Two of every three persons interviewed in Salisbury, Cambridge and Easton were going for Governor Wallace. Of these Wallace supporters one in five threatened to bolt the Democratic party in November "if Johnson keeps pushing the Niggers on us."

Many Eastern Shore voters profanely reject the thought of any integration. Others have been upset by the rioting and demonstrations that have rocked the Eastern Shore since last summer. In Cambridge, where martial law had to be declared, a retired farmer pointed across the street and said, "That store had its window smashed when the colored people rioted. We have to stand fast against them."

One Cambridge merchant, though, shook his head ruefully. "They've invited both Wallace and Malcolm X to come in here and talk," he said. "We're just tearing this community apart."

In contrast, opposition to Governor Wallace is quite strong in the suburbs, with their concentrations of better-educated, white-collar employes. Typical comments run, "Wallace is a nut" or, "I'd never vote for a man who defies the law" or, "Integration is coming. The sooner to accept it the better."

It is in Baltimore, with more than a third of the state's total Democratic registration, that pro and anti-Wallace feelings seem most evenly matched. Among Negroes, who make up 35 per cent of the city's population, an intensive drive to register new voters is under way.

In white-collar neighborhoods Wallace is pulling roughly one in five Democratic voters; in worker neighborhoods his support mounts to two and three out of every five voters.

A steelworker was so divided in his emotions that he changed his position even while we talked. He began the interview by saying, "I don't want a Negro as my neighbor. I'd give Wallace my vote to stop that."

But as he talked he added, "I wouldn't want to hurt President Johnson. Negroes have a tough time of it. Whenever we have real dirty work at the mill we yell for them.

"We ought to ease up on them," he concluded. "But we're not ready to go as far as we'll have to."

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Weekend Dates Should Go Dutch

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

I asked a student Wednesday night when he got up to leave the table, why he wasn't eating. He said he had no money, that the Jubilee weekend cost him $25 to take a blind date out to five meals. I said it was ridiculous to invite a blind date for the whole weekend and to assume the expense of her meals. One evening, either Friday or Saturday, is all that he should have obligated himself for. If she wanted to stay on longer it should have been at her own expense and on her own.

Boys don't have any more money to spend at college than girls have, and there should be a general understanding that when they go out together to eat, the meals are "Dutch."

Girls are just as eager to get together for social affairs as the boys are. They could get together more often if the girls paid their own way, and this would work to the advantage of both sexes.

This student said that his date was all right, but he got bored to death spending the whole weekend with her. So what should have been a gala weekend for him, and no doubt for many other boys, left a bitter taste in his mouth.

It would seem to me that the next goal for the counselors and student body is to work out a plan that would relieve the male of carrying the whole burden of social occasions that he is not able to pay for.

Great strides have been made in promoting the general social life at the University. Let's start to work on the problem of getting more girls for these functions, and a sensible "pay your own way" set up for the girls.

Conscientious Objection Noted

Editor, The Daily Tar Heels:

We would like to bring attention to the ridiculous ad which appeared on page 3 of the April 22nd edition. The Chapel Hill Freedom Committee's plea for money to pay the fines of the civil rights demonstrators is an insult to the intelligence of the students of this university. These demonstrators, convicted of criminal violation against the laws of our fair state, have the nerve and audacity to ask for our aid in paying their debt to society. Did not these "dedicated" crusaders realize the stupidity of their actions? Their deliberate and malicious violation of the law has already brought inconvenience and animosity to this community and the nation. Now it is their turn to suffer. Fully aware of the criminal nature of their actions, they foolishly proceeded to break the law. We did not take part in their crime and we should not bear the burden of their punishment. An editorial in the April 22nd issue issues a plea for assistance in retrieving the "honor" of these convicted students. What honor? An honorable man pays his own debts.

Reds Hit Overflights

belligerent 2-hour and 17-minute speech to a May Day audience. He used the term "gringos"— a contemptuous reference to U. S. citizens—in his speech.

"We have made, are making and will make new efforts to see those flights cease, and cease they must," Castro told his audience. The crowd that stayed to hear Castro's speech at the end of a three-hour military review was a small one, perhaps because of the heat.

If negotiations through international bodies to end the overflights are not successful, "we will repel those aggressions with our weapons," Castro said.

Fight If Invaded

He warned Cubans they must be ready "for a long fight that will never end" if Americans invade and occupy Cuba as an aftermath to armed Cuban actions against U. S. planes.

"If we are attacked they will have to kill us, but fighting," Castro said. "And if they want to kill, we will kill also."

Castro said his position was not based on any Soviet pledge of aid or solidarity "or inter-continental missiles" in any armed showdown with the United States.

He said, he assumed all responsibility for what might happen if and when Cuban anti-aircraft gunners shot down an American plane.

He added, however: "If by shooting down one of those planes we unleash a world conflagration, we shall not be responsible."

Khrushchev flatly denied the Soviet Union had reached an understanding with the United States about U2 flights over Cuba and called the rumors "wicked fabrication."

"We have always said and declare once again that a threat to Cuba, the continuation of the violation of her sovereignty, the intrusions into Cuba's air space, can have disastrous consequences," Khrushchev said.

"This will be a disaster, first and foremost, for those who carry through a policy of provocations and agressions against Cuba."

New Missiles Shown

Khrushchev said such actions could "draw the world into the abyss of another world war and inflict serious harm to the peoples of their countries."

He spoke at the traditional May Day dinner in the Kremlin shortly after the Soviet Union showed new twin ground-to-air missiles and other impressive military hardware in the annual May Day parade in Red Square.

Khrushchev said the parade was a "real confirmation of the tremendous achievements of the Soviet people who are building Communism."

Most of his speech was devoted to praise for Algeria and its visiting President Ahmed Ben Bella, who was May Day guest of honor.

The only other specific international reference in the official version of Khrushchev's speech distributed by the Tass News Agency was to Cuba.

"I would like to say that the U.S.S.R. is fully supporting the five conditions Fidel Castro advanced as slogans safeguarding the independence, security and peace of the Cuban people," Khrushchev said.

No Understanding

One of the five conditions calls for withdrawal of the U. S. Navy from Quantanamo base.

Khrushchev, denying he had reached any understanding with Washington about the overflights said: "Not only has there never been such an understanding, it cannot be. The Soviet Union will never reach an understanding with another state to the detriment of a third country, no matter whether it is big or small."

Kohler Says Flights OK

Two nights ago, U. S. Ambassador Foy D. Kohler told First Deputy Premier Anastas Mikoyan that the United States reserves the right to fly over Cuba to protect American security.

Mikoyan, who went to Havana at time of the October 1962 Cuban crisis, replied that the Kremlin feels the overflights are illegal and a danger to peace. Kohler said later they reached "no meeting of minds" in their conversation at a Japanese reception.

It was not clear what Khrushchev was denying in the portions of his speech released by Tass.

Medina, Dean Highlight Duke 'Law Day' Today

A symposium whose participants will include retired federal Judge Harold R. Medina and an address by Arthur Dean will highlight the Duke University Law School's observance of Law Day this afternoon.

Both Judge Medina and Dean will appear on the program following delegate registration and several social functions yesterday afternoon and evening.

Voted national "Man of the Year" by Associated Press newsmen in 1949, Judge Medina will be among legal figures discussing the topic, "Effective Appellate Advocacy." This will be in the Law School courtroom from 9 a.m. to noon.

Dean, United States representative at the nuclear test ban negotiations, will speak at a banquet in the Durham Civic Center at 7 p.m. He will discuss "Communism in the Western World."

In addition to Judge Medina, four others will participate in the symposium, which will be moderated by Prof. Robert A. Leflar of the University of Arkansas, Leflar formerly served as an Associate Justice of the Arkansas Supreme Court.

The three others are Attorneys William T. Joyner of Raleigh, formerly chairman of both the State Highway Commission and the State Board of Elections; Douglas Arant of Birmingham, Ala., who has served as a special assistant to the United States Attorney General; and James C. Davis of Cleveland, Ohio, formerly General Attorney for the State of Iowa.

Duke law alumni from many states are expected to attend.

MOUNT CARROLL, ILL. (CPS) —"We don't like to discriminate against anybody, but I think a nudist group would just be out of place on our campus," the president of Shimer College said Friday after rejecting an offer from a nudist club to rent the campus for the summer.

Besides, there's no protective shrubbery, President F. J. Mullin added.

The campus "fronts right on two busy highways and I just don't think it would be appropriate," Mullin said. "We're right in town."

Roger Clogher, executive secretary of the Perfect Christian Divine Way, Inc., Holy City, Calif., said the group wanted to rent the campus for seven weeks.

He said nudists from all over the nation would attend the gathering and it would be "somewhat nudesworthy."

Cloger said he read of Mullin's offer, which was given nationwide publicity, in a San Francisco newspaper.

Mullins said he had received inquiries from five educational groups and will pick a tenant in the next week or two.

THE TROUBLE WITH SPORTS SHIRTS IS WHEN YOU WEAR AN ORDINARY TIE WITH ONE YOU LOOK LIKE A GANGSTER

HOWEVER there are times that are a little too dressy for an unadorned throat (as when you're wearing a blazer), and for these the Ascot is finding increasing favor. Women apparently find them madly attractive, and men like their go-to-hell feel once they get around to wearing them. The trick seems to be in tying them; actually, there is nothing to it. All you do is slip the Ascot around your neck, inside the collar, and loop one end over the other below your adam's apple; and loop it twice so it won't slip down your chest after awhile. ★ It just so happens that, foreseeing this demand, we have gone into the Ascot game. You will find a nice selection at your Eagle Ascot store, which is the same store where you buy Eagle Shirts. ★ Not to change the subject, but this magnificent short-sleeve sports shirt at about $9.00 which we have portrayed here is an exclusive Eagle pattern in two-ply cotton oxford, and comes in blue, green, or burgundy stripes alternating with skinnier black ones on an Eagle's Cream ground. ★ We also have a magnificent matching check; let's see if we can describe it: it's something as though we ran transverse stripes in the same colors across this pattern. No, that's a terrible description, you'd better go take a look for yourself. If you don't know where that would be, drop a line to Miss Afflerbach and she'll write right back with the news.

Netmen Smash South Carolina 9-0

By STUART BALL

North Carolina's tennis powerhouse marched through South Carolina much like Sherman marched through Georgia as they rolled to a 9-0 victory on the varsity courts Friday.

Playing without injured Charlie Shaffer Coach Don Skakle's "big three" of George Sokol, O. H. Parrish and Ted Hoehn teamed with Pete Myers, Ken Oettinger and Carl Evans to allow the Gamecocks only five games in the nine matches.

The weather proved more threatening than the opposition as the sophomore-laden South Carolina squad never got started. Hoehn, Myers and Evans blanked their opponents and seemed anxious to get it out of the unseasonably cool weather.

Sokol, oddly enough, was pushed harder than any of the other Tar Heels. His 6-1, 6-1 win over Kay Howard featured the most spirited opposition of the afternoon. Parrish and Oettinger won their matches by identical 6-1, 6-0 scores.

In doubles action the Gamecocks averted complete annihilation by salvaging a game in number three match. Oettinger and Rich Henderson defeated Tom Mann and Mike Strahely 6-0, 6-1. Hoehn and Parrish, and Sokol and Evans won by 6-0, 6-0 margins.

The win pushed the Tar Heel over-all record to 14-2, and 5-1 in the ACC. Maryland and Clemson share the top spot in the conference with perfect 5-0 records.

The most significant factor about the South Carolina match was that it came a day before the showdown contest with Clemson. The Tigers play the Tar Heels here today at 2 p.m. in what is the top ACC match of the season.

"I'm definitely not taking this one lightly," said Coach Skakle after Friday's match. "Clemson has real good balance and I'm sure they'll be up for us."

Skakle said that home-court advantages exist in tennis just as they do in basketball. "The Maryland courts are what beat us at College Park," he said. "They have cement courts there and they were lightning fast. Our boys were just a fraction of a second off the whole afternoon."

The 5-4 Maryland loss April 18 was North Carolina's first in 47 straight ACC contests.

"Tomorrow I'm hoping for good weather and a large turnout. We'll need all the support we can get."

In a Thursday afternoon contest the Tar Heels trampled the N. C. State Wolfpack 9-0.

The South Carolina summary:

Singles—Sokol (UNC) def. Howard 6-1, 6-1; Parrish (UNC) def. Ray Hunter 6-1, 6-0; Hoehn (UNC) def. John Heuer 6-0, 6-0; Myers (UNC) def. Mike Strahley 6-0, 6-0; Oettinger (UNC) def. Tom Mann 6-1, 6-0; Evans (UNC) def. LaMarr Hamilton 6-0, 6-0.

Doubles—Hoehn and Parrish (UNC) def. Hunter and Heuer 6-0, 6-0; Sokol and Evans (UNC) def. Hamilton and Howard 6-0, 6-0; Oettinger and Henderson (UNC) def. Mann and Strahley 6-0, 6-1.

Navy Wins Dorm Net Title, Chi Psis Win In Fraternity

By BILL LEE

The Navy Admirals beat the Alexander Poobahs 3-0 Thursday for the Dormitory Division Tennis Championships. Gene Carpening topped Rick Fahrer, 6-1, 6-0, and Dick Newcomb beat Jack Writer, 6-3, 6-2, in the singles. In the doubles match, Francis Christopher and Bill Poteat won over Bob Liles and Bob Harris, 6-1, 6-0.

In the fraternity White Division Finals, Chi Psi topped Delta Kappa Epsilon, 2-1, with Ruday and Reider picking up singles victories. The doubles match was won by Deke's Hob Brown and Bill Davies.

Chi Psi also took the Fraternity Blue Championship with a 2-0 victory over Delta Upsilon. Steve Painter topped Dennis Morgan, 6-1, 6-1, and David Nash and John Angel defeated Bud Thompson and Dave Howe for the Doubles match and the victory.

After beating the Peacock's "United" team 3-0 in the semifinals, the Old East Primogenitors topped Lambda Chi, 2-1, 2-1, for the all-campus horseshoe championship. Bill Vick defeated Andy Holland of Lambda Chi, 21-23, 21-17, 21-17, to win the singles. Old East lost the first doubles match; Frank Jordan and Frank Orgain bowing to Sam Littlejohn and Dave Simpson, 12-18, 21-11, 23-21. John Curlee and Louis Heeden won over Bill Mittendorf and Marv Henderson, 21-7, 21-18, to sew up Old East's victory.

In the graduate division softball semifinals, the Peacock's "United" team beat the Physics Fiends 7-5, in a game shortened by darkness. The Fiends tied the game up in the top of the seventh, but when the game was called before the inning was completed, the score reverted to the six inning scores. Med School I defeated Law School I by 7-4, to gain the other grad berth.

In other softball action, the AFROTC Golds topped Everett 11-6, benefitted by 7 hits and 8 walks.

Jim Speight To The Rescue Again

Haywood Wins 8th On Single In Ninth

By LARRY TARLETON

Another day, same story.

Maryland learned the hard way that lightning can strike twice in the same place. The Tar Heels beat the Terrapins yesterday 4-3, with the winning run scoring in the ninth inning under the same circumstances that it scored against Wake Forest Thursday.

Jim Speight again singled with the gases loaded to bring in the winning run. But the coincidence was that there were the same baserunners yesterday as Thursday. And Bill Haywood was once again the winning pitcher in relief picking up his eighth win without a defeat. In winning the game, Haywood set an ACC record for the most consecutive wins in a season without a defeat. The Tar Heels are now 9-0 in the conference.

Dick Fleming led off the ninth the same way he did Thursday—with a walk. Continuing the script, Gary Black then sacrificed him to second. Haywood was once again given an intentional base on balls, but here was where the script was changed slightly. Terp pitcher Chirs Sole uncoked a wild pitch to move the runners to second and third. Maryland coach Jack Jackson then continued his revision of the script by ordering Prindle walked intentionally (Dickie had only walked Thursday). Speight then slashed a line single to right, and although it wasn't as far as Thursday's it counted just as much.

The Tar Heels used five pitchers against the Terps. Bill Dannemann started, but ran into trouble early. He walked leadoff batter Tom Bichy in the first inning. Bichy was sacrificed to second by Bob Isaacson then Dickie Prindle bobbled a grounder by Jim Pitt, who entered the game batting .571, but went 1 for 5. Catcher Bill Seidling then rifled a single to center to score Bichy. After getting another out, Dannemann gave up a single to Jim Ryan to score the second run. He then struck out Stan Graves to end the inning.

The Tar Heels scored early in the first, second and third innings. In the first Prindle led off with a single to right. After Speight struck out, Boykin advanced Prindle to second with a grounder to short then Ken Willard cracked a single to center to score Dickie.

John Shaw led off the second with a walk, and was forced at second by Dickie Fleming. Gary Black struck out then Spence Willard, who ha dcome on for Dannemann in the top of the inning, lined a triple to right-center scoring Fleming.

The Heels scored in the third without the benefit of a hit. Jim Speight led off with a high fly to right which right-fielder Ryan dropped for a two-base error. Boykin's goundout advanced Speight to third, and he scored on Ken Willard's sacrifice fly.

Spence Willard came on in the second after Dannemann had walked Bob McCarthy and given up a sacrifice. Spence got out of the inning without any damage, and for the next two innings looked like his old self. In the fourth, Graves hit a dribbler down the first base line which Spence picked up and outran the runner to the bag. Graves spiked Willard on the foot as he slid into the bag. Spence pitched to two more batters, walking one and getting one to bounce back to him, before he had to retire because of the injury.

Bobby Cox and Jerry Davis followed Willard to the mound before Haywood came on in the seventh with the bases loaded to quickly put out the fire. Haywood didn't give up a hit in two and two-thirds innings.

The Tar Heels meet Virginia here at 2:45 today.

Derby Entries All Set For Today's Race

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI)—All 12 starters, including favored Hill Rise, were at peak physical condition and the track at Churchill Downs was lightning fast Friday for today's 90th running of the $125,000 added Kentucky Derby.

Clear skies with no rain in sight was forecast. Post time for the derby is 5:38 p.m. EDT.

"Right now the track is as fast as it was two years ago," said trainer Horatio Luro, who sent out Decidedly in 1963 to break Whirlaway's 21-year-old Derby record of 2:01 26. Decidedly clicked off the mile and one-quarter in 2:00 265.

"I don't worry about the time, and I don't like to guess how fast the Derby will be run," Luro added. "Too many factors enter into it that can affect the time.

"But if the weather remains like this, I think the derby will be run in under two minutes," Luro said as Northern Dancer, the Canadian-bred colt he trains for Edward P. Taylor of Toronto, Ont., came off the track.

The general sentiment among other trainers also was that the race will be a fast one.

Mesh Tenney who trains The Scoundrel said, "The Derby could produce a new track record if the strip stays fast.

"There's speed for a good pace and several horses that save their running for the last of it."

Northern Dancer, choice in the rose run at 5-2, merely jogged around the mile track and then was put away in his barn. Jockey Bill Hartack who seeks his fourth Kentucky Derby winner aboard the colt, was on hand to watch Northern Dancer limber up.

Hill Rise, El Peco Ranch's 6-5 favorite, also was on the track. He was schooled at the starting gate and then given a three furlong "blowout" by trainer Bill Finnegan.

Freshmen Upset Varsity Stickmen

By PETE GAMMONS

With a lot of heart and a little bit of luck the Freshman Lacrosse team upset the varsity Friday, 8-7.

The Varsity completely dominated the first and last five minutes of the game, but could not score more than three goals in those spells, and fell short.

The Freshmen may have gotten their winning margin by spirit, but there was no lack of talent as six different men scored, including two each by Bob Morrison and Tim Balch.

The Varsity opened with a rush, controlling play for the first five minutes. Big Jeff Parker scored the first goal during that period. But the stout defense of Fred Tygart, Joe McGirt, and John Ward helping out goalie Harvey Stanley held off the onslaught.

Jake Hubbard then tied the game with a fine 25 foot shot, and Bob Morrison put the Frosh ahead shortly after that with a goal from in front of the cage. They increased their lead to 4-1 early in the second quarter on goals by Pete Parker and Balch. Parker's was one of the sensational variety as he rushed two-thirds of the length of the field, and fired a 20 foot shot past goalie Brian Klinker.

Jeff Parker came back for the varsity with his second goal, only to have Dick White get one back for the Frosh and mount the lead back to three goals. Parker and Tom Thayer scored at the close of the half for the Varsity to cut the lead to 5-4 at the half.

Morrison scored his second goal about five minutes into the second half on a beautiful feed from White, but Don Marks cut it back to 6-5 on a pass from Parker. The action went up and down the field until Hal Minis caught the near corner to the left of the cage and put the Frosh ahead by two at the end of the third quarter.

Balch scored again seven minutes into the fourth quarter to give the Tar Babies a seemingly insurmountable lead. But then the big push came. Jeff Parker scored on a beautiful solo rush from the side to cut the lead to two, and it ignited the Varsity. They were all around the goal for the last four minutes, missing shots, hitting the post, and forcing Stanley to come up with some utterly fantastic saves. On one play Parker went through the defense and cut all alone in front of Stanley, only to have his shot bounce off the inside of the post. Bud Adams finally scored, but it was too little and too late with only seven seconds left.

In all due respect to the varsity, Stanley is their goalie, and Coach Steele lent him to the Frosh "To make it an interesting game." He excelled, as did the three defensemen in front of him, Tygart, Ward, and McGirt. Lack of experience seems to have hurt those three at times, but they could really help Steele in a couple of years. The first midfield of Morrison, Balch, and Loring Swasey all showed flashes of brilliance, especially Morrison, who constantly pounced on the loose ball and brought it back upfield. Hubbard was the most impressive attack man with his stickwork and his ability to control the ball behind the goal, and Minis played a good game.

It is only fair to say that the Varsity probably wasn't up for the game, but many of them played well. Parker, Murrell Smith, and Jim Light, as well as Adams, all were dangerous, with Parker possibly the outstanding player on the field.

Richie Zarro New President

Football star Richie Zarro was elected president of the Monogram Club for next year this week.

Zarro, who lettered for the past two years as a guard, was a key member of the line which led the team to an ACC championship and a Gator Bowl victory.

Track star Art Maillet was elected vice-president, Bill Graham, also of track fame, secretary, Baseball manager Mike Craig treasurer, swimmer Davis Roberts sergeant-at-arms, and football end John Atherton social chairman in the other elections.

Zarro takes over for departing president John Hammett, and is hoping for better attendance at meetings and increasing cooperation in the activities.

The first meeting is Thursday night, and Zarro is hoping for good attendance.

East Carolina Joins Southern Conf.

ROANOKE, Va. (UPI) — East Carolina College of Greenville, N. C., joined the Southern Conference today after a two-year courtship.

Southern Conference officials voted unanimously to accept the eastern North Carolina college as the 10th member of the league.

The circuit has been a nine-team loop since Washington & Lee University at Lexington, Va., abandoned big time sports when it adopted a play-for-fun athletic policy in 1958.

The 11-year-old conference includes, Virginia Military Institute and Virginia Tech in Virginia, West Virginia University in West Virginia, George Washington University in Washington, D. C., Davidson College in North Carolina and Furman and The Citadel in South Carolina.

East Carolina, which has one of the largest enrollments among conference and North Carolina colleges, has a football schedule this fall which includes The Citadel, Richmond and Furman.

Head football Coach and Althletic director Clarence Stasavich was on hand for the meeting of conference officials who voted him a place in their group.

The games played, however, will not count in the conference standings. East Carolina will be unable to compete for conference championships until the 1965-66 season.

Parents Treated Today

Chancellor House Is Featured

Parents of UNC students will get a glimpse of spring on campus Sunday, May 3, when they come to Chapel Hill for UNC's annual Parent's Day.

A parade of color and precision will greet parents as they watch Air Force and Navy ROTC units perform a Pass-in-Review and present awards at Fetzer Field at 1 p.m. Sunday.

All dormitories, fraternities and sororities will host parents from 2 p.m. until 4 p.m. Sunday afternoon. All academic departments will be open and Wilson Library will display departmental exhibits until 6 p.m.

At 2:15 p.m. the Varsity Men's Glee Club and Watts Hospital Nurses' Chorus will perform in Hill Hall.

Following this performance, UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock will address parents at the Old Well and the UNC Band, directed by Dr. Herbert W. Fred, will play in concert.

At 4:30 p.m. there will be a "Hootenanny" featuring Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House and his "Happy Harmonica." The show is coordinated by Kent Evans of WUNC and will feature local campus talent. Prizes will be awarded to the best performers.

In case of rain, the hootenanny and the Chancellor's address will be in Memorial Hall, and the Band Concert will be held in Hill Hall.

Parents' day will end with a performance by the St. Mary's Glee Club and the UNC Gleemen in Graham Memorial Lounge at 8 o'clock Sunday evening.

Author Is Honored By UNC Sorority

Mrs. Bernice Kelly Harris, author of the first book of fiction ever published by the University of North Carolina Press, has received the Distinguished Service Award presented by the UNC chapter of Chi Omega sorority.

Going annually to an outstanding North Carolina woman, the award was given to Mrs. Harris at the sorority's April Eleusinian Banquet held in honor of Chi Omega founders.

Mrs. Harris spent several years writing plays and teaching — including a UNC summer session course in dramatic composition.

Price(less) Prose

By KERRY SIPE

There are at least some people who think Chapel Hill is an exception to the old saw, "You get what you pay for."

A random sampling of opinion from a number of shoppers on Franklin Street yesterday revealed a varied array of answers to the question, "Do you think the prices in Chapel Hill stores are reasonable?"

"No!" said sophomore student Jim Kennington as he emerged from an open store with a package tucked under his arm. "Definitely not. The selection of merchandise is good, but nobody wants to pay for the label inside an article of clothing. That's what is expected of you in a lot of these stores."

In contrast, Sloan Creuveling, a junior who describes himself as a "clothes horse," had a different opinion.

"I feel that the prices are fairly reasonable," he said. "Men's Clothing stores are a little steep. I think some of the stores should have a little more competition."

The question of competition seemed to show up in the answers of several people.

"It's just a question of supply and demand," said Doug Lawson, a University freshman. "Prices are about as reasonable as you can expect in a small college town. The students are style-conscious in Chapel Hill and styles cost money. There's no low-priced competition to keep prices down."

How do prices in Chapel Hill compare with those of nearby cities?

We talked to Mrs. T. Rosett from Durham for our answer. Sie said, "Prices in Chapel Hill are as reasonable as they are in Durham. I much prefer shopping here to shopping in downtown Durham. The stores are so much friendlier."

A Mrs. Hunley and a Mrs. O'Shields who were in Chapel Hill yesterday on a shopping spree from Raleigh said, "We always love to shop in Chapel Hill." The ladies were among the few who found no fault with the cost of living in Chapel Hill.

People have a habit of believing what they want to believe. They complain about prices because they don't like to spend their money.

One lady, who asked not to be identified, said, "Prices don't vary that much anywhere." Pointing into a nearby shop window, she said, "Those shoes there cost the same in Chapel Hill as they do in San Francisco. They're the very same shoes. Why not?"

We wondered how much of this was true. For the answer we went to the men who should know—Mr. Milton and Mr. Julian themselves, operators of two of the largest Men's Wear shops in Chapel Hill.

"The people who complain are just jealous," said Milton Julian of Milton's Clothing Corner on Franklin St. "We operate in a highly competitive area. If you'll check you'll find our mail-order prices to be the same as anywhere in the country. We defy anyone to try to get the same quality stuff at a lower price."

Milton thinks all the unrest about clothing prices is due to "brainwashing at home."

"Out - of - town competitors spread rumors about prices in college towns just to keep the business at home.

"But when you've got six other men's clothing stores in town and nine other places that sell women's sportswear, you can't afford to ask unreasonable prices."

At Julian's College Shop across the street, the answer was pretty much the same.

"The people who make this stuff sweat like gumdrops to make it good quality, well-made stuff. We just sell it, that's all," said Maurice Julian.

"Everybody's got to make a living," he added.

First Candidates' Meeting Is Tuesday

Two candidates meetings will be held this week and a third next week for all of Orange County's candidates in the May 30 primary.

Candidates have been invited to speak at the Roberson Street Community Center at 8 Tuesday evening. The public is invited.

The Chapel Hill-Carrboro Jaycees will hold their own candidates meeting Thursday evening at 7 at the American Legion Clubhouse. Only Jaycees are invited to this meeting.

The Chapel Hill League of Women Voters will hold its usual pre-primary candidates meeting in the auditorium of the Carrboro Elementary School Wednesday evening, May 13, at 8. The public is invited to this meeting also.

UNC Journalists Win State And National Merit Awards

Kirkpatrick And Blackwell Win 1st

Six Others Win Observer Awards

Mickey Blackwell and Curry Kirkpatrick won first-place recognition as Daily Tar Heel writers swept 13 of 23 College Press Awards from the two Carolinas given by the Charlotte News and Observer at a Charlotte banquet Friday night.

Blackwell, the Associate Editor of the DTH, placed first in news writing with his story, "Aycock Looses Searing Blast at Speaker Gag," and Kirkpatrick, former DTH sports editor, won a like award in sports writing for his column on Stan Musial's retirement.

Seventeen college newspapers in North and South Carolina entered a total of 257 stories, written during the 1963-64 academic year, in the contest.

The DTH took all three sports writing awards, four of the six feature writing awards, three of six news writing awards and two of the five editorial awards.

Blackwell also received an honorable mention in feature writing for his Julie London interview, and Kirkpatrick won honorable mention in news writing with his story on the effect of President Kennedy's death on Chapel Hill, "A Tide of Anguish."

Former co-editors Gary Blanchard and David Ethridge received recognition also. Blanchard took three second places —in editorial writing with "Judge Mallard and the Christian Mandate," news writing with "Senator Selling Insurance, on Sen. George Strong's sideline business, and in features with a series of four stories on John Salter after his return from Cuba.

Ethridge received an honorable mention for his editorial on the "little federal" plan.

John Montague, present Tar Heel managing editor, won a second place in sports for his article on a Duke-UNC basketball game entitled, "Heels, Devils Relive Old Times in Durham," and Laszlo Birinyi's column on late track coach Dale Ranson was honorable mention.

In the feature writing division, Jeff Dick and Suzy Sterling received honorable mention awards, Dick's coming on a study of poverty in North Carolina and Miss Sterling's on a two-part series dealing with Chapel Hill parking problems.

The Daily Tar Heel as a whole won an honorable mention in the best college newspaper division, with Wake Forest's Old Gold and Black taking first place.

All Is Well As Miss Nanny Wins Award

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Nanny, a three month old female goat, is the most envied pet in Chapel Hill today.

A former resident of the Hillsboro stockyards, Nanny rose like Cinderella to become the envy of 15 dogs, cats, roosters, ducks and hamsters yesterday afternoon winning first place in the Chapel Hill High School pet contest.

Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity bought her for three dollars last week, and since her arrival in Big Fraternity Court she was waged a personal campaign to distract students from their books.

The PiKas found time to buy a four dollar chain for Nanny, and an inverted soda bottle box serves as her bed in the fraternity house basement.

Fate moved suddenly to draw Nanny to her hour of glory when PiKa Sandy Sanders drove down Franklin Street to get his car washed yesterday.

Sanders noticed a gathering of people and animals near the high school, and decided to find out what was going on. When he heard a pet show was being held and it was open to the public, he rushed to get Nanny fixed up.

Dick Craver, Jule McMichael & Sanders brushed the dirt off Nanny's coat, and, with Phi Mu Barbara Lauder going along as "trainer," all hurried to put the little goat into competition.

It was no contest. Nanny won the blue ribbon hands down.

The judges were captivated by her black, white and brown coloring and quarter inch long horns.

Now, Nanny is a celebrity. No longer will she be stolen in the middle of the night and placed on the lawn of the Tri Delt Sorority house, as in days past.

PiKa President Don Sayers has big plans for her.

"Next year, when she's developed enough," he said, "we plan to enter her in the Miss Modern Venus Contest of the Sigma Chi Derby.

"With strict diet and exercise, we think she will win."

EXILE SPEAKS HERE

Miss Mary Benson will speak on "The Present Crisis in South Africa" Monday in Gerrard Hall at 8 p.m.

Miss Benson is a member of the African Bureau in London and is in exile from South Africa. Her latest book, "African Patriots," was released Friday.

J-School 1st — 3 Are In Top 10

Clotfelter Win Clinches Top Spot

By DENNIS SANDERS

Superior writing by three UNC students—Curry Kirkpatrick, Mickey Blackwell and Jim Clotfelter —has enabled the UNC School of Journalism to rank first in the nation for 1963-64.

Dean Norval N. Luxon received notice of the finish, the highest in the J-School history, from the William Randolph Hearst Foundation Friday.

As a result, Luxon and Chancellor William B. Aycock will receive a trip to Washington, during which they will meet President Lyndon B. Johnson.

Collectively, the three have won $1,950 for themselves and the same amount for the School of Journalism. All three finished among the top 10 collegiate journalists nationally for the year.

Clotfelter is the latest winner, receiving $500 for his second-place finish in the general news writing category with a story on the Klu Klux Klan.

A staff writer for the Durham Morning Herald, Clotfelter earlier this year was awarded $100 for an account of various people involved in area civil rights demonstrations and the reasons for their involvement. The story placed seventh in the investigative-interpretation division.

Co-editor of the Daily Tar Heel in 1962-63, Clotfelter also won 17th-place recognition from the Hearst Foundation in spot news writing. He is a junior from Atlanta, Ga., and has worked with the Atlanta Journal.

Kirkpatrick, former DTH sports editor, won $1,150 from the Foundation last fall. He received $750 for finishing first in news writing with an account of President Kennedy's death and its effect on hapel Hill. His editorial on Barry Goldwater placed third in editorial writing, winning $400.

Kirkpatrick is a junior from Niagra Falls, N. Y., and is a reporter for the Chapel Hill Weekly.

Blackwell, a senior from Gastonia, has been awarded $200 for eighth-place finishes in investigative-interpretative writing and spot news writing.

The current DTH Associate Editor, Blackwell won $100 for his investigative series entitled, "A Look at Local Rebellion," and $100 for his news reports on local sit-ins.

Girls To Be CU Feature

Consolidated University Day, celebrated annually on the Saturday of the State-Carolina football game, will have a welcome new addition next fall—girls.

Hugh Stevens, DTH co-editor and chairman-designate of the Consolidated Student Council of the University, said yesterday that "we've had the girls from UNCG as our guests before, but we've never been able to get them here at the right time."

Stevens said that Dr. Otis Singletary, Chancellor of UNCG had decided to comply with a request by the CSC to cancel classes after 10 a.m. on the morning of the game next fall.

"This will enable us to hold proper receptions for the girls for the first time," he continued. "In the past, they have simply been dumped out of the buses in a big mob scene, without a chance to have refreshments or meet any Carolina gentlemen.

"We feel that we will be able to make our guests feel much more welcome now," Stevens said. "We have tried to have receptions in the past, but the noon closing hour for classes at Greensboro prevented this, especially after gametime was moved up to 1:30 p.m."

GUEST INSTRUCTOR

Dr. Newton D. Fischer of Chapel Hill, professor of otorhinolaryngology (ear, nose and throat diseases), in the University School of Medicine, will be a guest instructor at an international postgraduate course in reconstructive nasal surgery at the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine May 5-15.

Wallace: Violence Won't Solve Problems

CHICAGO (UPI) — Alabama Gov. George Wallace said Saturday citizens—both white and Negro are getting tired of demonstrations which end in violence.

Wallace interrupted his campaign in Indiana for Tuesday's primary election to fly here in his Alabama state plane for a television appearance.

He planned to fly back to Indianapolis immediately after the show was taped.

Wallace is opposed in the Hoosier primary by Indiana Gov. Matthew Welsh, who campaigned in southern Indiana Saturday. Welsh is pledged to support President Johnson at the national convention.

"Negro and white citizens are getting tired of demonstrations that result in violence," Wallace said. "We don't solve any problems by violence.

"The biggest demonstrations are being held in the states that have civil rights laws," he said. "I think it just goes to prove that laws don't solve anything."

Shortly before leaving Indianapolis, Wallace told newsmen he expected to get votes from the Democratic party faithful in Indiana despite the opposition of party leaders.

"I know that leaders of the Indiana Democratic machine are against me," he said, "But I believe I'll get a little of that machine vote."

Wallace said he will campaign in Indiana right up to the deadline Monday.

The Southern segregationist will speak in the Fremont Baptist Church at Crawfordsville Sunday, address the Indianapolis Service Club Monday, fly to Alabama to vote in the Alabama primary that same day and return to Indianapolis for the election.

While the Alabama governor prepared for his pulpit appearance, Welsh was expected to lambast him again in a speech before an 8th District Democratic rally at St. Anthony in Dubois County Saturday night.

Wallace continued to turn the other cheek to his rival.

Asked about Welsh's severe attacks, Wallace said, "I am a guest in your state and I'm not going to say anything unkind about your governer."

Wallace said Welsh was "mistaken" in his charge that the Alabaman permitted the installation of highway signs on his state roads which said "Kill the Kennedys."

"If I had known about that, I would have ordered our state policemen, who, according to my opponents, have built up a gestapo, to tear the signs down." he said.

"I won't say the governor lied —I will say he was mistaken," Walace said.

★ ★ ★

ATLANTA (UPI)—Sen. Barry Goldwater told the Georgia GOP convention Saturday that the Democratic party is "the destroyer of states rights" and said substantial Southern support could tip the election scale for a Republican presidential victory.

"The Republican party's record on civil rights is clear and cannot successfully be challenged," Goldwater said in a keynote address.

"We have not had to ignore the law to force integration nor have we deliberately evaded the law in an effort to win votes in the Northern cities," the Arizona conservative told the wildly cheering Georgia Republicans.

"The Democratic party once wore the mantle of states rights, but today it is the destroyer of states rights," Goldwater said.

In a fast-moving schedule, Goldwater spoke earlier in the day at a $25-per-plate fund-raising breakfast attended by 1,200 Republicans. He charged that President Johnson's administration is using "top secret" information for political purposes. He said Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara released secret information on U. S. reconnaissance flights over Cuba which he said benefitted the Russians.

Goldwater forces steamrolled their way to a victory in the election of the chairmanship of the state party.

Our University Pays Tribute To A Friend

As our great University passes down its long and storied road, there pass with it many men both great and small —some to pause on their way for many years and leave their very lives entwined in our daily lives, others merely to touch and change for a moment. Of this latter group, perhaps none has come who touched so quickly or inspired so much as John Fitzgerald Kennedy.

He came only for a fleeting hour, addressing thousands in the warmth of Kenan Stadium's brilliant sun on October 12, 1961. Figuratively, he did little more than extend a hand of greeting to this institution and offer his profuse thanks for an honorary degree. But in doing that, he preserved a special place for himself in the heart of the University and in the hearts and minds of many individuals. When he was swept away, the University community lost a dear friend.

One week from today, thousands will again mass in Kenan Stadium to pay tribute to John F. Kennedy. Billy Graham, a long-time personal friend of the late President, will deliver the main address, and notables from every section of North Carolina will join in the Memorial Service. Many will be in attendance who were there more than two and a half years ago, basking in the sun as he spoke. There will be others who opposed Mr. Kennedy's political philosophies who will divest themselves temporarily of issues and come to pay their respects to "a great and good man." And most of all there will be many who, for one reason or another, considered John F. Kennedy a friend—a friend for whom they wish to show their respect and admiration.

The service is an ambitious project, designed to raise more than $230,000 in contributions for the Kennedy Library in Massachusetts. Such a library is a fitting memorial for a president whose intellectual achievements were extraordinary, and it will stand as an inspiration for millions of Americans to see and use. The private citizens of North Carolina who have planned the Memorial Service have expressed their hope that North Carolina and her people will play a large part in the establishment of this appropriate memorial, and have asked all of us to support this important project.

Truly, John Fitzgerald Kennedy found a special place in this University, and it is altogether fitting that it should serve as the site of a tribute. And although the cost of individual tickets to the Memorial Service will probably prohibit most of us from being in attendance, it would be appropriate for campus groups and organizations to send delegations to the service wherever possible, to represent the individuals who would like to do something for a friend.

We Don't Reach Far For This Back Pat

From time to time in our daily pursuits we pause a moment to give some individual or group a well-deserved "pat on the back" for an outstanding achievement, award, victory, or similar distinction. It is especially heartwarming to be able to extend such congratulations to those with whom we work every day—eight members or former members of the Daily Tar Heel staff who were cited as winners in the recent Charlotte Observer college newspaper contest.

Between them, these eight people grabbed 13 of the 23 awards given in the contest, and the DTH itself was cited for its excellence.

In addition, the Hearst Journalism Foundation has declared the UNC School of Journalism its top winner for the year in its writing contests, the first time that the school has achieved this position. Three writers — Curry Kirkpatrick, Mickey Blackwell and Jim Clotfelter — are among the top ten prizewinners for the year in the Hearst contests.

These honors, of course, are important to the individuals who win them. They pave the way to better job opportunities in the journalism field, and they add prestige to the papers for which the students work and the school in which they are trained. But even more important, they are one small way in which an individual can prove to himself, in reviewing all the unrewarded long hours and the uncompensated hard work, that it was worth it after all.

Reason, Not A Retreat To The Rear

The Knickerbocker News

The proposal by Senator Hubert Humphrey to ease concern of the Civil Rights Bill's opponents by including a statement against job quotas makes good sense.

Quotas—the setting of ratio between Negroes and whites—have no place in a civil rights measure and are, in fact, a negation of the idea.

It repeatedly has to be explained that one of the bill's aims is not to force the hiring of a Negro in preference to a white, but to establish the fact that no one, no matter what his background, is to be discriminated against solely because of it.

The honored concept that all men are created equal does not extend to their abilities. It is up to everyone to develop those abilities so he can compete on the open market. The thought is that a man stand on his own two feet, but that he not be swept off them at the outset because of something he cannot control.

The important employment proposals in the Civil Rights Bill are contained in Title VII. They provide: (1) That there be no discrimination by employers or unions with more than 25 employes or members, and (2) that a Fair Employment Opportunity Commission with teeth in it be established empowered to bring suit when it cannot end discrimination by persuasion. The court, not the commission, incidentally, would determine extent of the discrimination.

Thus, if the Humphrey suggestion may seem a back-down in the face of the powerful voice of segregation in the Senate, it is not. If it appears as such to segregationists, that's fine and dandy, but the fact is that it is simply the course of reason.

Communists And CORE

(From the Cheraw, S. C., Chronicle)

We write this Wednesday afternoon. We haven't heard yet whether the stall-in drive at the New York World's Fair came off.

Let's hope not. It was a crackpot idea to begin with. FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover has said there is some Red infiltration of the Negro protest movement. Of course there is. The communists try to infiltrate everything. Hoover reminds us of a saying of the Reds: that "communist work often is done by non-communist hands."

It is conceivable that some of the civil rights leaders of extremist bent are unconsciously being manipulated. It will be a pity if they are dupes of communists, for nothing could serve their cause more dangerously.

Of course the communists are not interested in civil liberties. Karl Marx never taught anything about that, and Soviet leaders certainly have never granted civil rights to their own people. They distainfully consider concern over individual freedom petty "bourgeois" weakness.

Since plans to foul up opening day at the Fair play into the hands of the opponents of the civil rights bill and since the only interest communists have in this domestic crisis is the embarrassment they can cause this country, one wonders what part subversion might play.

Plans to tie up metropolitan traffic, to leave water running to exhaust the city's water supply, to pull emergency cords on subways and trains, this is anarchy which no self-respecting government can tolerate.

If Negroes were barred from the World's Fair, peaceful demonstrations would be justified. But they aren't. They are welcomed. To cause wholesale suffering and/or inconvenience to everyone just to dramatize the problem is wrong, and, what's more, it is foolish.

If Negro leaders believe they will gain sympathy from the white majority or force action on the civil rights bill in this fashion, they're deluding themselves. They will simply succeed in encouraging their opponents.

They will only infuriate people who want a respite from all the tension and torture, who want to enjoy the fair. These people won't feel guilty—only resentful, and they will express that guilt in a backlash against the demonstrators. We really can't blame them much. The extremists on one side enable those on the other to settle back in smug self-righteousness.

If Wallace does well in Indiana, he can thank the Brooklyn and Cleveland Chapters of CORE.

Sensible, moderate people must not alter their course because of this sort of thing. Law and order must be upheld and the rioters punished. But those who believe in freedom and human dignity must keep on working, no matter how difficult some of those very people for whom they are working may make it. Nor should communist interference be permitted to make any difference. Knowing the communists only interest is in causing trouble, and hence in defeating the civil rights movement, those who favor fair play must continue to struggle for it.

Americans are not ready to turn the country over to revolutionists, nihilists and the like. The troublemakers should be curbed. Responsible leaders in both major political parties have decried the recent threats, as have many civil rights leaders themselves.

Much of the responsibility for the present situation lies with those who have shut their eyes to reality, who have refused to budge until forced to, who will never take action, or even acknowledge any problem, until whipped into it. Govs. Barnett and Wallace are responsible for much that is going on in N. Y. now. But then so are the lily-white suburbanites, who have always held themselves above it all, and so are we "upper middle class Southerners" who ought to have furnished some leadership in the matter, yet abdicated our responsibilities—way back in the 1950's. After all, where did Isiah Brunson come from? Sumter, S. C.

Those of us who foresaw the dangers early and warned against them, often at the risk of enduring the slings and arrows of an outraged public, may have earned the right, but we take absolutely no pleasure in saying, "We told you so."

YDC, Statesville Defended

Undergraduates Sought By Dems

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Mr. Seely's column of Thursday is so obvious a diatribe that I am hesitant to dignify it by answering. But because it raised fundamental questions about the Young Democratic Club on campus, questions on which I welcome an opportunity to state my views, I am accepting his offer of equal space.

I am in wholehearted agreement with the contention that "the Law School has long had an iron grip on the Y.D.C." I am equally firm in the conviction that this is a sad state of affairs. But this is only one side of the coin.

During my senior year as an undergraduate I made frequent efforts to bring undergraduates into the YDC. The answer to my proddings was always somewhat as follows: "I intend to become active when I get in Law School, when I get back home, but not now. I am too busy with Student Government (or the Y, or my church group, etc.)."

That attitude still prevails. When the undegraduates sought the presidency last year, they ran a candidate who had never attended a meeting of the UNC YDC. I could not vote for such a person then, nor could I now. Early last fall I talked to the person who had been the undergraduate candidate for president and to other undergraduates who had shown an interest in the YDC. I told them that if they were interested in having an undergraduate president next year, they should begin grooming someone for the job, i.e., seeing that this person attended meetings on the campus and state level, that he familiarized himself with the College YDC Federation, etc. I told them that if an undergraduate was prepared for the job and interested in running, I would gladly step aside and support him; but that otherwise I would probably seek the office.

No such undergraduate appeared. The fact that I had no opposition is at least partial testimony to that. I very much wish that one had. No serious student of the law has the time for the job that it demands. Moreover, no law student has the contacts in the remainder of the student body that he needs to build the organization effectively. I stated in my opening remarks as president that one of the major goals of my administration would be close cooperation with the undergraduate vice president in an effort to bring undergraduates into a more active role in the club. I now repeat that pledge for the benefit of the whole campus. It is my sincere hope that next year some undergraduate will be interested enough to want the presidency and go out and seek it in a deserving manner. If so, I shall do all I can to help him secure election.

As to the charge that those who elected me were supporters of a particular gubernatorial candidate, I would say only that these were also the people who have been faithful YDC members all year.

As to the suggestion that the meeting was purposely not publicized, your column admits that the announcement was lost in the shuffle at the Daily Tar Heel office. You certainly should not blame the YDC when the newspaper staff is not alert enough to pick up a good story. Indeed, a good newspeper would be all over a story that it considered important enough to merit a front page editorial when it missed it.

Further, the YDC will not endorse any candidate for Governor. It is against our constitution and our principles to do so. In the primaries we work hard as individuals for the candidates of our choice but once the voters have spoken, we unite behind the winner. This has long been the basic philosophy of the organization and under my presidency, it shall continue to be so.

If the editors of the Tar Heel are genuinely interested in the YDC, I invite them to become active participants and attend at least one meeting during the year, rather than being content with casting an annual editorial barb. I welcome the participation and leadership of all undergraduates.

In the coming year we shall share the responsibility of electing Lyndon Johnson to the Presidency of the United States. We have the responsibility of electing a Democrat to the Governorship and continuing the habit of good government in North Carolina.

These are responsibilities that students should take seriously. They transcend the domain of petty attacks on individuals and groups. They demand the utmost in thought and energy from all whose concern for the future has found its channel in the Democratic Party.

I invite all Young Democrats to join our cause, not just on election night, but in the less glamorous months between elections.

Negro's Death Was A Suicide

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

We read in Tuesday's Letters to the Editors of the trial and conviction of Statesville for "the murder of a Statesville, N. C., Negro, Benjamin Carlton."

We have searched the state papers for the facts that Mr. Carlton was murdered and have found none. True, he is dead and none of the papers left this in doubt, but by whose hand was undetermined at the time of Mr. Heermance's letter.

At an inquest held in Statesville Wednesday, an all Negro panel rendered a unanimous verdict of suicide.

If Mr. Carlton had been murdered, as Mr. Heermance indicated, letter, and if convicted, should have had a trial by jury, not by letter, and if convisted, should have paid for such a terrible crime against society.

The author of Tuesday's letter was so bold as to say that Mr. Carlton was shot because he sought to work for racial progress through peaceful and legal means.

It is not for us to decide how Mr. Carlton died or even the motives of the person responsible for his death. Our system of justice leaves that to the police and the courts. All evidence collected for the inquest pointed to suicide.

We feel that the citizens of Statesville and even of the South were injured by Mr. Heermance's letter and we further feel that he owes us a retraction.

Thoughts For Sunday A.M.

Sunday morning is the time for quiet contemplation of the soul and one's ideals . . . mainly to keep your mind off the night before and the day ahead.

Thus we feel that it is our duty to provide your soul with the appropriate materials.

Our selection for the day is the UNC catalogue of the school year 1888-1889, the section on discipline.

First of all the prospective student is presented with the two basic requirements of the University in the area of discipline:

1) To use your time properly, and

2) To stay out of vice.

The incoming freshman is further informed that he must attend all classes (an absurdity today), perform his work faithfully (note the esoteric adverb) and keep quiet during study hours (this one is still on the books).

Students are not allowed to carry or use (especially on one another) pistols and other dangerous weapons. (This falls under vice). They are forbidden from drinking, indulging in hazing, and leaving Chapel Hill unless granted permission of the President or the Chairman of the Faculty.

After this terrifying load of regulations, the new student is comforted by the statement: "Every temptation to vice is put away as far as possible."

This is followed with the concluding threatening note: "Students who are willfully vicious, idle or disorderly are not desired at the University and are removed from it as soon as possible."

Upon reading these harsh rules, one is relieved that that the situation has improved since then under the relaxed leadership of our modern Administration.

No longer is idleness a sin, and no more is one admonished to use one's time properly. In fact there is no longer any accepted rule for what things are proper to spend one's time on.

No more is the student forced to walk four miles to the nearest liquor store. The stores have been moved closer and we are allowed cars to get us there.

Temptations to vice are no longer removed as far as possible from Chapel Hill. We're coeducational now, and Durham is only ten miles away.

Finally, if they expelled students who were willfully vicious, what sort of football team were they able to field.

If you have any doubts as to the effectiveness of this system, however, we refer you to one of its products, then a mischievous sophomore at the University: John Motley Morehead.

Just goes to prove that no vice and well-planned use of time makes jack . . . plenty of it.

Ponder that this Sunday.

Primitive Sounds Dominate The Airways All Day Long

By HENRY McINNIS

The savage beast is supposed to be charmed by music. And there are as many types and qualities of music as there are animals in the jungle.

Radio WKIX beats out the jungle drums on a 24-hour schedule broadcasting primeval harmonies to the hunter-lands with unrelenting beat. In case any slow listeners forget this station blasts out its identification with a choir pitched in tumultuous tones quickly rising to peaks of a near-scream.

If you want to hear restful music ,you must either tune in to FM radio or keep a late-night vigil. Otherwise, the dulcet peace of the symphony will be drowned out by the talentless zombies who capitalize on the non-musical tastes of the uncritical mass public.

There is a disturbing trend of our time to try to capture radio audiences by constant battering of loud, pounding and rapid-fire volleys of cute verbal patter, interlaced with the most popular tunes in the idiot hit-parade.

It is true that radio has to hit hard at the teen-age level in order to be in business but what a pathetic sign of our society's values and tates that we pigeonhole classical music for the longhairs, relegating it to the limbos of Sunday programming and hours not exactly considered prime.

Stations that calmed down and offered more of the musical treasures of Western culture instead of the abundance of hastily written, uncritically accepted and easily and deservedly forgotten "music"—are desperately needed. We live in the age of anxiety. A Borodin string quartet could soothe the public with its quiet but delicately sensuous harmonies, in a way Doris Day could not possibly do.

Durham's WSSB is another example of the feverish tempo so faithfully sustained by its screaming sister in Raleigh. Adolescent - voiced announcers clog the airways with their insipid and inconsequential banter. Their frenzied joviality only partly conceals the empty nature of their mission.

What should or can be done to raise the cultural level of our musical programs on radio? One way is to create more outlets for the classics. A significant factor in the predominant popularity of contemporary trash is that radio stations have done too little leading and too much pandering.

Newspapers have the responsibility to educate the public to the highest appreciation of individual freedom in a democratic society. Radio and television implement the eucational function as much by their choice of what the public shall hear as the news-reading public is affected and influenced by what stories it will read.

An American public that is accustomed to the high-powered tensions of our day needs the dulcet tones of music that is as tested by the fires of posterity as our democracy is found meaningful by the surge of history.

It is our belief that exposure to the best in our Western culture cannot be accomplished or encouraged unless the communications industry does its share of the task.

Interchange Adviser To Visit Chapel Hill

Mrs. Allan F. Saunders, head student interchange adviser at the East-West Center in Hawaii, will discuss Center scholarship programs with UNC and Duke University students and officials during a four-day visit here this week.

Mrs. Saunders, who is with the East-West Center's Institute for Student Interchange, will arrive in Chapel Hill on Friday.

Stone Claims Abuse

RALEIGH — Senate President Clarence Stone said Friday he has been "abused, vilified, scorned and chastised" and "pictured as a disgrace to the state" because of his support for the Communist speaker-ban law.

"Most of the criticism of the bill comes from college professors and newspapers," Stone told a Baptist student group at N. C. State.

"I get a great deal of mail—most of the people who write are heartily in favor of the bill and are disgusted at what's happening at the colleges and universities that they are taxed to support."

The speaker-ban law, enacted by the 1963 General Assembly, prohibits Communists and Fifth Amendment pleaders from speaking on the campuses of state-supported colleges and universities.

Aimed At Him

"Most of the criticism" for the passage of the bill "is directed at me because I am president of the Senate," Stone told the group. "I wish that I could share it all myself. I am not running for any office, for anything, or from anybody—nothing the papers can say about me will hurt me in any way—they have already said all the false and unkind things about me they can—I've been called a disgraceful man with a tarnished record."

Stone noted that all three of the major Democratic candidates for governor had endorsed the speaker-ban law.

"Some of our educators," he declared, "are about to knock themselves out making speeches about academic freedom and the anti-Communist bill. They had better do a better job of screening their professors and use more judgment as to who they will hire to teach our youth. Had they done this, there would have been no need for the anti-Communist bill. They should spend more time teaching Americanism and less time defending Communist speakers."

Stone closed his speech by saying, "This anti-Communist law is the proper restraint the people of North Carolina want imposed upon these groups and all others who persist in digging your grave, and mine with a disguised spade, called 'academic freedom.'"

BUDGET COMMITTEE

Interviews for the Budget Committee of Student Government will be held Tuesday and Wednesday from 1 to 3:30 p.m. in Graham Memorial. Student Body Treasurer Jim Light urges all interested students to attend.

PHILOLOGICAL CLUB

The Philological Club will meet Tuesday at 7:45 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge of Morehead Planetarium. UNC Prof. William C. McCrary will speak on "Spanish Dramatic Theory of the Golden Age." All faculty members, graduate students, and members of their families are invited.

Arch Allen Named Law Editor

Arch T. Allen III of Raleigh was named editor-in-chief of the University of North Carolina Law Review Friday night during the annual awards banquet climaxing the Law School's 1963-64 academic year.

Allen's selection for the coveted post was announced by Prof.

ARCH ALLEN III

Robert H. Wettach, who also disclosed the names of four other students who will serve as associate editors of the Review.

Selection for the editor's post is the highest honor that comes to a law student. The determination is made by the faculty based upon the candidate's scholastic achievement and leadership qualities..

Serving with Allen as associate editors will be Mrs. Ann Phillips Long of Asheville, Joseph Donald of Chapel Hill, Robert Bobo Walsh of the Bronx, N.Y., and Marvin Taylor of Smithfield.

The student-faculty banquet also saw numerous prizes awarded for outstanding performance in specific fields of law, the naming of six students to the Order of the Coif and introduction of new officers to head the law school in 1964-65.

Selected as members of the Order of the Coif, an honorary society for those students in the top 10 per cent of their class, were:

George C. Cochran of Mayesville, Ky., retiring editor of the Law Review; Thomas D. Efird, Gastonia; James M. Kimzey, Brevard; William E. Underwood Jr., Charlotte; John S. Johnston, Charlotte and Arch K. Schoch of High Point.

Dean Henry Brandis of the Law School awarded individual prizes in the following fields of study, recognizing the student for his outstanding achievement:

Lawyer's title, E. C. Bryon Jr., of Durham; personal property, Henry S. Manning of Windsor; debtor's estates, Arch Schoch of High Point; corporations, William C. Evans of Cleveland, Ohio; constitutional law, Robert Bobo Long of Asheville; equity, William E. Underwood Jr., and Cleveland P. Cherry of Rocky Mount; administrative law, Bruce E. Mitchell of Washington, D. C.; taxation I, John S. Johnston of Charlotte; and taxation II, Cowles Llipfert of Winston-Salem and John S. Johnston of Charlotte.

The five seniors receiving the Walter Clark Awards for having the highest scholastic averages in the class included Cochran, Efird, Kimsey, Underwood and Johnston.

Henry T. Greene Jr., of Chapel Hill, was named recipient of the Block Award, which goes to the senior student who has made the most improvement during his law school career.

William Thorton of Asheville was introduced as new Law Students' Association president for the coming year. Among other officers was Sheldo Fogle of Brooklyn, N. Y., new LSA vice president.

Hardison's Article In Bucknell Review

An article by O. B. Hardison Jr. of the English department at the University appears in the current issue of the "Bucknell Review," a scholarly journal of arts, letters, and science published by the Bucknell University Press.

Professor Hardison's writing is entitled "Symbol and Myth: More Questions than Answers."

Seven other colleges and universities are represented in this issue of the "Review" by articles written by members of their faculties. They are Michigan State University, Franklin and Marshall College, University of Detroit, Louisiana State University, Western Washington State College, University of Colorado and Bucknell University.

The "Bucknell Review" maintains a high standard of excellence in publishing a wide variety of essays on subjects of scholarly interest and its list of contributing authors is international in scope.

Hoehn And Parrish Team Up Against Clemson

Netmen Top Tigers For Fifteenth Victory

By STUART BALL

Clemson's Tigers descended on the varsity courts Saturday fully expecting to dethrone UNC's netmen as ACC regular season champs but went home licking their wounds after an 8-1 mauling.

The regular season winner will now be decided when Clemson meets Maryland in a home match Wednesday. A Tiger win will result in a three-way tie between UNC, Maryland and Clemson. A Maryland win will mean a conference title for the Terps.

In the featured singles match George Sokol displayed both power and finesse in defeating highly rated Doug Stewart, 6-3, 6-0. Keeping his opponent off balance with neat backhand shots and a crushing forehand, Sokol abandoned his wait and see attitude mid-way through the first set for a more pressing game.

Both players began slowly and had trouble holding their own serve. Each held service in the first three games but Sokol broke Stewart's in the fourth for a 3-1 lead. In the next four games neither player could salvage his serve and Sokol led by a 5-3 margin. He then regained his composure and captured the final game and the first set by a game-5 margin.

In the second set it was all Sokol. He broke Stewart's first service with two perfectly executed crosscuts which caught the Clemson ace on the baseline. From then on Stewart could do no right and Sokol could do no wrong.

On the number two court O. H. Parrish combined a crushing serve with a flashy net game to completely dominate what was supposed to be a tight match.

In the first set with games tied at 1-1, the Tar Heel junior turned on the power and won the last five games for a 6-1 victory. Evans had Parrish jumping in the second set with his twist serve but with games at 4-3 in his favor, Parrish broke service and held his own for a 6-3 win.

In the most one-sided match of the day Ted Hoehn disposed of Tom Long in record time 6-1, 6-2. For the second straight day Hoehn played near flawless tennis.

A surprise starter for the Tar Heels was Sam Applegate in the number six spot. Coach Skakle elected to go with Applegate instead of Ken Oettinger on the basis of experience.

Applegate was pressed to the limit in the second set by Dick Pregnall, but held on to capture a 6-3, 7-5 win.

The only loss in singles for UNC came at the number five position where sophomore Carl Evans went down to defeat at the hands of Clemson senior James Ledbetter in a 6-1, 6-8, 6-4 match.

Singles—Sokol (UNC) def. Stewart 6-3, 6-0; Parrish (UNC) def. Evans 6-1, 6-3; Hoehn (UNC) def. Long 6-1, 6-2; Myers (UNC) def. Crow 3-6, 6-1, 6-0; Pregnall (Clemson) def. Evans 6-1, 6-8, 6-4; Applegate (UNC) def. Ledbetter 6-3, 7-5.

Doubles — Parrish and Hoehn def. Stewart and Evans 4-6, 6-3, 6-4; Sokol and Evans def. Long and Ledbetter 6-4, 6-4; Myers and Henderson def. Craft and Pregnall 6-3, 7-5.

Frosh Track Team Is Hard On Records

By PAT STITH

North Carolina track Coach Joe Hilton called his freshman squad the "best ever" at season's start. His verdict looks good with the season almost over and its record standing at 5-0.

It's a strong club all the way around, with three of its members in the record holding class. One is Jon Levin—call him "lightning." Another is Hoppie Ancarrow, a jumper. The third is a good Bo, too, named Wood.

Levin is the latest Carolina speed find. Way back in 1932 a UNC trackman named Charlie Farmer sprinted a 100 yards in a quick :09.6. Football end Jeff Newton equaled the mark in 1954 as did halfback Ronnie Jackson last spring.

This year Dale White of Salisbury has followed suit. Now, so has Levin—only he's just a freshman. Farmer held the old frosh mark, too at :09.7.

Jon has tied Farmer's performance in the 220-yard dash at 21.3 seconds. Coach Hilton thinks he may be able to better that mark in one of the remaining three meets this year. Levin covered the distance in 21 seconds flat as a Long Island, N. Y., prepster.

Hoppie Ancarrow has twice broken the freshman hop, step and jump mark. His best stands now at 43'1", a mere six inches shy of the varsity standard.

Ancarrow originally caught UNC coaches' eye with his moves on the football field, but an injured shoulder ended that pursuit, and Ancarrow spends all his time now trying to live up to his name.

Bo Wood is a discus man—and a good one. He stands 6-3, weighs 220 pounds and was tabbed as one of the best defensive end prespects on the freshman grid squad last fall.

At his best, it would take Bo only two throws to sail a discus the length of a football field. He has thrown it 150' 6½", some 15 feet better than the old mark.

Other freshman records could fall too before the season is over. Vaulter Johnny Johnson has cleared 13'6" in practice. The freshman mark is 13'4".

Johnson, Wayne Ward or Ancarrow could better the broad jump standard and basketball star Ian Morrison has a shot at the 440-yard dash mark. The record is :49.6 and Morrison, who runs as well as he shoots, has covered the distance in :49.5 as a member of a relay team.

Black And Speight Aid Leonard's Win

By LARRY TARLETON

The Tar Heels moved another step closer to the ACC baseball championship yesterday by blasting the Virginia Cavaliers 9-4 for their 10th conference win without a defeat.

Beattie Leonard went all the way for Coach Walt Rabb to win his second game in two starts, since returning to action from a broken hand.

The Heels jumped on two Cavalier pitchers for seven runs in the first two innings, and Leonard coasted to an easy victory. The chilly overcast weather seemed to be giving the Tar Heels more trouble than the Cavaliers.

Gary Black and Jim Speight were the big guns for Carolina. Speight collected three hits in four times at bat, and also scored one run and drove in another. Black breaking out of his slump with a bang, slammed a bases-loaded triple in the first and then lined a ground-rule double to left in the third. Ken Willard also collected two hits and drove in two runs to run his season's toal to 23.

Virginia's ace lefty, 6-8 Ned Turnbull, ran into trouble early in the first inning. He walked Dickie Prindle to open the game. Then after Speight singled, he uncorked a wild pitch to move the runners to second and third. Speight and Prindle scored on Ken Boykin's slashing single to left. After striking out Willard, Turnbull's control again deserted him. He hit Bill Brown with a pitch, got John Shaw on a popup and then walked Dick Fleming to load the bases. Dick Solan then replaced Turnbull on the mound, and Black greeted him with his long triple down the left field line to make the score 5-0.

Two more runs in the second gave Leonard a 7-0 advantage. Prindle led off with a single to right. When Speight attempted to sacrifice, first baseman Larry Tate tried to get Prindle at second and all runners were safe. Boykin's sacrifice moved Speight and Prindle to second and third, and Ken Willard drove them in with a line single to left.

The Heels added runs in the seventh and eighth to complete their scoring.

The Cavaliers scored once in the third and sixth and twice in the eighth off Leonard.

The Tar Heels travel to Winston-Salem Tuesday to meet the second-place Wake Forest Demon Deacons.

Billy Cunningham Is Elected Captain

Billy Cunningham, North Carolina's All-America center, will captain the 1964-65 Tar Heels.

The official tapping of the New Yorker for the task of leading the squad was announced here at the recent basketball banquet. Said Coach Dean Smith: "Billy's name was on every ballot but one—his own."

Cunningham, the 6-5, 210-pounder who recently returned from the Olympic trials, shared extra honors during the night with Charlie Shaffer, Jr. The Most Valuable Player trophy, awarded by E. Carrington Smith, went hands-down to Cunningham. Shaffer came in for two choice awards.

The Foy Roberson, Jr., Memorial Award, exemplifying the player who has done the most for team morale and sportsmanship, went to Shaffer. It was presented by Dr. Oliver Cornwell, head of the physical education department. Shaffer, who is president of his senior class, also took the Educational Foundation watch as the outstanding senior.

Shaffer, in accepting his recognition, said: "We have received much from our year of basketball at Carolina and we learned much from Coach Smith. Our only regret is we did not give enough in return."

The Tar Heels finished with a 12-12 record and it was this to which Shaffer referred. However Coach Smith, in answering, said: "This was a fine group of young men and we had our accomplishments. We became the first UNC team to defeat Indiana. We made a tremendous comeback, after a slow regular season wind-up, in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament."

Cunningham, who succeeds Shaffer and Mike Cooke as team leader, has been a unanimous Atlantic Coast Conference all-star for the past two seasons. He led the team in scoring and rebounding last season, as he did his sophomore year.

Monogram awards were made to the varsity and freshmen by coaches Smith and Ken Rosemond. Among those who made brief talks were Chancellor William B. Aycock and Athletic Director Chuck Erickson.

Tracksters Winners

The UNC Track team yesterday topped Duke, 84-60, led by outstanding performances by Dale White and Harvey Whitley.

White won the 100 and 220 yard dashes, and was a key member of the 440 team. He personally accounted for 11½ points. Whitley won both the broad jump and the triple jump for 10 points.

Nick Street took the javelin for UNC's only victory in the javelin-shot-discus competition. Mike Folk defeated teammates Jim Meade and Art Mailett for the two mile, and the team of Al Dobritch, Adger Stokes, John McNinch, and White took the 440 relay.

The win stretches their record to 4-3 on the season in dual competition. The ACC Chompionships May 8-9 at College Park, Maryland is the only remaining action.

UNC Coed Beauties Are Denied Entry In 'Miss Orange County'

Jaycee Decision Upsets Nye, Coeds

The Chapel Hill Jaycees have barred University coeds from competing in the Miss Orange County Beauty Pageant, sparking controversy among those who feel coeds should be allowed to enter.

Word of the ruling came Sunday from the Jaycees, sponsors of the pageant.

Although the ruling was more or less in effect last year, it was not enforced because no coeds entered the contest. This year, however, several coeds have shown an interest in the pageant, but were later told they were ineligible.

"Up until last year, we had coeds entered in the contest, and in the past, many of them had been winners," Gardner said.

"However, last year the ruling was altered to permit entry only by those girls who lived in Orange County."

Gardner said when coeds entered the contest, it sometimes stifled the competitive spirit of many Orange County high school girls. "Since the high school girls didn't want to face the stiffer competition from coeds and some Jaycees thought we should bring the contest closer to home, we decided to limit entries to residents of Orange County.

"The winners must be able to participate in local and out-of-county appearances, and sometimes a coed just isn't able to meet these obligations, said Gardner.

Miss Sandi Pickett, a University coed, had planned to enter the pageant, but was notified Thursday of her apparent disqualification. Miss Pickett, obviously upset by the ruling, cited a lack of communication between members of the Jaycees and pageant officials as the main reason of the embarrassing incident.

"No one seems to know what's going on," Miss Pickett said. "I told Mrs. Watkins (chairman of the pageant) that I wanted to enter, and she said there might be a question of my eligibility. But she said she would let me know.

"Well, she didn't contact me, and I figured everything was all right, so I began to practice earnestly on the talent I was going to use. When I finally talked with Mrs. Watkins again, she told me I had been disqualified.

"Why lidn't they tell us at the beginning?" she queried. "After planning on entering the contest and after telling my friends about it, they tell me I can't enter. There seems to be a lack of organization and communication, and I hope no other coed will be affected by it in the future," added Miss Pickett.

The last coed to win the title (then known as the Miss Chapel Hill contest) was Miss Dorcas Henley, who reached the finals of the Miss North Carolina Pageant. She was sponsored by local merchant Kemp Battle Nye, who still believes coeds should be allowed to enter the contest.

"I've had at least six coeds ask me what they to do to enter the contest. The girls are a real part of the community. Many of them spend most of their time here in Chapel Hill and should be able to enjoy the benefits that the community offers them," Nye said.

"After all," he added, "what would Chapel Hill do without these students, especially the 2,000 coeds."

Drum, Drum, We Found The Drum?

Up until yesterday afternoon, the bass drum at the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra couldn't be beat.

Nobody knew where it was.

It seems that while returning home from a recent concert in Wilson, the drum, its mallet, and its stand all disappeared from the open-truck in which it was riding.

The Symphony thought of running an ad in the lost and found columns: "Lost — One large, round, black case, containing a three-foot bass drum along a 15-mile stretch of U.S. 70 beginning three miles west of Clayton."

Officials wearily reported that extensive searches in the area had not uncovered the missing drum.

Yesterday, when hope was nearly lost, Hiram Black, field representative for the Symphony received a call from Mr. Karl W. Pittman of Raleigh saying the prodigal drum had found its way home.

Mr. Pittman had found the drum lying in the middle of U.S. 42. In the black of night he had mistaken it for a big black bear.

And so, the $215 tom-tom is safe at home with those who love it.

Drums are like that. They go out and get tight in the head and then wander off someplace. If it belonged to us, we'd take it out behind the wood section and beat it good!

Two Charged With Crime Lab Theft

The Crime Laboratory of the UNC Institute of Government found itself knee-deep in crime this weekend.

Reported missing from the lab over the weekend were eight pistols, two shotguns and a rifle, apparently stolen by burglers who broke a back window to gain entrance to the building.

Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake reported yesterday that two men had been arrested and charged with the theft.

The men, Ralph Sherman Rivers, 18, of Durham and Leroy Farrington, 27, of Chapel Hill were apprehended in Fredericksburg, Va. when the car they were driving was recognized by Fredericksburg police as one stolen from a UNC student Saturday night.

"When we learned the car was stolen," said Blake, "we sent it out over the police teletype to Virginia. They picked up the stolen car and the guns were found inside."

Blake said Farrington had been arrested before by Chapel Hill Police under the name of Leroy Watson.

He had just recently been released on $1000 bond awaiting trial for another larceny charge. Blake indicated the bond would be forfeited.

Police said they would recover the car and weapons and return the suspects here today.

Senior Class Festivities Today And Tomorrow

Free class cuts, free beer, parting shots, barefoot day, combo party, permanent class officers. These are just a few highlights of the Senior Class festivities which will be held today and Wednesday.

Festivities begin this afternoon with an all-important meeting at Gerrard Hall in which permanent class officers and a Mr. Alumnus and Miss Alumna will be elected.

Even more important, free beer passes will be given out to exchange for the real thing at a picnic to be held at Hogan's Lake Wednesday from 3 to 7 p.m. Also at today's meeting, free movie passes, and reduced-rate tickets to play golf will be issued.

Tonight at 8 in Gerrard, eight graduating seniors, Larry McDevitt, Gerry Good, Gary Blanchard, Stewart Saunders, Dave Ethridge, Carolyn Pinyoun, Judy Frieder and Junior Edge will deliver a "Parting Shots," session.

Little David and the Wanderers will perform at a Woollen Gym dance Wednesday night from 8 to midnight. Senior girls have late permission.

And besides all this, you can go barefoot and cut class.

Coming This Week

This week's issues of the DTH will be overflowing with all sorts of action-packed stories. Like, well, like Pete Gammons' account of this afternoon's UNC-Wake Forest baseball game on tomorrow's sports page. Then on Thursday, that deuce of a reporter Kerry Sipe will deliver the third installment of his series on UNC personalities—this time an expose of that demon of Saunders Hall, Billy Geer. All this and Peanuts too! The whole Tar Heel staff is flunking out of school in order to bring you these stories. So, please read them closely, and laugh loudly.

Aycock Calls Speaker-Ban 'Injurious'

Chancellor Calls The Law An Act Of An Over-Protective Legislature

Chancellor William B. Aycock labeled North Carolina's anti-communist Speaker Ban Law, "unwise, unnecessary and injurious," in a speech during the annual Parents' Day ceremonies here Sunday.

He said the law, which was passed in the waning moments of the 1963 Legislature and which bans Communists, Fifth Amendment Pleaders and advocates of the overthrow of the government from speaking at state-supported college campuses, was the act of an "over-protective" Legislature.

"It was passed," he said, "by our friends, not by our enemies, and was done out of love, although a misplaced love, that does injury to the normal maturing of students.

"It is like the misplaced love, the overprotective love of a mother who smothers her child," he said.

Aycock said the University and other tax-supported colleges and universities "are singled out for penalties and punishments" that were not applied to other citizens of North Carolina, "nor anywhere else in the nation."

Speaking, not as Chancellor, but as the father of a University student, Aycock said, "I do not ask for any special protection that does not exist for other citizens outside the university, but I also ask that the University community not be tied down with restrictions that are not applicable to others who are not students and faculty.

"It is a pity," he added, "that precisely at the time we are so fortunate in material resources for support of the University we suffer a dilution of freedom that has served the University of North Carolina, in particular, and the State of North Carolina, in general, during so many decades of widespread poverty.

"In the 169 years of University history," he continued, "a laboratory for living has been provided here. Those who would, out of love, undermine its spirit and fetter its practice of freedom, do it as great harm as those who deliberately undertake to destroy it."

Price Named New Writer In Residence

Prize-winning author Reynolds Price will serve as UNC's second writer-in-residence beginning next spring. Price will replace novelist John Knowles, who pioneered the residence program this year.

"I am honored by the invitation and pleased at the prospect of a semester in Chapel Hill," Price said at a reception in his honor last week. "My great hope is to meet and talk with as many as possible of those students who are interested in writing and reading.

"My great fear is that such people will remain as usual invisible. I invite their acquaintance," he said.

Price, who achieved rapid fame with the publication of his first novel, "A Long and Happy Life," has served this past year with the Duke University Department of English.

A North Carolina native, Price won the William Faulkner Foundation Award in 1962, given for the most notable first novel published by an American during the year. One of his short stories was included in the 1961 collection of O. Henry Award short story winners.

His latest publication is "The Names and Faces of Heroes," a collection of short stories published in 1963.

Pete Ivey—Traded Gloves For Typewriter

By DENNIS SANDERS

In 1935, A. G. "Pete" Ivey traded his boxing gloves and status in the UNC bantam-weight class for a typewriter.

That was 29 years ago, and the personable director of the UNC News Bureau hasn't regretted it since.

"I was just mediocre as a boxer," Pete said. "I like to brag about it, but I didn't box much after my first two years at Carolina."

For the past nine years, since 1955, Pete has directed the news of UNC as head of the Carolina News Bureau, and during that period he's called the Bynum "halls of ivey" his second home.

To the left of the main office, Pete sat behind a cluttered but reasonably well-organized desk, reliving the old days.

"I came out of Rocky Mount High School and, believe it or not, I wrote a column in the high school paper on 'advice to the lovelorn,'" Pete said. "I was 'Dr. Pi.'"

Then came four years at UNC, where Pete boxed a little and wrote a lot.

"One of my biggest aspirations was to come to Carolina as a boxer and to edit the humor magazine," Pete said.

Majoring in liberal arts and journalism, Pete was elected editor of the "Buccaneer," student humor magazine during his sophomore year. "Those were the depression years," he recalled, "and I was also editor of the Alumni Review and later was GM director for two years."

On leaving Carolina, Pete realized his desire to become a newspaperman by catching on with the Winston-Salem Twin City Sentinel, where he was a reporter and columnist for four years.

"I was drafted in 1942 and one of my stops was at the Aberdeen Proving Grounds in Maryland. I was put in charge of service clubs, the library, theatres and then I went to Officer Candidate School," Pete said.

"Somehow," he continued, "my name came up in the IBM files as a journalist, and I was sent to Washington with Headquarters Co. Then came the Pacific, the Philippine Islands, Tokyo and Korea." Pete recalled. "I established recreational-morale building type programs."

Although he was an active serviceman, Pete didn't forget the wounded veterans: "I established about 125 papers in veterans hospitals. These were edited by the patients themselves."

After the war, it was back to Winston-Salem for Pete, who was named editor of the editorial page.

"I wrote editorials and won a first-place prize in that field, and I organized the North Carolina Conference of Editorial Writers," he remembered.

In 1951, Pete was awarded a journalism fellowship to Harvard University, where he spent a year studying.

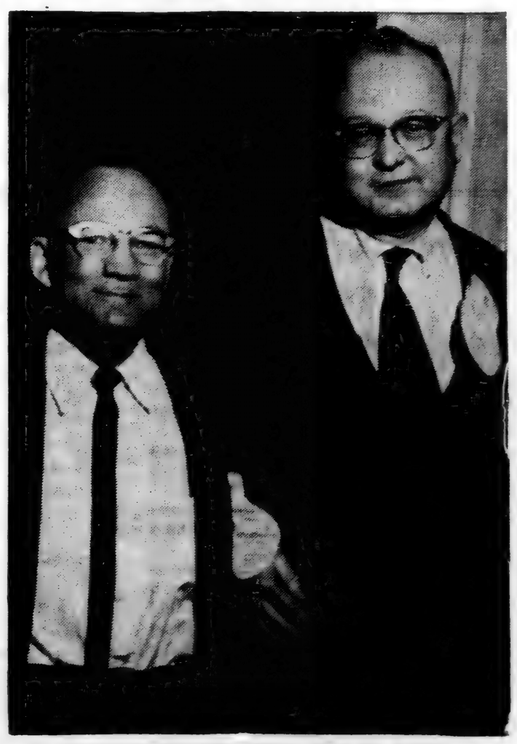
"That was one of the greatest years. I took my family and studied race relations, southern economics, history, poetry and novel and short story writing," he said.

The family Pete referred to consists of his wife, Helene, and two daughters.

"My wife was a student here in the 1930's," Pete said, "and Sally, our oldest daughter, is a freshman this year. Helene, our youngest, is a ninth-grader."

Some of Pete's fondness for the varies in life must have rubbed off on his wife, for she "is a social worker, teacher, former reporter, and deals in real estate with the Ivey Realty Co."

In September of 1955, Pete ("the nickname just stuck with me; in a large family like the one I came from, we all had one") was offered his position at the News Bureau. And he's enjoyed every minute of it.



NORMENT QUARLES (LEFT) AND PETE IVEY
. . . . Two Old Boxers Get Together

'All News — Good And Bad'

By DENNIS SANDERS

The slow hum of a copying machine and the methodical "click-click-click" of a typewiter filled the air as Pete Ivey enumerated his responsibilities as head of the UNC News Bureau.

"Our objective," said the short, round-faced man, "is to present UNC, its accomplishments and achievements, both good and bad, to the public.

"Through the years, we've built a philosophy here to put out all the news and never hold any back. When papers see a UNC press release, they know it's accurate and full," he added.

Pete writes a column in the Chapel Hill Weekly on Carolina and does a radio roundup every Saturday evening over WUNC-FM.

"There are 47 daily papers and 127 weekly papers that we cater to, and we see that they get the news."

"How do we do it? Well, we have a staff of around eight people—myself, four writers, a secretary and usually a few journalism students. We establish a liaison with every department who sends us information and we just seem to know by experience where the news is," Pete added.

"I guess our most difficult task is to interpret scientiic news so the average reader can understand it." With that, Pete pointed with pride to a plaque given the bureau by a scientific conference in Florida: "for outstanding effort to further public understanding of university research."

"We're proud of that . . . it's hard to make a complex scientific paper simple.

"But the first thing," he concluded, "is to do the job."

The Fine Arts Festival Is On The Way

The success of the Carolina Symposium brought many comments, not the least of which was, "Why don't they do this every year, instead of every other?"

Student Government went to work, and Shazam, we are to have a Fine Arts Festival next year. The idea had been kicked around ever since Bob Spearman entered legislature—it was one of his pet ideas and work on it started then. But the Symposium's success provided the impetus to really get it into action, and next year it will be a reality.

The festival is a joint project of Student Government and the Department of Journalism, RTVMP, English, Dramatic Arts, Music and Art. The proposed format is to have a performance during the evening and the following afternoon have a panel discussion with the author, composer or director and a critic or other authority in the field.

For example, a quality film, such as "America, America", would be shown at night and the following afternoon Elia Kazan, the author and director, would be on a panel with, say Bosley Crowther, critic-at-large for the New York Times.

Of course, Kazan is but an example, for he once took the Fifth Amendment before the House Subcommittee on Un-American Activities, and you know what that means.

The Festival would be held Sunday through Thursday during the first full week in April, roughly a comparable time with the Symposium.

Spearman's appointments to head the Student Government part of the program — Henry Aldridge and James Meredith—are excellent. They have had experience with the Symposium, and are highly qualified as judges of talent the students would like to hear.

Their idea of having a jazz concert the final night reflects this.

The Festival, as it now is planned, will have about 15 prominent participants—such names as Crowther, Archibald MacLeish and Roger Sessioms are being considered.

It's going to cost a lot of money, perhaps as much as the Symposium. But it will be worth it, and we hope the departments will throw their full support behind the idea. If the Festival is a success in its first year, then it has a far better chance of being successful in ensuing years.

It is projects such as this which make Carolina great, and this is a project worthy of Carolina. We hope it becomes a reality.

'Run Hard To Stand Still'

The Charlotte Observer

It is often said that North Carolina and other Southern states must "run hard to stand still" in comparison with other states in such vital concerns as wealth and education.

The latest statistic to come out of the Census Bureau underscores this solemn fact.

Personal income for all North Carolinians went up by $435 million in 1963, raising the state's per capita income figure from $1,742 to $1,813. That was a considerable gain of 5 per cent for the state—but the average gain for the nation as a whole was also 5 per cent.

Hence North Carolina stood still during 1963 with relation to her sister states, ranking eighth from the bottom again. Viewed from another direction, Mr. Average Tar Heel is about nine years behind Mr. Average American in personal income; in 1955 the per capita figure for the United States was a mite higher ($53) than the North Carolina figure for 1963.

Simply put, this means that most Americans live better — at least in the things that money can buy — than most North Carolinians do.

The last two state administrations have kept the state "running hard," trying to improve the lot of our citizens. Gov. Hodges launched a drive to bring new jobs into the state. Gov. Sanford has continued that drive, and has encouraged the creation of more wealth by upgrading all levels of education and initiating a program to turn poverty-stricken people into effective, wage-earning citizens.

"Running hard," we have inched ahead in some fields, held our own in others. The promise is always there that continuous effort and progressive leaders will eventually thrust us into what Sanford calls "the mainstream of America," so that North Carolinians will be as well off as any other Americans.

Yet even if we only inch ahead or merely hold our own, it is infinitely better than backsliding. North Carolinians should bear that in mind when they are deciding who will get their vote for governor.

Windy But Serene

Those hurricane headlines in the daily papers this weekend weren't kidding. Man, what a wind!

We ventured to the beach for the weekend to get some material for term papers (don't laugh, it's true) as well as relax, and immediately found ourselves thrust into a howling gale. Gusts approached 75 miles per hour, and the sea looked as though Neptune had found his eggbeater.

A pier near our motel took a fearful beating—it swayed and twisted, but somehow it, and the idiots who were fishing on it, withstood the blow.

Needless to say, there was no sun all weekend. But there also were no telephone calls, no meetings, no deadlines or no irate people screaming at us. It was great, and we heartly recommend it.

Even during hurricanes.

Hidden Poor Are Revealed

By PETER RANGE

("The Other American: Poverty in the United States" by Michael Harrington; Penquin Special Edition, 1963; 186 pp.; $.95).

"To be sure, the other America is not impoverished in the same sense as those poor nations where millions cling to hunger as a defense against starvation. This country has escaped such extremes. That does not change the fact that tens of millions of Americans are, at this very moment, maimed in body and spirit, existing at levels beneath those necessary for human decency."

Michael Harrington is an angry young man (36), to be sure. Yet the substance of his research on the scene of American poverty discloses irrefutable evidence that there are indeed "two nations" within the borders of the world's richest country. The one nation is that which all of us know, the world of comfort, middle-class values and various forms of super-affluence.

The other nation is comprised of thirty to fifty million Americans (Harrington very adequately acknowledges other views as to the size of impoverished America) who not only live far below the standards of the rest of us but below standards acceptable anywhere in the twentieth-century Western world.

The face of poverty has many aspects: the industrial poor, the rural poor, the migrant workers, the Bowery alcoholics, the poor intellectuals of the Village, the racial minorities and — worst of all—the aged poor. Yet all these aspects are interrelated and form a gargantuan, self-sustaining disease which must be fought on many fronts.

And, tragically, welfare legislation (social security, minimum wage, etc.) does least to help those needing it most.

By-products of the whole system are greater psychological disturbances among the poor and the various system of replacing old slums with not enough new housing units, soon doomed to the level of slum housing again.

Most significant about the other America, the huge shamefully impoverished side of a wealthy nation, is (1) that it is hidden from view and unknown, swept under the carpet by a blind, rich unsympathetic society, and (2) that poverty is a way of life, an institutionalized sub-culture with intricately related aspects which augment one another and a system of blocks which help keep the poor poor and, worst of all, render them hopeless, "maimed in spirit."

Harrington's study is revealing, shocking, moving and intimate. His factual reliability is supplemented with wide first-hand experience with America's poor. One feels personally involved with the human beings bound by the culture of poverty. While one might have wished for more comparisons with the same problems and their solution in other Western countries, Harrington's assertion that our Federal government is the only agent large enough to cope with the problem is valid and his specific suggestions make a viable basis for attacking "the other America."

LBJ Image Is Emerging

A noticeable change has come over the American press in its attitude toward President Johnson and with it new understanding.

The American public is just now beginning to grasp the image that Johnson has been building for himself over the last six months—that of the homespun, folksy second-generation frontierscan.

The odd thing about it is that it has taken us this long to figure him out.

The to the matter seems to be the fact that we are only just now getting over the deep-seated shock of the Kennedy assassination.

I, and I'm sure many others, will never forget the first awful disillusionment in our President when I first heard him speak in public as President last November. His nasal, backwoods twang combined with the lack of anything exciting in the content of his speech, was difficult to adjust to after the noble dialectic of our former leader.

Kennedy, like all the strong Presidents before him, had established an indelible image on the minds of all Americans and of all Americans and of the world. It was a highly popular image not easily forgotten, for both Republican and Democrat.

Johnson's speaking voice and the content of his speeches were emblematic of the dramatic difference in the characters of the two men.

The nation soon found itself with an entirely different sort of leader, one who got things done in Washington without dramatizing his causes for the people through rousing speeches. He arose as an old hand at the old game of pressure and influence on Capitol Hill, a skill which had bought him fame as Senate majority leader.

The press too was continually surprised and occasionally shocked at the casual behavior of the new President. Being formerly accustomed to the formality and almost-awe of a Kennedy press conference, they were somewhat baffled when asked to breakfast by the new President or taken on beer-swigging mad-cap Sunday drives through the Texas countryside. He danced with their wives and shot the breeze on the balcony until the wee small hours, coming up with a new surprise every minute.

Kennedy, on the other hand, was the closest thing to a king America has had—not in the sense that he tried to perpetuate a "reign" or attempted to grab absolute power. Rather he had some of the aura about him that only a great leader can possess. He demanded that extra bit of universal respect.

He could thrill the people with a Sorensen cliche or merely by appearing in public. He had that charismatic quality that only the best actors and politicians are blessed with.

He had also the qualities of youth and vitality. One had trouble being convinced by President Eisenhower on the merits of the national physical fitness program, but with Kennedy it was more believable.

Johnson has already been comcowboy, comedian and senator pared with Will Rogers, the old from Oklahoma. Although the likeness is not that strong, it's not a bad analogy.

Johnson has that folks-backhomey quality that Rogers had, that same casual wit. He likes to talk to just about anyone and on the subject of just about anything. One can picture him sitting on the cracker barrel of the old country store weaving a yarn about the strange folks over in the next county or the local bootlegger.

He's a 19th century frontiersman with a 20th century political education—the sort of man who might have learned his culture from Mark Twain and his politics from the Great Depression (the latter, in fact, is pretty close to the truth).

He is in many respects a latter-day New Dealer who has had the time and experience to learn the mistakes of that period while reaping all the good ideas and programs off the top.

Certainly his war on poverty legislation resembles some of the New Deal pump-priming. He received his political education from Franklin D. Roosevelt and has applied it to the problems of the '60's.

The Kennedy intellectual approach has vanished and the much less exciting pragmatic method has replaced it. Scholars, young people and the press, the traditional liberals, have all sought to understand that replacement for six months. Finally they have found the right pigeon-hole in their minds, and they are able to comprehend their new President.

Wellman Returns Bombs

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Louis Schmier, in his strenuous justification of mass area bombing, starts by assuming that I have not "seen fit to indulge in some preliminary historical research." The comment is particularly ill-timed, for his letter discloses that he has read none of the recent studies of the joint Anglo-American air attack that wiped out Dresden when World War II was almost over. If he had read Irving's book, or R.H.S. Crossman's recent article in Esquire, he would not proceed to say: "Dresden and hemnitz were military and civilian communication centers for the direction of the German war effort in the east." If he really clings to this argument, he should be able to explain why Dresden was never once bombed until February of 1945 when it was jampacked with eastern fugitives. Prior to this, the R.A.F. had left it completely alone, simply because there was no adequate pretext for destroying a city which had no war industries.

At the time of this massacre, which would have disgraced Attila, the R.A.F. spokesman claimed that the city had suddenly been converted into a center of troop movements. Our American press encouraged rumors that the Russians had requested the attack. The first story is demolished by General J. F. C. Fuller in at least one of his books; the second is exploded by Crossman. This attack on Dresden was not a tactical raid, but an area bombing mission in which we deliberately created a firestorm that killed at least 120,000 civilians in a night and a day. The Dresden railroads were in full operation three days after the last bomb.

Schmier counsels me to "read some very interesting documents in the British Air Ministry." I call his attention to a memorandum which Winston Churchill addressed to his chiefs of staff on March 28, 1945: "It seems to me that the moment has come when the question of bombing of German cities simply for the sake of increasing the terror, though under other pretexts, should be reviewed. . . . I feel the need for more precise concentration upon military objectives . . . rather than on mere acts of terror and wanton destruction." The chiefs of the Air Staff objected to this minute so vigorously that the Prime Minister rewrote it, but the original survived and is published in David Irving's book. Churchill, who apparently did not expect the shock waves that swept through the civilized world after the bombing, seems to have written this in the hope of escaping responsibility. But he played a large part in planning the attack, and if he regretted it so shortly afterwards, no comment seems necessary.

I am frankly amazed by one of Schmier's key paragraphs: "It is very difficult to distinguish soldiers from civilians, or to hit a tank or any other military vehicle without doing damage to the people surrounding it, be they soldiers or civilians. It is true that the allied fighter pilots were very skilled in their profession, but it is too much to ask of them the skill of a sniper."

On the face of it, that is Schmier's defense of a bombing mission the very purpose of which was to kill the maximum number of civilians. That is his justification for the special assignment given to our Mustang fighters, which machine-gunned thousands of survivors in the Elbe meadows. In this case they displayed, if not the skill of a sniper, at least the skill of fighter pilots who knew how to dive over refugee columns and shoot them up. If Schmier's type of thinking is still widespread, David Irving's book was even more of a necessity than I had imagined.

Wade Wellman

'Dear Abby' Opens International Mail

I am a nine-year-old boy and I live in a very nice yard that I always play in. I fixed this yard up all by myself. My mother says that only certain children can play with me in my yard which I think is OK.

However, some bad boys who live up the street keep coming over and teasing me. Every time that I want to play with the new toys that my Uncle Nick sent me these boys keep teasing me. In fact, these boys even told all the other kids in the neighborhood not to play with me and not to talk with me. They said that I was selfish and mean and threw rocks into their yards. I only want to have fun with the toys that my uncle sent and I don't throw rocks and all that nasty stuff that these bad boys said that I do. They won't let me join their organization either.

I think that these boys are just jealous because my toys are just as good as their toys. Should I try to play in my own yard with my own toys or should I give them back to my uncle until I get older? These nasty boys even tried to take my toys away once. But I fooled them and wouldn't let them in the gate. Please help me.

Fidel

Dear Fidel:

If these other other children don't stop teasing you I'd give those toys back to your uncle and try to make friends with the other children in the neighborhood. If you throw rocks they may gang up on you and take your toys away from you. Otherwise, maybe your uncle would let you go and live with him and these other children couldn't tease you.

Dear Abby:

I'm so mad I just had to sit down and write to you before I explode. A young man that I've been dating, a tall good looking Frenchman, has started hanging around with a group here in the office that he knows I don't like. We weren't engaged or anything but we have been keeping company for a long time.

He still comes around once in awhile, usually when he wants a couple of dollars until pay day or something, but he never pays any attention to me any more. That sales department crowd is fast and are only out for a good time. I don't want my friend to get hurt and I don't want him to take me for some sort of a sucker. Don't you think that he owes me something for all the time I've spent with him?

Should I tell him to make a choice between that fast crowd and me, or should I hope that he'll come to his senses in time. I'm not getting any younger, Abby. Is all I can see is red!

Lynda-A.

Dear Lyndon:

If this friendship means anything to this friend of yours he'll come back as soon as he sees that this sales department gang is only out for a good time. Don't make too much of it, and I wouldn't be so free with your pocketbook until he does decide to start seeing you again, and on a more intimate basis.

Dear Abby:

Our school is planning to have a big spring dance for all the students, but we have a problem. The faculty said that they will make up the guest list and some students will not be able to come to the dance. The teachers said that the students who don't dance and aren't too smart and who have caused trouble in classes should not be allowed into the dance. All of us kids want the whole student body to come.

The teachers keep changing the guest list every day and now no one knows if all the kids will be invited or not or who will not be invited. I keep telling the teachers, I'm the dance committee chairman, that it is our dance and we can invite whom we want. They just keep saying the same thing over again that the roughnecks and the poorer students shouldn't come. I think that this is ridiculous.

The dance is only a week away and I'm afraid that the kids who don't get invited are really going to be mad and they will blame the committee. What should we do? I don't think teachers have this right!

Hubert

Dear Hubert:

You really do have a problem. I would ask all of the kids who feel the same way that you do to make their feelings known to the teachers. I would also speak to the roughnecks and tell them that they won't get invited if they continue to act up in class. If they show the faculty that they can behave maybe the teachers will change their mind. Maybe some of your friends can teach these non-dancers a few basic steps so that they could attend and have a good time with everyone else. Good luck, those teachers sound tough.

Why won't your wife let you buy this wagon?

"It looks like a bus."
"I wouldn't be caught dead in it."
Do these sound familiar? Your wife is not alone. It is hard to convince some women what sense the VW Station Wagon makes.
Its chunky shape, for instance, allows it to hold more than the biggest conventional wagon. (Yet it is a good four feet shorter, and a lot less exasperating to park.)
Your wife might like the easy way it loads. The wide side doors give her almost 16 sq. ft. for supermarket bags. Or an open baby carriage. Or an antique chest, standing up. Or delicate trees from the nursery. Or even an open playpen.
She can take eight or more Scouts, with cookout gear. She can give the family plenty of sun. (Why no other station wagon has a sun-roof remains a mystery.) She won't ever have to worry about the radiator boiling over. There's no radiator, no water. (The VW engine is air-cooled.)
And if she likes to see where she's going, the VW wagon has incredible visibility.
If these facts don't convince her, then you might as well give up gracefully. (But before you do, bring her in for a drive. And don't be surprised if she does let you buy one.)

Athletes from all of the big four schools converge on the Carolina campus today for the Eighteenth Annual Big 4 Sports Day with UNC playing host and NC State trying to defend their title.

State has won the event for the past three years but are hotly challenged this year by the all-stars from Duke Wake Forest, and Carolina in the meet which has been highly successful in the past years. The big day was organized in 1947, and the standings have UNC with 8 victories, State with 7, Duke with 2, and Wake Forest with 1.

All participants will meet on the main floor of Woollen Gym at 1:30 prior to going to their respective events (except golf, in which participation will begin at 10:30 on Finley Golf Course. Any rules changes and all procedures will be announced, and pictures will be taken. Championship awards will be presented at 5:15 p.m. on the main floor of Woollen Gym.

Competition will be held in the areas of golf, handball, horseshoes, softball, table tennis, tennis, volleyball, badminton, and bowling. At the same time, the and Gun Field Meet will take Eighth Annual Big Four Rod place with competition in archery, skist, target shooting, and trap shooting. The last two events will be held at the American Legion hut.

Golf, supervised by Don Ruth, will start the big day off at Finley Golf Course at 10:30, with a final round to be played at two o'clock. The tournament will be a 18-hole match play.

Handball, supervised by Paul George, will begin at 2:00 in Woollen Gym. Competing for Carolina will be Jack Chaffin, Fred Mueller, Phil Tonne, Jim Magner, Joe Churchill, and Ben Wyench as alternate.

Horseshoes will be held outside of the Tin Can with Cliff Hood supervising. The Carolina roster for this event includes Al Bodford, Ron Henson, Bill Morphus, Andy Holland, Dennis Sherrill, and J. W. Harrell as alternate.

Tennis will be held on the Avery Courts with Bill Killen supervising, and a roster including Don Long, Henry Tonn, Andy Goddard, Courtney Stevens, Jeff Ruday, and alternate Gene Carpening participating.

Softball will take place on Navy Field, bowling at East Gate Shopping Center, and the others at Woollen Gym, all beginning at 2:00.

TAR HEELS PLAY WAKE

The Tar Heels travel to Winston-Salem today with a chance to clinch the ACC baseball championship.

The magic number for the Tar Heels is two. Any combination of Tar Heel wins and Deacon losses totaling two will clinch the crown for the Heels. So if the Tar Heels can beat the Deacons today they will have a ticket to the regional playoffs in Gastonia.

Coach Walter Rabb will go with either Bill Haywood (8-0) or Jerry Davis (2-1) today. Lou Howard (7-1) will probably get the nod from Demon Deacon Coach Jack Stallings.

Will Students Have Say-So On Book-Ex?

Committee Studies Possibility

By KERRY SIPE

A plan to provide the student body with a voice in the operation of the Book Exchange and the other campus stores was announced yesterday by Student Body President Bob Spearman.

Spearman said that a special Campus Stores Committee would be established to give the student a part in the management of stores and to make known to the student body the policies and allocations of revenue required by the campus stores operation.

Bob Jones, chairman of the Student Government Co-Op Committee, has talked with J. Arthur Branch, University business manager, who has expressed willingness to co-operate in the establishment of the committee.

Branch has agreed to chair the committee, which should begin its operation in the spring.

A student group similar to the proposed co-ordination committee met the academic year of 1956-57.

At that time, it attempted to increase the price students received from the sale of used texts, attempted to increase the number of vending machines in residence halls and to obtain better machines to replace outdated ones, investigated the distribution of money from the campus stores and made recommendations for changes in policy, and considered the possibility of building a new campus store in the area of Woollen Gym.

The 1957 committee was the last such attempt at co-ordination.

"The president of the student body at the time, failed to reappoint the committee," said Spearman.

"I have hopes that the new committee will be successful enough to continue," he said. "Although it will serve primarily in an advisory capacity, it will from time to time be able to suggest revisions of the methods of operations of the student stores to make them more efficient and more profitable for the student body.

"Not for almost seven years has the student had any real voice in the operation of this campus institution which was founded in his interests," said Spearman.

"The 1957 committee," said Branch, "was a very fine thing and helped us to keep in touch with student body needs and provided very effective communication."

Thomas A. Shetley, manager of the Book Exchange said, "We bear in mind that the campus stores are an integral part of the University operation. The aims of the University and the student body are also our aims.

"I am very much in favor of a co-ordination committee," he said.

"I have examined the memoirs of Mr. Richie, who was my successor as stores manager. His accounts of the 1957 committee indicate that it was a very fine idea," said Shetley.

"Somebody just got lazy and let it die on the vine," he added.

Spearman indicated that the three administrative members of the committee were to be appointed by the Chancellor. Interviews for the student positions will be held tomorrow and Friday in the Student Government offices.

Senate Leaders Huddle On CR Bill Tuesday

WASHINGTON (UPI) — While some legislators were out bird-watching, Senate leaders and Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy met Tuesday in the first of a series of crucial bipartisan summit meetings to help shape the final form of the Civil Rights Bill.

After Tuesday's two and one-half hour conference, Senate GOP Leader Everett M. Dirksen, Ill., reported "a good deal of agreement" on some of 40 technical, clarifying amendment to the sweeping bill.

Senate Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey, Minn., said there was "considerable progress" and Kennedy himself, who emerged early, said: "I think we are making some progress."

Further staff discussion with Katzenbach and Marshall continued in Dirksen's office Tuesday afternoon.

But Dirksen, who reviewed the amendment situation at a GOP policy luncheon, later told newsmen that:

He does not think the Civil Rights Bill can be passed by the end of May.

—Final action on the pending series of jury trial amendments might not be passed this week if a number of Appalachian area senators fly South with President Johnson Thursday. Johnson will not return until Friday.

—There may be three separate packages of bipartisan amendments, in three groups of increasing controversy, to be offered in that manner.

Outstanding Junior—Jane Dallen

Jane Dallen Chosen Outstanding Jr Coed

Jane Dallen, a political science major from Clinton, Ohio, was presented the Jane Craige Gray Award for most outstanding junior woman Sunday afternoon at a Kappa Delta tea held in her honor.

Miss Dallen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Dallen, is a member of the Debate team, the Junior Class Cabinet and the Symposium Publicity Committee. She is also a co-chairman of the Junior Class Publicity Committee, a delegate to the National Student Association Regional Convention, a member of the Carolina Political Union and treasurer of Pi Beta Phi sorority. She has maintained a 3.56 scholastic average.

The Jane Craige Gray award is presented annually by the Beta Chi chapter of Kappa Delta in memory of the late wife of Gordon Gray, president of the University from 1950-55. It recognizes a woman from the junior class who has proven herself outstanding in character, scholarship and leadership.

The selection committee for this year's recipient included: Dean of women Katherine Carmichael, chairman; the Assistant to the Dean of men, Grant Wheeler; the Retiring President of the Student Body, Mike Lawler (represented by Darst Murphy; the retiring Chairman of the Women's Council, Carolyn Pinion (represented by Patsy Lefler); and Pat St. John, representing the School of Nursing, and Daryl Farrington, assistant to the Dean of Women, both in an advisory capacity.

Charles Shaffer, director of development at UNC, a friend of the late Jane Craige Gray, presented the award to Miss Dallen following a speech by Dean Carmichael.

BROWN SPEAKS

F. C. Brown of the University of Illinois will address the UNC Physics Colloquium, Friday, May 15, at 4 p.m. in room 265 Phillips Hall.

"The F-Center: An Inside-Out Atom" is the title of Brown's address.

Shaw's Torrid Bat Wins 11th Straight

By LARRY TARLETON

The Tar Heels clinched their first Atlantic Coast Conference baseball championship since 1960 yesterday by defeating Wake Forest 3-0 at Winston Salem.

The Heels rode the steady seven-hit pitching of Jerry Davis, and the clutch hitting of catcher John Shaw to victory over the team which was ranked as one of the top teams in the nation at the season's start.

Lefthander Davis was magnificent as he allowed only one extra base hit, a double by Wayne Martin in the ninth, and didn't allow a Deacon baserunner to reach third base. The junior southpaw didn't walk a batter while striking out two Demon Deacons.

The victory stretched the Tar Heel's record to 11-0 in the ACC and 17-5 over-all. Wake Forest is now 5-4 in the conference. Three ACC games now stand between Coach Walt Rabb's boys and a perfect conference slate. The team will make their South Carolina trip this weekend. They meet South Carolina at Columbia Friday and Clemson at Clemson Saturday. Both games will be broadcast on WCHL.

The regular season will conclude next week. Duke will be at Emerson Stadium for a conference game Wednesday, and the Heels will travel to Gastonia for a game with Davidson Friday, then to Blacksburg, Va. to meet Virginia Tech Saturday.

By defeating the Demon Deacons, the Tar Heels earned a ticket to the NCAA District III regionals to be held at Gastonia after school is out.

Shaw, a sophomore catcher from Jonesville, rapped Wake Forest ace Lou Howard for three hits and two rbi's. Howard allowed only seven hits, but three Deacon errors ruined his pitching performance. Dickie Prindle, who had two singles, was the only other Carolina player to collect over one hit. Bill Brown and Gary Black collected the other Tar Heel safeties.

A two-base error by Deacon second baseman Dave Miller led to the first UNC run in the fourth. Brown rapped a sharp grounder to second, and Miller threw into the dirt at first to send Brown to second. Shaw's line single to center scored Brown.

Walks to Willard and Brown, and Shaw's third single of the game in the sixth gave the Heels a 2-0 advantage. Gary Black scored the final Tar Heel run in the ninth.

Sources Say Nikita Ready To Make Deal

LONDON (UPI) — Informed East European diplomatic sources Tuesday indicated Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev would like to work out a peaceful co-existence deal with the United States after the presidential elections this fall.

The indicated deal might be tantamount to a prolonged big power East-West truce.

The Kremlin might pledge hands off in U.S. spheres of interest in exchange for a status quo understanding in Europe. There was no indication however, that Communist Cuba would be included in any non-interference pledge by Moscow.

Western observers said Khrushchev's reported desire for an understanding with the United States apparently was motivated by a number of considerations, including the dispute with Communist China, the high cost of the arms race, and economic pressures at home.

The reports have coincided with the publication in Moscow of an article by Khrushchev titled "On Peace and Peaceful Co-existence." The article was printed by the Soviet magazine Kommunist as a foreward to a collection of Khrushchev's speeches.

In it Khrushchev said the world had achieved "balance of forces" that can prevent war and urged that the arms race be ended. He said the situation gives mankind a new challenge: "Let us compete as to who makes the biggest contribution to strengthening peace."

AROUND THE CAMPUS

Frosh Weekend Coming!

Freshmen! How often have you dreamed of having a good time with a decent date some weekend instead of just getting drunk Saturday night? Salvation is here.

The Freshman Class is filthy rich after its bake sale and merchants' day, and now the class officers have decided to splurge it all on a Freshman Weekend.

Friday night, May 8, the original Clovers and the Vibrators will gas the crowds in the Morehead Parking Lot from 8 to 12 p.m., or in the Tin Can if it rains.

One day doesn't make a weekend, and Saturday from 2 to 4:30 p.m. there will be a hootenanny, probably on the Graham Memorial lawn, featuring local talent.

Guitar Vick and the Swinging Five will hold forth on the Cobb tennis courts Saturday night from 8 to 12.

All Freshmen are, of course, cordially invited to attend. Getting the girl? Well, that's your problem. The class officers can only go so far.

Going, Going, Gone . . .

Some of the prized possessions of Bob Hope, Audrey Hepburn, Richard Chamberlain, Miss America and Ella Fitzgerald will be auctioned away in Gerrard Hall next Monday at 7 p.m.

These famous celebrities aren't destitute. It's just that when the Student Nurses' Association told them money was urgently needed to send several nurses to the Association's national convention, what could they say?

Kemp Nye and Jim Heavner will auction off the useful and not so useful items at bargain prices.

Make some poor nurses happy next week. Don't forget to attend the auction, and don't forget to bring plenty of money.

SG Interviews Today

Interviews for Summer School Student Government positions will be held today through Friday from 2 to 5 p.m. on the second floor of Graham Memorial.

Student Body President Bob Spearman will interview applicants for acting president, acting secretary-treasurer, acting assistant attorneys general, five acting members each for the Men's and Women's Councils and three members of the Summer School Student Government Board.

Interested students may secure an appointment by calling 933-1257.

Author Harrington Pays Visit

Michael Harrington, author of a key book against poverty is now at the University and will remain here through Friday. "The Other America: Poverty in the United States" has been acclaimed as a work of great influence in the current anti-poverty drive of the federal government.

While on campus, Harrington, a consultant-on-call of President Johnson, is meeting with students to talk about poverty. This morning, he will speak to a political science class, and at noon will have an informal lunch with a group of students. This evening, he will speak in Raleigh at the United Church. Sponsoring him there is the Institute of Religion.

Thursday morning, Harrington will visit a sociology class at North Carolina College in Durham. At 7 p.m. that evening, he will deliver his main address at a dinner in the South Room of Lenoir Hall. "Politics, Poverty and Social Change" will be the topic of his talk. Tickets at $2.00 are still available at the Y office for the banquet and speech.

DANCING IN BATHING SUITS

Carolina's first combo and pool party will be held Saturday at Kessing Outdoor Pool behind Woollen Gym.

The MRC and the CWC are co-sponsoring the twist-and-swim-affair from 1-4 p.m.

Dancing in bathing suits should come as a welcome relief to those who wish to shed their class attire for the afternoon. The Monzas combo will provide music.

This Weekend At BVP

Sidewalk Art Show Coming

The sixth annual Sidewalk Art Show will be held this Friday through Sunday in front of Battle-Vance-Pettigrew Hall on Franklin Street.

The show, which is sponsored by the University Art League, will feature works by various artists through the Triangle Area.

The exhibit will be open to the public from noon to sunset Friday; from 9 a.m. until sunset on Saturday; and from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Any student or other artists from the Triangle Area are invited to enter their work on May 6th or 7th between 1 and 6 p.m. at GM. Entry fee is $1.00 for up to 10 works, and entries may consist of paintings, sculpture, prints, drawings, pottery. Paintings must be stripped or taped. Prints and drawings must be framed or matted.

The Chapel Hill Sidewalk Art Show has met with mounting success in the past few years by featuring great variety and many outstanding works by students and area artists. Purchases in the 1963 Sidewalk Show amounted to over $1500.00 and the University Art League expects this year's show to be an even better success.

The University Art League is headed by UNC students Jeff Bayer, president, Kay Travis, chairman, and Gerry Butler, secretary-treasurer.

NC Symphony, Outdoor Drama Come To Town Thursday

Concert In Memorial Hall

The North Carolina Symphony, under the direction of Dr. Benjamin Swalin, will present its annual evening concert in Chapel Hill Thursday at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall. Elain Skorodin, violinist will appear as guest artist. UNC students and their spouses will be admitted free through the courtesy of Graham Memorial.

Admission is by membership in the Symphony. UNC students and their wives will be admitted free through the courtesy of Graham Memorial. The performance is dedicated to the late Russell Grumman.

The program will open with Weber's Overture to the opera "Euryanthe," followed by Symphony No. II in D major, Opus 73 by Brahms. Elaine Skorodin will join Mr. Swalin and the State Symphony in a performance of Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole."

Excerpts from Stravinsky's ballet, "Petrouchka," will conclude the program.

Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole" was written for the Spanish violinist, Pable de Sarasate, in 1875. It is a favorite in the violin repertoire with facile lightness, piquant rhythms, sensuous melodies, and fine technical display.

"Petrouchka" is one of Stravinsky's major works and a landmark of 20th century music (1911). The puppet Petrouchka and the other characters in the ballet seem to reflect the common experiences of people everywhere. Part II has an effective role for the piano as Petrouchka broods in his room. Sara Beth Hearn, of the music faculty at Woman's College will be the piano soloist.

The Orchestra's appearances here are supported by the Chapel Hill Chapter of the North Carolina Symphony Society through the sale of memberships in the Society. Memberships are not only valid for admission to evening performances throughout the State, but also make possible the free matinees for school children.

'The Braggart Soldier'

Half-price tickets for "Student Night" at the Carolina Playmakers production of "The Braggart Soldier" went on sale yesterday in Y-Court and at the Graham Memorial Information Desk. Thursday evening has been set for "Student Night" for the final production, being staged in the Forest Theatre, of the Playmakers current season.

Directed by Kai Jurgenson of the Playmakers staff, "The Braggart Soldier" includes settings by Tommy Rezzuto, lighting by Russell Graves, and a promise from the U. S. Weather Bureau of fair skies and warming weather for the four-performance run. After the Thursday performance which is reserved for UNC students and their dates, the Plautus farce will open to the general public for the Friday, Saturday, and Sunday performances.

Translated and adapted by Dr. Albert I. Suskin of the UNC Department of Classics, "The Braggart Soldier" is credited with being the first play to depict the now-familiar prototype of the vainglorious military man who is all talk and no action. Portraying the title role of Pyrgopolynices is Graham Pollock of Gatesville, a UNC senior well-known to Playmakers audiences for his roles this season in "Little Mary Sunshine" and "The Fantasticks." The cast, made up entirely of UNC students, also features Margaret Cathell, Lise Knox, Laurel Dykstra, Ed Kenestrick, Tom Benenson and Arnold Wengrow in important roles.

"Student Night" ticket sales will continue through Thursday, in Y-Court and at GM, and, if still available, will be sold at the Forest Theatre box office on Thursday night. All tickets are general admission, and sell for one dollar.

Curtain time Thursday is 8:30 p.m.

The Civil Rights Bill: Part I

The Civil Rights Bill of 1963, certainly the most controversial piece of legislation to be introduced in Congress in many years, is now in the filibuster stage in the Senate.

Of course, the length of the bill makes it impossible to reprint in the DTH—we don't have the space.

But the Durham Morning Herald, utilizing the services of the Congressional Quarterly, is reprinting all sections of the bill. Certainly, it is not as good as reading the bill itself, and if you wish to do so we have several copies on hand in the office.

So here are the first four sections of the bill. We urge you to read them closely.

PREAMBLE: "An act to enforce the constitutional right to vote, to confer jurisdiction upon the district courts of the United States to provide injunctive relief against discrimination in public accommodations, to authorize the attorney general to institute suits to protect constitutional rights in public facilities and public education, to extend the Commission on Civil Rights, to prevent discrimination in federally assisted programs, to establish a Commission on Equal Employment Opportunity and for other purposes."

TITLE I—VOTING RIGHTS. In voting for federal elections, bar unequal application of voting registration requirements, denial of the right to vote because of errors or omissions on record of applications, if not material in determining voter eligibility, and the use of literacy tests not taken in writing, unless the applicant requests and state law permits oral literacy tests. Make a six-grade education a rebuttable presumption of literacy. Authorize the attorney general to request three-judge federal courts to hear voting rights suits and direct federal courts to expedite voting suits.

TITLE II—PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS. Bar discrimination on grounds of race, color, religion or national origin in any public accommodation enumerated below, if discrimination or segregation in such an accommodation is "supported" by state laws or action, if lodgings are provided to transient guests or interstate travelers are served or if a substantial portion of the goods sold or entertainment presented moves in interstate commerce. Covered were restaurants, cafeterias, lunch rooms, lunch counters, soda fountains, gasoline stations, motion picture houses, theaters, concert halls, sports arenas, stadiums, or any hotel, motel or lodging house except owner-occupied units with five or less rooms for rent (the so-called "Mrs. Murphy" clause). Not specifically covered: barber shops, retail stores, places of amusement such as bowling alleys, or bona fide private clubs. But any establishment within or containing an accommodation otherwise covered was brought under the terms of the title. Thus, a store with a lunch counter would be covered.

Permit anyone denied access to the accommodations covered to sue in court for preventive relief through civil injunction, and authorize the attorney general to bring such a suit if the purposes of the title would be "materially furthered" by such action.

TITLE III—PUBLIC FACILITIES. Intervention in Civil Rights Suits. Upon written complaint of aggrieved individuals, permit Justice Department suits to secure desegregation of state or locally owned, operated or managed public facilities when the attorney general certifies that the aggrieved persons are unable to initiate or maintain appropriate legal proceedings because of financial limitations or potential economic or other injury to themselves or their families.

Also, permit the attorney general to intervene in already filed suits in the federal courts where persons have alleged deprivation of equal protection of the laws on account of race, color religion or national origin. (This section was not limited to public facility cases.)

TITLE IV—PUBLIC EDUCATION. Require the U.S. Office of Education to report within two years on progress of school desegregation at all levels; authorize the office to give technical and financial assistance, if requested, to local school systems in the progress of desegregation, both through grants and loans; authorize the attorney general to file suit for the desegregation of schools and colleges if he receives signed complaints and certifies that the aggrieved individuals are unable to initiate or maintain proper legal proceedings because of financial limitations or potential economic or other injury to themselves or their families.

The Tar Heels Wrap Up Another One

Not one, fans, but two! Conference championships, that is.

The Tar Heels shut out Wake yesterday, running their season's record to 11-0, and even if they manage to lose their final three games, no one is going to catch them. It's off to Gastonia for the NCAA District III playoffs, and then, if our ability holds out, the national championships.

Coach Walter Rabb's charges play two games in South Carolina this weekend, but return home for the season finale a week from today to play Duke.

Then just an exhibition game with Davidson in Gastonia stands before the Tar Heels and the playoffs. So mark that date down on your calendar—Wednesday, May 13.

The Tar Heels play Duke, and a record crowd would be a good way to spur our boys on to national honors, something we haven't had since 1957. See you there?

Cone Out, Peacemaker

We have said that we welcome columns, and that we do. But, unfortunately, the ethics of journalism force us to limit columns to those which are free of libel, in good taste and signed.

Yesterday we received one in the mail signed by "The Peacemaker." It was an excellent piece of writing, and we would like very much to print it, but alas.

Who is "The Peacemaker?" Come see us. Talent should not be hidden behind a psuedonym.

Integration, YDC, Radio Discussed

Subtle Point Gets Extra Emphasis

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Last week the DTH printed a borrowed article which made a good point. But it made it only in very subdued tones and to ward the end. I doubt if many people read that long article all the way to the end; also, it would be easy to read it and not see the subtle point.

The point needs to be shouted. It goes like this: it's not right to say that an idea is a bad one just because the Communists happen to like it. Maybe I am in favor of a certain thing for good reasons of my own. Then I find out that the Communists are in favor of it too, but for other reasons — bad reasons, from my point of view. For example, maybe they think that by advocating this idea they will hurt the United States. Now I think they are mistaken. I believe that this thing we're both in favor of will be good for the United States. The people who are on the extreme right today would have us to believe that as soon as we find out that the Communists are in favor of something we should renounce it. All right, so the Communists think they will use some cause to spread chaos, undermine our way of life, and take over. It hasn't occured to the extreme right that the Communists may be less than omniscient in their choice of ways to subvert us, that the Communists may think a certain cause will hurt us, when maybe it will really help us. Nor has it occured to the extreme right that, if everybody followed their ideas, this would give the Communists total control over us without taking over. The reason it would do that is that all that the Communists would have to do in order to make us oppose something would be to speak in favor of it, and all that they would have to do to get us to favor something would be to speak in opposition to it. It's a wonder that the extreme right has not condemned shoes and goulash!

Now let's make an application. At an opportune time, the Federal Bureau of Investigation announced that there are Communists in the civil rights movement (as if this was something new). So what? There are probably Communists in business, Communists in farming, Communists in labor, Communists in both the Ku Klux Klan and the Black Muslims. The question to be considered is whether or not the civil rights movement is good for the United States. I think it is, and the Communists think it's not. So I'm for it and they're for it, but for different reasons. Judge for yourself whether it's a just and good cause. Then be for it or against it on the basis of what you, as an educated and loyal American, think of it—not on the basis of what the Communists think of it.

Dept. Of Defense Chastises DTH

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

I am afraid the headline on your report of my discussion with Senator McGovern does not quite match the accuracy of the report itself. I do not believe that defense spending is hurting the country; indeed, I think it is very clear that this country can readily afford whatever is needed to provide for our security. I think the current Defense budget is a reasonable one. I believe my remarks during the Symposium made both these points.

Let me also note that although you have honored me with a doctorate, no one else has had the good judgment to do so.

With best wishes,

Asst. Secretary of Defense
Adam Yarmolinsky

Leaders Fail To Contact Members

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Being a faithful member of the UNC-YDC, yet missing one meeting, I was denied the privilege of voting for YDC officers. This same fate was mine last year after I had anxiously awaited the coming elections. Earlier this year it was suggested to the past president that letters be sent out to announce meetings; faithfully he went about this task, sending something like three letters the entire year, one of which did not relate directly to UNC-YDC meetings. But this was an improvement over last year. With such improvement being attempted how could anyone pull the something less than astute move of again electing officers by 25 "individuals" "representing" 400 without notification of all members. This seems to be more of an appointment of officers.

The Moore-Preyer issue is not the main point, although it may have been with the gathering of brilliant politicians a few nights ago. The main concern results from the ineptitude of the UNC-YDC officers as evidenced in the past few years at UNC.

Few YDC clubs even come close to being as large as ours, yet I would maintain that many arouse much more enthusiasm, as does the lesser UNC-YRC. The slow death of the YDC here results from such election stunts as recently seen, combined with attitudes of "undergraduates don't care about anything but campus politics" and "letters don't achieve greater participation," although to my knowledge when letters were sent out, participation did increase.

If 400 letters bring out only 10 more people is the YDC not just a little more active? Surely it is and just as surely with the previous negative attitudes, negative leadership abounds and with it negative participation.

Thank you politically astute leaders for the demise of our YDC.

Reader Agrees Radio Terrible

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

I believe many students are in agreement with Henry McInnis' article "Primitive Sounds Dominate The Airways All Day Long" (DTH, Sunday, May 3).

There is much the commercial stations can do to improve their programming. I believe the University should take the first step by making WUNC-FM's programs available to the great majority of students by installing AM transmission facilities. Most of us do not own FM receivers due to their high cost and thus must miss many good programs.

The initial cost of the facilities would be the only objection to their use. WUNC-"AM" would have no competitors with other local stations, and if they object to this programming, they could fight fire with fire and make the day's listening much better.

UNC's Co-Ed Problems: Over-Protected Immaturity

By PETE RANGE

Ed. Note: Pete Range is a senior from Athens, Ga., majoring in German. He spent 1961-62 in Germany on the Goettingen Scholarship and half a year in India. He has traveled throughout Europe and the Near East. This is the first of three articles on the University's attitude toward its women students.

One of the most striking sensations I had upon re-entering American society at UNC last spring after my stay in Europe and Asia was that the maturity of my fellow students was lower than I found abroad. More specifically, the women students seemed unbelievably immature compared to their European sisters. I felt like I was suddenly among girls again, instead of young women.

What is it about our woman student that makes her seem more like a "girl of 20" than a "young woman of 20," even when she graduates from college?

The most common and obvious criticism of the Carolina coed is that she is neither informed about nor interested in anything of a serious nature. Not only does she not know the difference between the views of H. R. Gross and Wayne Morse (or who they are!), but she usually lives in an aura of ignorance about her own university, about the operations of student and faculty affairs alike.

Firstly, then, our women are sworn non-intellectuals—or better, anti-intellectuals. It is troublesome. It takes work. It is of no importance to us Americans in our affluent, isolated society, where the pressure of the Cold War and the urgency of civil rights and the war on poverty can be ignored. And—most of all—intellectual endeavor is unbecoming to the "sweet Southern belle."

Here we come to one of the sorest points: our women (like our men) are obsessively concerned with acceptance and approval by the opposite sex. And for this approval, our women feel that an eighteenth-century naivite, singular stupidity and rivers of honey-tongued sweetness must be the substance of her personality. Even those few who sometimes feel a desire to discuss something more than the new Mustang, the relative merits of Old Crow over Kentucky Gentleman and the wonders of the Doug Clark combo feel obliged to suppress their curiosity if they shall incur the disfavor of the equally ignorant Carolina gentleman.

Be it far from me to wish our women to abandon reasonable attempts to look good, be cheerful and please their men! I have too much of the Georgian in me to reject the Southern belle! But unless this sweet personality is combined with an independent and inquisitive mind, the young lady is more of an insult to the South than an asset.

A high school poll I participated in some years ago, turned up the conclusion that (1) girls should go to college today, and (2) that they are not primarily motivated by the search for husbands. I believed that then and was very encouraged. But my years at Carolina have drained that faith.

Judging from the approach and lack of sincere concern our coeds show towards their courses here, one wonders what college means to them besides a stop-off to occupy themselves until the men become able to marry them. At most it provides some of them with training to get a job (teaching) to extend the interim between high school and marriage a bit. So it is clear why their greatest interests here are social and not academic; one's actions must, after all, be in keeping with one's goals.

To me one of the most serious aspects of the problem is that our women never learn social maturity. They do not get any practice in making independent decisions about behavior in society.

While the male student has complete discretion as to the regulation of his life from the day he enters the university, the woman student has discretion over her life only between certain hours, only in certain places (she cannot leave the county without permission or spend the night out), and only in certain dress. And then her freedom still finds little fences scattered all about the battleground, "protecting" her here and there, guarding her against the evil demons in her soul which would wreak her ruin if she were allowed to make decisions for herself.

At the heart of this problem, I think, stands the misguided, well-meaning, nineteenth-century rules system regulating the behavior of women students on our campus. Not simply the system as such, but the fundamental presumption upon which it is grounded, creates an atmosphere very detrimental to the social maturation of the girls. This will be discussed further tomorrow.

'. . . And Those Are My Parting Shots!'

Communists Can Sing & Dance At East Carolina

By DENNIS SANDERS

Tra-la-la-la-la, those nasty old Communists can't speak on state-supported college campuses, but they can sing and dance, says Assistant Attorney General Ralph Moody.

Moody said recently that the controversial Speaker Ban Law does not apply to artists and entertainers.

That's very interesting. Students of college age are not allowed to hear Communist or Communist - affiliated scholars speak on their respective fields, but entertainment, Red or otherwise, is allowed.

This is another instance which points out, or seems to point out, the absurdity of the so-called Gag Law. There is more than enough American entertainment floating round the country, as was proven in last week's Jubilee. And there are some known Communist scholars who might impart knowledge and enlightenment were they permitted to speak on campus.

Moody made his comments in response to a question posed by Dr. Leo Jenkins, president of East Carolina College, where the Raduga Russian Folk and Ballet Ensemble was invited to perform next fall.

"The performance of such a folk and ballet ensemble composed of Russian personnel is not an appearance on the campus of your college for 'speaking purposes,'" Moody told Jenkins. Horashe! (That's Russian for "great.")

Spoken or sung, a word is a word, and Red speakers aren't permitted to speak a word on campus. There is a difference between a performance for entertainment purposes and a scholarly address, but a Communist is a Communist, whether he's speaking, dancing or eating in Lenoir Hall.

The 1963 law forbids Communists, any persons who pleaded the Fifth Amendment in security cases and advocates of the overthrow of the government from speaking on state-supported campuses.

It seems the law was originally intended, by the few who hurriedly rushed it through the General Assembly, to prevent the infiltration of Communist propaganda into our childish minds. It also seems we are too young to decipher for ourselves what is right and wrong, good and bad, healthy and diseased. In brief, we are children.

All this legislative jumble means that a Communist scientist or physicist can not speak on his vocation. But the powers-that-be have relented and allowed the "children" under their wings to enjoy entertainers. Great! (That's English for "great!")

In November of this year, the Moscow Chamber Orchestra was allowed to perform at UNC, but only because University officials took the position that the so-called Gag Law applied only to speakers, not musicians.

This is a credit to the officials involved; at least they managed to bring some high-class (although Communist) entertainment to the campus for the benefit of those who were deprived by the Gag, the students.

Still, the question of what harm a Red speaker could do arises. Any number of books on Communism and Marxism can be read at the Wilson Library, and you can't ask a book a question. When the reading is finished, the printed words are still there for thought. On the other hand, a Communist speaker's words, like those of any other speaker, float through the air. Some are remembered; more are forgotten. And you can ask a speaker questions, should he be bold enough to infiltrate his talk with propaganda.

What it all boils down to is this: in the eyes of those backing the Speaker Ban Law, we are too immature to hear a speech and draw conclusions on it ourselves. Rather, we are to be spoon-fed, led by the hand, and endowed with someone to think for us. It speaks poorly of us, but until some same minds amend the Gag that chokes us, we are stuck with it.

Anyway, see you and your Red friends at ECC.

Momma Said There'd Be Days Like This

The story of original sin is being repeated in Texas—this time among a bunch of fruit flies.

Texas A & M University reports two research projects that use insects's sex instincts to lead them into death traps of poisonous chemicals.

In an experiment, a hormone taken from male boll weevils and fruit flies was used to lure females of the species into traps.

It just goes to show—Momma didn't lie.

School Board Says No To Solicitations

The Chapel Hill School Board voted Monday night not to allow in-school solicitation for the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library.

The board decided not to make an exception to its policy that no solicitations for any causes will be allowed to be conducted through the schools.

School Supt. Howard Thompson presented to the board a letter he had received from trustees of the Kennedy Library, seeking solicitation from school children. Several board members said it appeared to be a goal of the Library and the Kennedy family that as many small contributions be collected toward building of the Library as possible.

Dr. Billy Graham and Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy will be here May 17 for a fund-raising rally in Kenan Stadium.

Board member Dr. Richard Peters said exception to board policy should be made in this "highly emotionally charged" case. Rev. J. R. Manley pointed out that contributions of nickels and dimes might aid in the development of "better citizenship" in school children.

Dr. Fred Ellis thought solicitation in the schools would be inappropriate. Board chairman Gray Culbreth said he would oppose the fund-raising in schools "even if it was going to a monument for Thomas Jefferson."

The discussion wandered from whether the board's no-solicitation policy should be overlooked to some discussion of the merits of the Library itself. Culbreth wondered if such nation-wide fund-raising really was the idea of the Kennedy family.

Mrs. Mary Scroggs, in the board-approved motion, suggested that the local fund-raising committee set up some method for school children to make contributions.

In other action the board:

—Named Mrs. Scroggs as its member of the board of directors of the new Community Action, Inc., agency to deal with racial problems.

NC State Captures 4th Straight Title

NC State won their fourth consecutive Big 4 Sports Day title yesterday by edging UNC 33-31. Duke finished third with 19 points while Wake Forest brought up the rear with 16 points.

In the Rod and Gun activities, State also won over Carolina 18-14. State won the Archery, Target Rifle and Skish events while Carolina won the trap shooting. Wake Forest finished third in all events because Duke did not enter the activities.

State didn't finish last in any event. They won the horseshoe, badminton, volleyball, and bowling competition while finishing second in the handball, table tennis, and tennis. Duke took one title, the table tennis, and Carolina won four firsts. Carolina won the softball, golf, handball and tennis title.

Bill Brittain was the hero of the day for UNC. The big softball pitcher from Alexander dorm won two games for Carolina. He pitched a one-hitter against State and a three-hitter against Wake Forest. In the first round, UNC collected 13 hits to defeat State 9-2. Everyone in the lineup except Billy Galantai hit safely for Carolina. Jeff Ward and John Doyle had two hits and big Billy Cunningham had a double and two rbi's.

UNC edged Wake Forest in the second round 1-0. Carolina scored in the fourth when Gene Faircloth led off with a single, stole second and scored on Cunningham's single.

In the Carolina golf victory, John Baer led the way when he carded a 74. Another basketball player, Bill Brown, proved that he is a standout on the links also as he racked up a 77. Larry Edwards came in with a 79, and Charles Goetz had an 82 for Carolina.

In two handball meets, the UNC representatives didn't lose a match. Captain Jim Magner beat Art Galewode of Duke 21-2 and 21-8, and beat his State opponent by consecutive 21 - 8 scores. Jack Chafin and Phil Tonne teamed in one doubles and football tackle Joe Churchill and Fred Mueller joined forces in the other doubles.

The tennis team composed of Henry Tonn, Andy Goddard, Jeff Ruday, Courtney Stevens, Gene Corpening and Don Long had little trouble winning their two matches.

UNC Net Team Blanks Davidson

By BILL STROUPE

UNC's tennis team whitewashed Davidson 9-0 yesterday. UNC is now 16-2 and Davidson 16-6.

George Sokol beat a younger Bill Council on the first court, 6-3 and 6-1. On the second court, O. H. Parrish trimmed Bill Schutt 6-4 and 6-1.

The going was rougher on the third court. Ted Hoehn won the only extended singles match, 6-3, 4-6, 6-2 over Woody Cleveland.

Pete Myers, Charlie Shaffer and Kenny Oettinger won more easily for UNC. Myers won 6-1 and 6-1; Shaffer 6-0 and 6-3, and Oettinger, 6-1 and 6-2.

Coach Don Skakle kept his attention on the match, but he was also thinking about Maryland's visit to Clemson today. Maryland, the only undefeated ACC team, squeaked by UNC 5-4 on concrete courts at Maryland earlier in the year.

But Clemson's courts are like UNC's. Skakle said, "On a surface like ours, it will be an interesting match." He wouldn't pick the winner, but added "Naturally we would like to see Clemson win, since that would leave us tied again."

Skakle also said, "I'm sure we have the guns to go all the way" in the upcoming ACC Tournament. He also thinks Sokol has a good chance to win individual honors again. "If he does," Skakle said, "he deserves all the credit in the world. Nobody in the ACC has ever won the championship three years in a row."

Summary: Sokol (UNC) def. Council (D) 6-3, 6-1; Parrish (UNC) def. Schutt (D) 6-4, 6-1; Myers (UNC) def. Meschan (D) 6-1, 6-1; Shaffer (UNC) def. Frank (D) 6-0, 6-3; Oettinger (UNC) def. Ariail (D), 6-1, 6-2.

Doubles: Hoehn and Parrish (UNC) def. Council (D) 6-2, 6-4; Sokol and Evans (UNC) def. Meschan and Frank (D) 7-5, 6-0; Oettinger and Henderson def. Ariail and Baumgardner (D) 6-2, 5-7, 6-3.

Frosh Baseballers Win Doubleheader

By BILL LEE

The Carolina freshmen swept both games of a double-header here yesterday, as Tom Robbins lifted a sacrifice fly to left to score Lawson Baker in the second game, and Jim Dunlap turned in the first complete game this year to win the first game.

With the score tied 2-all, the Tar Babies entered the last inning of the seven-inning contest with only two hits to their credit. But Baker led off the frame with a single to right, and advanced to third on Hank Crowson's double. Harold Wells was intentionally walked to load the bases with none out. This set the stage for Robbin's sacrifice which sewed the game up.

Wake Forest led off the scoring in the second when Steve Flynn let fly a single and took second on the left-fielder's error. Deacon Steve Wrenn knocked a single to score Flynn. The Tar Babies bounced back in the bottom half as Baker led off with a walk and went to second on Crowson's single. Baker took third on a passed ball, and scored on an error by the shortstop.

Robbins tied the score at 2-2 in the fifth inning when he unloaded a triple to deep center and scored on an error on the shortstop and a high throw to the plate.

"Fireman" Tommy Kirkman took the victory for the second game as he relieved Tom Gauntlett in the fourth with two out and the bases loaded. Kirkman got out of the inning by striking out the next batter. He now owns a 4-0 record.

In the first game, Dunlap overcame some first inning difficulty to gain the victory, extending his record to 2-0. In the first, Dunlap walked the bases loaded but got the last batter on a fly to center. After this, he settled down to allow the Deacs only four hits and two unearned runs, while striking out seven and giving up no more walks.

The Baby Deacs scored two runs in the second on two doubles, and an error on the first sacker. The Tar Babies retaliated, however in the bottom half with an infield single by Danny Talbott and a booming triple by Baker to right-center. Baker scored on a single by Robbins.

In the fourth, Talbott led off with a single to right and Baker followed suit. Both runners were advanced on a sacrifice by Wells, and Talbott scored on a passed ball.

Mike Saintsing slammed a triple down the left field line to start things off in the fifth. He scored on a fielder's choice by Jerry Joyner to send the Tar Babies ahead 4-2. The final UNC run was scored by Baker who reached on an error and was driven in by another single by Robbins.

The Kid, Lobo Pace Alcoholics To Flag

Basketball stars Billy Cunningham and Billy Galantai led the Avery Alcoholics to the Dorm division softball as they paced the Alcoholics to an 11-3 win over the Air Force Golds Monday.

In other action Kappa Psi won the Fraternity White final over DKE 12-7, Chi Psi beat Delta Sig in the Fraternity Blue final 8-1 and Medical School won the Graduate Final by defeating the Peacocks 15-7.

Galantai collected three hits, including one triple, and Cunningham had a single and a triple as the Alcoholics boomed nine hits off Air Force pitcher Junior Skeen. Skeen also issued eight walks as the Alcoholics built up an early lead. Tim Nichols tossed a three-hitter for Avery.

Med School collected 12 hits and were aided by six errors to offset three homers by the Peacocks. Bernie McAdams rapped a double and two singles for the Doctors. John L. Currie also collected a double for Med School. Irwin Williams, Harry Johnstone and Dan Harvey rapped the Peacock homers.

Jack "Crazy" Crane had little trouble with Delta Sig as he pitched Chi Psi to an 8-1 triumph. George Lockhart collected four of the six hits off Crane. Dick Lewisohn had three hits for Chi Psi, and Mal Dunlevie added a double.

Kappa Psi scored nine runs in the last two innings to wallop DKE 12-7. Don King went the distance for Kappa Psi and also collected one hit. Dave Williams boomed a double in the sixth when Kappa Psi scored five runs.

Delta Upsilon used varsity swimmers John Sheldon and Freddie Lipp to defeat the Peacocks 2-0 in Water Polo action. Lipp and Sheldon scored the two DU goals in the semifinal action.

Pete Williams scored five goals as the Everett Rogahs beat Pi Kappa Alpha in quarterfinal action, but Williams wasn't enough to compete with Sigma Nu in the semifinals. Sigma Nu defeated Rogah 2-1 as Williams scored his team's only goal. All-American swimmer Thompson scored one goal for Sigma Nu, and George Carr added the other.

West Cobb, Alpha Gams Win Trophies

Alpha Gamma Delta and West Cobb won the Woman's Athletic Association's All Sports Cups for the highest number of intramural points.

The trophies were awarded at the annual WAA Awards Picnic held Monday at the Tin Can. Points are given for tournaments and matches won, and for number of participants in all events.

Alpha Gamma Delta's Carolyn Powers and Vickie King received trophies for winning the badminton doubles. Powers also won the table tennis trophy, and her sorority won the basgetball championship.

Lynn Wellington and Lu Etta Harris won the tennis doubles trophy for West Cobb. West Cobb also was awarded trophies for winning the volleyball and swimming championships.

Incoming president Tina Nicholson awarded the tennis singles trophy to Susan Mott of McIver, and the badminton singles awarded to Jane Eugles.

Karen Nelson, Vicki Martin and Zannie Poplin were named the Outstanding Seniors. Lynn Wellington of West Cobb and Diane Sherwood of Alpha Gamma Delta received awards as outstanding WAA representatives.

Bill Hartack Wants Six Derby Wins

NEW YORK (UPI) — Jockey Bill Hartack, after using a velvet-lined whip on some of his critics among newspaper writers, said Tuesday he is setting his sights on breaking Eddie Arcaro's all-time record of five Kentucky Derby triumphs.

Hartack returned to action at the Aqueduct track after scoring his fourth Derby triumph Saturday at Churchill Downs aboard Northern Dancer.

"I'm aware of Arcaro's record," Hartack said. "I'd like to improve my record all-around."

Hartack, who has required only six attempts to gain his fourth victories while Arcaro rode in 21 Derbies to win five, spelled out what each Derby triumph—past and future—means to him.

"Each one has a particular meaning," he said.

"The first one Iron Liege, 1957, was winning it first," he added. "The second Venetian Way, 1960, proved to me it wasn't by accident. The third, Decidedly, 1962, gave me a big percentage and something to be proud of.

"And the fourth, Northern Dancer, gave me the feeling that I want to make it a habit.

"When I win the fifth, I'll know I've tied Arcaro's record. And if I get the sixth, it'll mean I broke Arcaro's record. From then on, the seventh will be something to shoot at. However, those are all assumptions."

Hartack, a 31-year-old bachelor, has very definite ideas about when sports writers should talk to him and what they should write about him.

"Don't call me Willie," and Tuesday he responded to printed criticism after Saturday's Derby—newspaper stories that said he kept reporters waiting an hour to interview him while he signed autographs.

GEER: FIGHTS BULL WITH BULL

By KERRY SIPE

He denied ever having climbed through the transom in his classroom door.

In this way, the legend of William Monroe Geer, UNC instructor in Modern Civilization, was brought a little closer to the truth.

The smiling, red-faced professor, chewing on the end of a long brown cigar, admitted with a guttural chuckle to a number of other unorthodox classroom antics.

"I have threatened to jump from a second-story window; I have waved the American Flag constantly during a fifty-minute lecture; I have huddled like a hermit behind a fort of classroom maps; but, never in my life, have I climbed through a transom. I don't know how these silly rumors get started."

Never let it be said that a student fell asleep during one of Mr. Geer's lectures.

"I see no reason why any subject taught at this university need be dull," he said. "I think learning is an exciting experience, and, as a teacher, I make it my duty to make the classroom an interesting place.

"It has never occurred to me that it was necessary to reform to orthodoxy to command the respect of my students."

This doesn't, however, mean that Mr. Geer's class is all play and no work. "I expect a high standard from all of my students," he said.

When that high standard isn't met, and a student fills up a paper with a mass of meaningless verbiage, Mr. Geer classifys that paper under the "sign of Taurus."

"I have a rubber stamp of a fierce-looking, fire-breathing bull and a little red stamp pad to go with it. When I stamp a paper with 'the Sign of Taurus', I make no further comments. The student gets the message, though. He's a bull—he ain't no cow!"

Mr. Geer is a Southern boy who came to Chapel Hill from the deep Southern state of South Carolina. He was educated at The Citadel, later taught at West Point and is currently a full Colonel in the U. S. Army Reserves.

Though he describes his family as "steeped in the military tradition," he calls himself a "Pacifist Militarist."

"They taught me at The Citadel to hate everything connected with war. I am committed to the defense of my country, but every military man has to be conscious of the desireability of Peace."

JUST PLAIN BULL

While an instructor at West Point, Colonel Geer wrote a book entitled "Contemporary Foreign Governments," which sold through five printings and was used as a textbook at every major university in the country.

Because he was then an active member of the Army, all royalties for the book went into the U. S. Treasury as "miscellaneous receipts." Colonel Geer recalled the story with a hearty laugh. Since then, he has published a number of other articles and reviews.

"I am a Southerner, born and bred to the Southern way of life. In my study of history, the South is my main focal point. I think it's time we Southerners started to move into the mainsteam of 20th century life.

"We should forget about the Bonny Blue Flag and the lost cause that died with the end of the War." He pronounced the word 'war' like a true Southern gentleman. "Wahr," he said.

"I was 18 years-old before I ever heard anyone use the phrase, 'our forces during the Wahr' and mean the forces of the United State of America.

"That's why it pleased me so much when, while on a visit to Fort Sumter recently, my little daughter asked me, "Is that place we were trying to recapture during the war?

"It's that 'we,' you see, that separates the Americans from the Southerners."

Ask Colonel Geer his opinion about a subject—any subject—and you can expect a thorough answer.

Politically, he is a Democrat, and, up until just recently, served as precinct chairman of his voting district.

One of his students credits him with the quotation, "I like Republicans O.K., right after Chicken Pox, broken legs, measles . . ."

When the late President Kennedy was at a Raleigh campaign rally before his election, Mr. Geer was among those selected to ask him a question. Mr. Geer's question and Mr. Kennedy's answer were recorded and used all over the Southern states during the democratic campaign. The question?—"What'ya like about the South?"

"He gave a splendid, scholarly, Harvard-man's answer," Mr. Geer remembers, "emphasizing the South's loyalty to the Democratic Party."

It was Mr. Geer's alive and vigorous interest in every phase of modern civilization which won him the coveted Tanner award for excellence in inspirational teaching of undergraduate students in 1956 and again in 1963. He is one of only two professors ever to receive the award twice.

When I first came to Carolina, I was told by an upperclassman, "In ten years you will have forgotten the name of the Chancellor, you will not be able to remember your roommate, but never, ever, as long as you live will you forget the name of Billy Geer!"

Ain't it the truth!

Janus Taps 14 Initiates At Midnight

Fourteen new members were initiated last night into the Society of Janus. The annual tapping took place at midnight at the Morehead Planetarium Rotunda. Initiates for 1964-65 are: James Clark Brewer, Donald Wayne Carson, Larry Harold Coleman, Issac Alan Craig, William Elmo Davis, Paul Dickson III, Samuel Pancoast Hunt, Michael Henry Lawler, Matthew Nelson Ott, Jr., Albert Parrish Pepper, Landon Earle Shuff, Jr., Robert Worthington Spearman, Walter Warren Tuthill, Peter David Williams.

The Society of Janus annually honors students, faculty and administrative officials for outstanding leadership and service to the Residence Hall community. During the year the Society sponsors the Official Blazer Sales, awards a scholarship, and sponsors discussion sessions on residence hall problems. This year the Society earned more than $500.00 from the sale of University Blazers.

Sanders, AP To Join DTH

You'll see at least two changes in the DTH next year—the editorial cartoon and the wire service.

Bill Sanders, former editorial cartoonist for the Greensboro Daily News and presently on the staff of the Kansas City Star, indicated yesterday by telephone from Kansas City that he would contribute to the DTH. He will replace Herbert Block.

Sanders, well known to students here, has won several national awards. The DTH is the first paper in North Carolina to carry Sanders since he left Greensboro.

The DTH will also utilize the services of the Associated Press next year. It will replace United Press International.

"The past editors, Gary Blanchard and David Ethridge, suggested that we explore AP," said Fred Seely, DTH co-editor, yesterday. "It is a better deal in every respect, and our coverage of national and state news will be far better."

The AP also will provide expanded photo service.

Weekend Blast Winds Up Big Year For Frosh

This weekend will be the finale for the Freshman Class's activities for this school year. The class has worked throughout the year at raising money for the final splurge — the Freshman Class Weekend. It will feature two big combo parties at Morehead Planetarium parking lot, because Saturday's night party has been changed from the Cobb tennis courts to accommodate a larger crowd.

Leading off the entertainment on Friday night will be the Vibrators backed by the Clovers who are nationally known for their hit songs "One Mint Julep," "Love, Love, Love" and "Love Potion Number Nine."

Saturday night features Guitar Vick and the Swinging Five, and both combo parties will last from 8 p.m. to midnight.

So, boys, get your dates, because this is what the campus has been awaiting for a long time. Remember Morehead Planetarium parking lot both Friday and Saturday nights from 8 to midnight. Don't miss the fun and entertainment—the public is invited and it's free!

HARRINGTON SPEECH

Tonight's speech on "Politics, Poverty, and Social Change" by Michael Harrington will be open to a limited number of persons not attending the banquet, it was anounced today.

Interested persons should come to the South Room at Lenoir Hall at about 7:45 p.m.

This 'N' That

World's Fair Boosts Greeks

The college fraternity and sorority systems will get a boost at the World's Fair this summer.

An exhibit sponsored by the National Interfraternity Conference and the National Panhellenic Conference will show the ways in which they have helped the college campuses and will also show "little-known but significant" facts about these organizations.

The exhibit, located in the Hall of Free Enterprise on the International Plaza, will show how they have developed campus loyalty, encouraged scholarship, promoted citizenship, and developed high standards of conduct.

The little-known but significant facts are that 75 per cent of all individual contributions to colleges come from Greeks and that 70 per cent of them finish their college courses, while only 50 per cent of the non-Greeks do so.

The exhibit will run from July 19-August 9 under the name, "Young Partners in Free Enterprise."

Peace Corps To Visit Again

A Washington, D. C. Peace Corps team will pay a return visit to UNC May 11-16.

The purpose of the visit is to interpret a record number of opportunities for Peace Corps service, as well as to supply general information to students and faculty.

A central-campus Information Center, manned by Peace Corps staff members, will be open day and evening during the week.

Those interested in taking the non-competitive Placement Test, givn daily by the team, must first complete Peace Corps Questionnaires and submit them to the Peace Corps representative upon taking the test.

Questionnaires may be obtained from YWCA Director Anne Queen, Peace Corps liaison on campus, or at the Post Office.

This information is aimed at all community citizens as well as college juniors, seniors, and graduate students.

The Peace Corps plans to train over 5,000 volunteers this summer to serve in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Ways-Means Group Cites Time Element

By HUGH STEVENS

Student Legislature's hopes of submitting a campus-wide "boycott referendum" to the student body this spring appeared to vanish yesterday in a wave of technicalities.

The Ways and Means Committee, meeting to discuss two versions of the referendum resolution, was told by Bill Aycock, past chairman of the Selections Board, and Bob Spearman, student body president, that such a referendum would be a "virtual impossibility" because of the short time remaining in the spring semester.

Due to the lateness of spring elections, Spearman has not yet been able to appoint a new Elections Board, and one could not be officially approved by Legislature before May 14.

Aycock estimated that it would take the new board a minimum of 10 days to prepare for a referendum after it was approved. This would prevent a vote before final exams, which begin May 20.

Acting on the basis of Spearman's and Aycock's statements, the committee voted to hold the two billons in committee.

Bob Wilson, Ways and Means Committee chairman, issued a statement following the decision which said in part:

"After deliberating for more than two and a half hours on the merit of both bills as amended in committee, (we) decided to allow both bills to remain in committee . . .

"The committee felt that a referendum is desirable at this time, but circumstances prevent this goal from being accomplished."

Under the Student Legislature by-laws, the bills will automatically be brought to the floor of legislature at next Tuesday's special session. At that time the body will have the option of concurring with the wishes of the committee to recommit the bill, or taking some type of action.

Feeling among many legislators yesterday appeared to be split on the matter, with some feeling that the committee and Legislature should consider the ill even if the referendum itself cannot be held.

The only other possibility for consideration of the bill lies in the Legislature's ability to call any bill out of committee by a two-thirds vote at any time. Such a vote could bring the bill to the floor tonight, but backers of the bill held out little hope for the move.

Playmakers Under Stars For 4 Days

"The Braggart Soldier," a farce comedy by Plautus, will open tonight at 8:30 in the Forest Theater.

Directing the Carolina Playmaker production is Kai Jurgensen. Graham Pollock plays the lead role.

The play will run through Sunday night, with regular prices being charged to the public starting Friday. Tonight has been designated as "Student Night."

Albert Suskin, chairman of the Classics Department, translated the Roman play.

All sets and costumes were made by the Dramatic Art classes with Tom Rezzuto overseeing operations.

Other members of the cast include Ed Kenestrick, Tom Benenson, Lise Knox, Margaret Cathell and Laurel Dykstra.

Basketball players Billy Cunningham and Billy Galantai and football player Richard Zarro are also included in the cast. They will play Roman slaves.

Joyrider Goes On A Spree

A professional joyrider is stepping up Chapel Hill's recently increased crime rate. Since mid-March, 28 automobiles have been stolen here, and only three have been accounted for with arrests. Two have not been recovered. All of the other 23 cars have been abandoned in town shortly after being stolen.

The three car thefts accounted for resulted in the arrests of Victor Lee Jones, of Chapel Hill, who is now in jail; Theron Edward McCaskill, who admitted stealing a car from the Carolina Inn and leading bloodhounds on a four-hour chase around Eastgate recently; and Leroy Watson, alias Farrington, who has admitted stealing a car and robbing the Institute of Government's armory of a small arsenal last week.

A fourth car, a white 1963 Chevrolet Corvair with blue upholstery, North Carolina license plate K-800, was stolen at Eastgate Shopping Center last Friday and has not been found. Chapel Hill Police Chief W. D. Blake said this theft appeared to be the work of a person other than the Chapel Hill Joyrider.

The Joyrider's modus operandi is surprisingly consistent. He has been described as a Negro, about 20 years old, about six feet tall with medium build, and has been seen wearing a tan jacket and a hat. He has friends: he has been seen with two of them riding in a stolen car, and cigarette butts indicate that someone rode in the back seat during one of his joyrides.

Chief Blake said:,

—All the cars stolen either had the ignition keys left in them, or were General Motors cars with the ignition switches turned off but not locked. No cars with locked ignitions and without keys have been stolen.

—Most cars are stolen around the Bell Tower parking lot, Memorial Hospital, or Graveley Sanatorium, although some were stolen elsewhere in Town.

—Most of the cars stolen have been abandoned on the north side of town, on Pritchard Avenue or Mitchell Lane. Some have been abandoned near where they were stolen. All but one of those recovered had been driven only 10 or 12 miles. Only one had been damaged.

—The Joyrider apparently goes on joyriding sprees. Sometimes two or three cars are reported stolen in one 12-hour period.

—Nothing has been reported taken from any of the stolen cars. Packages left in cars have been opened, but nothing removed, Chief Blake said.

The three most recent joyriding thefts all occurred on Monday:

Monday morning UNC Professor Frank Klingberg's 1950 Chevrolet was stolen from the rear of Swain Hall about five minutes after Mr. Klingberg went into Swain. He came out of the building, saw a young Negro man driving the car away, and tried in vain to jump into the car to stop it at the Columbia Street-Cameron Avenue intersection. Mr. Klingberg's car was recovered yesterday morning.

Monday night at 11:43 Taft Williams of Robbins went to where he had parked his 1957 Ford at the Bell Tower parking lot and found it missing. He returned to Memorial Hospital and saw a young Negro sitting in the passenger seat of his car, parked in front of the Hospital. As he walked up to the car, the man slid over under the steering wheel and drove away. The car was found 20 minutes later on Mitchell Lane.

Tuesday morning a 1961 Chevrolet owned by Linda Carol Mink, who lives in Cobb Dormitory, was found wrecked in Orange Grove. Miss Mink did not know the car had been stolen.

Chief Blake warned all motorists not to leave keys in cars, or ignition switches unlocked.

A Refreshing Event From The Freshmen

The oft-interrupted arrival of balmy, blue-skied Spring days in Chapel Hill has caused the thoughts of more than a few Carolina students turn to seasonal topics—parties, beach trips, dating, quiet strolls with that "special someone," dancing to the wail of a hot combo, or any other ways to have fun that have been devised by man in the last 6,000 years or so.

It is altogether fitting, then, that the Freshman Class officers (whom we have lauded in the past for their notable accomplishments this year) have seen fit to dub Friday and Saturday "Freshman Weekend," and thus provide planned entertainment free of charge for a significant segment of the campus. Featuring combos and a Hootenanny and the Clovers, the weekend promises to be a smash—and well it should, for the freshmen have worked long and hard to make it a success.

In addition to the sheer fun involved, the weekend also ranks historically as one of the true high points in the annals of the often ineffective class officer system. If it is a hit, and barring natural disaster it will be, it should stand as an indication that the long, hard road is usually preferable to the short, easy one.

The skies are blue, the gentle breezes stir the leaves of Davie Poplar, and the fun-loving blood of Carolina students runs rapidly these days. The entertainment is all set—no tickets to buy, no cars to borrow, no complicated arrangements to make. It's as simple as calling your date, getting caught up in your studies (hopefully), shining your Weejuns, and going. Take advantage of it and have fun before you settle into that terrible exam grind once again.

And while you are at it, take a moment to offer a handshake of congratulations to one of the freshman officers. They deserve it.

The Civil Rights Bill: Part II

These are the final seven sections of the Civil Rights Bill as condensed by the Congressional Quarterly and reprinted in the Durham Morning Herald.

We have reprinted these condensations because we feel that many people—both pro and con—have not read it and really do not know its content.

As we offered yesterday, we have several copies of the complete bill in the office and will be happy to lend them out to any who are interested.

TITLE V—CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION. Extend the Commission on Civil Rights for four years and broaden its powers so that it may function as a national clearing house on civil rights information. Also give the commission authority to investigate allegations that citizens "are unlawfully being accorded or denied the right to vote, or to have their votes properly counted" in any federal election "as a result of any patterns or practice of fraud or discrimination in the conduct of such election."

TITLE VI—FEDERAL PROGRAMS. Require each federal department or agency extending financial assistance to any program or activity through grants, loans or most kinds of contracts to take steps to prevent any program from excluding persons from benefits because of race, color or national origin. Agencies must first seek voluntary compliance, but if it is not forthcoming, may cut off federal funds to discriminatory programs. Such action shall be subject to judicial review on applications of persons, state or local governments whose funds are cut off.

TITLE VII — FAIR EMPLOYMENT. Establish a five-member Equal Employment Opportunity Commission with powers to prevent and eliminate discrimination in employment based on race, color, sex, religion or national origin on the part of employers, employment agencies or labor unions. First year coverage (to begin one year after enactment of the bill) would apply to firms with 100 or more employes or labor unions with 100 or more members, with coverage gradually extended, after the third year, to all firms or unions with 25 employes or members. Exempt religious groups, private clubs and state governments and their subdivisions but not the U.S. Employment Service and federally aided state and local employment services. Authorize the commission, upon receiving sworn complaints, to investigate and first seek compliance with fair employment practices through the use of "informal methods of conference, conciliations and persuasion." If those fail, the commission could seek an injunction in federal court to force compliance. It would have no enforcement authority itself.

TITLE VIII—REGISTRATION AND VOTING STATISTICS. Require the Census Bureau to gather registration and voting statistics based on race, color and national origin in such areas and to the extent recommended by the Civil Rights Commission, both on primary and general elections to the U.S. House since 1960. Require such information on a nationwide scale in connection with the 1970 Census.

(Information garnered from such Census reports conceivably could be used as the basis for reducing U.S. House representation of states that discriminate against voting applicants because of race, as permitted under a section of the 14th Amendment.)

TITLE IX — REMOVAL OF CIVIL RIGHTS CASES. Make reviewable in higher federal courts the action of federal courts in remanding a civil rights case to state courts. (Under current law, such a federal court order is not reviewable and the case must be disposed of in the state courts before it can again be appealed to the federal courts.)

(NEW) TITLE X — COMMUNITY RELATIONS SERVICE. Create a Community Relations Service within the Commerce Department to aid communities in resolving disputes relating to discriminatory practices based on race, color or national origin. Authorize the service to offer its services either on its own accord or in response to a request from a state or local official or other interested person. Limit its staff to a director and six aides.

TITLE XI—MISCELLANEOUS. Provide that nothing in the law shall restrict existing powers of the attorney general or other government agencies; authorize appropriation of whatever sums are necessary to carry out the act; provide that if one section of the act is held invalid, the remainder of the act shall not be affected thereby; the act does not pre-empt and thus nullify state civil rights laws unless those laws are inconsistent with the purposes of the act.

UNC's Co-Ed Problems: Part Two

By PETER RANGE
(Second of Three Articles)

Almost yearly there is some sort of controversy waged about rules for women students on this campus. The students are usually the challengers while 202 South Building leads the defense (and usually wins).

These fights, it seems to me, are often fruitless because neither side is concerned with underlying implications of the conflict. The students are simply applying for more outright freedom and the Dean of Women is opposing it bluntly.

If one is convinced, as I am, that a larger part of the 2300 women students gracing our campus are "girls" instead of "young women," one must ask how much our system of rules has to do with this.

From the day a girl enters this University until the day she leaves, a complex system of rules, punishments, utterly ridiculous minute-courtings, and sundry other attempts to protect the maiden (and her honor, above all) surround and delimit her life here. "Big Sister" is ever present either in South Building or the housing units. A great atmosphere of protection and constant surveillance hovers over the place.

Our woman student is told when to come home, when to go to bed (if a freshman), when to leave in the morning, what she may wear, with how many of her own kind she must be when in the company of men in certain places, how far away she may go, etc. Many of the very average social situations which confront a woman in society and in which she must make certain decisions are withheld from the female students here.

Our woman student never need decide when she should come in at night. It is already decided for her. She need never give thought to the wisdom of going or not going with a young man to his apartment alone. That has been decided for her, too. She need never consider the propriety of sun-bathing in a two-piece bathing suit on the dorm roof—that has already been worked out for her, too. In short, the girls never have to make many of the decisions most essential to social maturity.

The rules system at UNC is a self-defeating institution. It is conceived as something which ultimately benefits the women students — yet it does more harm than good by retarding their social growth. The fact that even the members of my graduating class are still girls and not yet young women illustrates how little social development takes place between the freshman and senior years.

Women students should take the rules system as an insult to their own intelligence and ability to mature. The system is predicated on the fundamental assumption that the girls are unable to decide certain things for themselves. It assumes that, if allowed to decide upon their own closing hours, the girls would automatically stay out all night every night—a foolish assumption, indeed! Do all girls do this after they leave college and have freedom to do so if they wish? Of course, not! One sleepy day after the night before is enough to teach any girl how stupid this is.

While the University has an excellent approach to the development of academic maturity among students, its attitude toward the development of social maturity is 100 years behind the times.

We all agree that learning to live happily and productively in society is one of the main goals of a college education. But, while we let our girls practice the things which tend to academic maturity, we do not let them practice those things essential to social maturity. If a student does not write a paper, he won't learn how to do research. If he does not decide about the time to come home, he will hardly have a basis for such decisions later when they are necessary.

Our women students, indeed, are getting a worse deal than their supposedly less fortunate, less intelligent sisters on the outside who were unable to come to college. But at least many of those girls are growing up.

The woman student here, by contrast, is cast into a kind of vacuum for four years. Except for compulsory freshman study hall, there is virtually no difference between the attitude toward women of 18 years and those of 22 years shown by the rules system. Does this mean that for four years the girls' abilities to make decisions do not mature at all? It would seem so.

Even if we accept the assumption that the average freshman female student is immature and unable to make decisions on her own (thanks to our overly protective mother - daughter system in this country), then the University should see as its obvious task the training of these socially immature students into social maturity during their four years here. That there is no effort made to do this—but rather to hinder it—is a gross shirking of responsibility by the University.

Because the women are led by the hand for the four years they are here, however, there is no chance for any development to take place. Only when they graduate do they have the chance. And obviously the easiest way to train the girls in decision-making is to let them do it. What about a staggered system, giving the girls more responsibility for themselves each year and then complete freedom in the senior year? More about this tomorrow.

Manners Built Up, Opposed

Otelia Rambles On Ramblings

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Last weekend was Jubilee celebration. This week I went to hear Governor Barnett—he was about what I expected. Thursday night I went to hear Vermont Royster. He was very good. As I was leaving the hall, two staff members hailed me and told me that they said during the lecture, "Watch Otelia hit that fellow sitting behind her with his feet on the back of the seat." They seemed real disappointed that I didn't hit him. I told them I didn't know he had his feet on the back of my seat, or I probably would have hit him. I can't bear for people sitting behind me to bump the back of the seat. I told two students at Memorial Hall several nights ago: "You wiggle tails, keep your knees still." They did.

Saturday I went to the Duke Alumnae luncheon and lecture. I always go with my friend, Mrs. Few, and I always enjoy it. At the luncheon, we sat ten at a table. Just as we finished eating, the ten ladies discovered that I was "Otelia Connor, the manners minder." They all threw up their hands and screamed "Why didn't you tell us so we could have watched our manners!" I told them they didn't need to, as they all came along when manners were taught in the home. They are not today.

Sunday I took in Parent's Day here. I was disappointed that the military exercises were called off because of the weather. I always look forward to that.

Chancellor Aycock sized up the case against the "Gag Law" perfectly, as far as I was concerned. He has been an able administrator. The University has grown tremendously under his leadership, and it has grown well in every respect. It is a tough job. I don't know why anybody would want it.

The Hootenanny was most entertaining. I thought the "Fiddler" was the best I had ever heard. I believe it would have been wise to have each unit perform only twice as the day was getting pretty long by 6 p.m. I was sorry I missed the Glee Club and Band. I got my schedule mixed up. The hit of the evening at Graham Memorial Sunday night was the St. Mary's Coldcuts at the close. They brought down the house.

I talked to one student, who plays in the band, and who said he would have to give up his self-help job during final exams as he would have to study, and he was sure he would be fired. Well, he shouldn't be fired. These self-help students shouldn't be allowed to work during the examination period, much less fired when they notify their employer that they will be unable to work at that time. This isn't the first case I have heard of, but I hope it will be the last.

I noticed at the cashier's desk at Lenoir yesterday a notice which read: "We do not make change for newspaper machines." I wondered how the students could buy newspapers when they do not have the change since the "Book Ex" in the lobby stopped this practice some time ago. Only nickles can be used in the slots. When students don't have enough nickles, are they supposed to run downtown to the bank everyday before they can read the news?

I didn't know it was so much trouble for the cashier to change a dime for two nickles. Maybe this little problem could be worked on and some solution brought about. It is not a serious problem but it is annoying.

In the meantime, good luck, and happy sailing through exams.

McInnis' Satire On Radio Lauded

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Cheers for Henry McInnis' brilliant satire on the bluenose who condemns the musical preferences of others! Those who feel qualified and called upon to make value judgments on music are among the most annoying of snobs, and it is good to see Mr. McInnis strike out against them with such a lashing parody of a typical, snobbishly indignant "purist" review.

So subtly-crafted was the article that I thought at first that it was intended to be taken seriously; only after reading it a second time did I realize the truth: that this article ranks with Sinclair Lewis' "Babbit" as a parody of hypocrisy. Especially that bit about the radio stations bombarding the audience with ". . . loud, pounding and rapid-fire volley of cute verbal matter . . ."

I have not been so amused in months. Mr. McInnis has cleverly revealed all of the absurdity, all of the lack of understanding of the "good music" man — his automatic rejection of all popular music as low-born, his stuffy vocabulary and pat phrases and his assumption that the entire listening public wants to be (or somehow should be) "soothed." Best of all was the sly dig at the "discriminating" listener's habit of obdurately messing around with AM radio while he admits that he can hear what he wants on FM.

Let's have more of Mr. McInnis' trenchant wit! I'd like to see him slash a few more obnoxious characters as deeply as he has cut the self-appointed savior of American culture.

Bourgeois Morals Draw Attack

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

In reply to an open letter to the young "men" and "women" of Southampton's debutante party, which appeared in the DTH on April 26, I am sending a copy of this letter to Miss Susan Cornell, the east coast director of the organization. Surely all the students at UNC were as shocked as I was to see that some fledgling organization had seized upon a small incident that happened in New York during a night's party and used it as an excuse to place an ad in a Chapel Hill newspaper. It is my understanding that some UNC students were involved in this night's ruckus, but I have no knowledge that this is true. Else why would the ad have possibly been of any interest to us?

The organization quoted a person who was involved in the case —undoubtedly a Southern Baptist or other conscientious moralist— and who was visiting a cousin or old friend in the North at the time. He went out on a spiel about drinking, a thing no Northerner would do, I think. He said that the "morals of this country are going down the drain." I would ask him which morals. There are some that could go down with good riddance.

Miss Cornell and others say that he is self-righteous. How do they know that he hasn't done more than they to at least keep the morals passing out of the sink? Maybe he does not use Draino. That would take knowing him.

They say they want to create a new society, more dedicated "to building a world that works better than any Communist or materialist." I am asking whether they wish to establish a third ideology which is neither Democratic or Communist? I always ask these things, for I remember during the war when so many communist - front organizations were springing up under the cover of youth programs and other disguises.

They call our society lawless, and we are one of the most law-abiding countries on the face of the globe. They say we are gutless and godless (letting one woman force the Deity out of schools). Impossible! I would like to see one woman or man or a million force God out of our schools.

Miss Cornell speaks in military imagery as if she was a five-star general, and says we are headed for "the revolution of Moral Re-Armament." One moment she seems religious, next she talks about absolute moral standards, and finally, she talks of evolution. This is a bundle of hay for the asses unless she will say what it really is that we should "shoulder together." I wish the young man on Long Island, the Baptist, would speak again.

Debutante Parties Covered By Police Reporters Now

By ART BUCHWALD

WASHINGTON — There was a time when debutante parties used to be covered by society editors, but now they have to be covered by police reporters. Following the famous Wanamaker party on Long Island last summer, eight young bluebloods were just found guilty of wrecking a cottage in Towson, Maryland, a suburb of Baltimore. The party after the Maryland Hunt Ball caused $1,800 in damage as compared to the $6,000 damage in Southampton, which proves that the Long Island set still gives the better parties.

If the trend continues, this is how a debutante party story will read on the society pages:

"Miss Mary Jane Merryweather made her debut at the Piping Hot Country Club last night with 1,200 guests in attendance. Following a supper dance given by her parents, the party moved over to the rented home of Mr. Chauncey Hogglesworth, where the young socialites enjoyed themselves until dawn.

"Among the guests were Miss Hilary Weepingwillow, wearing a Christian Dior gown, and her escort, Robert Goosepimple III. Mr. Goosepimple, a four-letter man at Harvard, gave a demonstration of his prowess by swinging from a chandelier 14 times across the room before it broke.

"George 'Laddie' Goldstuff Jr., scion to a pillow-making fortune, and his lovely partner, Hilda Mayberry, climbed the drapes to get a better view of the party. They were joined by Edward Trojan and 'Sissy' Carpenter of Bryn Mawr. Punch was served up to the two couples from a rare Baccarat vase that had been in the Hogglesworth family for over a hundred years.

"A great deal of laughter ensued when Mr. Goldstuff threw the vase out of the window after drinking the punch. What made the incident most amusing was that the window was closed.

"Dancing on the fireplace mantel were Rodney Ruggles and Jeannie Wimple, of the breadcrumb Wimples. While twisting, Jeannie lost her balance, but was saved from falling by grabbing a Cezanne painting which was hanging over the mantel. The painting was irreparably damaged, but thanks to Jeannie's quick thinking she wasn't.

"As the party went on, it became more exciting. A touch football game was started in the dining room and in place of a football the players used Mr. Hogglesworth's Wedgwood plates. Every time someone missed a pass the spectators cheered. The game lasted until there were no plates left.

"While many couples were enjoying themselves on the ground floor, a group of merrymakers went upstairs and started throwing furniture out the window. Shouts of glee could be heard from the upper floors as the furniture crashed to the ground.

"Then someone remembered that it was time for breakfast, so a fire was built in the library and several of the party-goers fried ham and eggs over it, which the famished guests ate with delight.

"When no napkins could be found, Nancy Lou Fingerer cut up curtains from the windows. Despite her wealthy background, Nancy is a wonderful homemaker.

"As dawn came up, the band played 'Auld Lang Syne' and the couples started departing.

"Everyone agreed it was probably the best debutante party of the season and one that they would remember for years to come.

"As Mr. Goldstuff Sr. said to the District Attorney the next morning, 'These kids deserve a little clean fun before they grow up, and I'd rather know where they are than have them roaming the streets.'"

Bill To Ease Financial Burden Being Considered

WASHINGTON — Any capable student will be able to attend college without financial worries if a new national student assistance program is approved by Congress.

The bill, authored by Senator Vance Hartke (D-Ind.), provides for the multi-purpose program of student financial assistance, flexible enough to meet the diverse requirements of the nation's post-secondary institutions, and balanced between loans, scholarships and student employment activities. The proposal would provide for more than a million students at relatively low cost.

"The basic aim of the program," Sen. Hartke said, "is to insure that no capable student wil lbe denied the opportunity for education beyond high school because of his or her parents' inability to meet the financial burden."

Hearings on the Hartke bill are underway in the Senate Education Subcommittee with promiment educators, leaders of education associations, and key figures in the Administration testifying in its behalf. More than 20 Senators have asked to be listed as co-sponsors of the Hartke bill.

The four basic parts of the Hartke proposal are:

Undergraduate Scholarships — A program of four years undergraduate scholarships to be awarded by scholarship commissions in the states to entering college freshmen. Grants of up to $1,000 awarded based on need, academic promise and high school record.

Long-term Student Loans—The present loan limit of the National Defense Education Act would be raised from $1,000 to $1,500 for undergraduates and from $2,000 to $2,500 for graduate students. Loan authority would be broadened to include new institutions, such as two-year technical schools.

Educational Loan Insurance — A program to guarantee commercial or college loans negotiated by college students. Eligibility would be based on full-time enrollment and satisfactory academic progress. Loans so insured would be limited to $2,000 per academic year to any one borrower, and $10,000 total. Repayments could be extended for a ten-year period following graduation.

Student Work-Study Program—A program to enhance student employment opportunities while at the same time contributing to the college and to the student's education. Jobs would relate to the student's field of study and would include research, public service, internships and assistantships. Total payment to any one student would be limited to $1,000 per academic year at the under-graduate level and $2,000 for graduates.

Archaeologists Schedule Meet Here For May 7 - 9

Archaeologists from all over the world are arriving at the University of North Carolina here today for the three-day annual meeting of the Society for American Archaeology, May 7-9.

Topics to be covered by the more than 300 archaeologists at their 29th annual meet range from a look at experimental archaeology in U. S. colonial cemeteries to the ongoing excavations at Tikal, Guatemala, which are creating quite a stir in archaeological circles.

The University of North Carolina Research Laboratories of Anthropology and the UNC Department of Sociology and Anthropology in collaboration with the Archaeological Society of North Carolina are hosts for the archaeological meet. Dr. Joffre L. Coe, UNC associate professor of anthropology and director of the Research Laboratories is chairman of the local arrangements committee.

Meetings are being held at the Carolina Inn, Hill Music Hall, Person Hall, Graham Memorial's Roland Parker Lounge, Peabody Hall and Morehead Planetarium Faculty Lounge.

WUNC-TV To Present New Medical Series

The challenges and pressures facing the medical student each day and facing the practicing physician all his life are documented in a three-part television series beginning May 12 on WUNC-TV (Channel 4).

The half-hour programs will be telecast on successive Tuesdays (May 19 and May 26) at 9:30 p.m.

The purpose of the series is to acquaint the public with the time, effort and cost of medical training, to encourage talented youngsters to enter the field of medicine and to acquaint them with the opportunities and rewards of medical practice.

Owes Her Life To Convicts

HOUSTON, Tex. (UPI)—Mrs. Nellie Rhodes owes her life to men living behind bars.

When Mrs. Rhodes went to a Houston hospital with a serious liver disorder that required major surgery, she had no way to obtain the 16 pints of Type A-Negative blood she needed. Her family could not afford it, she said, and they did not know enough people to get donors.

The men in the Darrington Farm prison unit at Rosharon, Tex., heard of her plight and lined up to donate blood. Twenty-one men with the same type of blood donated a pint each.

Warden R. M. Cousins said the inmates get "a sense of value and usefulness" from giving blood and feel they are contributing to something worthwhile.

What it means to patients is expressed in a letter of thanks Mrs. Rhodes wrote to the prisoners:

"I am alive because of you."

Merchants Recall The Good Old Days

By MICHAEL C. CHALVERUS

Hundreds of students at UNC walk down Franklin Street in Chapel Hill every day without realizing the drama and face-lifting that this small college main street has seen during the last 30 years.

Three prominent residents of Chapel Hill, Spero Dorton, owner of the Goody Shop; Carrington Smith, owner of The Carolina Theater; and Obie Davis, owner of Obie Davis' Esso Station, expounded on some of the memorable physical changes that have taken place in the heart of this community and gave a comparison of the students of years past with those of today.

"When I first opened up in 1948," Spero said, "my business consisted of about 75 per cent beer and 25 per cent food. True, there weren't quite as many places for people to go then as there are now, but the students then simply drank more. I guess it was due in part to a lot of the World War II veterans returning and going to college. The undergraduates were a lot older too. Today, I sell about 80 per cent food and 20 per cent beer."

Spero seems to think that students of today are far more serious about life than they weer when he first came to Chapel Hill.

Smith agreed with Spero saying, "The students during the period immediately following the War had a 'don't give a damn' attitude, which is quite different from the way they are today. They definitely seem to be more mature and serious about an education."

Smith said he had seen a considerable amount of community face-lifting since he came here in 1927.

"The place where the bakery is now used to be called 'Harry's'," he said. "It was started by a man from Baltimore named Harry and its location was changed next to the post office when it was sold to Harry Macklin, the present owner. The old place was a good delicatesen until the end of the War. From 5 in the afternoon until 12 at night it was so packed with beer drinkers that you couldn't get in the front door."

A lot of other changes have taken place, too, Smith remembers. The Tar Heel Cafe used to be a grocery store. The old fraternity court used to be where the Porthole is now. The old "Pick" theater was located where J. B. Robbins clothing store is. The N.C. Cafeteria was once a bowling alley and the "Hub" men's shop next to Sloan's drugstore was a place called "Shield's Grocery Store."

"And there was another place called 'The Variety Store' way before the War about the time of the Depression," Smith added, "where you could walk in and the owner would turn on the lights, and as you walked down the aisle he would turn the lights on one by one. As you were leaving he would turn them off. This sounds strange now, but at the time it was easy to understand."

Several famous people have spent some time on Franklin Street, too, says Smith.

Andy Griffith, motion picture and television actor used to spend quite a bit of time in the old "Harry's", and proposed to his wife there. They celebrated by going to Smith's movie theater.

Kay Kyser, band leader, started the original "Band of Musical Knowledge" in Chapel Hill and gave his first performance in the Pick Theater.

Before Milton and Maurice Julian went into the clothing business, they owned a bicycle repair shop where Kemp's record shop is now.

"Then there was 'Tommy's Place'," he added. "This used to be the place to go for late meals—they stayed open twenty-four hours a day. It used to be where the travel bureau is now. I remember one night five or six years before World War II, a man came in there and robbed the place. A student named Ashby Penn, whose father was president of American Tobacco Company, chased the robber down the street, but was shot and killed."

Obie Davis, a student at UNC in 1932 and former college boxer and baseball player, agreed with Smith and Dorton that today's college students are more sincere about their work then in years past, but Davis added that school spirit has always been good.

"In 1957, when UNC won the National Basketball Championship, the students built a bonfire in front of the post office and celebrated for two or three days. I imagine that the police would have given the jubilant students some trouble if this had been any other town but Chapel Hill. The police here, under Chief Blake and his father, who was also a policeman have always been liberal minded toward the college people. I think this has helped make Chapel Hill a pleasant town for the college students.

Davis believes there have been many physical changes, too.

"The town has grown considerably westward," he said. 'When I was going to college here, Chapel Hill ended just about where Columbia and Franklin Streets meet. There was a traffic island from that point, down toward Carrboro which had trees and flowers in it. Most of the area which is now West Franklin Street was nothing but swamp, and everybody thought that Chapel Hill was going to grow towards Durham."

Davis commented on what he thought to be the biggest singular change around Chapel Hill, by saying, "I think the one big thing that helped Chapel Hill more than anything else, occurred when President of the Consolidated University System Bill Friday and Chancellor Aycock came into the administration. They, along with Mr. Carmichael, administrative assistant, expanded the university enrollment and its facilities which have had a tremendous effect on new business in Chapel Hill."

So, it may seem to some people that the old town of Chapel Hill was more exciting and more appealing than it is today, as described by theese three "Old Timers"—if that is a proper word, since none of them are old in the literal sense. But as Carrington Smith replied when confronted with this thought, "As Thomas Wolfe once said, 'You can't go home again.'"

Be Frugal, Matters Will Improve, Sessoms Says

By HENRY McINNIS

"The hopes of our social order rest on the wise use of space, time, energy, and human relations."

This is the belief of Dr. H. Douglas Sessoms, associate professor and chairman of the UNC Recreation Curriculum.

In an article entitled "New Bases for Recreation Planning," in "The Journal of the American Institute of Planners," Sessoms says the seeds for achieving human fulfillment as well as the means of social and personal destruction lie in how people use space, time, energy and human relationships.

The primary concern of the article according to its author is to study such problems as: "Will man learn to live with leisure, to master the clock he has created? Will man live at peace with his fellow man, respect his neighbor?" Sessoms especially attempts to show how the forces of space and time affect the planning of recreation and the use of leisure time.

The article states that "planners and recreation specialists have for the past two decades relied primarily on standards which stress the relationship of the size of the area served" with the number of persons living there.

Dr. Sessoms asserts that this concept is no longer usable. "Increased mobility, leisure, and family income are bringing about rapid changes in our recreational patterns."

Traditionally in industrial America, says the professor, "work has been the principal, socially approved means of fulfilling most of man's social and mental needs.

"But for an increasing number of our population, leisure and community activities have replaced work" as life's central interest and as the chief means of satisfying one's needs.

"Leisure has come of age," Dr. Sessoms writes.

Recreation, says the author, is now recognized as a basic social force. It is used in industry to produce better human relations, in hospitals to help recovery, and in communities to cut down delinquency and other actions against society.

Philosophers, Dr. Sessoms says, have referred to recreation as the basis of culture. "W. I. Thomas has written of man's need to create, to achieve, to be recognized, to enjoy beauty, to be accepted, and to have new experiences. Through recreation pursuits, he is able to fulfill these wishes," states Sessoms.

But, through leisure experiences, man also has time for self-pity, for escape from reality through the use of alcohol and for lapsing into boredom," the article says.

The challenge to develop healthy attitudes toward leisure, in the opinion of Sessoms, is to "teach recreation skills and provide constructive recreation facilities and programs."

"The history of organized recreation parallels that of education, public health and welfare. It appeared at the beginning of the 20th Century and was sponsored largely by the philanthropist's dollar and administered by youth and by agencies aiding the underprivileged, such as settlement houses, YMCA's and boys' clubs," states the article.

Now, writes Sessoms, the need for recreation covers the broad scope of our society, and the trend in outdoor activities is toward the outing where variety is expected. "The recreation agency must provide a cafeteria of activities." Recreation planners must "plan according to function and need," he continued. "Recreation facilities are simply the physical manifestations of social needs. They are there to provide an avenue for the fulfillment or expression of social recreational needs through leisure experiences.

Football Season Brings Memories

The football season is but a memory now, but it is a memory that won't be forgotten for a long time. To try to find out what now is remembered best, I asked about fifty people two questions: 1) what they remember best about the season, and 2) what player they most liked to watch.

The first question brought, as might be expected, a wide range of answers. Ten or twelve recalled Max Chapman's field goal against Duke, which won the game, the ACC Championship and the Gator Bowl bid. One observer noted that he had never felt so much anxiety as when the ball was in the air, and that it seemed that it was in the air for a full minute. In some cases it was the game itself: the lead, then Glacken and Wilkinson pulling them ahead, and the "Great March," climaxed by Chapman's kick.

The Gator Bowl victory was the second most popular reply. The fact that Carolina proved itself as a national power despite the rankings or just the fact that we won a bowl game were exciting enough. A couple of people said that the all-around team play in that game coupled with the awe of the Bowl made it an unforgettable experience. I think that those who went down to Jacksonville couldn't help but feel that way, for how often does one go to a bowl and win 35-0?

Different players' weekly performances gave many their biggest thrill. Ken Willard's tremendous running is pretty hard to forget. Five people noted him as the dependable "four-yard man" who could always be counted on for the first down.

Bob Lacey and Junior Edge as a team produced the biggest thrill for three people. The pattern that worked so well, with Lacey going short, Edge hitting him, and watching Lacey wiggle away from defender after defender was something that may not be duplicated in the ACC for some time. The fact that Lacey earned an All-American berth gave one of Bob's friends quite a memory, for knowing an All-American is no everyday thing.

One specific play concerning Gary Black and Ron Tuthill ranked in two people's minds as the top play all year. It was against Miami, and we had third-and-twelve on the Hurricanes' twenty-nine. Black went back to pass, and when he was unable to find a receiver, he started to run up the middle. But the middle suddenly closed, and surrounded by four linemen, he looped the ball to Tuthill, who was surrounded by two more Miami defenders. All that either of them could remember was that Tuthill was engulfed by the two tacklers, then emerged completely free on the ten-yard line racing for the score. It may be noted that both those observers were soccer players, so that type of play, run often, is all that is needed to convert a soccer man.

Black-Tuthill Pass Top Play . . .

Black himself is electrifying every time he starts to roll out with the ball. His daredevil antics week after week amazed many people. One coed said she couldn't wait for the football season, just to watch Black in action again.

Tuthill, Ronnie Jackson and Eddie Kesler were the other backs who were mentioned. Tuthill was remembered for his "guts brand of football" in trying to take on two or three tacklers who appeared to be twice his size. Ronnie Jackson's sprinting down field on every play amused one fan tremendously, but in laughing he quickly noted that the little flanker caught three touchdown passes. The consistent blocking by Kesler, an oft-overlooked cog in the machine, was the top thrill for another fan.

Willard Favorite Player . . .

One person said he could never forget the defensive line play in the NC State and Georgia games, particularly the individual play of Chris Hanburger and Frank Gallagher, who helped wreck quarterbacks Jim Rossi and Larry Rakestraw.

As for the best player to watch, it was partly answered by some of the replies to the previous question. Willard got twice the votes of anyone else, with Lacey and Black running close as second and third. Edge, Jackson, Chapman, Kesler, Hanburger, Tuthill, and Sandy Kinney all drew some fan support.

As for myself, I don't like to seem sentimental, but two people were overlooked in the glamor contests: Co-Captains Gene Sigmon and Roger Smith. I will never forget the pass Sigmon caught in the Miami game on the end over, which brought the team out of a second and twenty-five situation, and set up the Black to Tuthill pass that was mentioned above. Smith unfortunately was hurt and missed the whole season except for the Bowl, but the season never would have been what it was without their leadership. The season was a thrill I'll never forget, and Smith and Sigmon played the key roles.

Hoehn And Parrish Doubles Favorites

For the first time, the UNC tennis team isn't ranked first in the ACC tennis tournament.

The tournament starts at nine o'clock this morning at Duke, and Maryland's Terrapins are the first ranked team. Maryland and Clemson were supposed to have played yesterday at Clemson. The earlier Maryland-Clemson match was rained out and had to be rescheduled.

Maryland is currently 5-0 in the conference and UNC and Clemson are 4-1. If Clemson can beat Maryland, the conference race will be thrown into a three-way tie.

The Tar Heels, who saw their ACC win streak broken at 47 games by Maryland, take a 16-2 record into the tournament. Indiana upset the Tar Heels in the first match of the season. Coach Don Skakle's crew then won 10 straight matches before being upset by Maryland at College Park. The Tar Heels finished their season with six straight wins.

Carolina's number one courtman, George Sokol, has won the conference singles title for two straight years and will probably be the top-seeded performer in the tournament. However, Sokol will be hard-pushed to retain his title this year. Maryland's Jim Busic, who defeated George in two consecutive sets this year, Jerry Matson of Duke, Doug Stewart of Clemson and M. Alcala of Wake Forest could all give Sokola a rough time.

Coach Skakle said, "I think our chances are pretty good in the tournament. Sokol is playing well now, and the whole team is hitting their potential again after a mid-season letdown. Everyone is playing well now."

Sophomore Kenny Oettinger, who came on fast toward the end of the season, won his challenge match with Sam Applegate yesterday and will be the sixth singles man for the Tar Heels.

O. H. Parrish, Ted Hoehn, Charlie Shaffer and Pete Myers will round out the Tar Heel singles performers.

In the doubles, Sokol will be paired with sophomore Carl Evans, but Hoehn and Parrish are the team to watch in the tournament.

Trackmen Face Tough Competition

By PETE GAMMONS

With 204 entries from all eight conference schools, the eleventh annual Atlantic Coast Conference Outdoor Track and Field Championships promises to be the best, and possibly the closest in history. The meet gets under way in College Park, Md., at Maryland's Byrd Stadium tomorrow with trials at 2 p.m. and the finals Saturday at 1:30.

UNC Coach Joe Hilton and Co-Captain Tommy Henley both expressed optimism. Hilton said, "We are looking for all-around good performances from all our boys."

Henley then listed the expected starters and those he thought could do well. "We are especially strong in the 2-mile, with Mike Folk, Jim Meade, and Art Maillet." He later went on to say that Folk should win, with the other two finishing high. "If he's all right, Maillet should win the mile."

Bob Bennett and Bill Janowitz are the Carolina entries in the half-mile, and Bill Allen and Al Dobritch in the 440. "It's hard to say whether Allen or Dobritch will win, but both should do real well," continued Henley.

Dale White and Joe McNinch should represent the team very well in both the 100 and the 220. White is the favorite, and McNinch isn't far behind.

In the jumping events Henley expects Harvey Whitley and Tommy Clark to do well. Whitley will be competing in the broad jump and the triple jump, while Clark will be in the triple jump and the high jump. Clark is the defending champion in the high jump, and should repeat. Jim Moore and William Young are also entered in the triple jump.

Hilton said that Henley should do very well in the discus. Bill Graham is the UNC entry in the shot put, and should finish among the leaders.

Rick Ambrose, Adger Stokes, Milton Bauguess, and Gary Meade all are entered in the 120 and 330 hurdles, and according to Henley coul do well. Ambrose and Bauguess are mentioned in the Maryland scouting reports as strong contenders to win the events.

Nick Street and Pat Tone will both be in the javelin, with Street being a possible favorite. Bob Bowerman will compete in the pole vault.

Hilton also feels "We should make a good showing" in the 440 relay, with Dobritch, White, Stokes and McNinch running for us.

Maryland is seeking their tenth consecutive ACC title. Despite this, two important factors indicate why this could be the best meet ever: more good teams and improvement by all eight teams.

A well-balanced Clemson team, winner of the Carolina and Piedmont Relays, probably has the best chance of ending the Terps' domination. They are led by defending 100 and 220 champion, Jim Wynn, sprinters Carl Pool and Jack Shaw, pole vaulter Bill Jackson, weight men Dick Dobbs and Nelson McLoughlin, hurdler Lynn O'Cain, and defending ACC broad jump champ Cater Leland. This is the best Tiger team ever, and their individual stars are as impressive os their team balance.

South Carolina, winner of dual meets over UNC and Duke, has its best team in some time, too. Bob Crombie (880), Mike McGuinness (220, 440), Dave Gatch (hurdles), Walt Christensen (weights), and Woody Chapman (pole vault) are their big men.

Hurdler Bob Fogle leads the Duke aggregation, which does not appear to be one of the favorites. Football star Mike Curtis is the defending javelin champion, but was defeated soundly last week by Street.

Maryland will again be strong, though, and still ranks as the favorites to cop their tenth straight title. Broad jump champ Mike Cole is one of the finest in the nation. Dick Sheer, Tom Finley, and Bob Vermillion (hurdles), Ernie Hearon (weights), Bob Williams (pole vault), Tom Kreuger (mile), and Steve Lamb (sprinter) all are top threats.

However, UNC, despite the fierce opposition, should at least make an impressive showing. With, as Hilton says, "A good all-around performance," which Tommy Henley guarantees we'll get, the Tar Heels could win.

Linksmen Beat Devils By 18-9 Score

The UNC linksmen defeated the Duke golfers 18-9 in Carolina's last dual meet Tuesday at Finley.

Les Fleischer, playing number one, crushed Buzzy Lewis of the Blue Devils, 2½-½. Harvey Hill was medalist in the spot behind Fleishcher, firing a two-under-par 70 to defeat Tom Danluch, 3-0. Tommy Arnold and Ed Hoopes won in the third and fifth spots by scores of 2-1 and 2½-½ respectively.

In the number four positions, Skip Tucker didn't fare as well as his teammates as he was defeated by Dan Hill, who shot a 70. Bill Stephenson and John Baldwin each won by identical 3-0 scores, while George Reims and Jim Gray last by 2½-½ and 2-1.

The team is now in Columbia, S. C., where they will compete in the ACC tourney Friday and Saturday. The conference championship is decided by this 36-hole competition.

Cassius X Kisses Babies, Concedes Muhammed Title

BALTIMORE (UPI) — Heavyweight champion Cassius Clay strolled through the streets Wednesday kissing babies and selling autographed copies of the Black Muslim newspaper.

"Hey Cassius," someone called. There was no answer.

"Hey, Mudhammed Ali," someone else called.

"Yeah," he answered promptly.

The unheraled appearance of the king of the boxing world rapidly attracted a crowd of several hundred persons. They blocked traffic and the sidewalk.

Police quickly cleared the street and ordered the crowd to make a path so pedestrians could walk through.

"Obey the law," Clay said. "There will be no dogs here today."

Clay was in Baltimore to speak at a Muslim rally. He said he decided to stroll around town "to meet the little people."

MONOGRAM MEETING POSTPONED

Newly elected Monogram Club President Richie Zarro has announced that the meeting scheduled for tonight has been postponed until next Thursday, May 14.

Zarro hopes that the change of time will allow more people to attend and hopes to begin his regime with improved attendance at the meetings.

FCA MEETING

The last Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA) meeting of the year will be held tonight in room 304 Woollen Gym at 7:30.

Since it is the last meeting all members are urged to be present.

Stats Show Hurlers Key To Success

According to the statistics, and it has been said that statistics tell the story, it has been the pitching, not the hitting, which brought UNC the ACC Baseball Championship.

Bill Haywood leads the pitching staff, which as a unit has an earned run average of 2.47, including the two horrendous games against Florida State early in the season. Haywood has an 8-0 record. He leads the team with a microscopic 0.83 ERA, 60 strikeouts, and 3 complete games.

Jerry Davis, the hero this week with his shutout over Wake Forest, upped his record to 3-1, 1.94. He has thrown two shutouts. Soph Beattie Leonard, recovered from his broken hand which sidelined him for over half the season, now has two wins and an ERA of 2.25.

The other hero of the Wake game, John Shaw, has taken a strong lead in the team batting race. With his three hits Tuesday the sophomore catcher is now hitting .395. Dick Prindle (.337) Bill Haywood (.333), and Ken Boykin (.319) are all over .300.

Jim Speight and Prindle are tied for the leadership in runs with 19 each. Prindle also leads in hits with 30 and stolen bases with 6. Ken Willard leads in homers (3), RBI's (23), and triples (3), while Speight leads in doubles with 6.

The team batting average is .255 which although not weak, isn't anything compared to the .287 mark Wake Forest had last year. But then Wake pitchers didn't have a 2.47 ERA.

Paid Manager Interviews Begin Today

Interviews for the position of paid residence hall intramural managers will start today and continue through the week of May 11. This job gives the student selected, $193 a year, the equivalent of the residence hall room rent.

This plan of paid intramural anagers has increased the participation of dormitory teams from 171 entered last fall to 305 teams this fall, a 78.3 per cent increase.

The interviews for this job will be held by the Intramural Office located on the second floor of Woollen Gym. The intramural staff feels that the residence hall managers program is highly successful. To prove this, figures show 94.6 per cent scheduled contests were played this fall as compared to only 50.8 per cent played the fall before.

The funds to support this paid manager program come from an extra 30 cents added to dormitory rents which is matched by the administration. The result that the Intramural Department desired from this was to sceure more interested managers. This success is evidenced in the program's continuance.

Beanbirds Are At It Again . . .

To compensate for the annual losses of some of its higher-flying birds, the Order of the Old Beanbirds rose from its mystic nest this morning to complement its flock. Flying low over the campus and chirping joyously, the Beanbirds roosted twenty-two chicks at dawn and egged them on to the roost. There, amid the flutter of frantic wings, the pecking ceremony took place, and the Beanbird shuffle and other mystic rites were celebrated.

The new fledglings are: Alice "Auk" Hubner, Stuart "Spoon-billed Wagtail" Howie, Nat "Cat Flycatcher" Taylor, Shirley "Shivering Pea-Bird" Patterson, Johnny "Horney Fowl" Thompson, Susan "Speckled Ember Goose" Goode, Billy "Bull-Headed Plover" Upchurch, Mebane "Marsh Hen" McDonald, Erky "Dung Hunter" Duff, Betsy "Buff-Breasted Grass Bird" Millington, Tony 'Gutter Snipe" Miller, Diana "Dark-Bodied Silktail" Worth, Hunter "Hooded Walloon" Morin, Roxanne "Rose-Breasted Rook" Kalb, Jimmy "Coyote Bird" Durston, Frannie "Forktailed Harber Gull" Pierce, Henry "Chopping Woodpecker" Morgan, Alice 'Red-Eyed Bog-sucker" Brown, Tom "Titmouse" Arnold, Diana "Wagtail Warbler" Wellons, Ted "Hairy Sapsucker" Hoehn, and Judy "Jug-Breasted Honker" Smith.

The Beanbird chicks are chosen for certain birdlike qualities. Although these are usually aesthetic and indefineable, two stand out as essential. Beanbirds are known for their fowl looks and their eggestentialist outlook on life.

Att: Students On Scholarships, Drop By 2 Hanes

All students who are currently receiving renewable scholarships through the University and who wish to receive them again next year, are urged by the Office of Student Aid, 2 Hanes Hall, to file renewal applications as soon as possible, and not later than June 15.

In addition, the Office of Student Aid has announced that currently enrolled students who do not hold scholarships and who wish to apply for next year can now pick up the application forms in their office.

Criteria for eligibility include an above average academic record and demonstrated financial need. Applications must be submitted before May 19, the last day of classes for this semester.

HOUSE WRITES BOOK

"The Light That Shines," a collection of reminiscent articles on Chapel Hill and UNC by former Chancellor Emeritus Robert House, will be published on May 23 by the UNC Press.

The ex-Chancellor looks backward and forward from his UNC years of 1912-16. The dust jacket of the book quotes him as saying, "I portray persons and events as I have mulled them over in mind and heart for 50 years."

Clovers Brew Love Potion; Kick Off Frosh Weekend

The fabulous Clovers recording stars have been scheduled to mix a batch of their "Love Potion Number 9" on the Morehead Parking Lot tonight at 8 for the kicks of all good freshmen everywhere.

The Vibrators Combo will be there to provide the noise.

The show and dance opens the Friday night installment of the biggest and best and first Freshman Weekend in history.

"I just hope the Freshmen and every other Carolina student takes advantage of this opportunity to enjoy some free entertainment," said Jim Brame, freshman class president.

Saturday night's freshman faire includes a hootenanny on the GM lawn followed by Guitar Vick and the Swinging Five from 8 p.m. to midnight.

The hootenanny includes such renowned local talent as Jack "DDT" Allison and the Roaches, who so moved the Freshman Talent Show last February. Featured also is George Thompson, The Vagrants, Bob Hinkle, Marshall Daniels, Dave McFadden, and Gail Reive with their various golden, folk-tuned voices.

The Weekend is the result of a number of Freshman Work Projects and Merchant Sales held during the year.

"It's been a lot of work," Brame said.

So, Boys, get your dates. This is what the campus has been waiting for. The Morehead Parking or the Tin Can, if it rains, is the place to be from 8 'til the bewiching hour tonight and Saturday. You don't even have to be a frosh. The universe is invited.

Ptui! . . . . Splat

By KERRY SIPE

With the trees on the lawn of McIver Dormitory draped in orange and turquoise patches of crepe paper, and the sun shining down like the hub-cap on a T-Bird Convertible, a herd of Carolina co-eds stampeded to wash their faces in the pink coolness of a slice of southern watermelons, yesterday afternoon.

There must have been a million of 'em—all in Bermuda shorts with smiles as big as the melons they ate.

"Hello," I ventured, "I am a reporter from the Daily Tar Heel."

"That's too bad," was her answer, as she spit a speckled Sienna Southern watermelon seed in my eye. "Have some," she said.

"Watermelon?" I asked.

"We'll play spitsies!"

And so the day grew shorter and 4:30 p.m. Eastern Standard Time grew nearer and nearer to the Day of Ultimate Doom. "Spitsies?" I asked.

"It's a game," she said, as my face spread with the glow of new gained knowledge. "You stand over there by the tree, take a huge gob of watermelon in your mouth, and squish it down until just the seeds are left."

"Ummmm," I said to make it obvious I was listening.

"And then you spit them one at a time. The longest spit wins."

The longest spit wins. Semi-precious gems fall from the mouths of babes. I'm not complaining. The sun was shining, the birds were in the trees, and I had my mouth full of watermelon meat, anyway.

"Why not?" I meekly mumbled.

The girl with the mole on her cheek opening with a breath-taking three foot, 27 inch tongue-twister. Ptui! I followed with a spiraling pop fly which hesitated a moment at the top of a high swooping arc and landed with a resounding report right in the housemother's ear.

They tell me next year's CWC Watermelon Feast will be one of the few watermelon feasts in history to serve nothing but cantaloupe.

Ackland Features 22 Masterpieces

Twenty-two masterpieces from the past and present are now on display at the Ackland Art Center through May 17. Along with the paintings are six sculptures, and a pastel, all on loan from the Art Museum at Princeton University.

In a later painting, artist Daniel Seghers has composed a memorial to the great Flemish artist Peter Paul Rubens.

Among the sculpture exhibited is a humble creature in bronze entitled "Peg Leg" by Ernst Barlach. This work creates the Gothic allusion that is dominent in his woodcuts as well as his sculpture.

The museum is open to the public Tuesday through Friday from 2-5 p.m. and 8-10 p.m.; Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday, 2-5 p.m. It is closed Monday.

PLAYMAKERS OUTDOORS

"The Braggart Soldier" is still playing at the Forest Theatre.

The play, a parody of the vainglorious military man, is presented by the Carolina Playmakers and stars Graham Pollock.

With weather permitting, the Plautus farce will continue to play through Sunday night. Performances start at 8:30 p.m.

Cheering Crowds Welcome Johnson

From DTH Wire Reports

ROCKY MOUNT — President Lyndon Johnson paid his first visit to the Tar Heel State yesterday as Chief Executive, and even though it was a hop-skip-jump aff, he wowed those who saw him in Goldsboro, Rocky Mount and points in between.

Johnson paid a personal visit to a farm family here, in his promised campaign to "meet the people." Johnson was accompanied on his brief visit by Gov. Terry Sanford.

Speaking from the Court House steps here, Johnson spoke on poverty, the main theme of his trip, and also on the race issue.

"Some people never get a decent break because they were born with the wrong color of skin," Johnson told the cheering throngs.

Police estimated more than 200,000 persons turned out in Nashville, Tennessee to give a rousing welcome to the President and his 19-year-old daughter Lynda Byrd, who proved a hit in her own right.

During a talk at the Knoxville Coliseum, the Chief Executive noted that his poverty program has been attacked by leading figures of the Republican party as a "cruel hoax."

"Well," Johnson told a cheering, capacity audience of more than 7,000, "that is an old familiar phrase—cruel hoax.

"The man who coined that phrase must have had his job for a long time, working for the Rebublican National Committee, because I first heard that phrase in 1936 when they called Social Security a cruel hoax."

Although Johnson did not name the critic of his program by name, both Sen. Barry Goldwater and former GOP Vice President Richard Nixon have attacked the plan.

Hitting home with a federal project close to the hearts of Tennesseans, the Tennessee Valley Authority, Johnson declared:

"If men of timid faith and narrow vision" had gotten their way 30 years ago "the TVA would not be today the world's shinning example of how government and free enterprise can work hand-in-hand to help people.

"If those men had their way, the 'for sale' signs would be on TVA this hour," Johnson told the cheering audience.

The President also put in a plug for civil rights. He said he wanted to make sure that jobs are available for all who want them "regardless of race, religion or color of their skin."

Class Roll Violation Involves 4 Students

Four students were found guilty of falsifying class rolls and a fifth was found innocent of a lying charge in Men's Honor Council cases Tuesday night.

The students charged with falsifying class rolls were split into three separate cases due to different circumstances in their alleged offenses.

All four students, plus three more tried last night, were in the same class.

One of the defendants had been seen by another student standing outside the door of the class motioning for someone to sign him in.

The student reported this to the chairman of the department who asked the professor to call the roll orally at the end of class checking the names of those who had initialed the roll but were not there.

The professor did this and asked that anyone who had signed another person's initials come to see him after class. The professor then asked all the students he caught to turn themselves in.

In the first case, one student had signed in his friend, understanding that the latter would be late to class and would have to leave five minutes early for an appointment with another professor.

The friend had gone to a gas station in Durham and was detained to have his car fixed. When he returned to Chapel Hill, he went directly to his professor to tell him he had not been to class although he thought he had been signed in. He said he had not talked to the student who signed him in or anyone in the class before going to the professor.

The student who had signed him present went to his next class hoping to see his friend there and get an explanation. When his friend was not there either, he went back to tell the professor what had happened.

The two pleaded indefinite and were found guilty of a violation of the letter of the code but not a violation of the spirit. The Council ruled that there had been no intent to deceive the professor.

The students were sentenced to Council reprimand. This sentence is the lightest given by the Council and was reinstituted in the Council's list of penalties this spring. It had been abolished five years ago.

This sentence goes in the files of the Council and the Dean of Men but is not recorded on the student's official record.

The student who had signed the roll had been on probation

Sidewalk Art Show Unveils Itself Today

All matter, shape and forms of art will be on display today and tomorrow from 11 a.m. till sunset and from 2 to 5 p.m. on Sunday on the south side of Battle-Vance-Pettigrew Hall.

Some 250 paintings, prints, sketches and possibly some sculpture will be shown and placed on sale by 33 artists at the Sidewalk Art Show.

The University Art League is sponsoring the show, and, in spite of the prices the artists are charging, the League expects to make no profit.

Prices for the works will range from $2.50 to $1000, and League officials are hoping this year's total of money spent at the show will exceed last year's total of $1500.

The Sidewalk Art Show has been held annually for six years, and contributing artists from Raleigh and Durham have joined local talent in submitting entries.

League President Jeff Bayer has asked all students with a few dollars to spare to come to the show. You may be able to pick up something cheap.

Say It Isn't True!

By MILES DAVIS

Well, fellows, it looks like we may as well face it. The incredible truth is that the co-eds here at Carolina make better grades than we do.

Statistics provided by the Dean of Men and Dean of Women's offices show that belief in our own intellectual supremacy is unfounded.

Smith Hall was high for women's residence halls with 2.589, and Grimes was first for men's dorms at 2.420.

Carolina women's overall average was 2.5044; the average for fraternities totaled 2.195; and men's residence halls averaged 2.18-.

Old East held the cellar for men with 1.783.

But don't be too discouraged, men, perhaps all is not lost.

There are only 1670 undergraduate women at UNC compared to 4494 men, and freshmen women total 250 to 1163 men.

GRADUATION INVITATIONS

All seniors who ordered graduation invitations may pick them up on second floor Y-Court from 10 a.m.-3 p.m. now through Wednesday.

Any seniors who did not order invitations should also come at this time, as there are a limited number being sold on a first come, first served basis.

Most Fascinating Job In Town? She Has It

By EVE HIGGINS

"I have the most fascinating job in Chapel Hill," said Ginny Wells, secretary to Consolidated University President Friday.

"There's something new to be learned every day, but the feeling of satisfaction you get from a job well done simply can't be matched!"

A petite woman with salt-and-peppered short hair, Mrs. Wells probably knows more about Consolidated University activities than anyone else, excepting of course, her boss, Bill Friday.

"I've been secretary to Mr. Friday since October, 1957," she said. "I had been secretary for several other people around campus prior to that, including Dr. Louis Round Wilson."

Mrs. Wells calls herself a transplanted Yankee for she hails from New Jersey. She has been in Chapel Hill since 1946, when her husband came to school at UNC.

"We lived on the same street with the Aycocks and the Fridays in Victory Village in those days, she said. "So I've known them for a long time. But you could never have told me then that today I would be Bill Friday's secretary."

Attractive Mrs. Wells doesn't look it, but she is the mother of two high school-age children. Daughter Kathy plans to attend Peace College next year, and son Bo will be a senior in high school.

Just what would she look for in a capable secretary?

Well, first of all, she would have to have had secretarial experience. Then, a college degree is important, and most of all, a constant interest in learning, for there is something new every day.

"No two days are alike in our office. There's always the routine mail to handle, and a few things that have to be done. There are meetings to keep up with, visits from trustees and then a number of people who just drop in to say hello to President Friday," she added.

"David Brinkley came in just to speak with him for a moment, as did Billy Graham last year, and numerous other people. Meeting people is one of the most interesting parts of my job!"

One facet of a secretarial job not included in the ordinary description at the placement bureau goes along with receiving so many guests at the CU office.

"I make lots of coffee and serve lots of cokes, as well as subsequently washing many dishes," she laughed.

Obviously devoted to her busy boss, Mrs. Wells doesn't see how he has managed his seven-day work week with its 12-hour day. Keeping up with his appointments alone, she says, is quite a job. Dinner meetings must be on the office calendar and the calendar at home, so the telephone wire between the office and Friday's home is kept busy as Mrs. Wells calls Mrs. Friday about appointments.

"Keeping up with all the people in different jobs so that changes in personnel don't come as a surprise is something else I have to do," she added. "Just as we will have a new chancellor next year, so go changes all over the country. I've learned a great deal about education in North Carolina and in the nation through this job."

From all the interesting and exciting events which have occurred in the years since Friday took office, Mrs. Wells remembers one as particularly exciting.

"President Kennedy's visit to the campus was highly interesting. Secret Service men came in eight days in advance of the visit, and they used our office as a headquarters. We got to know them well, and you couldn't help admiring the detailed preparations they made for the short visit of the President," she said.

In addition to regular duties, Mrs. Wells has served as secretary of the committee on the new chancellor, setting up meetings and handling correspondence.

"They have done a great deal of hard work," she said. "I know that when it is finally finished, we can be satisfied that the job has been done well."

Does an efficient girl-Friday ever have any spare time to "just relax?"

"I'm a real sports fan," said Mrs. Wells. "I've been to all the home football and basketball games, and to two baseball games, one of which the boss let me leave a few minutes early to catch!"

Reading and going to plays are other activities she enjoys in spare moments, along with knitting.

"I did almost half a ski sweater between games at the ACC tournament!" she said.

"But probably the most unsatisfactory thing I've done this year was to take my son off the basketball team because of grades. I almost cried, but I just had to do it."

Mrs. Wells has often been called the "power" in the CU offices, because she knows all the secrets people would like to know before their publication.

"When it's something good, I'm just bursting to tell, but I never do. My children are sometimes frustrated by this, but they know I won't tell," she smiled.

Is the hard work and the fast pace of her job worth it?

"Oh, sometimes you don't think you'll ever keep up—or finish. But when you look back and see all the things you've been a part of accomplishing—whether people know about them or not—there is a tremendous sense of satisfaction and of fulfillment."

Sophomore Tests And The Human Element

The mechanized, standardized, automated, IBM age in which we live is often fascinating, but it is often bewildering as well. Occasionally, in the press for higher standards, success in the face of growing competition, or a "better way" of dealing with our probelms, we tend to sacrifice the human element to the cause of the standard or the machine. A case in point is the recent treatment of several hundred UNC sophomores.

These numerous sophomores, apparently chosen by some "scientific sampling method" were informed a week or so ago that they would be required to take several tests, over a period of two evenings (May 5 and 6), in order to set up norms for College Board Tests that will be administered to transfer applicants in the future.

Now certainly we cannot quibble with the administration over the value of such participation. As the letter to the sophomores stated, "the number of students applying to the University after completing two years of college work elsewhere has been growing very rapidly and will soon be far greater than the number of such transfers (the University) can accept." This situation almost demands a standard test which can be administered to transfer applicants in much the same manner that College Board Tests are given to high school applicants. That a group of our own sophomores, who presumably have an educational level equivalent to that of the transfers, should be called in to help make the tests more effective also seems to be a most reasonable approach. Yet there are certain aspects of the situation which indicate that the human element may have been sorely neglected.

For example, it seems that someone made a rather poor choice of dates on which to administer the tests. May 5 and 6 are entirely too close to May 20, the date on which final exams begin, for most students. Granted, those students who took the tests were excused from quizzes given in their regular classes on the days immediately following the tests. But even this is not enough. Two nights lost are two nights lost, especially during a week already filled with term papers, quizzes, lab assignments, and all the other academic trials which commonly logjam near the end of the semester. All this work must eventually be done, immediate excuses or no, and two nights without studying can only be injurious to those who are conscientiously trying to wrap up their work in preparation for final exams. And even if some unexplained phenomenon made it absolutely necessary for the tests to be given this week, a week's notice is hardly sufficient for the proper adjustment of one's entire schedule to the two nights given over to the tests.

Finally, we question how valuable the results will be to the administration, now that the tests have been administered in such an offhand manner. Many students openly admit to all who care to listen that they did not give an honest effort ("All I wanted to do was get out of that hot room as quick as I could"). In retrospect, it is apparent that they had no real reason to give more than a going-through-the-motions stab at the many questions and hurry to avail themselves of the smoking break. The students were told that their scores would have no effect on their own records, indicating that the administration will not use the results to find out anything important about its sophomores, either. Besides, many of students were sufficiently angered by the mere fact of having to take the tests at all that they deliberately made no more than a token effort to turn in high scores.

The results of all this may well be (1) a group of highly irate students, and (2) a set of "norms" for the tests which might, to the surprise of almost no one, turn out to be exceedingly unreliable. It seems obvious that those who administered the tests could have avoided both these problems if only someone, somewhere had taken into account one thing that is more important than any "norms"—the human element.

Lake—Stronger Than You Think?

The resurgence of support for I. Beverly Lake in his gubernatorial bid is a fact, albeit an unfortunate one.

Lake has run a good campaign. He kept in the background for the first half, spending his money wisely, meeting people and staying out of the fight between Richardson Preyer and Dan Moore. Lately he has stepped up the tempo.

Banners hang across the streets of small eastern North Carolina towns. Lake buttons are everywhere, as are Lake bumper stickers. His campaigning has gotten far more intense. In short, the Lake campaign resembles the professional jobs being done for Moore and Preyer.

He is making a pitch for all the votes, not just the vote of the "red-necks." He has avoided the integration question except to denounce the Civil Rights Bill, and it is no secret that, amazingly enough, he is strong even in Negro districts in the eastern part of the state.

For instance, we heard, and later confirmed, that photographs of Dr. Lake shaking hands with a Negro were being circulated about the eastern section. In 1960, when he was opposed by Terry Sanford, one of the little "hate sheets" which some of his supporters circulated included pictures of Terry Sanford shaking hands with a Negro.

If Dr. Lake is elected, and the possibility is not as far off as it once seemed, North Carolina may well go down the road of shame, following Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana. Lake is not a George Wallace or a Ross Barnett, but his ideas are much in the same pattern as those of the two Southern governors.

We once were certain that the people of this state would never send Beverly Lake to the Governor's Mansion, but now we are wavering. It is our hope the voters will consider all parts of the campaign and the issues (however nonexistent they may be) before selecting their choice for governor.

UNC's Co-Ed Problems: Part III

By PETER RANGE
(Last in a Series of Three)

The rules system for women at Carolina exists to help the girls. If, however, we are to judge by the end product, as pointed out in this column before, the system has at least one very harmful effect: it perpetuates high school-level maturity by keeping the girls under a parochial system for four vital years of their lives, thus making them dependent on the System for their decisions rather than on themselves.

A basic feature of the University's attitude towards the women student is the principle of in loco parentis, of substitute parents. I find this a fundamental error in the American system. The University should concern itself with the provision of faculty, books, academic facilities first; only secondly is it their job to house and feed us; and only thirdly should they try to direct the private behavior of the individual student, if at all.

The European girl (I'm thinking mainly of Germany) has less freedom in high school than does the American. Yet when she reaches the university, where there are no rules at all regarding her personal behavior, she takes this big step in stride. All the young women I met at the university there demonstrate amazing maturity; very few misuse their broad freedom. I suggest that it is this very freedom which inspires the maturity among the girls.

From the time they begin thinking about a university education onwards, those girls are prepared by their parents for the total freedom they receive at the age of 19. Higher education is taken rather seriously—it is not anticipated as a four-year play period as many an American high school student sees it. Because of the expectation involved, the European co-ed is able to assume and enjoy great freedom responsibly when she finishes high school.

But because our girls are prepared not for freedom, but for a broad system of control and a parent-type relationship with their schools, they do not prepare themselves psychologically for freedom and responsibility. Because they are then treated like high schoolers and immature, naive girls unable to make a simple decision, that is exactly how they act when they get here.

If, however, they were treated as young women ready to receive responsibility for their own conduct, I feel sure they would rise to this challenge. We give our women far too little credit for maturation potential. The immature, non-intellectual, silly sweet lass I have criticized here is, I think, the product of our out-dated, motherly system more than the product of her own nature. Our women could be as responsible and grown up as European if given a chance and a challenge.

On top of this, however, the American male must begin to put a higher premium on the well-informed, responsible, independent young woman. If he does, she will surely move in that direction. And the converse of this applies as well.

Accepting the fact of the in loco parentis attitude of the University, the Administration's responsibility as good parents is to cultivate the maturation of the girls here.

I propose a staggered system of rules: Let most of the freshman rules stand as they are now. For the sophomores, and then the juniors, progressively more freedom should be given. Those more informed than I in this area could work out the specifics, such as setting closing hours later, dropping the apartment rule for sophomores and above, etc. The girls, at any rate, should be forced to make more of their own decisions each year.

The seniors, then, should have total freedom. They should be allowed to live on or off campus, come and go as they see fit, dress as they please, and leave Chapel Hill at will. In short, they should be living under the very conditions they will be under the day after they graduate in order to have at least some practice in total independence before severing ties with formal education.

As it stands, our girls enter the outside world with absolutely no experience in the complete self-government they must exercise when they depart from Chapel Hill. Would it not be better to give them a start in total freedom in the Chapel Hill community where there is at least an atmosphere, an elan, a set of attitudes to give them guidelines, rather than let them start off in some totally unstructured, uninhibited community on the outside?

In denying them this sorely-needed practice, the University does its women students great injury. Our system would well fit a time when no women worked, when all become wives and homemakers and good Southern hostesses. But that time ended about 99 years ago.

I am not pleading for more two-piece bathing suits, for more girls to stay out all night, for girls to go to men's apartments alone, for trips to country motels, or any such extreme behavior. If anything, I find many girls' behavior already out of keeping with the demands of being a good student. Instead I am pleading for the right of the women to decide for themselves not to stay out all night, not to go into that apartment, or not to get drunk on weekends and with this the right to grow up.

The Dean of Women and the University have a great responsibility here; thus far they are not meeting up to it. With good feelings on all sides, can they not address themselves to the problem in a forward manner and produce a policy in keeping with the needs of the times?

Bombing Forced On Allies In War

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Louis Schmier and Wade Wellman have been supplying the readers of the DTH with some interesting and unique controversy (unique as DTH controversy goes) over the last several days. It seems that Mr. Wellman is rather upset at the fact that the Allies bombed the city of Dresden, which he continually maintains was of no military significance at such a late date in the war. Before going any further, let me assure Mr. Wellman that I am not taking issue with him on the strategic importance of Dresden. As a matter of fact, I could care less.

What I am taking issue with is his apparent purpose in condemning the United States and Britain for the bombing. Granted that any kind of bombing is horrible, but to coin an old, worn-out cliche, "War is Hell!" Mr. Wellman, this is World War II we are speaking of, not a backyard Jubilee drunk. The Allies did a lot of things which were horrible, and very likely unnecessary, but we were not having a shadow boxing match with Cassius You-know-who.

May I take the liberty to refer Mr. Wellman to "A Torch To The Enemy" and "The Night Hamburg Died" by Martin Cailin. If you want to read something as horrible as humanly imaginable, read these two books. I am sure you will enjoy them Mr. Wellman, because the good old, pure, never-do-wrong U.S.A. was responsible for both actions described.

Mr. Wellman, I was under the impression that we were in World War II to win, and it would have been pretty hard to do it without bombing. If the only thing you have to do is sit around and point your "holier-than-thou" finger at us for something in a World War that YOU think was wrong, then go right ahead.

We bombed Dresden, Toyko, Hamburg, Berlin and, yes even Hiroshima and Nagasaki, because we felt it necessary to end a war that no one wanted in the first place. But, Mr. Wellman, before doing any more accusing, stop and think on Pearl Harbor; the rape of Poland; the needless bombing of London; the useless murder of pilots parachuting to safety; the sinking of defenseless American vessels by the Germans; and the remains of an Auschwitz, Dachau, or Belsen concentration camps. Remember all of these things first, remember who started the killing, and then try to figure out who had to stop it —any way possible.

Letter In Error On Negro's Death

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

A letter which was printed in The Daily Tar Heel last week under the caption "Negro Murdered in Statesville" has prompted me to point out that you were in error on two counts. First, the facts were wrong. The letter and your caption were based on assumption. Second, a newspaper should not permit individuals to comment publicly on a case pending before a jury.

On April 29, after a three-hour hearing at which testimony was offered by the State Bureau of Investigation and by local law enforcement officers, a six-man coroner's jury, composed entirely of Negro men, reached a unanimous verdict of suicide. Their deliberation lasted six minutes.

I would also like to point out that besides the deceased, one other Negro man filed for candidacy to the Iredell County Board of Commissioners, and a Negro woman has filed for election to the Iredell County Board of Education. This constitutes legal and peaceful progress.

Mrs. Charles Benbow
Statesville, N. C.

(Ed. Note: You're right. We apologize).

Atmosphere For Youth Is Enemy Of Our Society

(From The Christian Science Monitor)

It is easy to say all the wrong things about the drunken bash at a Long Island debutante party which has just been excruciatingly reviewed at court.

The host wanted to be compensated for $6,000 worth of damages to a rented guesthouse. The Associated Press reported that he supplied 20 cases of whisky and gin for a two-day orgy. What did he expect? The boys mostly blamed the liquor. Who but they chose to drink it?

The older generations, those who are not amused or merely frustrated, fit this into the general decline of moral standards. Many of them try to talk of the moral code, with the sinking feeling that the old powerful words don't reach those who need to be reached and often go right past their own children. They wonder what their own guilt has to do with this and it weakens their ability to help.

There was a little more insight from Eaton Brooks, one of the boys who were all ultimately acquitted of any actual crime. Obviously defensive, he was reported by the New York Herald Tribune as saying:

"I'm not ashamed of anything I did. . . . If you had been there inside the house you would have understood the spirit of that party. Consider the fact that we were drinking for two days and nights without sleeping and without eating and we kept that up for 36 hours, out in the hot sun half the time, so when we got to the Ladd house we weren't the same people.

"There's too much drinking going on today," Brooks said. "I know that. Everybody knows it. But what are you going to do about it? Your own New York State allows people to start drinking at 18. They would sell me drinks when I was 14 because they are all out to make a buck. Everybody knows the morals of this country are going down the drain."

That same issue of the Herald Tribune reported from Albany the final collapse of what might have been a reform of the liquor laws. A series of scandals had been followed by one effort after another to sidetrack the real issue. The liquor lobbies rode high at Albany. "Reform" finally came down to the degree of competition with which package stores were free to pursue their customers. The decision was for more.

Returning to Brooks, "A certain atmosphere," he said, "caused it all. The atmosphere prevailed." He seemed to be groping for something beyond this one small if irritating incident.

We could say many things about that atmosphere. It is the enemy. It is the animal nature that humans inherit from the jungle. It brings self-indulgence and riot but much more serious than these, it is the enemy of the mind and of character in all our society, and ultimately of human life itself. We, too, would like to do battle against it, and thunder forth the moral code because we believe in it utterly and in its power to reshape society. But this may be a better time, faced with boys like Books who will decide for themselves, for a little humility.

We would like to ask them in all candor: What kind of society and world do they want? What effort are they willing to put forth to achieve it? This is not just a challenge. We are eager to have them talk. We would like to listen.

Paperback Covers Are Disillusioning

By ART BUCHWALD

WASHINGTON.—There was a time when the only way you could get a pornographic book was to smuggle it in from Paris. But in recent years the paperback book industry in the United States has been outdoing anything you could bring in from Paris. We feel everyone has a right to make a dollar under our free enterprise system and if people want to buy pornographic literature that is their business.

What we object to is the publishers making non-pornographic books pornographic by putting half-naked women on the covers of good books and printing descriptions of the contents which give an entirely different idea of the plot.

If the trend continues, here is how our paperback publishers will soon describe some books familiar to all of us:

"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"—The story of a ravishing blonde virgin who was held captive by seven deformed men, all with different lusts.

"Cinderella"—A beautiful, passionate woman bares her naked foot to the man she loves while her stepmother and stepsisters plot to cheat her out of the one memorable night of her life.

"Alice in Wonderland" — A young girl's search for happiness in a wierd, depraved world of animal desires. Can she ever return to a normal, happy life after falling so far?

"Huckleberry Finn" — A wild youth runs away from his home to help a Negro slave escape from the ravishing Miss Watson.

"Little Women" — Four teenagers, wise beyond their years, are caught up in the throbbing turmuit of the Civil War. Read what happens to then when a rich old gentleman and his greedy grandson take rooms as boarders in a house without men.

"Tom Brown's Schooldays"—For the first time we look beyond the locked doors of an English boarding school to reveal the truth about a life that no one talks about and only a few will whisper.

"Treasure Island"—The crew of a ship bent on rape and plunder land on an island inhabited by sex-crazed cannibals. An innocent boy finds the secret of growing up.

"Little Red Riding Hood" — A girl goes to visit her grandmother only to discover a wolf in her bed. Read what happens when the girl refuses to get into bed with the wolf.

"Tom Sawyer"—A gang of subteen-age hoodlums paint the town white, and commit mayhem and murder to satisfy their desires.

"Heidi"—A young lady caught up in the wild life of Switzerland fights for love.

"Babar the Elephant"—Life in the raw.

And so it goes. As for the covers, we'll have to leave that up to the publishers. We hate to think what the paperback artists will do with "Wind in the Willows."

Letters

Oliver announced that the new members are Ray Lanier, John Lovell, Bill St. George, Swight Thomas, Sandy Hobgood, Harold Tuttle, Gerald Droze, Bill Shell, Sam Kellett, Dick Steele, Bill Bowman, Joe McGirt, Randy Winburn, Dick Taylor, Jim Aplin, Bill Tomford, Jay Hanon, Woody Frank, John Ward, and Mike Greeson.

Also: George Collins, Ken Kaplan, Norman Shearin, Tillman Cooley, Jim Davis, Sandy O'Quinn, Richard Stephens, Eddy Trott, Bob Moore, Larry Patterson, Mickey Whitehead, Mickey Gamble, Cleve Wright, Don Leslie, Locke Newlin, and Charles Wolfe.

Women appointees are Marty McDaniel, Pat Miller, Gwen Grice, Sally Mixon, Alice Brown, Judy Grape, Gay Showell, Susan Moore, Mary Susan Kirk, Linda Harrison, Judy Cowman, and Pat Szolscek.

Oliver also announced the appointments of the Assistant Attorney-General's. They are John Ingram for the MRC Court, Paul Jensen for the IFC Court, Patsy Leffler for the Women's Council Court, and Laszlo Birinyi for the Men's Council Court. In addition, Diana Worth was re-appointed as Staff Secretary.

Oliver urged all new members to stop by the office before next Monday. "I would like to talk to all new members and tell them of the procedures. Anyone member who did not attend last week's meeting should stop by this afternoon or Monday afternoon if he is still interested in being on the staff."

- Honor Council -

for an earlier Campus Code offense.

In the second case, a student had signed the roll, then got bored and left about half way through the class.

He pleaded innocent on the basis that he had been in attendance when the roll came to him.

The Council ruled that signing a class roll strongly implied to the professor that the student had attended the entire class unless he had had to leave for a reason made clear to the professor. It felt that signing and then leaving was a form of lying about his presence in the class.

He was found guilty and given an official reprimand.

In the third case, the defendant had come about five minutes late to class and had stood outside the partly-open door gesticulating to his friends in back to sign him in.

This was the student seen by the person who reported the possibility of the class roll being falsified.

He was signed in, but said he did not know who did it. He said that when he left, he was not even sure that anyone had seen him gesturing.

He pleaded guilty and was found guilty. He was sentenced to one semester probation.

The Council felt that this case had been a more flagrant sort of lying than in the case where the student left half way through class.

A freshman was found innocent of lying to his professor in a case carried over from last week.

The defendant said he had received a crank phone call telling him of his grandmother's death. He could not get through to his parents on the phone, so he went home the next day.

The phone call came about five days before an important assignment was due in one of his classes. He went to his professor to tell him about his grandmother and to have the assignment put off.

The professor was suspicious of the excuse and phoned the student's home town to find out if the grandmother had died. He discovered she had not.

The student got home, found out he had been tricked and called his professor later that night. When he returned, he found out he had been turned in for lying.

Testimony revealed that the grandmother had been quite ill and a check on the defendant's story showed he had told the truth throughout.

He pleaded innocent and was acquitted.

In a case heard last week, a junior was given an official reprimand for a Campus Code violation.

Tar Heels Take Lead In Net Tournament

UNC began the defense of their tennis crown yesterday by taking a big first day lead in the ACC tournament.

Each Carolina player won their first round match, to give the Tar Heels at least 16 points in the first day of action. Sophomore Kenny Oettinger was playing in the last match of the day and could have increased the Tar Heel lead. Maryland's Terrapins were second with 8 points.

The Tar Heels had three players seeded in the tournament. George Sokol was the top-seeded player as he attempted to retain his singles title. O. H. Parrish was fifth seeded, and, and Ted Hoehn was seeded number seven. Maryland's Jim Busick, who beat Sokol in two straight sets was second-seeded, and Doug Stewart of Clemson was ranked number three.

In the doubles, Parrish and Hoehn were top-seeded, and Sokol and sophomore Carl Evans were third-seeded. Clemson's Stewart and Evans were seeded second.

In the singles matches, no Tar Heel was pressed to three sets. Sokol started the day off for the Tar Heels by disposing of Doug Jones of Duke 6-1, 6-2. The little blond ace then defeated Jim Emmons of NC State 6-3, 6-1.

O. H. Parrish had little trouble beating his two opponents. Parish defeated State's Artinane 6-1, 6-2 in the first round then dropped Jim Burns of Virginia almost as easily by identical 6-2 scores. O. H. is the dark horse of the tournament. If he plays up to his potential. O. H. could give Sokol and Busick a run for the title.

Ted Hoehn swept three matches during the day. Ted was out early to defeat Tom Long of Clemson by identical 6-2 scores.

Maryland's Tom Marcelline was later defeated by Hoehn by the same 6-2 scores. In a match starting at 4:30 Hoehn disposed of Clemson's Ledbetter in two sets.

Pete Myers pulled the biggest upset of the day when he defeated Clemson's eighth-ranked Matty Evans 9-7, 6-2. Myers then defeated Charlie Shaffer, who had won his first round match by losing only one game, by 6-4, 6-0 scores.

Chapel Hill's Kenny Oettinger was the surprise of the tourney the first day. He defeated Maryland's Dobies 7-5, 6-2 in the first round, and then defeated Virginia's Brown 6-3, 6-4 in the second round. He was playing third-seeded Doug Stewart in the last match of the day, and had jumped to a 2-0 lead after the first two sets.

Mike Knowles' Two-Bagger Gives Tar Babies 5-4 Win

By BILL LEE

Catcher Mike Knowles came through for the Tar Babies yesterday with a sinking double to right field to knock in the winning run in the tenth inning and handed the Oak Ridge Cadets a 5-4 defeat.

Harold Wells led off the inning with a single to right-center and was followed by a well-placed bunt single by Jay Schwartz. Knowles then came up for his only bat of the day and sent the ball just out of reach of the diving right-fielder, as Wells raced home with the winning run.

"Old Man" Jimmy Dean picked up the victory to extend his record to four wins against one defeat. Dean came in in the ninth and walked three, but didn't give up a hit in his two innings of service. Bryan Miller was the starter and went seven innings, allowing four hits and four runs, only one of which was earned, while striking out ten. Grey Clark relieved for one inning and struck out three men while giving up a hit.

UNC didn't scratch until the sixth inning and were down 3-0 when Marshall Montgomery led off the frame with a base on balls. Mickey Lienau then slapped a single to center to move Montgomery up. Montgomery then scored on the bad throw by the center-fielder. Lienau ended up on third. He scored on a sacrifice fly to right by Charlie Turner.

The Tar Babies picked up another run in the eighth as Turner led off with a walk and moved to second on a single by Schwartz. Hank Crowson came up in a pinch hitter's role and smashed a ground rule double to bring Turner in.

The Tar Babies were still one run down going into the last of the ninth. Pinch-hitter Tom Lampman drew a base on balls to start it off. Lampmaon then stole second and went to third as the catcher's throw went into center field. Randy Prindle then lifted a fly to deep center to score Lampman and send the game into extra innings.

The frosh play NC State here tomorrow, and must play the rest of their games without their leading hitter, Danny Talbott, who is out with a pulled shoulder muscle.

Line score:

Losing pitcher: Davis.

Alcoholics, Chi Psi In Campus Finals

Chi Psi and the Avery Alcoholics advanced to the all campus softball finals Wednesday by winning their playoff games.

Chi Psi defeated Kappa Psi 5-4, and Avery blasted Medical School I 14-1.

Avery jumped on Med School pitcher Howard Houssly for four runs in the second, third and fifth innings. The Alcoholics collected 16 hits in the rout. Shortstop Mike Spain was the big gun for the Alcoholics with two singles and two doubles. Bill Cunningham homered for Avery.

Spain's double in the first scored Ralph Timmerman with the first Alcoholic run. In the second, two walks, an error and two singles brought in four runs. Med School tallied in the bottom of the second to make the score 5-1, but the Alcoholics came back with four in the third on an error, two singles and Cunningham's homer. They added one in the fourth, then scored four more in the fifth on a walk, two singles, Timmerman's double and Charlie Murray's long triple. Tim Nichols went all the way for the Alcoholics and gave up only three hits.

Chi Psi's Jack "Crazy" Crane once again came up with a stellar pitching performance to pace his team over Kappa Psi. Crane gave up only three hits and chipped in with a single himself.

Chi Psi scored twice in the first on two walks and Bill Vincent's single, and Crane was coasting with a one-hitter when Kappa Psi came up with two runs in the bottom of the sixth to take a 3-2 lead. Two walks, an error and a single scored the two Kappa Psi runs.

Chi Psi came right back in the top of the seventh to take a 4-3 lead. Bob Carithers led off with a walk, and scored on Paul Donahue's double. Donahue scored when Bill Powell singled. Kappa Psi tied the score in the bottom of the inning to send the game into two extra innings. Pitcher John King led off with a single and scored on a walk and two Chi Psi errors.

In the eighth, Dick Lewisohn led off for Chi Psi with a booming triple and scored the winning run on Steve Painter's single.

Avery and Chi Psi played the All-Campus finals yesterday, but because of a late start the game could not be reported in today's DTH. A complete report of the game will be carried in tomorrow's paper.

Frosh Stickmen Crush Duke

Led by Tim Balch and Jack Hubbard, the Freshmen lacrosse team crushed Duke for the second straight time, 14-5 Wednesday. It was the fourth win in four games for the Frosh stickmen, who defeated the varsity last week after defeating Duke twice.

Hubbard fired three goals past the hapless Blue Imp goalie in the first five minutes, and from then on it was no contest. They built up a 6-0 first quarter lead and a 9-2 halftime margin. Balch scored two in the half.

If there was any doubt in Duke's mind whatsoever about the outcome of the game, Balch scored a pair at the start of the third quarter to ice the game, and subs finished up for the 14-5 win.

Balch (4), Hubbard (3), Sandy Reider (2), Sam Williams (2), Clee Edgar (1) Pete Collison (1), and Loring Swasey (1) were the scorers, with Balch and Hubbard each getting three assists.

The final varsity game is Saturday against Duke, and Coach Tony Steele says he expects to win by ten goals. The varsity will be lead by goalie Harvey Stanley, who recently was nominated for All-American.

Tar Heels At USC

The North Carolina Tarheels, already ACC Champions and currently ranked fifth nationally by Collegiate Baseball Magazine, travel this weekend to South Carolina, where they will meet the University of South Carolina and Clemson College.

The Heels will meet the Gamecocks Friday, with either Bill Haywood or Beattie Leonard pitching. Haywood, 8-0, is the top candidate for ACC Player of the Year. Leonard is 2-0 in his only two starts, having been sidelined for most of the year with a broken hand. Mike McLaughlin and Spence Willard are also slated to see action in either of the games, and Coach Walter Rabb is expected to do some experimenting with his lineup since the title is already clinched.

After this trip they will return home to play Duke Wednesday in their last regularly scheduled conference game.

All three games will be broadcast by WCHL.

— Art Show —

Strange Faces On Franklin St.

By KERRY SIPE

The little cement lady with the egg-shaped head stood quietly on a man-hole cover and watched the art lovers file by.

The scene was the north side of Battle-Vance-Pettigrew where the 1964 Sidewalk Art Show was in progress. Some 70 artists had on display over 500 paintings, prints and sculpture.

Lying askance in a rhododentron bush at the side on the stately building, a red-headed nude was sitting languously on a crooked checkerboard.

Farther away, at the end of the walk, a pot-bellied stove with beri-beri was standing with a drooping lower jaw staring stupidly at a fire-hydrant.

The NBC Peacock had swallowed a stick of dynamite and had found himself in less-than-perfect condition smeared on a piece of black canvus.

"It's obviously a symphony brass section," a fellow with a contemplative knit in his brow said to a companion.

"I'm not so sure. I think it's a nickleodium. See, you put your money in here and this little gadjet over here beats against that top-hat looking thing . . ."

Three morose musicians sat with their legs entwined on the canvus near the wall. Their heads were made of paraffin, or so it seemed, and their features ran together in the frame.

"A birdcage," said a 3-year-old onlooker gazing towards the swinging mobil that fluttered in a tree. The birds hadn't been fed in quite a while. Just their bones were left.

A purple Slinky Spring with an arrow on the end pointed directly to a madras pineapple burning to a cinder across the yard.

"Please, lady, not on the head," said the gentleman in charge when grandmother had set her pocketbook on the cement lady's round top in order to remove more easily the wrapper from a Mr. Goodbar.

"Isn't this a pretty one," the lady in green slacks asked her baby daughter, pointing to a tiny framed oil painting.

"I don't like it," was the child's reply. "That man has got his guts hanging out."

The Four Horsemen of the Apocylypse rode down Franklin Street on a streak of terror and different colored horses.

The shadows of a New York streetlight stood beside a milkmaid bathing her feet in the Wabash. There were pictures of the sky and of the sea, of green-eyed cats and red-tongued dogs. The onlookers soaked in the colors and forms with the same delight that they soaked up the afternoon sun.

Jeff Bayer, who organized the show said, "The artists get to keep the money they make. We did not charge an exhibit fee.

"In the first four hours, we sold about $375 worth of stuff."

Most of the exhibits were small prints and ink drawings. "We had more than an average percentage of oils, though," said Bayer.

The average price for the large oils was $35. The prints sold for from $8 to $10.

The show will continue on the BVP lawn from 1 p.m. 'til dusk tomorrow.

Legislature Sets Up Campus Poll On Controversial Boycott

Precedents Broken By Dramatic Vote

By HUGH STEVENS

Student Legislature was apparently successful Thursday night in a last-ditch attempt to bring the controversial student boycott before the Student Body this spring.

Calmly tossing technicalities and tradition aside, the body passed a precedent - shattering "Student Poll" resolution in a dramatic vote as the South Building bell rang out 10:45, the automatic adjournment time.

The resolution, which bypasses the Elections Board and other constitutional requirements for a "referendum" by substituting the word "poll," provides for a student vote on the racial question next Friday, May 15.

The "poll" will be conducted by the Communications Committee, with the cooperation of dormitory, fraternity, and sorority officers. One article of the resolution allows the Communications Committee to make use of the ballot boxes normally controlled by the Elections Board.

Surprise Passage

Passage of the "poll" resolution came as a surprise to many legislators and observers.

On Wednesday the Ways and Means Committee had voted to hold up both of the referendum resolutions due for consideration because of an apparent lack of time in which to hold a referendum this semester.

The committee was told by Bob Spearman, Student Body president, that a new Elections Board which conducts all elections and referendums could not be appointed and approved before May 14. Bill Aycock, past chairman of the Elections Board, indicated that this date would not give the new board sufficient time to get a referendum to the students.

It was against these obstacles that the Legislature staged its stand.

Committee Discharged

Before the issue could come to the floor, Legislature was required to override the Ways and Means committee's wish to hold the bill.

Dick Akers (SP), co-sponsor of one of the referendum resolutions, moved first to discharge the committee from further consideration of his measure (RW-37-3). He expressed his desire to have the bill considered in order to amend it to provide for the special "poll."

Akers was strongly opposed by Arthur Hays (SP), who called the proposal "unconstitutional," and said the Elections Board was required to handle such campus-wide votes. Hays himself was the author of the other pending referendum resolution, RW-37-1, introduced by Bob Wilson (SP).

He said he wanted to see a vote on the issue, but "a referendum is a referendum is a referendum," and to buck the Student Constitution would be an error.

Chuck Neely (SP), argued strongly for the "poll," saying "the study body is at present estranged from its Student Government, and this issue is one reason for their displeasure. They are clamoring for an opportunity to be heard on the civil rights issue."

Bob Wilson (SP), joined Hays in opposition, referring again to the statements by Spearman and Aycock, both of whom had called a referendum "virtually impossible."

Akers agreed that a "referendum" could not be held due to technicalities, but that a "poll" could be administered by May 15.

The vote to bring the bill to the floor was overwhelmingly in favor, 29-7.

Akers Makes Proposals

Akers submitted to the body a series of amendments to his resolution which, by substituting "poll" for referendum" in the wording would, he said, remove the issue from the Election Board's jurisdiction.

He offered an amendment which would instruct President Spearman to call upon the Communications Committee to conduct the special poll. Other types of polls on student opinion are commonly handled by this committee.

Akers also asked that the ballot boxes currently under the auspices of the Elections Board

FUN, FUN, FUN ALL WEEKEND

Today is the day! The great Freshman Weekend blast is here in full force, and all are urged to take part in the singing, swinging noise and merrymaking.

A hootenanny starts the festivities today at 3:30 p.m. on GM lawn. It will include such notables as Jack, "DDT" Allison and the Roaches, George Thompson, The Vagrants, Bob Hinkle, Marshall Daniels, Dave McFadden and Gail Rieve. "DDT" and the Roaches were made famous here in Chapel Hill by their performance at the Freshman Talent Show last February.

Tonight the mob will move to the Morehead Planetarium parking lot for a combo dance from 8 o'clock to midnight.

Guitar Vic and the Swinging Five will provide the music and noise for dancing, yelling, screaming or whatever.

The dance will move to the Tin Can in case of rain.

"I just hope the freshmen and every other Carolina student take advantage of this opportunity to enjoy some free entertainment," said Jim Brame, freshman class president. "It's been a lot of work."

The freshmen have worked hard raising mony to finance the weekend with such projects as Freshman Work Programs and Merchant Sales.

After last night's success with the Clovers and the Vibrators Combo, freshman officers are anticipating a great turnout.

So if you've recovered from last night's dance, the hootenanny is at 3:30 p.m. and the dance is from 8 to midnight. See you there-

Pilot Shot Before Crash, Report Shows

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The pilot of a Pacific Airliner that crashed killing 44 persons in California Thursday was shot at the controls, it was reported Friday. Federal officials refused to comment on the shooting—the first of its kind in U. S. history.

NBC said a tape of the last conversation between the pilot of the Pacific Air Lines F27 turboprop airliner and the control tower at San Francisco contained these words:

"My God, I've been shot."

Then there was a scream, NBC said, and seconds later the twin-engine turbo prop F27 smashed into a hill east of San Fran-

Hays Attacks Referendum Bill

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Student Party Floor Leader Arthur Hays sharply attacked the boycott referendum bill passed by the Student Legislature Thursday night.

By charging the Legislature with ignoring the Student Constitution, Hays departed from the stands of Student Body President Bob Spearman, Vice President Don Carson and University Party Floor Leader Mal King.

Spearman, Carson and King, in separate statements to the DTH, all urged the voters to attend the polls and vote as they see fit.

"It was with some dismay," Hays' statement read, "that I watched the Student Legislature pass a referendum resolution which was so blatantly unconstitutional as to force some of its supporters to shrug off the constitutional question as a mere technicality."

The bill calls for the Communications Committee to conduct a "poll" of the student's opinion on the boycott issue using the same procedure as in an official referendum.

The Student Constitution states that all referendums must be conducted by the Elections Board, but legislators chose to use the Communications Committee for the sake of time.

"A referendum is still a referendum no matter what else it's called," Hays said. "The Communications Committee can not constitutionally conduct this referendum."

Carson said he felt the referendum should have been conducted during the spring elections, "but, upon re-examination of the Student Government statutes involved, we discovered it was possible to conduct the referendum as a poll."

Spearman used his statement to reiterate his intention to boycott segregated business establishments, and urged his fellow students to do likewise.

"I urge every member of the student body," he added, "to consider this issue carefully and to participate in the poll."

3 More Students Sentenced For Falsifying Class Rolls

Three more students received probation sentences for falsifying class rolls in Men's Honor Council trials Thursday night.

The case brought the total to seven convictions out of the same one class. One student had been seen motivating friends to sign him in leading to the charging of six more students involved in similar activities.

In other trials Thursday, two students were suspended for one semester for plagiarism in two separate cases, and another student was found innocent of a Campus Code charge.

In the class roll case, two of the defendants had left town and had asked a friend to sign them present at the class.

The friend did so, not thinking that he was doing anything of any consequence. When the teacher called the roll orally at the end of the class trying to catch the man who had been seen earlier, the two students he had signed in were discovered to be absent.

The student went right away to the teacher to admit what he had done. He turned himself in to a former Honor Council member afterwards.

The other two students turned themselves in immediately after finding out what had happened. All three pleaded guilty, saying that they had not realized the seriousness of the act at the time.

All three received indefinite probation. This sentence normally lasts one full semester, after which time the student may apply to the Council for reinstatement.

In the Campus Code case, a student was charged with throwing a glass out of the window of a moving car at a civil rights picket.

The defendant claimed he had casually tossed the glass out the window without looking and without intending to hit or intimidate the picket. He said he didn't see the picket until after he had

After Many Battles, We Get To Vote

Student Legislature, with its back to the wall, brushed aside the chains of precedence, tradition, and legal entanglements Thursday night and took a giant step on behalf of the entire student body. The campus-wide clamor for an opportunity to vote on the controversial student boycott was almost audible in the background as your representatives successfully passed an extraordinary bill setting up a campus-wide "poll" next Friday.

In doing this, Legislature took a number of unusual steps which were required in order to circumvent the Constitutional technicalities which appeared to stop any type of campus-wide vote earlier in the week. The "poll", as it is now known, will be administered through the Communications Committee and dormitory, fraternity and sorority officials rather than through the usual Elections Board process. It will require much hard work by many people who would not usually be concerned with putting on an election of any kind. But the important thing is that it will be held.

We have long favored a campus referendum or poll of some kind which would allow every student to express his opinions on civil rights. Naturally, we were disappointed when it seemed that technical points would prevent such a vote this spring, since the issue would hardly be so pertinent after the lapse of a summer and the accompanying changes in the student body's composition. Thus, even though certain aspects of the "poll" are less favorable than a true referendum would have been, we heartily encourage every student to take advantage of the opportunity to express his opinion on this vital matter.

The only shortcoming of the "poll" in comparison with the referendum seems to lie in the manner of its administration. Certainly the Elections Board, especially if composed of qualified and experienced people, is better equipped to administer and tabulate such a vote than a combination of other groups. However, there is one fact which prevents us from being truly worried about this aspect of the "poll"—those people charged with administering it are so dedicated to the job that we are almost assured of an all-out effort by every one of them to insure success of the project. We only hope that one week is not too short a time in which to perform the feat, and we will make every effort in our coverage of the situation to aid in its completion.

Our opinions on the questions will be given later. Now, however, we want to take time to give a word of praise where one is due. Your legislators, at least most of them, have rallied to your call and provided you with an opportunity that came dangerously close to slipping away amidst technical considerations. If you are interested in the civil rights issue (and if you aren't, you should be) go to the polls next Friday and express your thoughts carefully.

If you have an opportunity, you might also offer a word of thanks to your representative to Legislature. The battle was fought and won with YOU in mind.

On The Superiority Of American Women

The Charlotte Observer

Science has finally discovered why men always lose arguments with their wives. It's about time.

An English university professor buttressed with unassailable laboratory evidence a conviction long held by American males—that women talk more than men.

According to Insider's Newsletter, Prof. John Sohen of Manchester U. persuaded four groups of young women to speak individually for 30, 60, 90, and 120 seconds on any subject they chose. Then he got four groups of young men to do likewise.

"On every occasion," says the newsletter, "the women produced more words than the men."

Though science has borne out our daily reminders of this dismal reality men need not fall into unmitigated gloom. There are these things to be glad about:

—No women are on the Southern filibuster team.

—They won't let a women call out the countdowns at Cape Kennedy.

Still, a close look at the Manchester test produces near total despair. In the 30-second tests, the average woman gained one word per second on the average man.

Consider the implications: No matter how brilliant and logical your defense on a disputacious evening, you are going to get about 18,000 words behind her between supper and bedtime.

Assuming you listen.

The Poor Folks Meet The President

A sight to bring tears to the eyes of all patriotic Americans was splashed liberally over the front pages of the state's newspapers yesterday.

A photograph s h o w i n g President Lyndon B. Johnson and Governor Terry Sanford sitting amid an impoverish Rocky Mount family on the front steps of their shack greeted everyone at breakfast.

Johnson was in the state on a whirlwind tour to study poverty, especially poverty which would come under his program for the Appalachian area. That's why he was in the hills of Rocky Mount.

This photograph will become famous —we will see it in state government publicity handouts for months to come, and no doubt Johnson will make great use of it during his campaign.

Of course, those who could read the text through their tear-blurred eyes found that Johnson had been on the farm for no more than 10 minutes—long enough to ask the tenant farmer about his back (he has a ruptured disk) and pose for the photographers.

But it did touch us. We're happy to have a president who will go out of his way to visit poor, destitute mountain farmers who live in Rocky Mount.

'Boob Tube' Is Improving Under Collins' Leadership

By PETER HARKNESS

Skeptics call it the "boob tube" or "idiot box."

It's a "vast wasteland," according to a former chairman of the Federal Communication Commision.

Sociologists, psychologists, educators and "egg heads" attack it. And it has been accused of being everything from "immoral" to a "waste of time."

The thing is television, but the man in the middle of the fracas has seen real progress recently and is optimistic about its future.

He is Leroy Collins, the former governor of Florida and now president of the National Association of Broadcasters.

The tall, handsome, silver-haired man with a pleasant Southern accent has probably been the most controversial president in the Association's history, because he is and has been determined to raise the standards of broadcasting.

Collins has tried to make the NAB do what it is supposed to do: act as a self-regulatory agency of the broadcasting industry. But broadcasters, like everyone else, can be stubborn.

There are 60,000,00 television and 170,000,000 radio sets in this country today, and the FCC and other groups are increasingly worried about broadcasting standards.

The former Governor must serve both as the industry's spokesman and chief critic. But he is not pessimistic.

Collins answered questions in an interview on the broadcasting industry and his job.

If the NAB establishes standards for radio and television, why shouldn't the FCC promulgate those standards as regulation?

"There is much more flexibility with self-regulation . . . change is easier.

"For instance, it is much better if a man can solve problems in his family rather than calling the policeman on the corner to do it for him. Government regulation is not flexible and can't work for change.

"Another example: People in this country are as interested in the taste of commercials as the frequency. If there was government intervention, much of what should be done wouldn't be. Change would be more difficult . . . the government would be freezing standards."

Suppose the industry does not police itself?

"It's not fair to cross that bridge until we have time to prove we can do it.

"The NAB is trying to attract more broadcasters to the organization. More television stations have joined. It's harder with radio, but last year there was a 14 per cent increase and the year before that a 17 per cent increase in membership among radio stations.

"When a radio or television station joins the NAB, it must be willing to accept the standards established by the NAB."

Do you foresee in the future, (since the Federal Government licenses radio and television stations), a restraint on the freedom of broadcasters in the news field as compared with newspapers, for instance, that are free from the government entirely?

"No, I don't see any trend in that direction."

What do you consider the television and radio media to be: entertainment, educational, or advertising?

"It has a two-fold purpose. Essentially it is an art form, an important one with great potential. It must provide information and entertainment and has a responsibility to do this in a highly qualitative manner. There is an obligation to the creative to strive for advancement.

"Secondly, advertising is essential because of the financial aspect. It pays for the production and programming. It is also important because of the stimulation of sales and purchases which in turn means more goods produced, which then means more employment and a higher gross national product.

"It is essential to our economic system."

How would you view a government-owned and operated educational network similar to the BBC in England?

"I would not favor a network similar to the BBC. That is a government-owned network providing entertainment as well as information.

"I do support an educational network supported by the public. The Congress recently passed a law requiring that all new television sets built be equipped for UHF (Ultra High Frequency) stations, most of which are educational."

How can radio and television be used in under-developed nations educationally.

"This is one of my main interests. It has enormous potential. In Philadelphia, we have had work done in abolishing illiteracy on a test basis and it seems to work. Projects have now been started in Latin America"

The former chairman of the FCC, Newton Minow, called television a "vast wasteland." Do you see any grass and trees growing?

"Oh yes. A great deal of improvement has occured since Minow's speech. Besides, the waste was not as vast as he said at the time. It is not uncommon for an advocate of better programming to overstate his case.

"In many important respects there has been improvement. There is still room for more. This medium has so many opportunities and so much potential there will always be room for more."

After President Kennedy's assassination, many people and organizations began to complain louder and more frequently about violence on television. What do you think? Was it ever really serious? Is it getting better or worse?

"I would say three years ago that there was considerable unnecessary violence for the sake of violence.

"Since then, much of this has been eliminated. We still have some, but one must remember that violence is a part of life and is needed for the purposes of plot and characterization. It is when it goes beyond those two points that it becomes unnecessary and should be depleted."

What is your view on radio commercials, their frequency and taste?

"We have a continuing job to keep commercials under surveilance as to taste. More research must be done.

"The way ads break in on programs concerns people much more than the time allotted for the commercials. Last year we started a research program to look into it.

"All this has been established by the NAB, but we have asked advertising agencies to help and most of the large ones have."

What are the prospects for live television programming on a regular basis using the communications satellites?

"This is pretty much up to the broadcasters and specifically the networks.

"There are plans to put up three communications satellites at 50,000 feet so that there can be continuous live broadcasting from Europe. The present satellite is not sufficient for continuous live programming.

"Also, I think some plan will be worked out for a hook-up with Euravision, the European network."

"Does It Seem To You To Be Getting Warmer?"

UNC Needs A Good Kick From Imaginative Students

By PETE WALES

As the letter below and the murmurings about women's residences indicates, a firm and healthy reaction is brewing over Pete Range's three-part series on the women students and their rules.

Pete joins us in gratification for this reaction and we hope it will express itself in print on these pages.

If it is strong enough, perhaps our long-lost faith in the intelligence and maturity of Carolina coeds will be reborn.

The problem, simply stated, is that the whole level of maturity and regard for intellectualism on this campus has slipped . . . for men and women students and even, believe it or not, the faculty.

As one young English instructor told me last year, what we need around here is more legitimate nuts.

Part of the bad image the womstudent makes is brought on by the expectations of the equally insipid average Carolina male. The University, partly because of size and the growing number of sub-communities, has ceased to be really stimulating to large numbers of its students.

There is an anti-intellectual atmosphere cultivated in the living units. This is complemented by the traditional image of sweet, non-controversial Southern womanhood and the lack of stimulating teaching and out-of-class student-teacher relationships.

The truth is that our faculty, although it has increased in reputation over the past decade, is really quite dead and strictly non-creative. Professors are hired for their reputation as authorities and not tas eachers.

And even their publishings fail to arouse much controversy. This fact is substantiated by the incredible lack of research grants in the fields of the humanities to the University in recent years.

Perhaps the students, and especially the women, can join in giving the University and the whole concept of University education a good kick in the pants during the coming year.

Such a kick is greatly needed.

Communists & Civil Rights

(From The Cheraw (S.C.) Chronicle)

Evidence that communists are making efforts to infiltrate the civil rights movement cause some people to reach the wrong conclusion.

The challenge now is not to abandon efforts to end discrimination but for good loyal American citizens to retain leadership and control of the movement and to redouble their efforts to give every citizen a fair shake so that no one will be tempted to follow subversives.

The challenge to the Congress is to approve some positive legislation, such as the civil rights bill, with reasonable modifications, so that the teeth will be drawn from subversive threats.

There is some reason to believe that the American people are accepting the challenge, despite disgust with the rabble-rousing antics of civil rights extremists. A recent opinion poll shows that 64 per cent of the public, including a small majority of white Southerners, wants some kind of civil rights bill passed.

Anyone conversant with Marxist ideology understands that the communists seek to destroy the American way of life. But efforts to keep 20 million Americans in a second class status because they happen to belong to a minority race should not be part of the American way of life. It certainly was not conceived by our Founding Fathers to be part of the American Dream.

The United States has two options, it seems to us: one, to solve the problem under law, granting to each citizen his full civil and constitutional rights on the basis of equal citizenship; or, two, to give up the idea of individual freedom under the law and openly pursue a racist policy.

White America can destroy the "Negro revolution" if it wishes to pay the price. Whites outnumber Negroes ten to one and enjoy every political, economic, and social advantage. If it comes to a power struggle, in which public morality plays no part, white America can win hands down, even if it means herding the Negro communities into ghettos or arriving at a "final solution" of our own.

That alternative would make us roughly three times as evil as the Nazis, who slaughtered only six million Jews, and it would clearly exact a price that no sensible person would pay; namely, the end of American democracy and freedom.

Since the second alternative is really no choice at all, we might as well make up our minds to accept some social changes in America and arrive at a formula for solution of the civil rights crisis in accordance with our great national heritage, thereby freeing our minds, our hands and our hearts for the many other national problems that cry out for attention.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Irate Nurse Blasts Range

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

I have never read such an inane, ignorant and flagrantly false generalization as the one made by Pete Range in his first article on the Carolina Coed. If Mr. Range has met nothing but pea-brained, cliche-uttering, insipid coeds on this campus, (and Carolina undeniably has its fair share) then he is only telling on himself for attracting that type girl. I could supply Mr. Range with a sizable list of acquaintances here whose depth is many fathoms deeper than the depth exhibited by his article. As for the token university restrictions of w o m e n students causing the immaturity and shallowness which seems to exist in the girls Mr. Range knows — if he thinks those girls are unbearable now, I would love to see his reaction to emancipated shallowness.

Any thinking 21-year-old female recognizes the same old tired "line" in his anti-rules-for-girls argument. And she will also bristle with justified furor at the untrue, unfair interpretation of her own attitude towards education and life offered by Mr. Range on the basis of his rather discouraging f e m a l e acquaintances.

Buckley Slashes Liberal Students

(From the Charlotte Observer)

Dear Sir:

I am perplexed by your editorial of April 29 suggesting that the item in National Review poking fun at Chapel Hill is the result of my alleged "scur grapes" (surely you meant to say vindictiveness?). The paragraph in question was written as a reaction to a long article in the New York Times describing the apothesis of Sen. Fulbright at Chapel Hill during the preceding two days. I have myself no grudge whatever, of a collective nature, against Chapel Hill: the mistreatment of me there was primarily the work of two individuals, who were promptly repudiated by their own council. I recall with considerable gratitude the warm reception I received there and the standing ovation by a large part of the audience after I had spoken. It remains true that Chapel Hill has now, as it has had for a generation, the reputation of being sort of a liberal laundromat for politically unwashed students. I would not allow my personal gratitude to individuals at Chapel Hill or to my audience there to stand in the way of my editorial duty to acknowledge the University as having a distinctly liberal cast.

be made available to the committee for the poll.

After several heated discussions by various members of the body concerning the exact procedures to be followed in the poll, the amendments were successfully passed.

Wording Fight Is Lengthy

The success of the amendments made it apparent to most members of the body that the issue itself was headed for passage, since the amendments changed the entire format of the proposal. The body then engaged in a lengthy fight over the exact wording of the questions in the poll.

After a series of amendment fights concerning the wording of the questions as they were stated in the original resolution, Mal King (UP) submitted a new set of questions for consideration. King was one of the co-sponsors of the resolution with Akers.

King's proposal (1) removed all reference to the "boycott" itself from the ballot, and (2) set up three basic questions to be asked.

King said that he felt the questions should be as direct and unbiased as possible, and place the voting on a completely individual basis.

As the adjournment time drew near, the body continued in hot debate over the questions. Many legislators wanted "boycott" included in the questions, while others said that a "student boycott" was not the issue.

Louis Burton (IND), the body's only Negro member, said the question should be "one of how every individual student feels about the places he will or will not patronize.

"There is no institutionalized student boycott," he said. "There are groups of students who patronize segregated establishments and there are those who do not. But they all decided on an individual basis. What we want is to find out how many students are on each side of the issue."

With less than five minutes of debate remaining before adjournment, Hugh Blackwell (SP) called for a vote on all questions. King's amendments passed, and Don Carson, speaker of the Legislature, called for a vote on the entire bill.

The members rose to vote, the bell tolled for adjournment, and the bill passed with only Hays dissenting.

The Council considered the charge in two parts:

1) The act of carelessly throwing a glass from a car when in a populated area.

2) The question of intention on the part of the defendant to hit or scare the picket.

On the first question, the Council recognized that the student had already been fined in civil court. It decided that the act of littering was not within the scope of the Campus Code, as is the case with traffic violation in this instance.

On the second question the evidence of malice was too circumstantial, and the testimony of the defendant and some of the material witnesses was in conflict, so that the student was again found innocent.

A junior was charged with copying a book report from a report he had obtained from a quiz file in the third case. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to one semester suspension.

He had been caught by his professor when he accidentally submitted the paper he had copied with his own report. He turned himself in.

In the last case, a freshman pleaded guilty to plagiarizing the ideas from a friend's paper on an optional take-home quiz.

He had completed the quiz when he asked to see his friend's answer shortly before class. He then added to his answer a rephrased version of his friend's answer. His friend had no idea of what he had done.

When the two were confronted by the teacher, the defendant readily admitted to being the guilty party. He turned himself in.

He was suspended for one semester.

Text Of Boycott Bill

This is the bill which passed Student Legislature Thursday night. It was originally introduced by Representatives Dick Akers, Teddy O'Toole, Jim Brame, John Froneberger, John Harmon and Mal King, and was heavily amended before passing.

Article I. That there be a student poll concerning the boycott issue, the poll to read:

Section I. Check (A) or (B)

(A) I will patronize segregated business establishments in the Chapel Hill area which do not serve the entire Student Body.

(B) I will not patronize segregated establishments in the Chapel Hill area which do not serve all members of the Student Body.

Section II. I feel that business establishments in the Chapel Hill area should serve all members of the Student Body.

YES / / NO / /

Section III. I would be willing to patronize those establishwhich integrate.

YES / / NO / /

Article II. This body requests the President of the Student Body to charge the Communications Committee to poll the students of the University of North Carolina on their feelings concerning the student body, such questionnaire to be presented on or before May 15, 1964.

Article III. That the ballot boxes which are now under the auspices of the Elections Board shall be made available to the Communications Committee for the purpose of conducting such a poll.

cisco near Danville, Calif., with explosive force.

The only other case on record of an airlines pilot being shot was at Chico, Calif., three years ago. But the plane was not in flight at the time.

NBC said the Washington sources were not sertain whether the co-pilot of the plane was also shot. The bullet apparently came from a Smith Wesson .357 magnum revolver found in the wreckage.

The gun has been sent to the FBI laboratories in Washington for intensive tests and analysis.

The FBI, which has taken over the investigation of the case apparently because of the criminal aspects, refused any comment.

The Federal Aviation Agency (FAA) also declined to comment. But a spokesman for the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB) came close to confirming the report when he said the agency would have "no comment pending the FBI investigation of the accident."

The CAB by law is charged with investigating air crashes. The statement implied that it was stepping aside for the FBI.

Sokol, Busick Meet In ACC Net Final

George Sokol today meets Jim Busick, the man who beat him at Maryland this year, in the ACC Singles Finals at Duke.

Sokol yesterday defeated teammates O. H. Parrish and Ted Hoehn to reach the finals, while Busick beat Pete Myers (UNC) and Doug Stewart (Clemson).

Sokol didn't have as much trouble with Parrish as some thought he might, as he won in straight sets, 6-4, 8-6. Hoehn, who earlier defeated Len Modzelewski of Maryland 6-1, 6-3, gave the two time ACC Champion a little more trouble before bewing 9-7, 6-2.

Busick defeated Myers, who had been quite a surprise in defeating Malloy Evans of Clemson and Charlie Shaffer of UNC, 9-7, 6-1. He was taken to three sets by Clemson's Doug Stewart before winning 2-6, 6-2, 6-3. Stewart had defeated Jarry Mattson of Duke in the morning, 6-3, 6-3.

Although Busick defeated Sokol at College Park, he is a definite underdog today. Busick is a scrappy player, the kind who never gives up and has an intense desire to win. But according to most observers Sokol is just too strong for the Terps. His victory over the UNC captain was on an asphalt court, which probably made some difference.

They will meet either in the morning or the afternoon, depending on whether Sokol and Carl Evans are still in the doubles. If they are, then the singles will be in the morning.

Two Willards Beat USC 2-1

COLUMBIA, S. C. — The Tar Heels moved closer to a perfect ACC mark yesterday by edging the South Carolina Gamecocks 2-1 behind the fine pitching of Spencer Willard.

Willard started his first game since April 21st, and pitched seven innings of shutout ball before tiring. He left in the eighth with a 2-0 lead thanks to two rbi's by big Ken Willard.

Willard and Willard had controled the game until the eighth when the Gamecocks came up with their only run, and once again Bill Haywood sauntered in from the bullpen to put out the fire.

The win was the Tar Heels twelfth consecutive conference win of the year, and their nineteenth straight ACC win over two seasons. By winning the game the Heels set an ACC record for the most conference wins in a season. They have only two more rounds in their fight to become the first ACC team to go through the season undefeated in conference play.

For the second time this year, the Gamecocks fell to the Tar Heels by one run. Sports analysts have often said that the mark of a good team is whether they can win the close ones, and the Tar Heels have certainly done this. Eight times this year the Tar Heels have been involved in one-run decisions, and seven of these have resulted in Carolina victories.

The Tar Heels could connect for only four hits off South Carolina righthanders John Coleman and Marty Evans, but they all came in the first four innings off Coleman.

Jim Speight once again started the Tar Heels off when he got on via an error in the first inning. He bounced a grounder to third baseman Joe Tonelli, but first baseman Jack McCathern missed Tonelli's throw and Speight, who was on base all four times, was safe. He moved to second when John Shaw grounded to first on a hit-and-run, and scored on Ken Willard's sharp single to left-center.

Alcoholics Explode; Defeat Chi Psi In All-Campus Final

Ralph Timmerman lined a bases-loaded triple in the botton of the sixth inning to climax a come-from-behind rally and give the Avery Alcoholics a 9-7 win over Chi Psi in the All-Campus softball final.

Trailing in the early innings 6-0 and 7-2, the Alcoholics scored three in the fifth and four in the sixth. A triple by Charlie Murray and singles by Frank Gibbs, Billy Cunningham, and Bill Galantai brought the dormitory champs within two runs in the fifth, when for the first time in the tournament pitcher Jack Crane began to falter.

A single by Mike Spain, a double by Tim Nichols, and a walk to Gibbs loaded the beses with one out in the sixth. Timmerman then boomed his triple to left center to put the Alchies ahead, and he scored on Cunningham's sacrifice fly.

Chi Psi drew first blood in the top of the second as the team sent ten men to the plate. Steve Painter walked, and Bob Carithers, Paul Donahue, Bill Vincent, Bill Powell, Mal Dunlevie, and Dick Lewisohn all singled for the 5-0 lead. Carithers hit a bases empty homer in the third to increase the lead to 6-0.

Gibbs hit a two run homer scoring Nichols (who had walked), ahead of him to get Avery into the scoring column in the bottom of the third. But Chi Psi bounced back for a run in the fourth. However they had two men cut down on the basepaths to rob them of a big inning, and perhaps the game. After that little stretch of luck, Nichols settled down on the mound and pitched shutout ball for the last three innings.

While Nichols was holding the fort, the Alcoholics' bats broke out against Crane to win the game.

...don't pour it down the side?

(We'd rather you wouldn't)

Of course, a lot of people do pour beer down the side of the glass. They say it keeps the head down.

It sure does. And we think that's a shame.

Maybe it sounds silly, but we spend more dollars on just the bubbles than any other brewery in America. Instead of pumping them in mechanically, we let Budweiser create its own bubbles with our exclusive Beechwood Ageing and natural carbonation. It takes a lot longer to do it this way. But it's worth it.

When those bubbles get together at the top of your glass you've got a better head, a cleaner taste, a smoother, more drinkable beer. Budweiser even smells better (really ... just take a sniff next time you pour).

So let that Budweiser fall right down the center of your glass. Let it splash around and froth and foam. We went to a whale of a lot of trouble brewing the finest beer on earth, and we'd hate to think you'd missed even one little bubble.

LBJ Promises Civil Rights Bill To Pass

Late May Vote Possible

NEW YORK (UPI)—President Johnson Saturday promised that the Civil Rights Bill will be passed even if it means congressional sessions "around the clock."

He said the Senate should be ready to vote on the House-approved measure by the end of this month.

The President also all but confirmed that he would run for re-election in November and said he would make more tours of the poverty - stricken Appalachian area.

In a characteristic whirlwind day, Johnson traveled to the World's Fair, spoke to 7,000 persons at the Singer Bowl, visited the Venezuelan pavilion, and held a news conference at the Federal pavilion.

The President told his news conference that he would not tell Senate leaders when debate should be cut off on the Civil Rights Bill. But he said that blocking the legislation hurt Congress and pleaded for passage for the sake of the national interest.

The Senate has debated the bill for 51 days.

Johnson told a cheering audience at Singer Bowl: "It may take all summer—it may take sessions around the clock—but I promise you here and now that we are going to pass that bill.

"We are going to bring new hope to 20 million Americans who for two centuries of our history have been on the outside looking in."

Pressed on plans for his political future, the Chief Executive carried on a bantering exchange with newsmen and said he "wouldn't want to shoot from the hip" on the subject now. But he wryly noted that he had asked Congress to authorize $800,000 to cover expenses of transition between an outgoing and incoming President.

"I'm informed by the budget director that my re - election would save this $800,000" he said. "While I have no announcement . . . to make at this time, I think you all know how strongly I feel about economy."

Johnson added, however, that his plans were not definite, and said it was unlikely he would announce them until after he had seen delegates at the Democratic National Convention in Atlantic City, N. J.

Socialized Medicine A Must In America Says Harrington

"It is absolutely necessary for this country to have socialized medicine," anti-poverty author and presidential consultant Michael Harrington told a faculty seminar at the School of Public Health.

"The propaganda job on the American people (against socialized medicine) has been fantastic. They've been told such misleading things as 'You won't be able to choose your own doctor.'"

Harrington, on the UNC campus for three days of lectures, claimed that Americans don't like medicine as it is now practiced. "Some day," he said, "some American politician is going to break through the barrier of fear built up by the opponents of socialized medicine and ask for medical care for everybody."

He labeled the federal government's controversial medical care for the aged proposal under Social Security as "an excellent band-aid." He said, however, such a concept would help people only at the end of their misery.

"We need a lifetime of medical care for everyone," he said.

But money alone is not sufficient to provide a "human care industry" which this country need, he said.

"The issue is not getting a check in the mail to cover the costs of medical care for the poor," he said. "We need personalized medical care.

"Poor people now complain they don't see the same doctor twice and the doctors they do see don't care about them because they won't have to see them again.

"This is a huge impersonal bureaucracy and doctors don't care whether their poor patients get well or die."

Harrington maintained medical care for the poor is "a problem of culture and doctors and nurses must practice a form of social work."

He stressed medical care for the poor, he said, because this group gets sick more often, stays sick longer, loses more time from work and, therefore, is less able to cope with their health problems.

"We need a vast increase in medical and health programs for the poor," he said.

Looking into the future, Harrington pictured the "human care industry" as being unique in that it will require people, not machines. He said it is "automation immune" and "job productive."

He envisioned the use of the aged and the untrained in such areas as community nursery schools for slum-area youngsters as young as two years of age.

Finally, he predicted that anti-poverty programs will be "an utter failure" unless adequate health care is provided to everyone in the U.S. Such care, he said, must contribute to healthy minds, and emotions as well as healthy bodies.

Wallace Goes To Maryland

BALTIMORE (UPI)—Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, breaking a hoped-for "wall of empty silence," won both applause and derisive laughter Saturday from more than 1,000 Johns Hopkins University students with another slashing attack on the Civil Rights Bill.

In the first major address of his Maryland presidential primary campaign, the segregationist governor was applauded when he appeared on the stage of Shriver Hall, but his audience laughed and hooted later when he said:

"Never in my career have I made a remark against a man because of his color. That doesn't go in Alabama."

Merchants Don't Suffer In Summer

Contary to some beliefs, the merchants of Chapel Hill do not "feel the pinch" too badly during the summer months when the regular students leave.

"Chapel Hill is becoming a more stable community with many permanent personnel from the hospital and the teaching professions. We are less dependent, on a whole, upon the student trade as we formerly were," said Joe Augustine, UNC alumnus and executive director of both the Merchants Association and Chamber of Commerce.

"Also, since WW II there has been to steadily increasing amount of summer students to compensate for the void left in June. With as many as 8,000 students in last year's summer sessions, coupled with the other summer activities held at the University—agencies, extensions and institutes—the merchants are taking no less a loss than any other non-tourist town does during the holiday season."

Are the merchants and chamber members encouragfing new industries to come here?

"Yes; we cannot have heavy industry here due to our limited water supply, but we are very desirous of such industries as Hospital Savings and other service offices and branches. We are just as well located and equipped to handle such work as Raleigh or other larger communities in the area."

Augustine, originally from Pennsylvania, graduated from the University in 1952 after playing offensive guard during the Justice Era. He has been a merchant here for the past 11½ years and for recreation flies a Stinson-Voyager airplane.

Presently he is trying to extend Chamber of Commerce membership and influence since many of its members include not only merchants but private citizens who also have a stake in the community and desire to see it prosper and prograss.

Far Eastern Study Open To Students

One hundred all-expense paid scholarships will be awarded to Americans for study in fields relating to Asia and the Pacific Islands by the East-West Center, a national American educational institution.

Mrs. Marion Saunders, director of the Center will be at UNC this month to talk with students and faculty members interested in doing graduate work at the University of Hawaii.

The grant for 21 months of study includes travel expenses to and from Hawaii, books, room and board, health insurance and a small personal allowance.

The Center, established by the U. S. Congress in 1960, seeks to promote mutual understanding by bringing students together from Asia, the Pacific area and the United States for study, interchange of ideas and shared living experiences.

Acceptance requirements are high academic achievement, excellent health, ability to relate to Asians and interest in promoting the objectives of the center.

Carolina students who qualify and want to inquire about the program should contact Frank Duffey, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, in South Building. Appointments with Mrs. Saunders will be arranged by Professor Duffey. His phone number is 933-1164.

Funny What 90 Degrees Will Do

By HUGH STEVENS

It was just one of those days.

By two o'clock, the heat had melted the asphalt on Hillsboro Street in front of the Pi Beta Phi house, turning it into a sticky goo. The sand which the city had thoughtfully dumped on top of the mess only made things worse as passing autos flung grains of it into my face and under my already wilted collar.

On the lawn, a lovely Pi Phi sat blissfully in the grass, tossing cloverleafs into the air and chatting with her date, who rocked slowly back and forth in the porch swing.

"Funny how the heat affects some people," I thought to myself. I walked on.

The Morehead Planetarium parking lot, as usual, was packed with chartered buses, and outside the rear entrance stood long lines of school children, looking like so many flowers that had been left out in the sun too long. One of them calmly removed a water pistol of fantastic size from his pocket and blasted little girls in front of him.

"Oooow, that's wet!" she shrieked.

"Well, of course it's wet, stupid," he leered.

The arrival of a large matronly teacher sent me on my way. I couldn't bear to watch.

I headed for Graham Memorial, thinking all the while of the fan in my office. I was interrupted by two fellows using a pushcart for a scooter.

"Watch out!" they yelled. I jumped into the bushes. ZOOM!!! The converted parcel carrier careened down the brick walk as pedestrians headed for cover.

"Spring Fever," I muttered, crawling out from behind a tree.

Mopping my brow, I walked on toward GM, which shimmered on the horizon like a mirage.

On the lawn, I paused to look at the only three people in view—two girls (sans shoes) and a boy. They were filling the air with long streams of delicate, fragile bubbles, accented by giddy laughter. Bubble pipes on the GM lawn?

"Humph," I grumbled. "Some people will do anything when they let the weather get to them."

I entered the Daily Tar Heel office. At least I could expect some measure of sanity here. My co-editor glanced up as I entered the office.

"Well, see ya," he said cheerily.

"Huh?" I replied.

"Goin' on a picnic somewhere," he said. "I figured you could handle everything. I wrote one edit, but you'll have to rewrite it. The heat's got me—got to find some shade."

"Yeah," I said, "take off."

Just then there was a resounding thud on the office door. I opened it and peered cautiously outside. There lay a rather large rock, and grinning at me from under a mop of red hair, our deuce reporter, Kerry Sipe.

"I kicked it all the way upstairs from the parking lot," he reported.

"You WHAT?" I ventured cautiously.

"Kicked it. From outside. Never touched it with my hands all the way up here."

I slammed the door in his face with some sort of utterance about the crazy characters that come out in the spring.

I sat down to type, but it was impossible. The seat was too low for me to reach the keys. Those big blocks of ice just don't last long in this heat.

PYRAMID BUILDERS — During the MRC-CWC swimming combo party yesterday afternoon at Kessing pool, this group of Carolina Males displayed their athletic prowess by making like the Egyptians and attempting to build a human pyramid. Starting from a small group at the bottom, a circle was formed and several others struggled up on their shoulders. Everything was fine until someone laughed, which wasn't hard, and the whole thing started to sway . . . ending in a rather confused, wet mess on the pool floor.

Learning From A Death

For about a week at the end of last month, the quiet little town of Statesville, N. C., was chastised beyond belief.

On April 24, the state papers carried a news item about the murder of a Statesville Negro, Benjamin Carlton, who had filed for election to the Iredell County Board of Commissioners. The story said he had been shot with a .410 shotgun in a wooded area near town, and police were investigating.

Immediately the True Believers were up in arms. The people of Statesville became "grits," "rednecks" and "murderers." They were compared to the residents of Mississippi, and indignant letter-writers said the action showed why Negro freedom in the South was practically non-existent.

A few days later an all-Negro coroner's jury return the verdict of suicide, citing heavy indebtedness as the probable reason Carlton had chosen to take his own life.

And again there was a public outcry—this time from the other side. Charges of "trial by newspaper" filled the air, and writers intimated that people should keep their noses out of others' business, especially when matters concerning the race issue were at hand.

The latter complainers sounded as though their next line would be something like: "Colored people should learn to stay in their place."

In the end, everyone succeeded in making themselves look like fools, though to be sure they were highly indignant fools. But in the process they left a cloud of lingering doubt over Statesville, which had no defense and, indeed, no voice in the matter.

But another news story appeared in the state papers Friday:

> STATESVILLE — Support of the new community program set up by Statesville's Negroes has been voted unanimously by the Statesville Merchants Association.
>
> More than 50 merchants attending a meeting took the action after leaders of NAACP gave this promise:
>
> "As far as Statesville is concerned, there will be no marches, no economic boycotts, no picketing and no pressure. Instead, we're going to do all we can to encourage our people to shop and buy in Statesville and to cooperate in every way possible with Statesville merchants."
>
> The program was announced Monday by the local NAACP chapter as one designed for the good of the community and its race relations. Cooperation was voted by the City Council.
>
> A delegation from the NAACP chapter urged merchants Thursday to aid in setting up a program to train Negroes for jobs in retail business and later to consider employment of qualified Negroes.

Statesville thus became the second town in North Carolina (after Asheville) to have 100 per cent cooperation between the Negro community and the town's white leadership.

Another fact which should be pointed out is that there are two other Negro candidates in Iredell County, and each has an excellent chance of winning. Talks with several residents of that town indicate that both have substantial support, even among whites.

So, we hope, Statesville may be exonerated. But the waters run deeper, and, hopefully, a few lessons have been learned.

The Negroes have made their point well in this state. North Carolina is not Georgia or Alabama—it is a state abundant in citizens who respect their fellow man, and who will go out of their way to help those who are underprivileged.

North Carolina realizes the plight of the Negro, and the state government and most local governments have taken progressive steps to aid them in their drive for equality. Despite the criticism heaped upon the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen and the Merchants' Association, the Negro in this community is as "equal" as any Negro in the nation.

Do not mistake "equal" with "same." For in this case they are two different things. The Negro cannot eat at Clarence's, he cannot sleep at the University Motel and he cannot shop at the Rock Pile.

But he can hold his head up as he walks through town. It is his town, and he is respected as a member of it. He is not spat upon and he does not have to move aside for others to pass. He does not go to segregated schools, he does not have to go through hell and high water to be able to vote and he has equal opportunity to get a job if he is qualified.

This is true in many towns in the state. Yes, there are some notable exceptions—Williamston, Washington and Asheboro are several.

But for every Williamston there are two or three Statesvilles, and the percentage gets higher every day. More and more steps are being taken, and it is no longer necessary for the Negro to take his protest to the streets.

Ten years ago North Carolina was like Mississippi today. In ten years it will be like California today. For equality is coming, and coming fast.

We no longer can assume that Benjamin Carltons are murdered simply because they die a violent death in a small North Carolina town. As long as we continue to make such assumptions, we are no better than Mississippi.

By the same token, we cannot assume that the Negro does not have a legitimate complaint. There is no sense in opposing the Negro, or any man, when he tries to help himself by education and other sensible, legal means. It is his right, and, indeed, his obligation.

Fortunately for all of us, the era of the successful extremists seems to have vanished in North Carolina, and it is swiftly passing elsewhere as well. No longer can the Ku Kluxers hope to find enough warped, unkempt minds to enlist an army of unlearned haters. No longer can militant Negro groups successfully threaten towns with "drastic measures." We are moving into an age dominated by a new type of man—the responsible, informed citizen.

In this man's hands rests the future stature of North Carolina, and the respect of its citizens for one another. If this man's task is hampered by stubborn extremists, his vital energies will be diverted into useless channels, and everyone will lose.

'Tests Waste Time'—Ehrhart

"I'm Feeling A Little Better Already"

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The General College this week gave approximately 600 members to the sophomore class a test designed to establish a standard for incoming transfer students. This test was an affront to the sophomore class and the university community for several reasons:

1. Sophomores were coerced into taking the test under the threat of cancellation of registration for next year. This was an ex post fact requirement for transfer out of the general college.

2. Only half the class was required to sacrifice the required eight hours in two consecutive nights whereas their classmates had the advantage of being able to take tests on the following days without the harships of postponement.

3. Notice was given only one week in advance of the testing. This presented problems in planning for students who have term papers, tests, and other end of the term work to complete this week. Would it have cost the university that much to have sent out a letter a month in advance?

4. What is the logic behind such a test? Incoming students will take these tests under the pressures of providing excellence to an admissions board. The students setting the standards this year, however, have no personal stake in the tests, are antagonized by the methods of the administration, and as a result could care less about their performance. To imply that such a test can be administered under the above conditions and be meaningful requires a better understanding of the mystical interpretation that will be required than I have at my command.

A little foresight in announcing the tests, testing of the whole class rather than a single section, testing every other night rather than consecutively—these measures would have reduced the antagonism. Had the university announced in the fall that students would have to take a test which would go on their record even the personal stake vital to such a test would have been present.

The feeling of the majority of students taking the test is that not only our time but the time of the administration has been wasted by this endeavor.

'Sex, College Girl' Obnoxiously Sexy

By DON CURTIS

If you are either a male or a female—and hell, let's face it, most of us are—you'll find "SEX AND THE COLLEGE GIRL" (1) Interesting (2) Informative (3) Pleasantly, pleasingly, wonderfully shocking or (1) down right obnoxious.

The cover calls the book "A frank, up-to-date, first hand report from the American College campus on sex in the sixties. Actually . . . sex in the sixties is very similar to sex in the thirties, forties, and fifties. The only difference is that somebody finally decided to do some research to find out for sure what everybody's been thinking for years."

Based on actual interviews with some 600 college students from 102 American colleges and universities including schools in every section of the country, including schools of every religious affiliation, and including every type of institution, the author, Gael Greene, a gal herself, gives a very revealing, and very often, a startling look at today's coed and her sexual behavior. In her own words the author states, "There is a revolution in campus sexual behavior in progress." (Fortunately, fellows, the indications are that we're winning.) And it's this revolution with which this book concerns itself.

Before I continue with my review, I feel that there are two basic questions in your dirty little minds which must be answered first. First, No, there aren't any pictures, photographs, or other illustrations, and secondly, No, none of the coeds at UNC-CH, UNC-G, and/or UNC-R were involved in the interviews which the author held in researching the book.

This brings me back to the author of this dirty little literary gem. Mrs. Greene has been a reporter for UPI and the New York Post, and she's written one other book, appropriately called "Don't Come Back Without It." How this illustrious background qualifies her as an expert on sex is a question which will remain unanswered. By the way, she does come by some knowledge by virtue of her marriage to Mr. Greene. I guess.

Seriously—Mrs. Greene's book is a very provocative(?) study on a subject that now appears to be heading for the limelight it has always so richly deserved—sex at college. Based on some revealing personal histories, the author has apparently found out exactly what today's college girl thinks about sex . . . at least, this is the impression the author wanted to leave.

On such topics as the weekend, the Affair, Marriage, Petting, and Virginity versus non - virginity, the author holds the reader's attention more or less avidly . . . how more or less avidly depends on how dirty your mind is. As for myself, I thought the book was pretty good.

Seriously again, the book tells, in the seemingly honest words of the girls themselves exactly what's going on on campus—sexwise. The book seeks an answer to what the girls think of sex, and it finds out that they basically think it's a pretty damn good thing. Further the book probes into what the American coeds do and don't do about sex, where and when their activities take place, and what the role of love is in relation to sex. The author also writes about what the boys think about the girls, and what the girls think the boys are thinking about. As you can see, it's a pretty thinky book.

College Girls—Sex?

For those of you who just want a cheap thrill—I'd suggest just reading the chapter titles. For instances, Chapter One is titled "Even Nice Girls." Hell, you can have more fun thinking about the title than you can reading the whole damn chapter.

For the guys who want more than a cheap thrill, but don't want to read the entire book, I'd suggest reading Chapters One and Two, "Even Nice Girls," and "College: Challenge to Chastity." In these two chapters the author displays her real literary artistry. For those of you who desire a small sample, here:

"The name of the game is cool. And she can be cool, the American Coed. Cool in the hipster sense."

Now isn't that great? Here's some more, especially for the student of style:

"The rules of the game are: There are no rules. But there is a firm understanding: Ostentatious display of virginity is strictly uncool."

Good . . . . real good. Almost as good as Max Lerner. He's the fellow who wrote the introduction to the book.

Now . . . here's something for the girls who don't want to read the whole book, but do want to have the hell scared out of them. I suggest that you read the chapters "Birth Control" and "Abortions and Babies." In these chapters you'll find out that (1) College girls basically don't know anything about birth control. (2) Most college pregnancies end in an illegal abortion, (3) There are around 90,000 unwanted pregnancies annually, and (4) As many as one out of six brides are expecting a baby before they expect the rice.

And this is just a sample. There are hundreds of other little tidbits of information also included.

In summary, I'd just like to say that basically this book is rotten, perverted, and warped. The author would have the Average American believe that college life is nothing but one big sex orgy. Either the book's wrong, or I'm the biggest fool around. See girls, I have faith in you even if Miss Greene doesn't.

This is not to say that the incidents reported in the book are pure fiction. Sure, they're true, but what about the other 585 girls Mrs. Greene interviewed. Come on, new. What some writers will do to make a living, and what some publishers will print.

McMurry Agrees And Disagrees

Editors, The Tar Heel:

At the risk of contributing to an already lengthy controversy, I should like to offer a few comments on the subject of war crimes.

For the student of history, the ironical and amusing point is not that the Allies committed acts which may have been war crimes, such as the perhaps unnecessary and military pointless annihilation of Dresden, the equally pointless slaughter of Dresden refugees, or, in the case of Russia, the Katyn massacre. The ironical point is rather that the Allies, while righteously condemning, prosecuting, and in some cases executing Germans and Japanese for having perpetrated similar acts exhibited what may have been self-righteous hypocrisy in failing or refusing to consider the the possibility that some of their own acts might have been just as unnecessary and avoidable as those of their recent enemies. Indeed, to judge by the nature and results of the war crimes trials, it would seem that, in terms of trial and punishment, only losers can commit war crimes, and that victors, by virtue of their positions as judges, juries, and executioners, are safe from being accused or at least prosecuted for their own questionable actions. In light of the history of the idea of war crimes, a history which began in an organized and active way only after World War II, it would seem that whether or not a given act constitutes a war crime is, in fact and in terms of results only, primarily dependent not upon any property of the act itself, but upon who committed the act, the victors or the losers.

I agree with Mr. Lowe and General Sherman that "War is HELL," but I do not think that this proposition constitutes a very good defense for having deliberately and avoidably made war more hellish than necessary.

Wellman Ain't Happy Either

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Let me answer Gary Lowe's criticism as briefly as possible. These are my last words on the subject.

He says that if Dresden was of no military importance, this makes no difference to him — the bombing was necessary anyhow. I do not know how he reasons this out, but he concludes by reminding me that the Germans were the first to bomb civilians. The first point comes to nothing at all. On the second point my only comment is that the R.A.F. spokesmen never justified urban bombing on a principle of revenge or retribution. Their justification was a plea of military necessity, and the plea very often rang terribly hollow.

I would like to emphasize a point which I apparently glossed over in my first article, and sadly omitted in my rebuttal to Louis Schmier. It is this, that Dresden was obliterated in order to frighten Stalin with a demonstration of Anglo-American airpower. The Russian advance in the east was proceeding much more rapidly than our drive into western Germany. Churchill and his advisers wanted to remind the Russians that Anglo-American power was a force to reckon with, and that the U.S. and Britian could not be bullied around by Russia at the conference table. This was the reason for destroying a large city which had never before been bombed. The evidence may be found in David Irving's book, "The Destruction of Dresden," and in R. H. S. Crossman's article, "Apocalypse at Dresden," printed in "Esquire" last November.

I have read the books by Martin Caidin which Gary urges upon me. They have considerable merit and I am glad that he is familiar with them. Now—enough of this senseless argument. The war has been over nineteen years; we needn't fight it again.

College President Suspends Paper For Ineffectiveness

NEW YORK (CPS)—The student newspaper of Hunter College, The Arrow, was suspended from publication Friday by Hunter President John J. Meng, because the paper "no longer has an effective editorial board to direct its activities."

Immediate support for the Arrow came from the Bronx Campus Student Council and from the Barnard Bulletin, which offered to fill in for Arrow's regular Monday issue on both campuses of the college. The Student Council, in an emergency session late Friday night, agreed to have its own mimeograph news letter carry the suspension story and be distributed on both campuses.

The indefinite suspension was the result of the public split within the editorial board and did not represent censorship of anything which Arrow had printed. Internal dissention, although it existed for several weeks, disappeared in the face of the suspension, and protest statement to the President was signed by all nine members of the board.

The editorial board statement, while admitting that there were conflicts within the policy making groups, chastise President Meng for not having solicited the opinion of the editor, Allan Coleman, before suspending the paper. Thus, the president "could not have known that these problems were undergoing a tardy, but rapid resolution."

The conflict within the editorial board came to light last Wednesday when five of its members brought impeachment charges against the editor for "neglect of duty and abuse of authority." The Judicial Board, the campus discipline committee dismissed these charges as "improper" on the grounds that the procedure for taking the impeachment vote was illegal.

Following the dismissal, Coleman announced his intention of bringing counter charges of "liable perjury and misrepresentation" against the five impeachers. In a signed editorial in Thursday's issue of Arrow, Coleman declared that he was "unable to trust these people. It will be both difficult and destructive to continue operation in such an atmosphere, both personally and as co-workers. Yet it must be done."

Workshop Produces 'Cosi Fan Tutte'

A hand-picked group of musicians will provide the orchestration for UNC's Opera Workshop's production of "Cosi Fan Tutte" to be performed here Tuesday and Wednesday in Hill Music Hall at 8:30 p.m.

The specially selected musical group—members of the University Symphony Orchestra—form "a very unusual musical accompaniment" said Wilton Mason, director of the workshop and UNC professor of music. "The orchestra has one unusual feature in the relative proportions of string and wind players," he said, pointing out that the number of string and wind players for this production is exactly equal. The more usual symphonic practice uses many string players on each part, according to Dr. Mason.

"By having the strings and wind players equal in number, the resultant sound throws the wind and brass instruments into strong relief. Mozart often speaks in his letters of his fondness for these instruments and his pleasure in the sound of ensembles in which they predominated," he said.

Tickets for "Cosi Fan Tutte" are now on sale for $1.50 and $1.00 at the Department of Music office. Tickets will also be on sale at the door during the nights of performance.

NSA INTERVIEWS

Students interested in attending the National Student Association Congress this summer as NSA alternates, will have an opportunity to interview for these positions, Student Body President Spearman announced recently.

Spearman said six alternates will be selected—four by a special committee and two delegates appointed by the Student Body President.

The special committee is composed of Jim Fullwood, Ned Matin, Jean Dillon, and Sylvia Shields. The four students chosen as alternates by the committee, will receive $40 scholarships which will cover approximately one-half of the expenses at the Congress.

The two alternates chosen by Spearman will receive no stipends.

Both Spearman and the committee will hold interviews Monday and Tuesday for the positions. Students interested in NSA are urged to call Student Government offices (933-1257) to make an appointment.

GLEE CLUB OFFICERS

Larry Ford, a sophomore from Charlotte, is president; Bryon McCoy, a sophomore from Cove City is vice president; Earl Allison, a junior from Avon Park, Fla., is secretary; treasurer is John Hutcheson of Winston-Salem, a sophomore; Alvin Tyndall, sophomore from Wilson, is concert and tour manager; Jim Kennington, sophomore from Charlotte, is public relations director; and Spencer Tinkham, a sophomore from Charlotte, and Frank Minard, a freshman from Montclair, N. J. are librarians.

The fifty-voice Men's Glee Club, the oldest organization on the UNC campus, is directed by Dr. Joel Carter, UNC associate professor of music.

SOMERS WINS AWARD

Larry G. Somers of Reidsville, a graduating senior, has won the Wall Street Journal award for "academic honors in banking and finance."

A consistent "dean's list" students in the School of Business Administration, he will receive a medalion testifying to his scholarship in business and a year's subscription to The Wall Street Journal.

Somers was personally congratulated for the distinction by the Editor of the Wall Street Journal, Vermont C. Royster. Mr. Royster, a graduate of the University in 1935, was in Chapel Hill to address journalism students. While here he made the award presentation.

HASLEM GALLERY EXHIBIT

A one-man exhibit of oil and polymer paintings by Nancy Neill McMillan of Chapel Hill will open Monday at the Jane Haslem Gallery. The show is to remain on exhibit through June 10. Included in this exhibit are large impressionistic and expressionistic paintings dealing mostly with the figure and smaller paintings and drawings.

TRANSPORTATION DISCUSSION

Professor J. C. D. Blaine will moderate a panel discussion on "The Importance of Transportation in Our American Way of Life" over WUNC-TV, Channel 4, this afternoon at 2:30.

The program is designed to usher in Transportation Week in North Carolina. It will be repeated on Friday, May 15, at 9:30 p.m.

Panel participants are Philip McGill of the Research Triangle Institute; Harry Johnson of Westinghouse Corporation, Raleigh; Edgar Coble, Overnite Transfer Co., Durham; and Edwin Patton, of the North Carolina Motor Carriers Association.

DEY DEDICATION

UNC's language building, Dey Hall, will be formally dedicated today at public ceremonies. Robbert B. House, Chancellor Emeritus and professor of English and classics, emeritus, will give the dedication address in the faculty lounge of Dey Hall. The building is named for the late William Morton Dey who served as chairman of the UNC Department of Romance Languages for 40 years from 1909 until 1949 when he retired.

TRI DELTA SCHOLARSHIP

The 1964 Tri Delta Scholarship Competition will begin Tuesday, May 12. Two $130 scholarships will be awarded.

All women students of UNC are eligible to apply, and applications may be obtained from the Student Aid Office.

Judges in the competition will be Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael, Assistant Dean Saryl Farrington, Mrs. F. D. Milam, Sandra Morgan, Dianne Littlefield and Sue Drennan.

Sokol Breezes Past Busick To Take Third ACC Title

George Sokol became the first player to ever win three consecutive singles championships yesterday as he quickly disposed of an old nemesis, Jim Busick of Maryland, in three consecutive sets.

Sokol had little trouble with Busick as he ran up scores of 6-4, 6-0 and 6-3 in the best three out of five match.

Ted Hoehn and O. H. Parrish advanced into the doubles finals by winning two matches yesterday, one of them from Sokol and partner Carl Evans. Hoehn and Parrish were meeting Clemson's Doug Stewart and Molloy Evans in the finals, but because of the late starting time of five o'clock, the match wasn't over before DTH press time.

Sokol's magnificent line game wore Busick down. George continually placed his shots right on the tape, and after the first set Busick was out of it. The little blond from Bryn Mawr, Pa., did what he couldn't do at College Park — solve Busick's two-hand back hands.

Busick gave the UNC ace a rough time in the first set, but seemed to realize that he was beaten after dropping behind quickly in the second set.

Carolina coach Don Skakle was abundant in his praise of Sokol. "George played some of his best tennis," said Skakle, "He was just too smart for Busick—he outguessed him time and time again. His serve was going well, and he was hitting deep. He was bringing Busick in short then rifling the ball past him — his control was great. He was hitting from three to six inches from the tape. Busick played well at first, but when he began to err, the match might as well have been over."

Hoehn and Parrish beat Duke's best doubles team, Jerry Mattson and Jim Cheek, in two consecutive sets in a morning match. The Hoehn-Parrish team, top-seeded in the tournament, disposed of the Duke duo by 6-3, 6-1 scores.

In the most exciting match of the day, Hoehn-Parrish were pushed to three sets before defeating teammates Sokol and Evans. They won the last two sets to edge the Sokol-Evans team 3-6, 6-4, 6-4.

Hoehn's overhand and Sokol's all-around game kept the crowd busy applauding their heroics. The final set was a see-saw battle from start to finish. Sokol and Evans took a quick 2-0 lead, but Hoehn and Parrish came back to tie it at 2-2.

Sokol - Evans won the next game, but then Hoehn and Parrish won three straight to give them what seemed to be a safe lead. However they couldn't handle Sokol's serve, and lost game-love. The next game, with Hoehn serving, kept the crowd on the edge of their seats. The score was deuce six times, before Hoehn, who had double-faulted three times, lobbed his serve over the net then smashed Evans' return through his opponents to win the match.

UNC Belts Tigers For Thirteenth Straight

12-5 Onslaught Led By Willard Homer

CLEMSON, S.C. — The North Carolina Tar Heels ran their ACC record to 13-0 as they clobbered three Clemson pitchers at will and walked away with a 12-5 win.

Jerry Davis, the man who shut out Wake Forest in the pennant-clincher at Winston-Salem last Tuesday, got the win, but needed relief help from Bill Haywood. Dale Smith, the Tiger starter, lasted only long enough to take the loss, and was followed by Greg Casey and Bob Lowell.

Big Ken Willard was once again the big stick as he knocked in three runs with two hits, including a tremendous homer, his second on the South Carolina trip. Dick Prindle, Jim Speight, John Shaw and Tommy Wright also had two hits as the Heels pounded out 14 hits.

Smith helped the champion Tar Heels to jump off to a quick lead in the first by walking Prindle. Speight singled, Shaw sacrificed and Smith then conveniently uncorked a wild pitch for one run. The second scored on Bill Brown's single.

Smith called it quits in the second as he surrendered a single to wright, a triple to Black, a sacrifice fly to Prindle, and singles to Speight and Shaw. Casey came on to bail him out and Ken Willard greeted him with a run-producing double, making it 5-0.

The Tigers put together three singles in the second for two runs, and Tony Jackson's triple in the third cut the lead to 5-3, but that was as close as the game got. A walk to Davis, singles by Prindle and Shaw and Willard's homer added four runs, making the score 9-3. Willard's blast cleared a street and a lawn, bouncing against a house.

Davis weakened a bit in the seventh when Jack McCall tripled for one run, and scored on a grounder, cutting the lead to four runs, but Bill Haywood finished up the last two innings, stopping the Tigers without any hits or runs.

UNC finished up the scoring in the ninth with three unearned runs off Lowell on back to back doubls by Bill Taylor and Dick Fleming, who had come in as defensive replacements in the sixth.

Only Duke can stop Carolina from becoming the first team in history to go through the ACC without a loss. Their getting through the trip to South Carolina, usually a jinxed state for Tar Heel teams, without any scars is quite a feat, just another mark of this team's greatness.

The return of Co-Captain and third baseman Tom Wright in the series is quite encouraging. He went 3-6, quite a comeback for a man counted out completely only a week ago.

Duke will be at Emerson Wednesday for the last leg of the quest for a perfect season, and next weekend the Heels will play Davidson at Gastonia and VPI at Blacksburg, Va. in two warm-ups for the playoffs.

Pitcher Jimmy Dean Sends One Across Plate

Dean Hurls Frosh To Easy 5-1 Win

By AL KAPLAN

Jimmy Dean, Tar Baby pitcher, hurled a three hitter for his sixth win of the year as the Frosh coasted to an easy 5-1 win over Marion High School at Emerson stadium, Saturday.

Dean, known as "Old Man," looked sharp striking out eight Marion batters, walking only three, in his seven inning stint.

Marion broke the scoring ice first, in their half of the second inning. Pitcher Bill Teeter led off with a single, advanced to third on third sacker Jay Schwartz' error of John Poteat's grounder, and scored when Tom Padgett grounded into a double play. The play went 6-4-3, Bill Newsome to Skip Downs to Tom Lampman.

Teeter started off extremely strong. In the first inning he struck out the side and in the second inning retired the side in order. The Tar Babies found the range in the third inning and tied the score, 1-1. The run came on a walk to Mike Knowles, a single by Dean and a balk, by Teeter.

The Tar Babies struck again in the next inning, this time for four big runs. Lawson Baker started the ball rolling, reaching first on an error. Mickey Lienau then singled, moving Blake to third. Jay Schwartz then promptly cleared the bases with his first homer of the year, a drive to right field. Lampman hit a ground rule double to right which cleared the fence on one bounce and scored on a single by Knowles.

Friday, the Frosh ran their record to 13-2 with a 7-5 win over State's Wolflets, at Raleigh. The Tar Babies collected 17 hits, but could not bunch enough of them together to get a big inning going. Center fielder Lawson Baker, subbing for injured Danny Talbott, had a perfect day at the plate, going five for five.

The Tar Babies are now 14-2, 11-0, in the ACC, with the only setbacks coming at the hands of Louisburg Junior College.

COLUMBIA, S. C. — Eddie Brown, the last man out on the course, sank a clutch putt on the eighteenth hole to give South Carolina a come-from-behind tie with Maryland for the ACC Golf Championship.

The Gamecocks and Terps, who were four and six strokes behind first round leader North Caolina respectively at the start of the day, had team scores of 751, while UNC and Wake Forest tied for second with 753. Duke, Virginia, Clemson, and North Carolina State followed in that order.

Vern Novack (Maryland) and Dennis Milne (WF) had the best individual scores with 144. Dan Hill (Duke) and Jack Seawell (USC) had 145's, Skip Tucker (UNC) and Bob McFearen (Maryland) had 146's. Ed Hoopes had the next best UNC score with a 149, which placed eighth. Jay Sigel (WF), last year's champion, was the flop of the tourney, finishing with a 153.

USC grabbed a lead earlier in the day, but fell behind due to a late rush by Maryland, and it took Brwon's putt to save them. The Gamecocks' tie for first was a surprise, and were helped greatly by knowledge of their own course. Duke looked for a while like a strong contender, but fell badly on the back side. UNC was hurt on the front side, which was disappointing since they had grabbed an impressive three stroke lead in the first round.

Baseball Is Alive Says Durham GM

Remember when baseball was the national pastime? Remember when football was considered brutal and barbaric and when basketball was a mere link between the football and baseball seasons?

Today the popularity of football and basketball has almost crowded baseball out of the sporting spotlight—so much so in fact that baseball is considered by many to be a dying sport, especially on the college level.

Roger Bottorff, general manager of the Durham Bulls professional baseball club, listed several factors which he believes have caused this shift of interest in a recent interview.

"The decrease in attendance has been caused chiefly by television," he said. "Lately the physical fitness programs of President Kennedy have been a factor. People are urged to participate rather than spectate."

Bottorff said that the "do-it-yourself" fad has been a reason for the slack in attendance.

"A guy works hard all day at the office, and when he comes home he spends his evenings building a boat or fixing something for his wife. He doesn't have time to go to a baseball game."

Bottorff also blamed bonuses for decreasing baseball attendance. He said that it was "foolish for team owners to give $100,000 to a single player when they have several minor league teams on the verge of bankruptcy.

"Bonuses are not fair, and the owners are finally realizing this fact."

He said that bonus players have taken a lot of the color out of baseball.

"Minor league owners of teams fielding bonus players have gone to the league officials before the season opened, demanding the strict enforcement of the rules. They don't want to take the chance of a bush-leaguer ruining a half a million dollar investment in a brawl.

"People used to come to games to see fights. They loved a scrap and it was a part of baseball, but after a scuffle a $100,000 player might not be worth $60."

Bottorff attempted to explain the disinterest in baseball on the college level.

"Most college students would rather play putt-putt than attend a baseball game. Baseball doesn't land much excitement for them. They are more interested in college entertainment and girls.

"Generally, a college town is considered a poor town for a minor league baseball club. We get very little support from Duke or Carolina."

Bottorff doesn't believe that the recent decline of attendance will spell the doom of baseball.

"Baseball is a major sport," he said. "It will never be out."

He said that there is a "definite future in professional baseball" for those who had the talent.

"I know of no other business in existance that will pay employees the amount baseball does. There is no reason why the average kid with baseball ability can't be successful in baseball. There is, however, a tremendous step between college and professional baseball."

Packers May Make More Big Trades

GREEN BAY, Wis. (UPI) They may not be through yet.

Coach Vince Lombardi, who shocked Green Bay football fans by sending 11-year veteran Packer Jim Ringo to the Philadelphia Eagles Tuesday, admitted "it isn't inconceivable" his team would be making more trades to strengthen what he felt was a sagging defense in 1963.

"The defense just had to have help," Lombardi said in explaining the trade of Ringo and fullback Earl Gros to the Eagles for Philadelphia's No. 1 draft choice next December and linebacker Lee Roy Caffey.

"We fell down a little bit on defense last year and we had to help it. Caffey has great speed and he was good enough to play regular in his first year," Lombardi said.

The trade, however, left the Packers without an experienced professional center. Tackle Bob Skoronski played the position at Indiana and he has filled in for Ringo for brief periods.

Lombardi said the position was his—at least for the time being.

"We know he can play it regularly. He'll add a great deal of ronski at 250 pounds is a full size to our line," he said. Sko-40 pounds heavier than Ringo, generally considered to be the best center in professional football today.

One other possibility looms for the center spot. Wisconsin rookie Ken Bowman is highly regarded by Green Bay coaches and could become only the third rookie to crash a Packers starting lineup since Lombardi took over as coach in 1959.

As far as Skoronski is concerned, he admitted he was ready to play "wherever I can help the team."

"I love to play," Skoronski said. He has been sharing the starting left tackle job with Norm Masters for the past few years.

Editor's Notebook

By HUGH STEVENS

If analogies can be drawn successfully between Constitutional processes and hunting expeditions, the controversial student "poll" must be compared to a wounded bear and its opponents to boys armed with B-B guns. No matter how many times they hit it, it just seems to keep coming.

Tonight the final word will be said by the only body left in possession of a potentially dangerous weapon—the Constitutional Council. If the Council decides to pull the trigger, and it may, the bear will be a dead duck. Otherwise, after long and numerous days of waiting, wondering, wishing and worrying, the student body will have before it on Friday an opportunity to express its collective opinions on the vital matter of civil rights in Chapel Hill.

I do not pretend to be able to predict the outcome of tonight's Constitutional Council decision, but I can assure you that it will be the absolute final word on this amazingly confused situation. When the "referendum" originally came up, it was a sort of political football in possession of the University Party. They fumbled, and the ball went over to the Student Party side.

The SP's first pass was intercepted by a bi-partisan team and almost carried into the end zone before the Ways and Means committee called a penalty. The committee ruled that the ball would have to be put away for the season, so Dick Akers, a first-stringer for the bi-partisan team, painted the ball a new color, disguised its shape, and started a new game entirely. Now the last great referee, the Constitutional Council, will decide whether the game can continue.

Arthur Hays, a sort of player-coach for the SP team, will undoubtedly lead the fight against constitutionality.

Hays has said that it is the intent of the Student Constitution to require the Elections Board to conduct all campus-wide elections. He even has one of the authors of the Constitution, John Randall, to back him up. He says the proposed "poll" is just an attempt to side-step the Constitution, and is covered by the elections laws.

"A referendum is a referendum," Hays has remarked. Well, Arthur Hays is Arthur Hays is Arthur Hays too, and we fully expect him to see it through to the end.

The proponents of the issue have some points in their favor. All they will have to do, apparently, is to prove that a "poll" and a "referendum" are not the same thing. This may be harder than it ppers.

The primary difficulty seems to lie in the fact that the "poll" was ever called a "referendum" in the first place. I do not have at hand any legal basis for the decision, and indeed it should be left to the Council to decide, but it seems to me that the initial use of "referendum" in the first place was a slip-up.

Webster's New International tells me that "referendum" is commonly used to refer to the practice of submitting to the voters an issue upon which a legislative body has either taken action or intends to take action. Thus, a "referendum" is generally construed to have some effect upon the legislation itself.

Such does not appear to be the case this time. An expression of campus opinion on the civil rights issue would not, could not, and should not change anything. The legislature took no legal action on the issue—it only expressed the belief that the students should refrain from patronizing segregated stores, and ASKED them to do so. They could no more enforce their action than the student body could require them to change it, even by a vote.

So if the "poll" gets through the Constitutional Council, the students will be doing nothing more on Friday than expressing their personal opinions on the civil rights issue. It will not be a "referendum" on pending legislation, and it cannot make the legislature do anything more than the legislature could have made the students abide by the boycott.

Thus it seems we have our terms mixed up. What is now a poll should have been a poll all

NSA Donates 423 Books To Algiers

Some 423 books and medical journals were shipped to the University of Algiers by the UNC National Students Association Coordinating Committee this weekend.

The books were collected in a drive conducted at the end of last semester. They will go to help rebuild the library of the University of Algiers as a part of a nation-wide drive sponsored by N.S.A. The library of the University and the Faculty of Medicine were bombed by terrorists in 1960.

The U.N.C. delegation to the N.S.A. Congress in the summer of 1962 committed the University to furnish 100 books for the project.

The local committee in charge of the project was composed of Vance Barron, Cecilia Gajardo, Jubee Mullis and Carolyn Eubanks.

"We would like to express our appreciation to all students who donated books," a committee spokesman said yesterday. "We would especially like to thank Miss Porter Cowles of the U.N.C. Press and Miss Myrl Ebert of the Health Affairs Library for their invaluable aid."

The committee had to select the books to be sent very carefully, because of the high cost of shipping. The books that were rejected for various reasons are to be sold and the money used to defray the costs of the project.

Commissioner Is Involved In Fight

By GARY BLANCHARD

Two Carrboro men were arrested early yesterday afternoon after engaging in a brief but bloody fight in front of the University Service Plant office on E. Franklin Street in downtown Chapel Hill.

One of the men, Hughes Lloyd, 46, is a Carrboro Town Commissioner and assistant foreman for the University Service Plant.

The other man is David Thompson, 32, Negro, who had just quit his job as an unskilled laborer for the University Service Plant.

Both were treated for cuts and bruises at Memorial Hospital and released.

Police said witnesses' versions of the incident differed and further investigation would be conducted. Both men are free under $100 bond apiece.

Grey Culbreth, superintendent of the University Service Plant, said his office was also checking into the incident.

Neither Lloyd nor Thompson could be reached for possible comment.

Culbreth said Lloyd had just brought Thompson to the office and given notice that Thompson had quit when given an assignment he refused to accept.

Lloyd got into his truck and started out of the Service Plant lot, Sgt. W. F. Hester said, when Thompson either pulled Lloyd from the truck, or Lloyd got out by himself, and the two began fighting.

Hester said a round piece of wood about the size of a police nightstick was involved in the incident. Both men apparently hit each other with it, Hester said, bloodying each other's head and face.

GMAB Names New Committee Chairmanships

The Graham Memorial Board of Directors announced yesterday that Don Chaplin has been selected as chairman of the 1964-65 Activities Board. Camilla Walters will serve as Board secretary.

Chairman of the various committees are Bill Campbell, publicity; Fred Kelso, films; Bill Slebos, social; John Quintus, music; Nancy Ramsey, drama; Deane Brunson, tournaments; and Bill Schmidt, current affairs.

Members for the committees will be chosen by interview later this year or early next fall, except for the film committee. Interviews for this will be held from 1:00 to 5:00 p.m. today or by appointment. Sign up at the GM Information Desk.

Karen Parker Named New UNC Journalist Editor

Karen L. Parker of Winston-Salem, rising senior in the School of Journalism, has been named editor of the "UNC Journalist" by the UNC Journalist's Publishing Board.

The Journalist is an experimental newspaper published six times a year by the School of Journalism. It consists of the best class assignments of journalism students.

The editorship, considered one of the top honors of the school, is awarded annually on the basis of scholarship, character and experience in journalism. The paper is now in its third year of publication. Previous editors were Charles D. Mooney of Statesville and Mrs. Cynthia Leonard Bishop of Ramseur.

The 20-year-old Miss Parker is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. D Parker of Winston-Salem. She transferred to UNC last fall from UNC at Greensboro. Last summer she was one of ten participants in the Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel's Summer Intern Program.

LBJ, Luxon Meet In DC

WASHINGTON (UPI)—American newsmen are the censors of the government and the guardians of democracy, President Johnson said Monday.

Johnson confessed that he may get a little annoyed at times by the free advice on how to run the government that he gets from the press.

But he told a small group of top college journalists that "as long as the press is free. . . democracy will be free."

Johnson made the statements in presenting medallions and words of encouragement to winners of the annual intercollegiate journalism awards program sponsored by the William Randolph Hearst Foundation.

Hal David Hall, 20, a junior at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville, won first prize in the student competition. He was awarded the foundation's gold medallion.

A silver medallion went to second place winner Jean Heller, a junior at Ohio State University.

The President also presented a gold medallion to Dean Neil Luxon of the University of North Carolina Journalism Department for placing first among 47 accredited journalism schools in the nation.

"I was a college editor once," Johnson said, "But as you can see, I didn't do as well as you have done, so I went into politics."

The Hearst Foundation has made awards totaling $41,000 this year in the fourth year of the program of student scholarships and merit grants.

Pharmacy School Gives Awards; Boyles Gets 3

Vestal Irving Boyles Jr. of Pilot Mountain was a triple-award winner in the 1964 graduating class. He received the Buxton Williams Hunter Medal for excelling in campus citizenship and scholrship, the Merck Award for noteworthy achievement in pharmacy and the Rexall Award for high achievement in pharmacy administration courses.

Council Will Study Student Poll Validity

Maupin And Crampton Behind Poll

'It's Hard Work' They Both Declare

Putting together a campus-wide election in less than a week is quite a job, especially when the committee in charge of running it it has only two men.

Armistead Maupin and Clark Crampton, old hands at such polls, are hard at work putting together Carolina's first campus-wide poll since spring of 1961, when the Student Body voted that they felt local theaters should be integrated.

And now it is the student boycott. Residence Hall presidents and other campus leaders have been contacted, and Friday, barring an adverse decision by the Constitutional Court, the ballot boxes will be spread over the campus.

"This is one of the biggest jobs in the world," Crampton said yesterday. "Armistead and I both both have quizzes this week, and I've averaged about four hours of sleep a night in the last week.

"I'll be glad when it's over."

The poll was brought about through action by a group of legislators who said a campus-wide referendum must be held this spring. It encountered heavy opposition from legislator Arthur Hays, who termed the poll "blatantly unconstitutional."

But in the meantime the work goes on, and Maupin and Crampton "are finally ahead of schedule.

"If we get the full cooperation of the Residence Hall presidents, the vote should run smoothly", Maupin said.

Commentator To Speak Here Sunday

Richard Harkness, NBC Washington news commentator, will speak Sunday night at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall as a guest of the Carolina Forum and the Press Club.

A newsman for over 30 years, Harkness is considered one of the nation's leading news commentators.

A graduate of the University of Kansas, Harkness worked for United Press International for 15 years before joining NBC in 1943.

He broadcasts "NBC News on the Hour" and is a regular participant in network news special events programs.

Harkness will be the guest speaker at a Press Club banquet Saturday night, and there will be a reception for him Sunday night following his speech for the Forum.

Yackety-Yack, Don't Talk Back

GET YACKS TOMORROW

It's Hot Off The Press—A Review

By KERRY SIPE

THE YACKETY YACK, by Charles Chinnis & John Howe, Carolina House, 1964, 463 pages, price: Free.

Nostalgic nightmare photographs of the Wilson Library and nostalgic heart-throbbing memory stimulating from the love and lore of Thomas Wolfe make Carolina's 1964 addition to the literary world a book to cry about.

The 1964 Yackety Yack, in the finest tradition of Baby Sally's Trip to the Farm, and Barbar the Elephant, is a book of pictures.

Let it not be said that prolific use of photographic illustrations however was used in lieu of hard-biting meaty prose. Indeed not.

Phrases such as "Charming and unforgettable elements go to make up that Being we call Alma Mater," make the '64 Yack a book to be read as well as colored.

In their product, the editors have shown a journalistic courage equal to the finest publishers of our time.

Unconfined by the limits of the laws of Libel and good taste, the Yack has used its '64 edition to bring out the truth in every side of Carolina Life, a task hereforto unattempted by any publication anywhere.

Who else, in this day and age of tainted truth and management of the news, would dare display every prominant institution in this community in the uncensored light of verity?

rage to pictorially illustrate the University administration with a two page picture of IBM model J86370MP and a huge stack of hole-infested punch cards?

What kind of nerve does it take to publish 10,000 copies of a book showing two fun-loving Carolina Men cussing out a cop at a football game?

Who is responsible for the character revealing photograph of the Pabst Blue Ribbon can in the Saunders Hall mailbox or of the Playtex Living Unmentionable hanging on the fire escape?

Strokes of genius all!

The purpose of the publication is to portray that inimitable personality that is the heart of Chapel Hill. Moving illustrations of students kicking parking meters to retrieve lost nickles, or of Campus Cop Chief Beaumont chewing on the sticky end of a ten-cent cigar, or of Football Great Jim Hickey spitting on the hot Carolina gridiron are a part of this personality recreation.

The 1964 Yack is a chronicle of our times. In the light of corrupt journalism and publications payola, the book features a full page color photograph of a number of happy beer-drinkers gathered in the main room of the Ramshead Rathskeller. We skeptically wonder if the Tempo Room refused to give free pretzels.

The Campus Confectionary grabs her armful of free advertising in a photograph of several leery-eyed youngsters ogling at the bunnies in the library section of the store.

The inevitable strains of "We Shall Overcome" sift their way through the color-blind University publication in a group of portrate of a number of CR buffs on page 31. Race demonstrations were as much a part of Carolina '64 as Jubilee Weekend.

And speaking of Jubilee, the indescribably clever Yack editors have introduced a little red bird and a little back bee as the hosts to four exciting pages based on the infamous weekend. A flourish of bare-feet and beer cans are arranged around every page to give the feature a homey touch.

Everyone from John F. to Julie —from German's to the Gator Bowl has his say somewhere among the 463 pages.

Copies of the one volume archive will be sold beginning tomorrow and continuing through Saturday at the back window of Graham Memorial for the price of no dollars and no sense. Only students with ID cards and citizenship papers will be eligible to receive copies.

Students who do not receive their copies of the Yack during the regular distribution periods can get them either from the Yack office, or from the bookshelves in Lenoir Hall if no one is looking.

The book is a must for everyone at all interested in North Carolina Sociology or Medaeval folklore. It is highly recommended for children of all ages.

JFK Tribute

Tickets to the John F. Kennedy Tribute are now on sale to students at the YMCA office, announced Subir Roy, chairman of sales-at-large to UNC students.

Tickets are $10 each and will admit one person to the Tribute service in Kenan Stadium at 3 p.m., Sunday, May 17.

Dr. Billy Graham will deliver an address at the service. Mrs. John Kennedy will receive a list of all persons who bought tickets as well as a full-color film of the ceremony for deposit in the JFK Memorial Library to be built with these funds at Harvard University.

All dormitories, fraternities, and sororities are trying to buy one or more tickets for the Tribute. Ray Farris, campus chairman for the Kennedy Tribute, reports sales are going well.

Battle Seen As Opposition Lines Up

Constitutional Council Will Rule

By HUGH STEVENS

The Constitutional Council will meet tonight at 7 p.m. to decide on the validity of the proposed "Student Poll."

The Council, composed of three members of the Men's Council and three Women's Council representatives, will hear arguments from both sides in a final attempt to settle the question of a spring vote on the racial question.

The "poll" resolution was passed last Thursday night in a surprise moved by Student Legislature. Earlier, a "referendum" had been proposed on the issue, but a lack of time in which to appoint the new Elections Board and conduct the vote appeared to stop the plan.

Legislature attempted to override the Student Constitution by changing the "referendum" to a "poll" and conducting it through the Communications Committee.

Campus poll-taking is one of the standard duties of that committee, currently chaired by Armistead Maupin and Clark Crampton.

Arthur Hays, SP legislator and former Elections Board Chairman (1962-63), is expected to lead the drive to have the "poll" declared unconstitutional.

In a statement which appeared in the DTH on Saturday, Hays said the move was "so blatantly unconstitutional as to force some of its supporters to shrug off the constitutional question as a mere technicality."

The Student Constitution requires all "referendums" to be conducted through the Elections Board, but makes no mention of the word "poll."

Hays argued, "a referendum is still a referendum no matter what else it is called."

The argument in favor of the poll will probably be led by Dick Akers and Mal King, two of the resolution's six sponsors.

Proponents of the measure are expected to base their arguments on the definitions of "referendum" and "poll."

"This vote is nothing more than a poll to sample campus opinion, and it has never been more than that," said Don Carson, Speaker of the Legislature. 'The choice of the word 'referendum' in the initial references to this measure was an unfortunate one."

"We are certain," Carson continued, "that every precaution is being taken by the Communications Committe to insure that this poll will be as well-conducted as possible."

Pete Wales, Men's Council chairman and head of the Constitutional Council, said yesterday the members of the council had not been chosen. They will be elected in a special meeting today. The body has the power to rule on all disputes concerning the application of the Student Constitution.

If the measure passes the council, the poll will be submitted to the students on Friday. Standard election procedures will be used wherever possible, except that the Communications Committee will serve as the administering agency rather than the Elections Board.

Just One More To Go For UNC

We did not hold high hopes for our baseball team when it ventured into the wilds of South Carolina this past weekend, but they made us eat our words. They trimmed USC, 2-1, then got really mad at Clemson and took them by 12-5.

And now they stand 13-0 in conference play, having wrapped up the ACC title earlier than anyone ever has in the conference's history. The team has everything. The pitching is superb, the batting is above average and the fielding, a big question mark this year, is tight as a glove.

The final conference game of the season is Wednesday, when the Tar Heels play host to the hapless Blue Devils. The Durham nine has only managed three victories in 18 games, and their conference record is exactly the opposite of UNC's—0-13.

But, as we all know, records don't mean much when Duke and Carolina meet. Earlier in the season, when we had a 7-0 conference record and Duke an 0-7, the two went 14 innings before the Tar Heels pulled it out.

And Duke will be ready for us again. No one likes to finish in the cellar (which is where Duke is certain to place), and no team likes to go through a conference season without winning a single game.

So, what's the pitch? Well, the Wednesday game is the final home tilt for Coach Walter Rabb's charges, and someone told us the record crowd at Emerson Stadium was only about 2,000. Looking at those stands, we are sure they can hold far more than that, and we would like to see at least 4,000 Carolina fans at the game.

It could be done. The game will be great, and there's nothing better than watching UNC smash Duke. See you there?

The Indiana Primary: Lessons For All

The Charlotte Observer

Alabama Gov. George Wallace had good reason for exuberance over his Indiana vote total. But he engaged in bald overstatement when he vowed it was a victory so significant that "We are going to decide who is going to be the next president of the United States."

Wallace proved again in Indiana that color-line voting is not confined to the South at least not for 25 to 35 per cent of the voters in Wisconsin and Indiana. But he fell slightly short of his Wisconsin percentage in the Hoosier State election. He did not do quite as well as he expected in a state where there were good reasons for expecting strong support.

Indiana has a long tradition of political conservatism. The Ku Klux Klan was a power there only 40 years ago. And Democratic Gov. Matthew E. Welsh, "stand-in" for President Johnson in the primary, is not the most popular governor Indiana has ever had.

According to a Lou Harris poll before the election, the President is popular in Indiana and is considered by a great many Hoosiers to be a prudent and economical man. Had Johnson's name appeared on the ballot, Harris said, Wallace's percentage would have been slashed badly.

Welsh, on the other hand, has come under heavy criticism because of a tax increase and his spending policies. Wallace benefited from this protest vote and a substantial bloc of Republican cross-over votes, as in Wisconsin.

Though he assiduously avoided talking about civil rights and Negroes and lectured Indianans on states' rights instead, Wallace's main purpose in entering the primary was to generate anti-civil rights pressure and possibly pick up a few delegates to the national convention in order to "shake up" the top leadership of the Democratic Party.

His vote total may, on top of his showing in Wisconsin, have some effect on members of the Senate in considering amendments to the civil rights bill, and certainly a number of clarifying and safeguarding amendments are needed. Also, he ran so well in two or three industrial districts with high percentages of Negro population that the Democrats had to adopt an at-large plan for convention delegates. His claims of a personal triumph can't, therefore, be entirely discounted.

But there is in all of this, as in Wisconsin, a somber note. It underscores again the national nature of the racial problem. And despite Wallace's soft-sell techniques, his mere presence in a state primary tends to pit one race against the other and feeds the forces of prejudice.

Any trend that widens the racial gap—at a time the country is trying to bridge it through law and voluntary action—is not healthy. It increases the chances that leadership and influence in racial matters will pass into the hands of Americans less responsible than those earnestly trying to end the dark night of discontent.

Bug In The Rug

The growing invasion of privacy by both private and public agencies utilizing electronic gimmicks such as the questionable lie-detector and the insidious listening devices is a threat to America's privacy.

The warning that the country is fast following the path of George Orwell's "1984" came on the same day that the U.S. Supreme Court reversed the conviction of a Norfolk woman whose premises had been "bugged" by police.

The court held that such eavesdropping violated the constitutional ban against unreasonable search and seizure.

This ruling should serve as a warning to both business and government that such Orwellian tactics will not be tolerated. And if laws are needed to call a halt to the spreading evil then Congress should see that they are enacted.

—Editor's Notebook—

along.

Tonight the Constitutional Council will decide whether a "poll" that is conducted like a "referendum" is legal. The decision is theirs. And whatever they decide, I can't help thinking that a poll is a poll is a poll. If someone had realized this and said something, there would have been no need to send the issue to the legislature in the first place—it could have simply been conducted through the Communications Committee all along.

And we wouldn't be in the mess we're in today.

Darst Murphey Strikes Back

By DARST MURPHEY

A very well - planned and righteously indignant rebuttal of Mr. Peter Range's recent sidelines comments on the mental and social failings of the Carolina coed has just fallen by the wayside. For I do see his point. He believes, or seems to, that if the women students' social rules are changed or done away with, we can get rid of the social immaturity of the female members of the student body.

But I think that, in the midst of his rather haphazard generalizations and pat solutions, Mr. Range has made a most significant and unfortunate error. He presupposes that the social immaturity of an individual can be separated from his academic or intellectual immaturity. But where the dividing line might be, he does not say. He merely assumes that clearing up the blocks to social maturation will lead to the single state, maturity, without a need for intellectual maturation also.

I say you can't so divide an individual as to separate his social maturity or lack of it from his intellectual maturity. The two are closely bound in each and every individual. And I would assert that the true reflection of a person's over-all level of maturity would be in the intellectual rather than the social vein. The behavior Mr. Range so openly deplores as "typically typical" of the Carolina coed is often merely a surface social-politeness, inherited from our American social system. And neither conformity thereto nor rebellion against is necessarily an adequate and true measure of maturity.

Instead, probably the most accurate reflection of a student's level of maturity would be his attitudes towards the academic and cultural sides of the university community. Here immaturity is grossly reflected in student apathy, lack of intellectual curiosity (eg., studying only for a degree or only for grades), and a resultant wasting of a four-year opportunity for personal growth and exploration. Social immaturity, I would claim, is merely a reflection of this intellectual immaturity.

And it is to this problem of intellectual immaturity that I think Mr. Range and other concerned students should direct themselves if they wish to strive for an over-all uplifting of the level of maturity here on this campus or on any other campus in America.

I do not pretend to offer an explanation as to why we are beset by intellectual immaturity and, thus, apathy. Nor do I pretend to offer a solution, as Mr. Range has so neatly done for the problems of social immaturity. Rather I have sought only to point out another quite important facet of the basic problem of the immature student which Mr. Range has posed. It is the duty of the university community to face head-on all aspects of what we, as students, feel is a very serious problem and a threat to the ideals we hold dear for a university education.

On a second and quite different tack, I wish to counter Mr. Range's implications that immaturity is only a problem among female students.

He speaks of the silly do-nothings-think-nothings that are the sum total of Carolina coeds. But surely such a perceptive and bright person as himself can not be wholly serious. If he does honestly feel that immaturity and lack of intellectual awareness are rampant among females, I would like to hear what he has to say about the male portion of the student body also. On the whole, women's grades are higher, and many females participate in honors programs. Using my own observations as a basis, I feel a higher percentage of female students than male attend cultural events too. If, as Mr. Range says, the immaturity of women as a whole is so dire because of their repressive social rules, why is it that male students without rules show no more visible signs of intellectual awareness or of social maturity.

I do not wish to engage Mr. Range in debate on this topic, for it is really irrelevant to the basic problem he posed. It is unfortunate, however, that he himself dulled the effectiveness of his articles by making women students the scapegoats in his attack on immaturity.

"Beagles, Hell — How About Us Reporters?"

The Frog Speaks

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Dick Akers, Clark Crampton and Armistead Maupin are probably the busiest men on campus these days, but they truely love their work.

The boycott referendum is at last going to the students, and the hearts of confident conservaties are fluttering.

Armistead claims the referendum's only purpose is to find out what the students feel about the boycott, and Dick answers those who say the referendum is purposeless with, "it's no more purposeless than those people lying down in the streets."

Well, whatever their purpose, Dick's dirty, grubby beatniks are out of circulation now, ever since Judge Mallard found the ultimate solution to the demonstration problem. We don't have to worry about them any more, nor does Dick.

What good the referendum will do as an indication of student opinion is questionable, regardless of its outcome.

The academic year is almost over, and the legislative agenda only contains a few pork barrel bills to take care of. The referendum will only be good for publicity, if it gets any.

The whole integration problem will be decided to a large extent in Washington by the end of June, and here on campus the incoming freshmen will not know of the violent battles and opinions of the Class of '64.

John Randall, an old SP supporter, denounced Clark and Armistead bitterly. "You're trying so hard to spit in Mike Lawler's eye," he charged.

John is very resentful of the whole thing, mainly because he recognizes the fact that Lawler and the old Legislature merely urged the students to follow their leaders' example.

The boycott resolution was not a pushy thing, Randall doesn't like the idea of Crampton, their way to try and condemn a Maupin and Akers going out of former administration for expressing their opinion in this area.

Well, Clark, Armistead and Dick are going through anyway. They think the students ought to be able to do the same thing as the Legislature, even if the old administration is out of office.

Final exams or not, the persistant three are hard at work to realize their dream, and after a year of reversals, this may be their finest hour.

Randall can only curse and go on, for even though vengence is only the Lord's these three have no intention of desisting until their object is won.

Candidates' Headquarters: Glad Hands And Hot Coffee

By BILL STROUPE

Few of us get the chance to meet the gubernatorial candidates individually. But I found out recently that it's easy to do the next best thing—visit their headquarters.

If you enter Raleigh the way I did, your first stop is at the Carolina Hotel. One candidate has several offices there, and you naturally pick the wrong one on the first try.

As you get off the elevator at the fourth floor, you're lost but try not to show it. "Follow the typewriters," the woman operating he elevator tells you.

The clicking leads you around a corner, where you see several women cutting up as though they are Carolina coeds. One of them tells you the campaign manager will see you in a minute. The door opens and you walk in.

The man with blue eyes and blond hair meets you with a smile and a firm handshake. He says a few things you wanted to know, but nothing earthshaking. You thank him for the information, he thanks you for dropping by, and you're on your way to the Sir Walter Hotel.

The two other major candidates both have their headquarters there, so you might as well flip a coin to see which one to visit.

As you enter the room, you find the people a little older, a little more somber. The receptionist, however, has that same ready smile. As you're talking with her, though, you begin to wonder if it's frozen in place.

You finally get down to a specific question. "Where does your candidate get his campaign funds?"

She says something about private contributions and then the conversation shifts to where one of the other candidates gets his money.

Another man walks in, hears that you are from UNC, and asks, "How are you getting along with the Communists over there?" You laugh nervously, but he remains tight-lipped all the time that you see him.

Meanwhile, the receptionist offers you a cup of coffee. Since you're a coffee drinker from way back, you can't say no. She hands you an empty cup.

You start to hand it back when she says, "All we have is instant." But it just isn't cricket to recant on a coffee invitation when there are no grounds for complaint.

You choke on your coffee as she asks, "And who are you going to vote for?"

"This is good coffee," you fib, and get up to leave. She persists in her question, so you console her with the fact that both of your parents are going to vote for her candidate.

Apparently no harm has been done, since everyone is smiling as you leave.

On your next stop, you find the campaign manager out. You talk with the man who is in—the publicity director.

He admits he can't answer your questions, so you talk about UNC, where he graduated. "Yes, I remember the old journalism school," he says. "I remember taking a radio continuity course under Joe Morrison."

Joe? Is this the same man you're thinking of?

"Of course, I understand old Joe has gone big time now. He has his doctor's degree and all that." Yep, same man. He also mentions Stuart Sechriest. But, aside from these two men, the journalism school is not as it used to be.

He tells you how the school used to be more informal, and you wonder if you were born 20 years too late. But when he notes there are now more girls in the journalism school, you decide 1943 was a nice year in which to be born.

But, by this time, it's 5:30. He has to leave, and you have to get back to Chapel Hill. As you shake hands again, you tell yourself that this man would win if people voted for campaign workers instead of candidates.

As you leave Raleigh, you wonder which group of workers will see their efforts partially rewarded on May 30, and which group will win all the marbles on November 3.

And it seems a shame that the people in two of the rooms you visited will ultimately see their work go for naught.

By Gary Blanchard

We were gazing into our crystal ball the other day and lo and behold, the darned thing actually began to work.

We saw a bunch of funnynomena, as Chub Seawell ("Call your next case.") might say, which concerned a variety of people.

The first face to roll out of the fog was that of a middle-aged man who's president of a small, Mid-Western college. Just barely discernible in the clouds over his head was the sign, "New Chancellor of UNC." The whole thing looked like a newspaper clipping from state newspapers later this month.

As per instructions, we rolled the crystal ball three times to the right and three to the left (nonpartisan, you know) and here came the faces of Richardson Preyer and I. Beverly Lake, plop in the middle of the election returns from the Democratic primary for Governor the end of this month.

It took a few more wiggles to make one of the faces go away. The one that was left was sitting in a leather chair behind the Governor's desk. It was late November. The face belonged to Richardson Preyer.

"It was close," he was saying to someone we couldn't quite make out. "I guess the people got a little tired of Lake's white horse and Moore's phony grin."

Rolling the glass again, we watched as the somber face of Robert Kennedy came into view. He was taking the oath of office as President Johnson's Secretary of State.

At 38, we thought?

Then we recalled RFK's tremendous success in his tours abroad a few years earlier for his late brother, the President. We remembered what a tough hide he had when the going got rough, his tremendous organizational ability, and his unceasing fight for Negro civil rights.

Sure, we realized. He's a natural for the job. Johnson needs a man with Kennedy's stature and name to handle foreign affairs, which is where Johnson is weakest. And it didn't hurt Johnson's re-election one bit having Kennedy in the cabinet. Besides, Dean Rusk had wanted to step down.

The fog rolled back in, but a few tips of the ball later and it rolled back out. There was Johnson's vice-president: Hubert Humphrey. He was waving his finger and giving the Republicans hell.

Who was Humphrey blasting? His Republican opponents, of course: Lodge and Scranton (or was it Hatfield?).

Hmmm, we thought, settling back. These crystal balls aren't very scientific, but they sure are interesting.

WUNC Music Director Nixes KIX

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

An excellent description of the state of radio in this area appeared last Sunday in the article by Henry McInnis. The blame for the lack of civilized music on the local airways seemed to be placed squarely on the stations themselves. I am not sure, though, that this is fair. It has always been my observation that the radio and television media are a reflection of the cultural state of the people they serve. Having spent three years in Chapel Hill and thus becoming acquainted with the area and, through the representatives here on campus, the state of North Carolina, I am afraid that I can only conclude that things aren't too good down here. By far the majority of University (undergraduate) students who listen to radio choose "that station in Raleigh." That's all you hear when you pass by the dorms, and when your path takes you by the fraternity area, its the same thing coming from juke boxes, and much louder.

However, I haven't given up hope. Two other stations in Raleigh, on their FM service only, donate brief fractions of their broadcast day to classical music. A letter from Mr. Sam Blate in May 6th's TAR HEEL brings up the question of WUNC Radio in the picture. One of the primary purposes of this University owned, student operated station is to provide quality broadcast material, (meaning music mostly) to listeners however many or few, in the State who care for it. Unfortunately, as Mr. Blate states, WUNC, being an educational station, is restricted to the FM band. This means that the majority of students, as he stated, are unable to enjoy the station's offerings, as FM radios are not as common an animal as AM are.

However, it is also typical of most other college educational radio stations to provide the students with its offerings via a means known as "carrier current", whereby the signal is put through the telephone lines to small AM transmitters in the basements of selected buildings. For some reason this has never been seriously attempted here at UNC. There has been a lot of talk, most of it by studnt politicians, and one under-financed attempt in 1961-62 which managed to reach a few dorms—oh, excuse me, residence halls—only to fall apart because of inadequate equipment. When either the Student Government or the University proper takes a decided step to bring the University's station to the students, it will go a long way towards raising listening standards by its mere existence on the popular airways.

This statement will have even greater meaning next year, as WUNC, recognizing that the times it broadcast good music are roughly the same as those of the other FM stations, is trying to expand its time on the air by means of special programs. The Beethoven, Bach, and Mozart "Spectaculars" this year were a start in that direction. The response to these programs are very encouraging, and we will try to offer something similar on a regular basis next year. I am sure that we would have had many more students who owned FM tuners as listeners if your paper had not been so loath to make notice of them.

Playmakers Have Long Summer

Do Carolina Playmakers student actors and technicians at UNC have a chance to be performing artists during the summer months when the Playmakers take a breather?

"Yes," says Harry Davis, UNC professor and chairman of the Department of Dramatic Art and director of the Carolina Playmakers. As evidence of the summer-time dramatic activity of his students, Davis cites the many drama productions which run throughout the summer here in the state and call upon the talent-in1training of UNC students who serve as actors, actresses, singers, dancers, stage managers and scene designers, and members of various technical crews.

The outdoor dramas produced each summer in the state draw a large majority of UNC's Playmakers, while other summer stock companies vie for the talents of many more students.

Not only does North Carolina register as a summer-time repository for thespian talent, but groups in other states also use Playmakers participants, both current and veterans.

One of the biggest outdoor drama shows produced here in the state each summer is "Unto These Hills," which plays to packed audiences at Cherokee. Davis is the director of this drama and in this production he uses not only student Carolina Playmakers but veteran Playmaker participants of many years standing.

Larry Randolph of Fayetteville, Ark., James Slaughter of Kannapolis, and Mrs. Rae Freeman of Dunn, all student playmakers, will be working with the Cherokee production this summer.

Chapel Hill playwright Paul Green's outdoor drama "The Lost Colony," produced at Manteo, will have five Carolina Playmaker students working with it this summer: Alice Stroup of Kannapolis; Randolph Umberger of Burlington; Sarah Bleick of Pebble Beach, Calif.; Tom Hull of Durham and Alex Nislick of South Orange, N.J.

The first season of the newly formed Triangle Professional Theatre in Durham will draw on the talents of several Carolina Playmaker students during its summer performances. Buck Roberts, Durham native, will be the producer of the theatre, and one of his directors will be James Gillikin of Chapel Hill.

Acting in productions and assisting in the technical end of production will be John Whitty of New Bern, who will be publicity director; Jeannean Babcock of Independence, Kan., who will work with lighting; Ben Jones of Wilmington and Rob Johnston of Chapel Hill, who will be stage managers; Faith Anne Grover of Philadelphia, Pa., costumer; Colin Ferguson of Chapel Hill, to serve as an assistant technical director; and as actors and actress — Betty Cordell of Dublin, Ga.; Roberts Batson of Manzanillo, Dominican Republic; Anne Peacock of Charlotte; Dan Clayton of Houston, Tex.

Eight Playmaker students will be participating in the East Carolina College Summer Theatre at Greenville. They are Harry Callahan of Livingston, N. J.; Michael Carrington of North Wilkesboro; Fred Lubs of Chapel Hill; Larry Warner of Rocky Mount; Bill Allsbrook of Roanoke Rapids; Ray Bittner of Asheboro; Graham Pollock of Gatesville; and Anne West of Wilmington.

Chris Parsons of Catonsville, Md., will be working with the Baltimore Children's Theatre in Baltimore, Md. during the summer.

Fans! Pay Tribute To Champions, Emerson

Here's your chance to pay tribute to a great ball team and a grand old stadium.

Tomorrow's game with the hated Duke Blue Devils is the only game standing between the Tar Heels and a perfect season. The game will also be the last to be played in Emerson Stadium (if plans for the new Student Union and baseball field are carried out).

So students here's your chance to take an afternoon off from your studying (and I'm sure all of you are) before exams. Come on out and soak up the rays while watching the best baseball team that ever played in the ACC. All students with three o'clock classes have the DTH's permission to cut them (of course it might be best to check with your instructor first).

The faculty is invited to take time off from making out the exams to attend the game. The townspeople and merchants are welcome if they can take time off from counting their money.

This is a great chance to show the team how much we appreciate a great team. Don't miss this chance to show your appreciation—Be at the game tomorrow!

Beattie Leonard or Spence Willard will probably be on the mound for the Tar Heels but Bill Haywood will once again be awaiting the call from Walter Rabb if he is needed.

The two victories over South Carolina and Clemson ran the Tar Heels' ACC record to 13-0. The performances of the two Willards and Tom Wright further brightened the playoff picture for Rabb.

Spence Willard gave the pitching staff another lift. The big righthander from Kernersville had been bothered with arm trouble all season but he gave no trace of the injury in the South Carolina game. He went seven innings and gave up only three hits while striking out ten.

"All season my arm has bothered me and I've been afraid to really throw the ball" revealed Spence. "But warming up against South Carolina I got loose real quick and felt great. All my pitches were moving better than they have all year and my control was good. South Carolina was my best game of the year."

Last year Spence was Rabb's main starter as he posted a 6-1 mark. This season however, after getting four decisions in the first six games (two wins, two losses), Spence has not been impressive in four appearances before the South Carolina game.

With Gastonia only two weeks away, and the double elimination tournament being a stress on any pitching staff, Spence's comeback could be the answer to any pitching problems Rabb might encounter.

The return of co-captain Wright added an even wider smile to Rabb's face. Tom was the leading hitter on the team last year with a .377 average, but he couldn't get started this year, and had been sidelined for six weeks with a bad knee. Tom played in both games in South Carolina and went three for six to boost his average to .263.

Ken Willard blasted two home runs, and a double, and drove in five runs during the two-game trip. His five RBI's gives him a total of 28 and makes him second only to Ben Marsella of Clemson who has 29.

Mike Horvat Signs Grant

Michael Anthony (Mike) Horvat, a 225-pound lineman from Berwick, Pa., has signed a grant-in-aid and will enter the University of North Carolina next fall.

The 6-2 Horvat was a highly publicized prepster at Berwick High School and was sought after by a number of schools. He becomes the fourth tackle and 23rd gridder listed for next fall's freshman roster.

"We are pleased to have Horvat in the fold," said Coach Jim Hickey of Carolina. "He is strong, mobile and has experience at a number of positions." Horvat played three positions—tackle, guard and center—at Berwick.

George Boutselis, who served as an assistant coach last season and is a former UNC quarterback, was present for the Horvat signing. Said Boutselis: "Mike has potential to become an outstanding college player."

The UNC frosh team will face a five-game schedule next year including games with Maryland, N. C. State, Wake Forest, Virginia and Duke. The latter contest will be a benefit played for the Shrine crippled children's fund.

Lacrosse Team Murders Poor Dook As Parker, Stanley Lead 14-0 Romp

By PETE GAMMONS

Lacrosse Coach Cony Steele is a new man this week.

This is mainly due to his team's crushing 14-0 win over Duke at Durham last Saturday, the only win of the year for the young team. After losing the first five games, being outscored by a 3-1 ratio, the UNC Stickmen exploded in what may have been somewhat of an omen of things to come.

Big Jeff Parker was the big hero of last Saturday's mismatch, scoring five goals and assisting on three others. Don Marks and Pete Williams each scored twice, while Bud Adams, Tom Thayer, Murrell Smith, Allie Tyler, and Stu Ellington each scored once.

Duke never really got untracked. They held off the Tar Heels fairly well for the first quarter with their zone defense, but Steele switched his offense to a 2-2-2 attack, which broke the Blue Devils up and resulted in six second period goals and a 9-0 halftime lead.

Substitutes played most of the second half, as three goals were scored in the third period and only two in the fourth. Steele even put All-American nominee goalie Harvey Stanley at attack for the last five minutes. Stanley surprised everyone but himself as he got two beautiful assists. As a goalie he played a fine game in the few short bursts of Duke attack but wasn't tested severely. Even the fact that we were constantly plagued with penalties couldn't light a fire under the Blue Devils.

The win brought UNC six more points toward the Carmichael Cup, which we have virtually clinched.

However, Steele is looking ahead to next year. The frosh, which defeated the varsity, may fill enough gaps to make the team a winning one next year. Jake Hubbard, Hal Minnis, and Sandy Reider are expected to give a pickup to the attack, especially Hubbard, who along with Parker may give UNC a strong scoring punch.

The defense, a spot that was riddled for half the season, improved greatly, and was strong for the last couple games. They will be joined by some promising frosh like Joe McGirt, John Ward, and George Venters, and with Stanley returning in the goal, teams like Maryland and Virginia may have a little more trouble scoring. Steele also has 23 midfielders returning, with which he plans to utilize by substituting four or five squads in quickly.

With only three players graduating, a fine Frosh club moving up, the improvement of a few older players, and current soph stars like Stanley and Parker, lacrosse may become a major Spring sport quicker than expected.

Why won't your wife let you buy this wagon?

"It looks like a bus."
"I wouldn't be caught dead in it."
Do these sound familiar? Your wife is not alone. It is hard to convince some women what sense the VW Station Wagon makes.
Its chunky shape, for instance, allows it to hold more than the biggest conventional wagon. (Yet it is a good four feet shorter, and a lot less exasperating to park.)
Your wife might like the easy way it loads. The wide side doors give her almost 16 sq. ft. for supermarket bags. Or an open baby carriage. Or an antique chest, standing up. Or delicate trees from the nursery. Or even an open playpen.
She can take eight or more Scouts, with cookout gear. She can give the family plenty of sun. (Why no other station wagon has a sun-roof remains a mystery.) She won't ever have to worry about the radiator boiling over. There's no radiator, no water. (The VW engine is air-cooled.)
And if she likes to see where she's going, the VW wagon has incredible visibility.
If these facts don't convince her, then you might as well give up gracefully. (But before you do, bring her in for a drive. And don't be surprised if she does let you buy one.)

LAWLER LOOKS BACK

Editor's Note: The following article by DTH Student Government reporter John Greenbacker is the first in a series of three on former Student Body President Mike Lawler's observations on the University and the people, both individuals and groups, who make it what it is.

By JOHN GREENBACKER

"The President must clearly lead and represent the students, and next year, the emphasis must be on leading, or else the students will not be represented."

The quote appeared in big black letters on the side of the election poster, and to the left was the smiling face of Mike Lawler.

The poster is old now, but it forms a vital part of the history, memories and life of the former Student Body president and Student Government.

Whether over iced coffee or cognac, casual or serious, Mike can speak with more authority on the past year and the old administration than any single person in Student Government. Recently, in the comfort of his small living room, he did, and his reflections were varied.

Men's Residence Halls

"Basically, we couldn't make Stacy Hall into a Statler Hilton, but we were able to persuade the Administration to make some improvements.

"We tried to gear our program for the individual student. If our pilot projects are successful, the University will give us more funds to carry out environmental changes.

"In trying to handle the social problem, we attempted to get the Consolidated University Student Council to work in setting up coed receptions where there would be more likelihood of meeting people on an equal level. We're still trying.

"The MRC is still working on this, and eventually it hopes to be able to set up a system where girls won't be brought over here and then dumped somewhere on campus. If they can solve the social problems, the rest will be easy."

Fraternities

"Several changes were made in the IFC Court and its procedures. I would like to see a more efficient system of lower courts established.

"We gave particular attention to the bull pledge ruling, and a plan to alleviate the parking problem in Big Frat Court by using the Ackland lot worked well on a trial basis. I hope it will be continued.

"Fraternities on campus today aren't prospering, and I think much of their problem lies in satisfied mediocrity. They have a great leadership and academic potential which they aren't living up to.

"The fraternities should increase their discipline and re-evaluate their ideals. The University should dictate policy to them, but they must learn to complement the over-all goals of the University."

Sororities

"Sororities are my biggest gripe. They are the most qualified element in the University. In terms of academics they fill this potential, but in terms of its cultural and true intellectual aspects they fall way short.

"Some people describe the sorority-fraternity system as a mutual satisfaction society, not an admiration society, and unfortunately this is largely true.

"Sororities have produced a few outstanding individuals, but this is far from what they could produce."

Student Government

"The real tradition of student responsibility began to be lost about six years ago, and I tried to revive this responsibility during my year in office.

"The late 1950's saw the advent of the "Participative" philosophy. It was characterized by a lack of ideology and perspective, and soon Student Government existed to justify the needs of the people in it rather than to justify itself.

"The best example of this is the history of the campus judiciary since 1959. In that year, some Student Government officials recognized the pressing need to codify the Honor Codes and student court procedures. Nothing was done.

"Today, after the Ann Carter Case, everybody's in an uproar and no one knows why something wasn't done about codification sooner. During the past year I tried to eliminate this vacuum by appointing to office people who would pay open attention to the larger goals of Student Government."

Case: Senators Should Be Asked About Baker Ties

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Republicans demanded Tuesday that the Senate Rules Committee try to find out the extent of business dealings all senators may have had with Robert G. (Bobby) Baker, former secretary to Senate Democrats.

Sen. Clifford P. Case, (R-N.J.), appeared at a brief session of the committee to push his proposed questionnaire which would ask all members of the Senate for information on their dealings with Baker and campaign assistance provided or offered by him.

L. P. McLendon, special committee counsel for the Baker case, said he felt that asking senators about offers of campaign assistance exceeded the Rules Committee's investigative authority.

Sen. Joseph S. Clark, (D-Pa.), questioned the right of the committee to ask the questions of any senator. Committee Chairman B. Everett Jordan, (D-N.C.), told Case that if he has any charges to bring "against any senator" the Committee would investigate them.

Case, his voice shaking with anger, virtually ignored his prepared three-page statement and told the Committee: "I will not be stopped. I will continue to try to get the facts."

He said that only the pressure of publicity forced the Committee to let him testify in its lengthy investigation of the outside business activities of Baker, who was reputed to have piled up a paper fortune of $2 million on his $19,600 Senate salary.

"Every member of the Senate has had his reputation, his good name, diminished by the Bobby Baker case," he said. "As an individual, I resent Bobby Baker's ability to blacken me."

Top Fraternity Award Goes To Chi Psi; Phi Delts 2nd

By KERRY SIPE

The annual Robert B. House trophy award presented to the most all-around outstanding Social fraternity on the Carolina campus was awarded Monday night to the Chi Psi Lodge.

The award was one of three presented in conjunction with the regularly scheduled meeting of the Inter Fraternity Council.

Chi Psi won also the annual Phi Delta Theta Award, based on academic achievement. The fraternity's overall grade average of more than 2.5 placed higher than any other Carolina fraternity.

The award for the most improved academic standing during the past year was awarded to Phi Kappa Sigma Fraternity.

During the past year Phi Kappa jumped from an overall scholastic average of 1.94 to an average in excess of 2.3. The fraternity went from twenty-seventh place to seventh place as compared with other campus fraternities.

Phi Delta Theta Fraternity was runner-up for the Robert House award and Delta Upsilon came in third in the outstanding fraternity competition. Last year the award was won by Delta Kappa Epsilon.

The House Award, the highest honor possible for a Carolina fraternity, is awarded by the Faculty Committee on Fraternities and Sororities and is presented by the IFC. Qualifications for the honor are based on five major categories.

Scholastic achievement by members, participation in various intramural activities, participation in extracurricular activities by fraternity members, outstanding participation in the Inter Fraternity Council and outstanding cooperation in relations with faculty members, and the neatness and appearance of the fraternity house are all taken into consideration by the Committee in bestowing the coveted award.

Our Soldiers Poorly Equipped?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A congressional investigation shaped up Tuesday into charges that Americans fighting in Viet Nam are having to use obsolete equipment, particularly airplanes.

The House Armed Services Committee, headed by Rep. Carl Vinson, (D-Ga.), already has asked the Pentagon for a full explanation of recent incidents allegedly involving equipment failure.

Two members of the committee, Rep. Ed Forman, (R-Tex.), and Charles E. Chamberlain, (R-Mich.), have formally demanded an inquiry if the facts warrant it.

Informed sources said Tuesday that Vinson has indicated the committee will dig further into the charges when Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara returns from his current inspection trip to South Viet Nam.

Meanwhile, in related developments:

A group of relatives of American servicemen killed in South Viet Nam published an open letter to President Johnson Tuesday asking that the war be carried to North Viet Nam and that the United States fight a "battle to win" against communism.

The open letter appeared in the form of a full-page advertisement in Tuesday's edition of the Washintgon Star.

It contained the names of 27 Americans killed in Viet Nam from January, 1961, through March, 1964, and 100 names of relatives of the men. The 100 names were from 42 separate families.

A statement in the ad said that "the funds for this advertisement have been provided by a group of Americans in memory of the gallant young Americans who gave their lives in Viet Nam against the communist enemy and in the prayful hope that their lives have not been given in vain."

UN Director Will Receive Peace Award

Paul Hoffman, UN Special Fund Head, Honored At Carroll Hall Thursday Night

Paul G. Hoffman, managing director of the United Nations Special Fund, will receive the American Freedom Association's 1964 World Peace Award at public ceremonies here Thursday at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall Auditorium.

Gov. Terry Sanford will present the award to Hoffman, former administrator of the Marshall Plan, former president of the Ford Foundation, and former president of the Studebaker Corp.

Dr. Frank P. Graham, U.N. mediator and former president of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, will introduce Gov. Sanford.

Presiding over the ceremonies will be Dr. Robert H. Spiro Jr., dean of Mercer University, Macon, Ga., and president of the American Freedom Association, Inc. which maintains its national headquarters at Salisbury.

The award presentation culminates sessions of a United Nations Seminar to be held here at Carroll Hall beginning at 3 p.m. Thursday. This seminar is being sponsored by the North Carolina Division of the American Association for the United Nations. Mrs. Roy Nels Anderson of Raleigh, president of the State AAUN, will preside.

"The Widening Gap," a film on U.N. projects aimed at wiping out poverty, disease and illiteracy, will be shown at 3 p.m. and will be followed first by a group of UNC foreign students talking on why they are studying here in the United States and later by discussions on various U.N. activities.

Following the evening presentation of the American Freedom Association Award to Hoffman there will be a reception, sponsored by UNC student campus organizations, in Graham Memorial student union.

Hoffman is a man who has spent the major portion of his life administering development of a variety of items including cars, countries, economies, and research.

For any kind of development, there must be capital, and Hoffman has been administering developmental programs backed by millions of dollars of capital, presently as managing director of the United Nations Special Fund and before that as president of the Ford Foundation, administrator of the Marshall Plan, and head of the Studebaker Corp. and chairman of the board of the Studebaker-Packard Corp.

The 374 developmental assistance projects of the U. N. Special Fund, for example, involve $837 million.

As managing director of the U.N. Special Fund, Hoffman is concerned with developing the undeveloped in the underdeveloped world. This means administering funds to assist countries in surveying and defining their natural resources, in establishing training institutes for the inhabitants of these countries, in establishing applied research institutes, and supporting projects concerned with economic development planning.

The South Shows Racial Leadership

The Charlotte Observer

President Johnson told the Georgia legislature that much of the South would find racial peace "before the end of racial strife in the cities of the North."

Looking around us, there are signs that he may be right.

It is difficult to imagine that scores of Southerners, as scores of New Yorkers did, could stand by pitilessly and watch a woman being slowly and methodically murdered—whatever her color—without coming to her aid. Nor can we imagine in any Southern city an incident similar to that one in Albany, N. Y., where a crowd observed a man threatening suicide and urged him to jump from a hotel roof.

Whether it is the product of ruralism or of long tradition, there is down here a thread of concern for the other man that has run quietly and unreported through a history dotted with ugly lynchings and other cruelties.

* * *

White Southerners are learning, here and there, that desegregation is not akin to smallpox. In South Carolina, Georgia and North Carolina, we are learning that as we were able to get along with Negro Southerners in the old places and under the old circumstances, so can we get along together in the hotels, restaurants and schools. Nowhere does lightning strike or the millenium come.

After 60 years of squeezing votes from a reservoir of fear, Southern politicians are now turning toward the long neglected sources of that fear—poverty and ignorance.

Key leaders such as Hodges of North Carolina, Vandiver of Georgia and Hollings of South Carolina met the issues less obliquely than their predecessors, and left a foothold on sanity to which their successors could cling and gradually enlarge.

This they are doing. In Georgia, Carl Sanders was elected governor after saying:

"Let's face the facts on this race problem—this issue of human relations. We can see what is going to happen, so let's handle it here in Georgia, ourselves, and not force the federal government in. Above all let's keep our schools open, and see there's no fist-shaking between white and Negro."

Georgia under Sanders is slowly but steadily moving to conquer the race issue so that it will never again hamstring and burden the state's 4 million people.

Enlightened leadership from Gov. Donald Russell and key legislators has spared South Carolina from untold agonies while colleges, schools and public places are being desegregated. The Gressette Committee, long the symbol of the state's official resistance to desegregation, is turning its thoughts toward the overriding issue of our times—education for better lives.

Perhaps the most significant story to come out of Dixie for months was contained in this statement from the committee's last report:

"Your committee has found that the problems with which it has been dealing have their origin in part in the economic circumstances of various groups of people in various parts of the state.

"This mutual involvement of education, economics and sociological problems is inevitable. As educational and economic levels rise among groups in all sections of the state, the other problems become less acute and more capable of solution."

The wise course of North Carolina's leadership in these difficult times is underscored by the fact that in the midst of a fervent political campaign there has been little racial demagoguery, and the minds of the people seem to be as much on education, jobs and general improvements as they are on race.

* * *

All over the South, the realization is spreading that life should not be passed with fear in the heart, a rock in the hand and words of hatred on the lips.

We have yet a long way to go. As Gov. Sanders said, "We've had agonizing experiences. We'll have more," But,

"We have faced up to our problem here more than any other part of the country."

With these attitudes gaining stride and with the growth of understanding, the day may come when the nation looks to the South for leadership instead of pointing to it as an untypical American phenomenon.

Chi Psi—A Winner And An Example

(Note: The editorial below was written by myself without the knowledge of my Co-Editor, Fred Seely. Inasmuch as he is a member of Chi Psi Fraternity, the reasons for this should be obvious—Hugh Stevens)

Once again it is time to give credit where credit is certainly due—this time to Chi Psi Fraternity, winner of the R. B. House trophy as the outstanding fraternity on this campus during 1963-64. Sometimes the pats on the back which we hand out so liberally are mere formalities, but this one is more than that.

The R. B. House award is truly a significant honor for the fraternity that wins it. It is not based on the "coolness" or the "sharpness" of a fraternity's members, nor on the wildness of the parties they have, nor on the value of the automobiles which they drive. Instead, it is given on the basis of excellence in several categories which are far more important—scholarship, campus service by the members, house appearance, intramurals, and IFC participation. This year it has gone to a truly deserving group of men — the members of Chi Psi, or as it is perhaps better known, "The Lodge."

I do not have to base my comment on Chi Psi on the reports handed out by IFC. Fred Seely, my co-editor, is a member, and I have had ample opportunity to watch from rather close range as The Lodge made its climb to the top during the past year.

I could point out the more obvious reasons behind the success of Chi Psi (first in scholarship, best pledge class, tops in intramurals, etc.), but those are the things which must be present every year to a certain extent in the winning house. They do not come by accident.

Legislature's Request Questioned

Poll Is In Fact A Referendum

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

The action taken by Student Legislature Thursday night calling for a referendum to be conducted by the Communications Committee on the racial issue, although well-intentioned, was ill-conceived.

In by-passing the Elections Board, the Legislature removed the referendum from the restrictions imposed by the Elections Law to insure impartiality. Although I am sure the co-chairmen of the Communications Committee, Armistead Maupin and Clark Crampton, will do a conscientious job, they will be powerless to create by decree what would otherwise be established by statute. No procedures they establish will have the force of law.

Article V of the Student Constitution expressly states that all elections, recalls and referendums shall be conducted by the Elections Board. The proponents of the present means of conducting the referendum attempt to outflank Article V by calling the referendum a "poll."

Article V also provides that no elections shall be held within any University examination period. On next Friday, the proposed date of the vote, many graduate students will begin their exams and most undergraduates will be busy with preparation.

In its haste to take action on an important question, the Student Legislature has violated one section of the Student Constitution just as the University Administration abrogated another section last fall. If student leaders do not follow the Student Constitution, they will have a hopeless task in getting the Administration to respect it.

For these and other reasons President Spearman should veto the proposal, if in his judgment the proposal takes the form of a bill, or deny the request if he thinks it is a resolution.

Poll Resolution Has Foul Odor

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Shakespeare once wrote that a rose by any other name smells just as sweet, but to me, a student referendum by the name of "poll" just plain stinks.

In the last election many of us voted under the apparently incorrect assumption that we were electing a responsible legislative body and not a Machiavellian assembly of popularity-seekers.

Rep. Arthur Hays should be commended for his fight to preserve the tradition of Student Government acting in accordance with the intent of our Student Constitution rather than submitting to "mob rule."

It also seems highly ironical that the co-chairmen of the Communications Committee which will have the responsibility for conducting this "poll" are the same two individuals who sponsored the anti-boycott petition last February. Now all we need in order to complete this farce on Constitutional government is to discover that the "poll"-takers are the same ones who sponsored the pro-boycott petition.

I urge students to show their dissatisfaction with the whole mess by refusing to participate in this prostitution of our Student Constitution.

Coed Behavior Charged To Men

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

It is sad but true that the typical Carolina co-ed appears to be as Mr. Range described. But has anyone ever stopped to ponder the reasons for this seeming attitude. Perhaps it is in part due to the "role" that is expected of her by the typical Carolina gentleman. She is to be "fun and flighty" without being too thought-provoking, without revealing the fact that she too has intellectual curiosity. Because the majority of men on this campus are content with a young lady who is primarily concerned with her social situation, why does it seem strange that she patterns herself after these expectations. The blame cannot wholly fall on either side, but certainly the situation could be improved if both the co-ed and gentleman did not try so hard to be "typical."

'Fuzzy Wuzzy' Shows His Face

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Guzzling in the Tempo Room last week with an intimate friend, I peered through glazed eyes at a letter in your paper from Marc and "Sweetie." They wanted to know who Henry McInnis is.

Well, hell!

How does a person answer such a question?

I'm me, that's who, and so what!

The corn in their letter was so tall and abundant that if it could be sold, we could get our state out of poverty.

I enclose a recent photo of myself for anybody who would like to match the name with the face.

Portrait Of Dallas Revealed

By HENRY McINNIS

"Dallas, Public and Private," by Warren Leslie. Grossman Publishers, New York, 1964, 229 pages.

Anyone who was profoundly affected by the assassination of John F. Kennedy will find this book a valuable addition to his understanding of the city where the tragedy of the Twentieth Century exploded with the crack of a rifle.

Author Leslie is well-qualified to write such a devastating but accurate indictment of Dallas' poisonous climate of hatred. A Dallas resident for 17 years, a New York City native and a Yale graduate, his first job in Dallas was as a reporter.

Most of the book, surprisingly enough, was not inspired by the Kennedy assassination itself, being written before that fateful day. The assassination merely bore out what the author had been writing about and provided the ending to the portrait.

He reveals with slashing logic and factual data the evidence that made Dallas a city that did not trust itself to receive the President of the United States; whose worst fears were far outstripped by a double murder that shocked the whole civilized world.

Dallas is painted as a city where political discussion is a matter of agreement or silence; where integration was achieved without incident, but where Adlai Stevenson was struck and mobbed by pickets; where a high incidence of political violence was accomplished almost entirely by amateurs.

"It is a city that calls itself 'the Athens of the alfalfa fields' but bars David Oistrakh from its concert halls because of his nationality."

Leslie etches a portrait of an angry and hysterical metropolis where there are the "yes or no" men who sit on the Citizens' Council, an absolutely unofficial, unelected and self-perpetuating group of Dallas businessmen, the compulsive right-wing women, and the city's men of conscience who work to make unpopular causes palatable to the city, the silent minority of liberals.

Not only does the author probe with journalistic precision the reasons why it was possible for Dallas to be the object of the world's scorn and curiosity, he raises the questions which should be asked about every city.

"Dallas today is frustrated. It would like to escape blame and all its responsibilities, but it finds this difficult. It would like to believe that these events could have happened anywhere, but it is having trouble convincing even itself," the author says.

To escape the feeling of guilt and frustration after the Kennedy murder, the citizens of Dallas tried to deny any responsibility for the events of Nov. 22-24. They said it could have happened in any other city and they saw no association between the events of preceding weeks and the assassination and murder of Oswald. They made scapegoats out of political leaders, police officials, foreign elements and minority groups, they pointed out the deficiencies of other cities . . . but ultimately, it will be Dallas that goes down in the darkest annals of Man's history. This is the catastrophic conclusion Warren Leslie draws and it is bone-numbing and final.

This is one of the few books to come directly out of events surrounding the slaying of the President. It is chillingly current, pulsating with the spectre of national dilemma, international disaster and personal horror. This is no book to be enjoyed. The reading is rough, one is constantly reminded of events that stick to the mind like an unutterable nightmare . . . yet it had to be written and it must be read.

Leslie points to the importance for the press to expose before world opinion the image (for it cannot be proved) of Lee Oswald as a loner, not that he had acted for some special group, the left or right-wingers, but that he was motivated by private, twisted thoughts and compulsions. Riots were prevented between groups by the role of the press in digging for every evidence, no matter what the truth was. The rueful irony is that it was this very caution and regard for assessing the situation of Nov. 22 that caused the Dallas police to make possible the death of Oswald, thus sealing in the tomb with Oswald the explanation for the murder that the world will never have.

The most informative chapters deal with the Dallas visits of Lyndon Johnson in 1960 before he became Vice-President and the fateful visit of Adlai Stevenson. How did Mr. and Mrs. Johnson react when protests groups howled obscenities and spat on them? Who were the woman and student who hit Stevenson with a placard and also spat on him? The author names them and what he believes made them turn into animals. After our United Nations ambassador left the unruly mobs, he said calmly to a police escort, "For my part, I believe in the forgiveness of sin and the redemption of ignorance."

Reading the chapter on the preparation for Kennedy's visit was like standing helplessly over a precipice in a nightmare, watching a loved one being hurled over. Leslie documents the sickening facts that now bear Americans and the world down in a solemn weight of grief and irony: the warning of Stevenson to Arthur Schlesinger Jr. that the President should postpone his trip; the intricate and unsparing efforts of responsible Dallas citizenry to welcome Kennedy in a spirit of toleration; and the grinding horror of a President slain despite all the precautions of the Secret Service and the Dallas police.

"Dallas, Public and Private" will take its place in literature and history as an honest account and reflection of a mad phase of the American character. It is a work one admires not with smiles but with tears.

Homosexuality A Disease, Not A Case Of Immorality

By PETER HARKNESS

Homosexuality is a growing problem that the nation is not facing intelligently.

The most likely explanation of the causes is probably a variety of environmental, emotional and physical factors which may vary in degree.

Homosexuality is a neurotic disease, but most people think of it just as something immoral, unacceptable and intolerable. Its victims are thus forced into a world of their own to mingle with their own, living in a conspiratorial atmosphere.

It embraces the entire personality, but is not incurable.

Most people lack an understanding of the problem; responsible information is limited. The result is unfortunate.

The homosexual has always been the "queer." Its concept is so foreign to most, so unnatural, that there is often a violent reaction.

The "queer" becomes the object of bitter scorn. He is unaccepted, laughed at and "rolled." His existence, outside of his own, is miserable.

Yet, many homosexuals have attained prominence in the arts—music, painting and dramatics. Others who keep their problem secret are successful in other areas.

"Neither the Army nor the psychiatrists condoned overt homosexual activity," according to Dr. I. L. Janis, who studied homosexuality in the Army. "But the Army regulations based on old prejudices were modified in favor of a more objective appraisal of the problem.

"Homosexuals, in the opinion of the psychiatrists, have immature personalities which make them and their lives and some of their personal relations grossly pathological. Like any sick person, they deserve understanding instead of condemnation.

"At the same time it is necessary to realize that as citizens they vary in usefulness," Dr. Janis said. "Some have unusual talent and may make important contributions to society. At the other end of the scale is the homosexual who is a menace. Society has a right to be protected from him.

"Persons afflicted with a homosexual make-up should be considered individually rather than condemned wholesale."

Regardless of one's views, there are certain injustices existing today that must be erased before any progress can be made.

Because of a lack of understanding and fear of homosexuality, most states still have laws on the books which make it a punishable crime, though some do not enforce them.

The North Carolina criminal law reads:

"If any person shall commit the abominable and detestable crime against nature, with mankind or beast, he shall be imprisoned in the State's prison for not less than five nor more than sixty years."

A subhead reads:

"This section includes all kindred acts of bestial character whereby degraded and perverted sexual desires are sought to be gratified. It includes unnatural intercourse between male and male."

Under "Conviction for Attempt," the North Carolina law reads:

"Upon the trial for an indictment for the crime against nature, the prisoner may be convicted of the crime charged therein, or of an attempt a less degree of the same crime."

This harsh law hurts rather than helps these mentally disturbed people. Instead of giving them the care they need, our legal system puts them in jail, where homosexuality flourishes.

Is it right to punish them for something most cannot help? Before we became "civilized" the mentally ill were locked in prisons for the rest of their lives.

That was, of course, before we understood such disorders. Now we have supposedly matured as a society and that sort of thing seldom happens. Now we are enlightened . . . almost.

Across North Carolina, the homosexuality law is enforced in some areas and not in others.

A 22-year-old Greensboro man was arrested not long ago and charged with "private indecencies."

During the trial, he pleaded desperately with the judge not to be sent to prison and asked if he couldn't be committed to an institution or hospital.

The young man was sentenced to five to ten years in prison. He burst into tears and was lead from the courtroom.

His chances of being cured are now forgotten. He has been cheated by nature, and by a society which refuses to help.

4 Grad Students Head For Canada

Four graduate students from UNC and two undergraduates from UNC at Greensboro will combine their efforts in anthropological field - work training among the Eskimo and Indians of northern Quebec, Canada this summer.

The six students selected for training are Robert Dryfoos, Richard Wills, Patricia Rogers, and Richard Preston.

The expedition, led by Professor Harriet C. Kupferer, Greensboro anthropologist and fieldwork supervisor, will leave in early June for Montreal and from there will fly to Rupert House or Great Whale River, two settlements on the shores of James and Hudson Bay.

The graduate training program, in its second year, is sponsored by the National Institute of Mental Health and is administered by the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at UNC. The National Science Foundation awarded funds to Professor Kupferer enabling undergraduate students majoring in anthropology at Greensboro to have the experience of studying, at first hand, a culture significantly different from their own.

Last Chance To See Heels At Home

By PETE GAMMONS

A few oldtimers like Al Long and Dallas Branch may be a bit teary-eyed this afternoon. It won't be because UNC wins or loses, but because today's game with Duke will probably be the last game in Emerson Stadium.

The grads will be recalling some of the past glories of the aged park, such as the phenominal hitting displays put on by Ted Williams during the War. Others will remember the great play of George "Stuffy" Stirnweis, who played here during the early fourties. More recently the names of Jim Mooring, Gerald Griffen and Nick Warren will bring back memories of past Walter Rabb teams.

They were all great, but record-wise this year's edition is the greatest in ACC history. They are 13-0 in the conference, 19-5 overall, and only one game stands in the way of an unprecedented 14-0 ACC record—that one game is Duke, here today at 3.

In a few years the names of Bill Haywood, Jim Speight and Dick Prindle will be sacred. They are deserving of this honor, but the winning season has been a team effort.

The team has been solid all the way down the line. No team in the ACC has a defensive infield like Bill Brown, Prindle, Speight, and Dick Fleming. Fleming and Brown haven't hit for averages, but they have delivered when needed. Now that Co-Captain Tom Wright has returned, the offensive punch is much improved.

The outfield of Ken Willard, Gary Black and Ken Boykin have provided strong punch. Willard is the strongest man in the league, and this year has learned to be a hitter as well as a slugger. Black's average isn't high, but he has hit in clutch situations, and with power. Boykin has hit well all year, although hampered by facing a lot of lefty pitching. Bill Taylor, Bob Hume, and Bob Bonczek haven't had too much of a change to play, but all are capable replacements. Taylor has been invaluable as a defensive replacement for Boykin.

The catching, thought to be hurt by the loss of Bernie Isgett, has been a surprise, and the man who has made it so is John Shaw. Only a sophomore, Shaw has hit everything thrown at him, and is currently hitting .395. Bob Hundley and Merle Kruer have been more than adequate replacements.

However, if there is any department which has really shown, it has been the pitching, despite many obstacles. Beattle Leonard, a highly regarded sophomore lefthander, broke his hand. Spencer Willard, last year's top pitcher down the stretch, hurt his arm. But along came Jerry Davis, who fired crucial shutouts over Maryland and Wake Forest. Bobby Cox helped out. Then Leonard and Willard came back for late season help. But the man who made the difference was Bill Haywood. Haywood's record is now 8-0 with a 0.79 ERA. He has started some games, but has relieved time and time again in tough situations, pitching from two to ten near-perfect innings. He has been super-human, and has made the pitching (which Connie Mack said was 75% of baseball) the pride of the South.

As great as the players may be, it takes something extra to make a team a champion—spirit. The spirit on this team is tremendous, and has given them the ability to get "up" for every game. Part of the credit must go to Coach Rabb and his assistants, and part to Co-Captains Haywood and Wright. But just as important has been the desire on the whole team, from the stars to manager Mike Craig.

The team is mortal, and with the championship safely tucked way for over a week, it is hard to get worked up over another game. But the opposition is Duke, and with the team as it is, the game will be a good one. The Blue Devils want a victory badly, because they haven't tasted the sweet fruits of victory in the ACC yet.

KNIFE IN THE WATER
Directed by Roman Polanski
A KANAWHA FILMS, LTD. PRESENTATION
"Knife In The Water," is Ramon Polanski's first feature film and one of the five pictures selected this year for Best Foreign Film in the Academy Award nominations. It is a modern story of an attractive trio thrown together on a chance encounter which turns into a sinister, psychological crisis.
At thirty, Polanski has already achieved an international name for himself. He has been described as the Polish director who comes closest to the contemporary and advant garde drama of Beckett, Ionesco and Pinter. While receiving his training at Poland's National Film Academy at Lodz, Polanski created his world-famous short subject, "Two Men and a Wardrobe," as his senior thesis. Winning awards at Oberhausen, Brussels and San Francisco Festivals, the 15-min. surrealistic fantasy is a satirical comment on man's inhumanity to man, and stands as one of the most ferocious anti-social allegories set on film.
The two Polanski films will have their first showing in the South at the Rialto Theatre starting Wednesday. Showings daily at 1:40, 3:30, 5:20, 7:10 & 9:02 p.m.

A PERFECT ENDING FOR OLD EMERSON

Record Crowd Watches UNC Finish Undefeated

Haywood Throttles Devils, 5-2

By LARRY TARLETON

Fourteen in a row!

It couldn't be done, but the Tar Heels did it yesterday. Coach Walt Rabb's ACC champs came roaring from behind with four runs in the sixth and rode the relief pitching of Bill Haywood to a 5-2 win over the upstart Duke Blue Devils.

Dick Fleming and Jim Speight homered for Carolina, but first baseman Bill Brown came up with the big hit—a single through the box that scored two runs in the big sixth. Haywood came in for starter Beattie Leonard in the second and went the rest of the way without allowing a Blue Devil to cross the plate.

The victory closed out the ACC season for the Tar Heels. They play Southern Conference opponents Davidson and Virginia Tech this weekend then take an exam break before the District III tournament which begins in Gastonia on May 28. The Heels will meet the at-large team (probably Memphis State) at 10:30 a.m. on the 28th to begin the double elimination tourney.

The Duke victory ran Carolina's record to 20-5 overall, and 14-0 in the conference. Except for the disastrous Florida trip, the Tar Heels could boast a 20-2 record. They lost to Florida State twice, 9-0 and 17-3, and to Mississippi State, 3-2 on the trip. The other two losses came at the hands of the Camp Lejeune Marines, 4-3, and to Wake Forest in a charity game played at Asheboro, 11-5.

The win over the Blue Devils was the tenth straight for the surging Tar Heels. The last loss was the Wake Forest game.

The record crowd of an estimated 4000 stared in amazement as Duke hurler Jay Hopkins set down the first 15 Tar Heel batters. But when Fleming led off the sixth with his second homer of the season, the Tar Heels came to life and the Blue Devils collapsed.

Fleming caught hold of Hopkins' first offering and lifted it high and far into left field. Left fielder Biff Bracy took off with the crack of the bat, jumped, got his glove on the ball, flipped over the fence and dropped the ball. Fleming hesitated at second base, but umpire Joe Mills gave the circular motion with his right hand, and the little third baseman came trotting home. Loud protests from the Blue Devils only brought hoots from the crowd, and the Tar

'Twas A Storybook Ending For That Mass Of Concrete

By PETE GAMMONS

No, Bill Haywood isn't as old as the mass of concrete that is Emerson Stadium. But despite that discouraging revelation to story tellers, his last home game and Emerson's last game draw quite a parallel.

Haywood was invincible again yesterday, running his record to 9-0. His home career closed out in tremendous fashion, which all the more seemed to symbolize the end of the old stadium's career, which dates back to 1916.

Four thousand fans went wild when Haywood forced Stan Crisson to fly out for the last out to finish an undefeated conference season. But they went even wilder when Dick Fleming hit his homer. Sonny Odom added to the screaming throngs by racing in to home umpire Joe Mills from right field to question whether Biff Bracy had caught the ball in the left field corner. Two errors, an errant throw, and Bill Brown's single made the walls of the ancient park rock like never before.

The fans were kept amused throughout the game by certain players who earned themselves Oscars. Gary Black won one under the "Best Stunt Acting," by catching every fly hit at him off his shoetops.

Jim Speight won the "Sadist" award for laughing when the Blue Devils kicked around Dickie Prindle's grounder for the tying run, then stepped up and lined a long double to left center.

Two Duke players won awards. Bucky Fader won the "Most Cooperative" trophy for getting picked off second base with no one out in the ninth, and the tying run at the plate. Crisson won the Highest Maze award for acting with his impersonation of an elephant around the first base bag.

Haywood's career wasn't the only great one to close out in glory, for Speight and Brown were co-stars along with the "veteran" right hander. It was only appropriate that all those careers, especially Emerson's, should end on a perfect note.

Hoffman Receives '64 Peace Award Tonite At Carroll

Paul G. Hoffman, managing director of the United Nations Special Fund, will receive the American Freedom Association's 1964 World Peace Award at public ceremonies at the University here tonight at 8 o'clock at the Carroll Hall Auditorium.

Gov. Terry Sanford will present the award to Mr. Hoffman, former administrator of the Marshall Plan, former president of the Ford Foundation, and former president of the Studebaker Corp.

Dr. Frank P. Graham, U.N. mediator and former president of the Consolidated University, will introduce Gov. Sanford.

Presiding over the ceremonies will be Dr. Robert H. Spiro Jr., dean of Mercer University, Macon, Ga., and president of the American Freedom Association, Inc., which maintains its national headquarters at Salisbury.

The award presentation culminates sessions of a United Nations Seminar to be held here at Carroll Hall beginning at 3 p.m. today.

Old East Decides To Dine At Pines

By FRED SEELY

Over strong protests from a small faction within the Residence Hall, Old East voted Tuesday night to hold its annual banquet tonight at the Pines Restaurant.

It will be the first banquet at the segregated restaurant since Alpha Tau Omega fraternity held a dinner early in the semester.

Reports yesterday indicated that several members of the Hall, including YMCA president Rick Edwards, would picket the banquet.

The final vote on the decision was 44-14 in favor of the Pines over the Zoom-Zoom and La Pizza. Earlier in the week the Hall's Executive Committee had voted 6-2 in favor of the Pines. Dissenting voters were Whit Joyner and Mal King.

"We held the Hall meeting to give the integrationist faction a chance to air their views," president Doug Kelly said yesday. "All that was needed was the vote of the Executive Committee, but several people approached me and threatened letters to the DTH and picketing if it were held at the Pines.

"I called a Hall meeting in an effort to let them be heard, and they were beaten. The Pines gave us the best price."

The banquet is apparently not a violation of the Student Government constitution, which forbids the use of SG funds in segregated establishments. There are no Negro students in Old East, and, according to Kelly, "the Pines would not have been considered if there had been."

Kelly estimated there would be at least 50 Hall members at the banquet. Old East has 90 residents.

"We will definitely have the banquet, unless somehow it is declared an abrogation of the student constitution," Kelly commented.

CORRECTION

Mike Lawler did not say "the University should dictate policy to them" in reference to social fraternities as quoted in yesterday's DTH.

Due to typographical error, the word "not" after "should" was omitted.

No Poll!

Constitutional Council Decides Against Campus Boycott Poll

By HUGH STEVENS

The Constitutional Council ruled Tuesday evening that the "student poll" on the boycott issue set for Friday is "unconstitutional." The decision will postpone indefinitely any type of student vote on the civil rights question.

The Council's verdict was returned after a lengthy session at which the principals on both sides gave prepared statements and were questioned by the Council.

Basing its decision on the definition of "referendum" as it is referred to in the Constitution, the Council said the poll is "clearly a referendum with all the implications of a referendum."

Under the Constitution, a referendum must be conducted by the Elections Board. In making its decision, the Council indicated that the proposed "poll" had "definite official overtones." It noted in a statement which appears on this page that such "official" overtones are the primary factor in differing between the proposed poll and other types of polls.

Arthur Hays, SP legislator, and John Randall, former legislator, led the fight to have the bill declared unconstitutional. They stated that the "poll" was nothing but a referendum in disguise, and therefore in violation of the Constitution.

The proponents of the measure, including SP Legislator Dick Akers, Vice-President Don Carson, and UP Legislator Mal King, based their argument on the legal definitions of "poll" versus "referendum." They claimed that intent, not method, separated the two, and that a poll which had no direct bearing on legislation could be conducted in any manner, even through the use of ballot boxes.

They further attempted to prove that the Communications Committee had a definite right to conduct such a "poll."

The Constitutional Council, composed of seven representatives of the Men's and Women's Councils, is empowered by the Constitution to rule on the legality of any legislative act or executive order.

Backers Of Poll Issue Statements

Three members of the pro-poll faction of student government yesterday issued statements concerning the decision of the Constitutional Council Tuesday night.

Clark Crampton, chairman of the Communications Committee; Dick Akers, Student Party legislator and former Treasurer of the Student Body; and Don Carson, Vice-President of the Student Body released the statements yesterday.

By DON CARSON

I am in complete disagreement with the decision of the Constitutional Council with regard to the proposed boycott poll. I submitted to the Constitutional Council, and I still maintain, that there is a decided legal distinction between an opinion poll and a referendum.

In modern constitutional law a referendum is the "method of submitting an important legislative act to a vote of the whole people." (Black's Law Dictionary, p. 1514)

The poll which we proposed to take had no effect whatsoever on any legislative measures. It was an opinion poll.

We have done everything humanly possible to get this issue before the student body. I regret very much the decision of the Constitutional Council. However, the Council's opinion not mine, is the law.

DICK AKERS

I feel the decision of The Constitutional Council to be extremely narrow, short-sighted, and naive. I feel that in rendering such a verdict, The Council has demonstrated, along with the backers of the appeal, a rather complete lack of common sense or of propriety.

I feel that the students of this campus will join me in denouncing this action to deny them their rights for what it is: a petty move by petty individuals at the expense of the welfare of the Student Body.

PETE WALES' STATEMENT

(Editor's Note: This is the statement of Pete Wales, chairman of the Constitutional Council. It is his report to the President of the Student Body on the hearing on the Boycott Poll/Referendum Tuesday night.)

The business before the Constitutional Council in their hearing Tuesday night was to decide whether or not the proposed "poll" on the student boycott scheduled for Friday was in fact a poll or a referendum according to the Student Constitution's implied definition of referendum.

If the Council were to decide that this "poll" is in fact a referendum, then it would be unconstitutional since all referendums must be handled by the Elections Board and may not be conducted during a University examination period. The Law School has part of their examinations scheduled for this Friday.

If the Council were to decide that the proposed "poll" is not a referendum under our Constitution, then the Communications Committee would be free to conduct a poll Friday or any other time in any way they pleased.

In its decision, the Council differentiated between the terms poll, referendum and review. Both a referendum and a review fall under the broader definition of the word poll and are specific types of polls.

A review is defined in the Student Constitution as "a ballot on any act of the Student Legislature." This implies a campus-wide vote supporting or contradicting an act passed by legislature. The outcome of such a vote would be binding on the legislature pertaining directly to the act in question.

In defining the term referendum, the Council interpreted the Constitution as differentiating between this and a review. We inferred from the Constitution that the term referendum was to be a broader term than review.

Differentiating between a referendum and a poll, we further interpreted the definition of a referendum in our Constitution as being a campus-wide ballot on an official measure of the Student Legislature. held for the purpose of assertaining campus opinion on an issue within said official measure and having no binding effect on the legislature.

Thus a referendum may be held on any issue contained in a legislative act or resolution. Legislative action may result from the outcome of such a vote, but it is not mandatory.

A poll may be held by any executive committee or any other person or persons which uses the methods employed by the Elections Board so long as it does not poll the participants directly on some official legislative measure and thus has no official overtones to it. Polls of various types are often valuable in determining campus opinion and may lead to legislative action, but they do not refer a legislative action directly to all students in an elections procedure.

In this particular case, there were definite official overtones to the poll. The questions on the ballot referred to a resolution of Student Legislature on a student boycott and were drawn up in legislature and not by the Communications Committee. The Council considered it to be clearly a referendum with all the implications of a referendum.

The Council voted six to one that the proposed poll was in fact a referendum and therefore unconstitutional. The one dissenting member felt that there was no difference implied by the Constitution between a referendum and a review. This member felt further that the proposed poll was not of an official nature in that it had no binding effect on the legislature.

Chi Psi—A Winner And An Example

(Editor's Note: Due to an error made at the printshop, a significant portion of the following editorial, written by Hugh Stevens, did not appear in the editorial column of Wednesday morning's DTH. Stevens wrote the editorial without the prior knowledge of his co-editor, Fred Seely, who is a member of Chi Psi Fraternity. We repeat the entire editorial here for the sake of clarity.)

Once again it is time to give credit where credit is certainly due—this time to Chi Psi Fraternity, winner of the R. B. House trophy as the outstanding fraternity on this campus during 1963-64. Sometimes the pats on the back which we hand out so liberally are mere formalities, but this one is more than that.

The R. B. House award is truly a significant honor for the fraternity that wins it. It is not based on the "coolness" or the "sharpness" of a fraternity's members, nor on the wildness of the parties they have, nor on the value of the automobiles which they drive. Instead, it is given on the basis of excellence in several categories which are far more important — scholarship, campus service by the members, house appearance, intramurals, and IFC participation. This year it has gone to a truly deserving group of men — the members of Chi Psi, or as it is perhaps better known, "The Lodge."

I do not have to base my comment on Chi Psi on the reports handed out by IFC. Fred Seely, my co-editor, is a member, and I have had ample opportunity to watch from rather close range as The Lodge made its climb to the top during the past year.

I could point out the more obvious reasons behind the success of Chi Psi (first in scholarship, best pledge class, tops in intramurals, etc.), but those are the things which must be present every year to a certain extent in the winning house. They do not come by accident.

Rather, they are the result of two things—an especially talented group of men, and the desire to be more than just another "sharp" fraternity. Of the two factors, the latter is by far the most important. Call it what you will—spirit, desire, or something else—it is the thing which makes or breaks a fraternity.

Whatever it is, the Chi Psi's have it, and their excellence in many fields is merely a manifestation of this intangible quality. By combining individual talents, hard work, and this cohesive spirit of true "fraternity," the members of The Lodge have made their house one of which they, and the entire UNC fraternity system, can be justly proud. Because they have not been content to sit idly by and watch the campus move about them, but have instead made a positive effort to contribute to its progress, they have benefited both themselves and the campus.

As a member of another fraternity, I wish to take this opportunity to extend best wishes to Chi Psi on behalf of the entire fraternity system. Chi Psi has contributed to the growth of each of its members, the status of the fraternity system, and the life of the University.

To my fellow fraternity men I would humbly suggest that their example is an excellent one for all to follow in helping to improve the fraternity life which is so important to us.

The Council Calls 'Em As It Sees 'Em

Now that the Constitutional Council has declared the proposed student "poll" on the boycott to be "unconstitutional," we should pause for a moment to ask ourselves what it all means.

The most obvious aspect of the situation, of course, is that there will be no opportunity this spring for the student body to express its opinion on the civil rights question—an opportunity for which a majority of students have been clamoring. Even though it is the most obvious and immediate consideration, however, it may well be that it is not the most important.

The desirability of some type of student vote on an issue of this magnitude is readily apparent, and, in this respect, the decision of the Council, which voids such a vote at this time, is regrettable. However, the Constitutional Council's action involves an issue far deeper and far more important than any single poll—it reaches into the very heart of Student Government and the Student Constitution.

We would point out one very important fact to be kept in mind by all who, in the days and weeks ahead, go about analyzing this hectic and confused situation. It is this: the action of the Constitutional Council cannot and should not be construed as an attempt by the members of that body to prevent a student vote. The students who compose the Council (three from the Men's Council and three from the Women's Council, plus the Men's Council chairman) made their decision on the basis of the evidence presented to them.

Probably some of the members of the Council wanted very much to see a campus-wide vote on the boycott issue during the semester. Probably some of them didn't. But the near-unanimity of their decision (6-1 in favor of constitutionality) indicates that they simply did not feel that the Communications Committee could rightly assume the responsibility for the voting.

They made their decision in good faith, knowing all the while that the students badly want an opportunity to vote, and that a decision favoring unconstitutionality might well bring adverse student comment. We do not agree with their decision, but they are jurists, not editors or politicians, and thus are bound by the principle of "calling 'em as they see 'em."

In the presentations to the council on Tuesday night, several outstanding points were produced by both sides. We left the meeting with a distinct awareness that the decision, however it turned out, would be made with the Constitution, not the poll, uppermost in mind. We also felt that such a decision would approve the poll. The first feeling remains with us, and for this reason we caution our readers against any hasty misjudgment of the Council's actions.

The system of checks and balances installed in our Student Government is derived from a basic premise of democratic government. In deciding that the "poll" was unconstitutional, the Council availed itself of its right to void any action by the Executive or Legislative branches deemed to be detrimental to the student body. Again, we must point out that it was not the principle of a "poll" or "referendum" which was struck down—it was the specific "poll" set for this Friday, which was considered by the Council to fall under the jurisdiction of the Elections Board.

In reaching their conclusion on the matter, the body relied heavily on the wording of the Constitution and their interpretation of its content. It is our feeling, as well as the feeling of many members of Student Government, that the Council did not take into account a number of other, very relevant factors. But it was their decision, and they made it. And just like the legislators who did their best to get the issue to the students, they performed their duty with YOU in mind.

The result is that you will not vote on the boycott this spring. But you can rest assured that the Constitutional Council is ever ready to defend your Constitution against encroachments, as they felt they were doing in this case. Do not allow your bias about Friday's poll to cause you to accuse them unjustly.

Statesville Editorial Rebutted

All Is Not Hunky Dory In N. C.

By CURTIS GANS

I find that I didn't learn very much from the editorial "Learning From A Death," which appeared in Sunday's Daily Tar Heel.

If the editors had stopped at the point where they pointed out quiet justly that people in Statesville and elsewhere made a racial incident out of a suicide in that town when they shouldn't have, their point would at least be well taken, if not limited and obvious. However, they chose to expand. They chose to say that somehow Statesville has a united phalanx of unarmed Negroes and whites making steady progress down the road to human equality and dignity.

They intimated that somehow an atmosphere of mutual respect exists in Chapel Hill and that a Negro can walk with "his head up" as he walks through town. They attempted to say that the State was making great strides without protest movements and that if the "extremist" would just go home everything would be solved, because our leadership is enlightened enough to see the future.

I don't really see it that way. I don't have any claim to omniscience, but it appears to me that even in this great and progressive state of ours, which is indeed more progressive than most Southern states, only two per cent of the Negro population attends integrated schools, more than 90 per cent of the engineering graduates of Negro institutions must seek work out of this state, less than one-eighth of the public establishments are desegregated, there is not one single Negro in high executive offices, only a bare handful receive advanced degrees from institutions of higher learning, and all by and large are doomed to an annual income of $2,000 less than the white man, when both Negro and white are earning on an average slightly less than subsistence.

I don't think we can be too happy about an educatinal system that keeps the Negro two years behind the white and the realities of police brutalities and the double standard of justice which prevail in all too many of the communities of the State. I read with alarm that Negroes are being denied their Constitutional right to vote in Enfield and that some wrongly have decided to take guns in the face of hostilities in Monroe.

It is good to hear that the Statesville Chamber of Commerce, City Council and Merchants Association are beginning to do something, but it is absurd to assume that because the NAACP is backing the proposal that there is united support. The NAACP is by and large the most conservative of the Negro organizations. It represents in the main the last generation and the legal arm of the protest movement. It has been drawn willy nilly and because of lack of cooperation into the movement, and, if indeed it is participating in the Statesville effort, it is on an "if" basis only. Nationally and locally it does not represent the 100 per cent cooperation that was represented by the editorial.

There has been a lot done in Chapel Hill and elsewhere, but a lot still remains to be done. We are a far cry from the day when the Negro can hold his head up here, for if nothing else he must stoop a little to avoid the falling timbers from the doorjamb of the home he must live in. I don't think a Negro develops much self-respect from seeing an economic future that puts custodial duties at the apex of his employment dreams, and I don't think he will long tolerate the condescending attitude of the white man who says "look how much progress we've made."

I don't think the white man can hold his head high either in a community in which the collective guilt of segregation still exists, nor can it sit still while its government which voted down public accommodations ordinances guides the course to equality as it sees fit.

I don't know what it's like to be a Negro. I am not one. But if I were viewing it from a Negro's porch, I think I would see that nothing was done until the anti-lynching league brought to the public the plight of the Negro, until the NAACP's legal staff brought to the Supreme Court the issue of school segregation, and the sit-in movement brought to national and world attention the plight of the Negro in accommodations, travel, housing and employment.

If I were a Negro, I think I would see that some progress has been made, but I don't think I'd offer any thanks for that progress or for the reluctant white benefactors who made it possible, because it came too late and is still too little.

I think, if I were a Negro, I'd be a little tired of efforts of the white community to be nice and expiate their own guilt, and I would demand, as the Negro is currently demanding, full right of participation in any and all decision-making that affects his or somebody else's future in the public weal.

This state is fortunate that Gov. Terry Sanford has initiated several programs, all inadequate, but all a step in the right direction.

The Good Neighbor Council is doing the first spadework toward equal hiring practices, the Governor's poverty program will seek to build communities where Negroes can indeed live and work side by side, and the North Carolina Intercollegiate Council on Human Relations has begun work on a film series that will depict the Negroe's plight in this state.

None of these programs are enough, nor are they in the main adequate. The film series suffers from lack of understanding of the whites involved and lack of technical skill in the Negroes' behalf. It also suffers from lack of a sufficient monetary commitment to do the job right—to take cameras into the fields to depict situations as they really are.

More importantly, however, all of these programs are a direct outgrowth of the non-violent revolution that started Feb. 1, 1960, and will not stop. They are part of a long awaited effort in this state, but they are more importantly the result of substantive political pressures that Gov. Sanford had to respond creatively to or cast his lot with the other Southern governors.

And yet, this is but a beginning. These are programs coming still from the white elite. They still have in only two cases involved the Negro in a meaningful way in the planning process and always with the knowledge that he really has not yet the power to change an adverse decision. If I were a Negro, I believe I would get a little tired of being patted on the head, even by sympathetic whites.

It is true in Chapel Hill also. The Committee for Concerned Citiizens is largely white liberal, and while creative, has failed miserably to involve the Negro in the decision-making process.

The Freedom Committee exists on its island and the Negro adult community on another of its own.

I don't really know if I believe in brotherhood. The only living institutionalized examples of it—the fraternities and the orders, the churches and the schools—have all been failures.

Perhaps it is an impossible concept of the egocentric condition of man's existence. The respect is not and human dignity is not. Neither of these concepts implies full participation in all activities, and, in the case of the South's crisis, massive action, direct or otherwise, to build the New South.

It was not too many years ago when Chester Bowles talked of revolution of rising expectations in underdeveloped countries of this world. This revolution is occurring in the United States today. At the World's Fair two weeks ago, those involved in the civil rights movement waited with baited breath to see whether the rank and file would outrun its leadership and whether there would be a nationalist movement of violence soon.

I have heard it said by some of the most able people in this state that it can't happen here, that the blood that will surely flow in the North will not flow in the South ever.

They're wrong. If they can read they must know that it can happen here so long as we have a post office with a Statue of Liberty model in the center and two water fountains, one engraved white and the other engraved Negro, flanking it in a major city in our state.

The movement that has started will not stop. We are on the threshold of the last chance to act united to create a democratic community. If we can't do it because we think it right and just, then perhaps we can do it because we fear the consequences of inaction.

We begin by talking a different language, but the concepts are not new or different or unreal. They just take work to make them into a reality.

For 73-odd years, the Daily Tar Heel has had the needed freedom to constructively criticize, to exert leadership and to educate a large segment of the State's population and future leadership.

It has also had the freedom to misjudge and to display the editor's ignorance.

It is a pity that when leadership is so much needed, it has chosen now to follow the latter course.

Cultural Events Relegated To Back Seat On Calendar

By PETER RANGE

One thing which has irritated me for a long time is the consistent method in which all concerts, speeches and other extra-curricular events of cultural interest and real value at UNC are scheduled for week nights instead of weekends.

Last week saw the presentation of one of the richest musical weeks this University has ever known: the UNC Symphony, the UNC Chamber Orchestra, and the North Carolina Symphony gave outstanding performances on three consecutive nights. Which nights?—Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, of course! Squeezed right in when students have the most work and the least free time!

Even the student-run Carolina Symposium runs Sunday through Thursday, apparently afraid to tread on sacred ground by using Friday.

The fundamental reasoning behind this madness, of course, is that students would not come to these events on weekends, that weekends are a sacred time for raising hell. The notion that a person might even go to a concert on a Saturday evening and then proceed to a party with three hours left seems to have entered no one's mind.

In the first place, I find this a very unfortunate basis for not using weekends for cultural events and speakers. This is to say, then, that the powers that be consider the weekend parties more important than the events in question? If this is not the case, then why submit to the popular trend to use weekends for less serious causes than poetry reading and chamber music? Why not simply defy this tradition and put the worthwhile affairs on the weekends, in the ultimate hope of changing the trends? Not doing this is certainly an underrating of the fine schedule of events we enjoy (if we find time during the week) in Chapel Hill.

It is time first things came first. I can certainly conceive of even more people attending the cultural affairs on the weekends than during the week. I, for one, having lost all interest in the usual forms of hell-raising, am at a loss for entertainment on a free weekend, other than the Rialto. I would like nothing more than to have a play, a concert, a reading, or a speech to attend on Friday and Saturday nights.

In the second place, it can be argued that the very students who would not come to cultural events on the weekends are the same ones who do not come anyway. Those who have enough interest to make crucial time available for this during the week would certainly be willing and eager to do the same on the weekend.

Hence, I challenge the Music Department to institute a "Saturday Evening Series," the Carolina Forum to bring speakers on Friday nights, the Symposium to run over the weekend, and the ad hoc Playmakers productions like Fantasticks to aim at Friday-Saturday schedules.

It is time these events were made more easily accessible to the serious student who needs week nights for studying!

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Girls Negligent On Social Duties

Editors The Daily Tar Heel:

It was Freshman Weekend. I was talking with three male students, one from California, one from Pennsylvania and one from New Jersey, Saturday night at the combo party in front of Graham Memorial. They all said that the chief drawback to UNC was the lack of girls. As I looked at the large group of boys, without dates, standing around watching the couples dance, I repeated what I have said many times, that there is little in these parties for boys without a partner to dance with. One student said that the dormitory girls were not interested and did not cooperate to make these parties the success they should be. He said when Cobb Dormitory gave a combo party the girls hid in the dormitory and refused to come out.

It is understandable that, with so many more boys than girls here, the girls would get independent, but that is no excuse for bad manners. They should think of somebody besides themselves. You go to a party to give pleasure and not just think of what you will get out of it. The dormitory girls should plan to go to these parties as a group, and dance with anybody and everybody at the party. Even then there probably would be a shortage of girls, therefore arrangements should be made with UNC-G to bring busloads of girls to the party, mix them up with the boys, and, after the dance is over, return to their campus. This would eliminate the cost of lodging and eating both for the girls and boys.

Unless the planning committees solve this problem, much of their efforts and the expense of putting on these parties, will be wasted.

Lake Defended As Most Rational

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

First of all, I wish to congratulate you in general on the excellent DTH and in particular on your editorial policy. There is a distinct difference between your present policy and that of the previous editorship and, needless to say, a considerable improvement.

However, I was disappointed in the editorial of May 8 which severely criticized Dr. I. Beverly Lake and paralelled North Carolina under his governorship to Mississippi, Alabama or Louisiana. Dr. Lake is an advocate of states' rights, therefore I can see why the DTH does not agree with him on many issues, but this editorial seems to have gone too far.

Dr. Lake did indeed begin at a disadvantage. He has indeed gained ground at a remarkable rate, and, if this pace continues, he may well be elected governor of North Carolina. He is not irrational as you strongly imply (after all, he was graduated from Harvard Law School and was a law professor at Wake Forest for 18 years); he has the best (if not the only rational) platform of any of the Democratic candidates for governor. If each person in this state would take time to listen to what Dr. Lake has to say, he will realize this for himself.

His momentum gains daily and the primary is still three weeks away. As you said in your editorial, "the possibility is not as far off as it once seemed."

Miss Orange To Be Named Friday Night

Four judges will choose the 1964 Miss Orange County from among 10 contestants at the second Miss Orange County Pageant Friday night at 8 in Memorial Hall.

In all, five winners will be chosen: Miss Orange County, first, second, and third runners-up, and Miss Congeniality. The winner will receive a $250 scholarship, a wardrobe, an official Miss America Preliminary Pageant trophy, and an expense-paid trip to Raleigh to compete in the Miss North Carolina Pageant this summer.

All ten girls will appear in three phases of competition: evening gown, talent, and swim suit. The finalists will also answer questions.

Amphoterothen

The Amphoterothen Society last night tapped thirteen new members in an initiation ceremony in the Grail Room.

The Amphoterothen Society is the second oldest honorary society on campus. It was founded in 1912.

Each year the Society taps thirteen new members who have gained distinction through speech and forensic activity.

Bulkley, Riggs Named To Head 'The Tar Heel'

Joel Bulkley and Linda Riggs were named editor and business manager, respectively, for the summer school weekly newspaper, "The Tar Heel," Wednesday at a meeting of the Publications Board.

Bulkley, a sophomore from Southport, Conn., is currently a staff writer for the Chapel Hill Weekly. He has served on the Daily Tar Heel staff for two years as reporter, news editor and copy editor, and also was associate editor of the summer school paper last year. He has also worked as a correspondent for the Durham Morning Herald and the Associated Press Bureau in Charlotte.

Miss Riggs, a graduating senior from Anandale, Va. has been secretary and copy editor on the Daily Tar Heel. She will be in charge of all advertising, subscriptions, and circulation for the 11 issues of the summer paper.

Both candidates were unopposed.

Fleming, Speight Blast Home Runs

Heels had their first hit and first run, but still trailed 2-1.

Gary Black then bounced a grounder down the third base line, but third baseman Tom Taylor booted it and Back became the second Carolina baserunner. Haywood placed a perfect bunt down the first base line to move Black to second, and when first baseman Stan Crisson booted Dickie Prindle's bouncer Black raced home.

With Prindle on first, Jim Speight lined a ground rule double to left-center to move him to third. Catcher John Shaw then grounded to second with the runners holding. Blue Devil coach Ace Parker tried to play strategy and ordered Ken Willard walked to fill the bases. Brown ruined the strategy with his big hit, a line single to center, to score two runs and give the Heels a 4-2 lead.

The final run came in the eighth on Speight's third home run of the year.

Leonard ran into trouble early and allowed single runs in the first and second before being relieved by Haywood. The win was Haywood's ninth of the season without a defeat, and he lowered his ERA to 0.72.

Phi Delt, DKE, Med School, Navy Win Division Titles

By BILL LEE

The final point standings of the year's intramural activity been tabulated, and the top teams of each division have been determined.

In the dorm division, the NROTC repeated its first place finish with a total point accumulation of 1,080.33, fifty points over the nearest competitor, Alexander. The Navy won volleyball, wrestling, basketball, and tennis championships.

In the grad division, the Med School topped the rest with 1,065.92 points. The physics grads were runners-up. The medics took championships in touch football, table tennis, and softball.

Phi Delta Theta was first in the Fraternity Blue Division with 1,138.03 points as Chi Psi was the leading challenger. The Phi Delts picked up firsts in touch football, track, handball, and badminton to gain their potion.

In the Fraternity White Division, Delta Kappa Epsilon was tops with 861.34 points, as the Phi Delts took second. The DeKEs won handball and badminton championships. A significant jump in the division was that of Kappa Psi, who climbed from tenth place in 1963 to third this year.

The intramural office reports that residence hall managers have been interviewed and placed in all residence halls except for the following: Avery, Ehringhaus A, Ehringhaus B, Ehringhaus C, Craige A, Craige B, and Graham.

Applications for managers in these residence halls will be accepted from 1:00 to 4:00 Thursday and Friday of this week.

Louis: Liston Best Fighter In World

NEW YORK (UPI)—Joe Louis observed his 50th birthday Wednesday with the observation that Billy Conn was a "much better fighter" than Cassius Clay and that Sonny Liston was "the best fighter in the world."

Looking fit at 50, the immortal "Brown Bomber" of the ring said it was "unfortunate" that Clay had become a member of the Black Muslim sect.

"The heavyweight champion has to represent all the people of the world, and not just one sect," said Louis in his slow, easy manner. "I'm just glad I wasn't ever approached by those people."

Louis, contemplating a bleak future in which his income tax problems with Uncle Sam still are unsolved, allowed that it wasn't the first 50 but "the last 15" which were the hardest.

Yet he held forth hope for the future of boxing with the smiling enjoinder that "all we need are a few more Jack Dempseys, Gene Tunneys, Sugar Ray Robinsons and Rocky Marcianos."

AND THE BILL IS $24 MILLION

This Place Just Keeps Getting Bigger And Bigger And..

Arthur Branch Points To Another New Addition

By PATTY NASH

UNC refuses to stop growing.

Business Manager Arthur Branch has estimated that capital improvements during the next few years will amount to a cost of over $24,000,000.

"These projects are financed by the state, loans and grants from the National Institute of Health and the National Science Foundation," he said.

The first major project is the Ambulatory Patient Care Facility at North Carolina Memorial Hospital. It will provide additional patient care facilities and lab space, and will cover 215,000 square feet. This addition will be on the south side of the hospital, and the main entrance will be changed from the north to the south side. A small enlargement will be built where the main hospital entrance is now. It is hoped this $7½ million project will be completed by May, 1967. Bids will be accepted in January, 1965.

Books are already being collected for the new Undergraduate Library to be built on the east side of Wilson Library at a cost of $1,315,000. Students will be able to get their own books from the open shelves, without the aid of an attendant.

The library, along with the new Student Union and Book Exchange is "a unified project under one architect, working with our engineers and planners," said Branch. "It will be a focal point on campus for all students and will be the principal gateway to the old campus from the south."

The Student Union will be built where Emerson Field is now. Since it will be so close to Lenoir Hall and the Pine Room, it will contain no eating facilities, but will have a snack bar and a banquet hall to be catered from Lenoir Hall.

The Book Exchange will be between the other two new buildings. All the books and supplies that students and faculty will need can be bought here. Bull's Head Book Shop, now in the library, will be moved to the Book Exchange in order to give the library more space and to put all books under one roof. The building will be well-arranged and spacious.

These three buildings will be separate, but will be tied together with patios and walks. They will be ready for use by the Spring of 1966.

The new Cameron Morrison Residence Hall is already under construction behind the hospital. It will complete the triangle, begun by Craige and Ehringhaus Dorms.

The new dorm will house 925 men and will be 10 stories high. Its basic design will be like the other two, except for the height. The ground floor will contain a snack bar, rooms for the housemaster and his wife, mail boxes and study and recreation space. Each floor will have a study room in the central part of the building. The total cost of the dorm will be $2,544,000 and it will be completed by the fall of 1965.

The Harry W. Chase Cafeteria will also be ready by the fall of 1965. It will be built in the middle of the triangle formed by Craige, Ehringhaus and Morrison, and will also serve Parker, Avery and Teague.

The William D. Carmichael Jr. Auditorium "will be ready by next commencement, we hope," said Branch. It will be attached to the east side of Woollen Gym and will be able to accommodate more than 9,000 people for basketball games and special occasions. "When chairs are added, up to 11,000 people can be seated comfortably," Branch added.

A hydraulic stage will be built on the west side of the auditorium which can be raised and lowered for special occasions. The contract has been let and the addition will cost $.1,724,923.

Work will begin this summer on an addition to Wilson Hall. More instructional space and labs for research will be added. This project will be completed within two years, at a cost of $1,591,377.

Architects are now working on the design and plans of the front part of Davie Hall, which will be destroyed and rebuilt, beginning next spring. The front part was built in 1908 and is not fireproof, as is the wing which was added in 1925. The building will be used by the Psychology Department.

Renovation of the old part of Phillips Hall will begin this summer, at a cost of $460,000.

Plans are well along on several minor projects which will be completed by September.

Wilson Library will be completely air-conditioned this summer and the ground floor of McNider Hall of the School of Medicine will be renovated.

Additions to the heating plant are necessitated by all the new buildings. This project is now underway and a new boiler has been added to provide steam for new and future buildings. Steam pipe lines to the campus are also being added. No completion date has been set for this $1,380,000 project.

Emerson Field will be moved to across the street from the football practice field, between Avery and Ehringhaus. This is necessary because the Student Union will be built on the present Emerson Field. "If there's room, we hope to add a few more tennis courts, too," said Branch.

Saturday Deadline

Primary Registration Books Are Still Open

There's still time for most Carolina students to register to vote in the May 30 Democratic Primary.

Registration books will close this Saturday in all but 11 of the state's counties. The books will remain open at the homes and businesses of precinct registrars through Friday and will be at polling places Saturday.

That's the word from John Hunt, a Carolina law student, who recently completed a check of registration dates in all North Carolina counties. Hunt is a former official of the National College Young Democrats Club

"A great many students are actually eligible to vote this month, but don't know it," he noted. North Carolina law allows persons who will be 21 years old by November 3rd—the date of the general elections—to vote in the primary.

"This idea that you have to be 21 to vote is just a lot of misinformation," Hunt said.

Married students can usually register in the college town where they live, he said. Single students, however, are expected to register in their home precincts.

"You must have lived in North Carolina for a year prior to the general elections to vote," he added. Absentee ballots are allowed only to military personnel in primary elections.

Registration has closed in 11 counties which have "year-round" registration systems. They are Cumberland, Durham, Forsyth, Gaston, Guilford, Mecklenburg, Stanley, Union, Wake, Wayne and Wilson counties.

Chancellor Gives Awards To Seniors

Seven UNC seniors have been named to receive the top awards given annually by the administration.

The awards were given earlier in the week by Chancellor William B. Aycock in a ceremony in his office.

Whitney Durand, a Morehead Scholar from Chattanooga, Tenn., will receive the John J. Parker, Jr., Award, given to the senior who "has demonstrated most clearly the highest qualities of leadership in perpetuating the spirit of honor and the process of student self-government."

Tom Henley of Pittsboro and Jaene Yeager of Winston-Salem received the Algernon Sidney Sullivan Award, given "to the man and woman of the graduating class who have best demonstrated an attitude of unselfish interest in the welfare of their fellow man."

The Ernest H. Abernethy Award was given to Gary Blanchard and David Ethridge, immediate past co-editors of the Daily Tar Heel. The Abernethy Award goes to the student who has "done the most distinctive work during the year in the field of student publications."

Jorn Christopher, a mathematics major from Detroit, Mich., was given the Eben Alexander Prize in Greek. The award is given to the person who places highest in a sight translation of Greek.

Sarah Elizabeth Parker of Charlotte, an education major, won the Mngum Medal in Oratory. The competition is based on a 10-minute speech and is judged by Dr. Donald Springen, coach of the Debate Team.

Bulletin

The International Students Board announces a full scholarship for one UNC undergraduate to study at the University of Paris, France, for the coming academic year. Any rising junior or senior with two or more semesters of French should apply immediately. Application blanks are available in 216 Dey Hall and the Y-Office. They must be returned by May 25; selections will be made on May 28.

GYM BASKETS

Will all students please turn in their gym baskets at the basketroom in Woollen Gym. All baskets will be cleaned out at the end of summer ,school so each student should remove all personal equipment (shoes, etc.) before leaving school.

New baskets will be assigned at the beginning of the fall semester.

UNC Press Club Banquet Saturday At Schraft's Inn

The UNC Press Club will have its tenth annual awards banquet at Schraft's Country Inn on Saturday evening.

Richard Harkness, NBC news commentator, will be guest speaker. Harkness has been with NBC in Washington since 1943, covering Capitol Hill, the White House and the State Department.

Journalism scholarships will be awarded and members of Kappa Tau Alpha, journalism honor society, will be initiated. Awards to the outstanding senior man and woman will be presented by Sigma Delta Chi.

Dona Fagg, Press Club President, urges all journalism students to attend the banquet.

UP Elects Executive Committee

Jeff Adams, John Roney, Jean Renfrow, John Mundy, and George Ingram were elected to the University Party's Executive Committee in the party's annual election held last Tuesday.

Adams, who replaced Mike Chanin last November, was re-elected as party chairman.

Roney, a sophomore from Williamston, was elected as the party's vice-chairman. Roney will also be serving as a resident advisor next year.

Serving as party secretary for the next year will be Jean Renfrow, this year's co-chairman of the Campus Chest Carnival.

The only re-elected officer besides Adams was George Ingram, UP legislative whip, who will serve as Sergeant-at-Arms.

The meeting attracted approximately 75 persons. After the elections, chairman Adams said, "I feel that the newly elected officers will help the UP to continue its growth as the all-campus party. The new members of the Executive Committee are well qualified and exhibit great enthusiasm which will lend to the support of a strong party spirit in the coming year."

GRADUATION INVITATIONS

All those seniors who ordered Graduation Invitations and have not yet picked them up may do so at 206 South Building any time from now to the end of school. If you have not done this please do so as soon as possible.

LAWLER LOOKS BACK

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of thre articles by Student Government reporter John Greenbacker dealing with former Student Body President Mike Lawler and some of the observations he made while serving in office.

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Mike Lawler was battling the first crisis of the 1963-64 academic year before he took office. The controversy of the Apartment Rule had been raging before the inauguration, and the Women's Residence Council's legislating a more liberal rule precipitated what Mike terms "one of the most misunderstood incidents in my experiences with the Administration."

When the WRC legislated the new rule they anticipated the criticism of Dean of Women Kitty Carmichael, but her power to veto WRC legislation had been stricken from the WRC Constitution by an earlier action of the body.

According to Mike, Dean Carmichael didn't know about the loss of her veto power.

"I learned Dean Carmichael would try to veto the new rule as being contrary to the best interests of the students," he said. "I pleaded with Charles Henderson, then Dean of Student Affairs, not to let Dean Carmichael make a statement on the situation. I was unsuccessful."

When the dispute was made public, the Administration and Student Government officials entered into negotiations. The students' plans for a more liberal law never were fully realized.

"When the negotiations began," Mike said, "the then Faculty Committee on Student Discipline heard the arguments. A great proportion of the faculty opinion on the matter was based on superficialities or the minimum amount of information. They didn't get the picture."

Mike charged former Dean Henderson with "lying, openly and blatantly" during the proceedings. "The faculty members were concerned with University relations with the State, their responsibility towards the students and maintenance of a rigid standard of moral conduct. I was concerned with modifying a rule which wasn't respected and setting a reasonable standard for a new generation of young people.

"The only argument the faculty and Administration had was the old law protects the image of the University. They knew it wasn't fulfilling its responsibility.

"One of the most shocking things that evolved during the negotiations was the disillusionment of the students with the faculty involved. The commitee and the Dean showed a lack of ability to handle a touchy situation with tact."

The negotiations produced no real agreement.

THE GAG LAW

"I don't think the Gag Law will be repealed," Mike said. "I think everyone knows how the law was passed and why we are against it. It is hard to say what will happen to it, but I think it will be amended and the substance of the bill placed in the hands of the University Trustees.

"I wish I could tell what they will do."

INTEGRATION

During the past year, Mike was forced to take several actions concerning the pressing problem of civil rights in Chapel Hill.

When the question of discrimination by local merchants against University students arose, Mike, at his own admission, pondered the problem for an entire month before taking a stand. He is still being criticized for it.

"I talked with students, merchants and townspeople before urging the students to join me and stop patronizing segregated establishments.

"Merchants were discriminating on an unjust basis, not by clothing or conduct, but by color. Legally this is the merchant's right, because there has been no decision on a state or federal level which says he doesn't have it.

"However, this doesn't mean that we as students aren't morally bound to seek a solution on these grounds. We are under the strongest obligation to seek equal service for all students on campus, and a withdrawal of economic support as a means of expressing solidarity seemed a good recourse.

"A minority of people, Clark Crampton, Armistead Maupin and Borden Parker, utilized the situation and distorted it for political and personal reasons. They distorted my statement and the resolution Legislature passed.

"Whether a boycott will accomplish its purpose or not, it still must be presented as an issue to grapple with, not an emotional one to argue about.

"I favor a referendum on this problem, but I think it should be held in the fall, when the new freshmen are here and the vote will be more significant to local merchants. At that time it can be handled properly.

Mike opposes the manner in which many pieces of controversial

Mrs. Rose Kennedy To Be Here Sunday

Thousands Expected At Kenan

Mrs. Rose Kennedy, mother of the late President John F. Kenndy, will be in Chapel Hill Sunday to receive North Carolina's contribution ot the Kennedy Memorial Library.

The anticipated $250,000 gift will be presented Sunday afternoon in ceremonies at Kenan Stadium. Hugh Morton of Wilmington, State Chairman of North Carolina's tribute to President Kennedy, said that Mrs. Kennedy might be accompanied by her son-in-law, Stephen E. Smith of New York, national coordinator of the Kennedy Library campaign; or by her son, Massachusetts Senator Ted Kennedy.

The University band will play for the program and the Rev. Billy Graham will deliver the tribute message. Gov. Sanford and Secretary of Commerce Luther Hodges will also speak.

The names of all persons attending the tribute will be taken from ticket stubs and turned in to the Library with the cash gift from the people of the State.

A full-color movie will be made of the hour-long ceremonies for presentation to Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy and to the Library—a $10 million research and leadership training facility to be built at Harvard University.

The mother of the late President visited Chapel Hill on her campaign tour in behalf of her son in the fall of 1960. She is expected to arrive by air Saturday afternoon for her second visit to Chapel Hill.

Orange County Campaign Chairman Roland Giduz said that the local drive had more than passed the half way mark toward its goal of $2,500 from the sale of $10 tickets to the tribute program.

He said he was certain that the goal would be met. The tickets will be on sale through

JAPAN-AMERICA

West coast-bound students intersted in international relations are urged to apply for the Japan-America Student Conference which will be held June 12 through June 17 at Reed College, Portland, Oregon.

The conference will consist of 77 Japanese delegates and 77 United States delegates. UNC has been allotted two of the 77 U.S. delegates.

Any student who is interested in the conference is urged to call Student Government, 933-1257 for information regarding the conference.

Moore Visits Here May 19

Gubernatorial candidate Dan Moore will visit Chapel Hill and Carrboro next Tuesday, May 19. The announcement was made by Judge Moore's Chapel Hill-Carrboro campaign chairman, R. B. Fitch Jr.

Judge Moore will begin his visit at 8:30 a.m. at the Carrboro Town Hall. From there he will walk through Carrboro and Chapel Hill as far as the Chapel Hill Post Office.

On the way, he will spend about an hour at his West Franklin Street headquarters, starting at 10 a.m., talking informally with visitors there.

All citizens are invited to meet Judge Moore at his headquarters. He has expressed a particular interst in meeting people of the Chapel Hill area because of his long association with the University. He was an undergraduate and law student here during the 1920's.

After the reception at his headquarters, Judge Moore and a group of his supporters will continue the tour of the Town.

Playmakers Present Capers On Saturday

The Carolina Playmakers will hold their annual capers and award night activities here Saturday. The once-a-year-night, in which Playmakers students have an opportunity to satirize the staff and the season, will include spoofs on all the major of the 1963-64 season. These include "Little Mary Hoo-Ha," "Long, Long, Long, Long, Long . . ." "The Busy Measle," "B. S.," and "The Faggot Soldier."

Curtain time for the capers is 8 p.m.; there is no admission charge and the public is invited to attend.

SL: Party Politics And Petty Politics

There has been a good bit of criticism of President Spearman's appointments of committee chairmen, but the real issues have been so often lost in the mire of partisan politics that little has been done in a constructive manner.

For instance, consider the furor several members of the Student Party raised over the appointment of Clark Crampton to be co-chairman of the Communications Committee. Crampton, a conservative who had circulated a petition opposing Mike Lawler's boycott resolution, was brought under fire in the Ways and Means Committee as well as before SL.

Certainly the only reason the SL faction opposed Crampton was that he had worked actively against them in the spring elections. He did a great deal of work for the University Party, some of which, to be sure, was not exactly cricket.

Crampton followed the presidential candidates from meeting to meeting, and he was usually there to question SP candidate Paul Dickson, especially on his stand on Public Accommodations.

But Crampton had done excellent work with the somewhat laggard State Affairs Committee, and his experience there more than qualified him for the Communications Committee chairmanship.

But several SP stalwarts managed to raise enough cain to create all sorts of suspicions on all sides and waste enough time to have three referendums .

By no means was the Student Party at fault every time — the University Party contributed their share. But until the legislature gets off its partisan horse it will bog down time and again. The only time the two parties have shown any sign of unification was on the boycott poll, and then they managed to pull through a bad bill.

So your Student Legislature has wandered along on a ripple of suspicion—neither party can trust its members, and when they get together it looks like a cross between a Chinese fire drill and an intra-squad game of the New York Mets.

Legislature's year has ended—only a few minor details remain, and next fall they will return with a clean slate and, hopefully, a new lease on life. The events on the fourth floor of New East since elections can be chalked up to experience, and our leaders can do the excellent job of which they are capable.

Legislators have too much responsibility to act in a petty manner, and we hope they will work for the good of the entire campus rather than for the good of the Student Party versus the University Party, or vice versa.

Old East Makes A Private Protest

When the residents of Old East hall voted earlier this week to hold their annual banquet at the segregated Pines Restaurant, they may well have provided campus observers with a sort of emotional barometer by which to gauge certain aspects of the local civil rights controversy. That is, if we assume that the men living in Old East reflect somewhat the attitudes prevalent in other similar campus groups, we may draw one or two unscientific conclusions from their behavior.

The first conclusion is that Old East residents, like many others, observe a code of conduct in dealing with racial matters that is bound closely by regulations and special circumstances. We refer to the statement by an Old East spokesman that "the Pines would not have been considered if there had been a Negro resident of Old East." Such remarks seem to indicate that those who favored the Pines did so because they felt that they were not directly affected by the question of equal service. That is, they realize some sort of obligation to stand up for the Negro if he is part of the situation, but they do not extend this obligation to their conduct apart from him. This seems to be the sort of minor hypocrisy that we engage in when we refrain from swearing while a minister is present,but it is a form of hypocrisy.

The spokesman for Old East also noted that the executive committee, in making its initial decision, had considered carefully the clause attached to the student budget which prohibits the expenditure of Student Government-allocated funds at segregated establishments. "Since our money came from dorm social fees and not from Student Legislature, the clause did not apply to us," the spokesman said. He continued that the clause would have been obeyed had it applied. Again, we have a bit of rationalization on the part of those making the decision.

Presumably, those involved have a basic respect for the Student Legislature's attempt to protect every student by making the misuse of his funds an Honor Council offense. They would abide by the clause if it applied directly, but they do not wish to extend its intent by applying the principle where the law itself falls short.

Of some note is the fact that the dorm officials held a meeting of all the Old East residents in order to allow them to express their opinions on the matter. Approximately twenty-five per cent of the residents present voted against the Pines, and some of these indicated they would picket the banquet if it were held there. The majority ruled, however, and the banquet was set for the Pines. The minority complained that their money was being spent without their consent, and were left to picket if they saw fit.

Because we feel that the Old East residents have a basic understanding of the racial question, as manifested by their willingness to abide by the "rules" if they apply directly, we tend to take the "anti-Negro" criticism leveled at them with a grain of salt. A student poll or referendum on the boycott, had one been held, would probably have yielded much the same results—individuals will make their decision and vote on the basis of how they feel the segregated establishments affect them personally. Thus it appears that in expressing their attitudes, the residents were attempting to show their own feelings and not to vote against the Negro and his wish for equal service.

In speaking for themselves as they voted, however, the majority should have been aware that those for whom they did not speak had to be carefully considered. They beg that they not be picketed, they cry "stop the demonstrations," and they ask for common sense in dealing with integration. But common sense applies to everyone, all the time, and should not be demanded only of the extremists. We do not feel that Old East houses only extremists, but we cannot help but feel that in attempting to express their individual feelings above all else, they have enclosed themselves in a fence of circumstances and special treatment, and thus have added some fuel to a fire of controversy.

A Student Success . . .

Bruce Cooper, at 19, was the youngest person in the nation to found a high school YMCA (Hi-Y).

The 21-year-old graduate student in English, dormitory advisor, and past president of the YMCA, from Winston-Salem, is also the only Jew to ever head a YMCA. He established the first integrated Hi-Y in the South.

He founded the first Hi-Y at Chapel Hill High School when he was a sophomore in college "because so many of the kids were getting into trouble."

He described other Hi-Ys in the South as conservative and selective. "They are like closed fraternities with only 30 of 600 or 700 applicants getting in.

"When I started one here, I wanted it open," he said.

Bruce has become the last person to which boys turn in troubled times. One asked him to tell the boy's parents that his girl friend was pregnant. He did and then attended the wedding.

There are other problems—drinking, bad driving, thefts and even three students mixed up in a bomb scare.

"Because of the open membership, it means that you get some of the lower element," he said, "but that's what we want."

Chapel Hill High School is integrated and so is the Hi-Y. Along with the junior Hi-Y at Guy B. Phillips Jr. High, which Bruce also founded, they are the only two integrated Hi-Ys in the South. This causes problems.

Many white members from Carrboro left the Hi-Y when Negro children were allowed to join.

"This is a shame," Bruce said, "because they were the ones that needed it most."

The Senior Hi-Y wanted to rent a cabin at Myrtle Beach for the weekend with money that had been raised through various projects, but it occurred to Bruce that the beach was segregated.

He called a meeting of the executive committee to try and find some solution. The first reaction was stubborness. The boys said they would not go unless the two Negroes could come also.

Some got violent and talked about "tearing the place up" if their friends were not allowed to accompany them. Bruce restored order and suggested they try to go anyway without mentioning the two Negroes.

To save hurt feelings, both were forewarned there might be trouble. The entire group decided to take their chances.

On the bright side of the racial problem, Bruce had been told by a civil rights leader in Chapel Hill not to expect any of his Negro members of the Jr. Hi-Y at a meeting one afternoon because there was a civil rights rally at a local church.

When he got to his meeting, Bruce was shocked to find every Negro member there.

"It's very gratifying that they have time to be boys," he said.

"Our program is not what we call sophisticated yet," he remarked. "We had a professor in health education come and talk on sex and Lt. Creel of the Chapel Hill Police force spoke about the stress the force was under during the racial demonstrations, and on other problems.

Bruce is tall, dark and handsome. He is articulate, friendly and intelligent. He is also dedicated to those who are less fortunate than himself.

Polls And The Pines

Burden Claims "No" Vote, Too

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

This letter is written to correct a statement made in Saturday's Tar Heel concerning the referendum (or poll) on the boycott (or patronage) bill passed by the Student Legislature at its last session. The statement—". . . and the bill passed with only Hays dissenting" is in error. I dissented also! Now let me clarify my reasons for dissention.

Although I am very much in favor of giving the student body an opportunity to express their feelings on this controversial issue, I am not in favor of unconstitutional, haphazard, or hasty legislation; and the amended bill passed last Thursday night seems to fall into all three categories. The bill calls for ". . . the President of the Student Legislature to charge the Communications Committee to poll the students . . .", but the Communications Committee does not exist. As of Thursday night it had not been appointed, much less approved by Student Legislature. What is more, the bill was not considered as it now reads for more than fifteen minutes. At 10:30 Mal King introduced the "Spearman - Dickson" amendment; at 10:45, the bill was passed and adjournment was called for. The King amendment, of course, completely changed the content of the bill. Student leaders have deprecated for two years the "hasty legislation" involved in the passage of the Speaker Ban Bill; and yet these same leaders encourage the legislature to pass in fifteen minutes an important and politically volatile piece of legislation which may well be unconstitutional.

Although I do not expect to agree at all times with Representative Arthur Hays, SP floorleader, I admire him for his coolheaded and thoughtful actions of last Thursday night. He fulfilled his duty and responsibilities with the utmost regard not only for his constituents but also for the Student Constitution and Student Government at Carolina. Had more people done so, the bill would have been more thoroughly and responsibly considered and not passed in its present jargonic and chaotic state.

In conclusion, let me say once again that I am in favor of a meaningful, rational, and constitutional bill concerning a referendum on this issue. The Student Legislature was confronted with a difficult question last Thursday night. A question that was two-fold—to represent their constituency by giving them a "poll", or to represent their constituency by upholing the Student Constitution and giving due and thorough consideration to legislation.

Joyner Protests Old East Vote

Editors, The Tar Heel:

A majority of the Residents of Old East have voted to have dinner for the dorm at the Pines restaurant. These who favor this action have chosen to ignore the wishes of many students of the University, many statesmen sent into the world by this University, many human beings over this whole world. They have impugned the integrity of the student body and the abiding spirit of the hall where they reside. There were arguments that the Pines made the best deal. Who would "deal" economically with moral justice? There were arguments that, since no Negro lived in Old East, no Negro would be affected by the dorm's patronizing the Pines. Who can rightfully weigh individual circumstances equally with the rights of man? The action taken by Old East is selfish, uncooperative and immoral. Jesus Christ would spit upon the cullinary impropriety shown by these who are here to "learn." Marx would roar with delight at the dissension caused by those who place rebelliousness immeasurable distances away from proper cause for rebellion.

Not enough could possibly be said to sum up the pain in the hearts of those few in Old East who were outside the Pines last night and showed that this decision against the Rights of Man is, by no means, unanamous.

Party Jump Ahead?

B JOHN CHAMBERLIN
In The Cincinnatti Enquirer

NEW YORK'S Sen. Jacob K. Javit's broad hint that he and other Republican liberals might "take a walk" if Barry Goldwater is the party's nominee for President has flustered Republican pros no end. It's just the sort of thing that "isn't done," the simple reason being that the "dissidence of dissent," when expressed in such fashion before a national convention, invites tremendous reprisals after the convention is over.

This is a ticklish subject on which nobody who lives or dies by politics likes to be quoted by name, for, in professional circles, it involves flirting with political treason. But one prominent conservative said on the day after Senator Javits' press conference at the Hotel Benson in Portland, Ore.: "Javits is leading with a glass chin. The Republicans have far more to fear from a nationwide conservative bolt than they have to fear from a slackening of support from the tiny liberal bloc represented by Javits."

The conservative then mentioned California, Illinois, Indiana, Texas and various Southern states as holding dynamite for the Republican party if the bolting fever should get out of hand in case of a Goldwater defeat at San Francisco.

The Javits threat points up the fact that the 1964 campaign is already booby-trapped as no campaign within recent memory has been. Potential pitfalls threaten Republicans and Democrats alike, and they exisit on all levels of political activity.

The eHnry Cabot Lodge candidacy, or noncandidacy," can cut two ways, depending on which Republicans you happen to be questioning.

At a Hartford, Conn., gathering of Republicans, John Davis Lodge, the ambassador's brother, posed this question for the press table: "Can the Republican party ignore the demand of the public except at its own peril?"

The question is well taken. On the other hand, anti-Lodge pros argue that public clamor for Henry Cabot Lodge could be mighty deceptive. They point to Republicans in Oregon who are for Lodge "by process of elimination" just because they "don't like his opponents." (The quotes are from reporters on the scene in a state that is in itself considered a booby trap because of its habit of supporting mavericks like Sen. Wayne Morse regardless of the party label.)

The average pro's instinct is to distrust any man who can be called a "spoiler." In the '30's, when the beloved Al Smith "took a walk" away from Franklin Roosevelt, the pros among the Democrats failed to follow him even though they respected him.

With reference to the Javits threat, one pro says: "Javits should consider what happened to Sen. Irving Ives in New York State. Ives threatened to repudiate the ticket in 1952 in case Bob Taft was the Republican nominee. The voters remembered this later on when he was running against Harriman for governor of New York. Harriman beat him when Queens County Republicans stayed home in large numbers."

Lodge himself is considered a "spoiler" by the Republican party, who can't forgive him for going along with the tactic of accusing Bob Taft of trying to "steal" convention votes in 1952.

The conservatives see a Lodge candidacy robbing them of a chance to exploit the South Vietnam issue and the anti-Diem coup.

They refuse to take the Lodge portent seriously, regarding it as something in the nature of a desperation diversion on the part of those who want to stop Goldwater at any cost.

They accuse Lodge of being a 1964 "spoiler" whose only effect on the convention can be to set things up for Richard Nixon in case Goldwater can't make it on the second or third ballot.

. . . LBJ Can Lose? . . .

Sometimes, when the political situation is changing rapidly and the people are confused, it is necessary for the thoughtful observers known as pundits to step in and put everything into perspective. This is NOT one of those times.

The political situation has not changed for weeks. In itself, it is much more boring than confusing. But the pundits keep stepping in and putting everything into perspective, anyway. The result is that the people are confused.

We are bold enough to assume that we can't possibly make things any worse by trying to explain away some of this confusion.

Contrary to what you may have been reading, President Johnson is in danger of defeat in November. He has laid himself wide open to attack by any aggressive Republican who is willing to come out in favor of poverty, war, railroad strikes and natural disasters on a broad front.

If the Republicans prefer to be a party of oppostion, they have a golden opportunity to speak out against civil rights, tax relief, economy, home, mother, grandmother, sunny days and the flowers that bloom in the spring.

The opposition should not, however, put any stock in the theory that Johnson is too "corny" for the voters. This is impossible, and the party of Richard Nixon and Checkers should not forget it. Nixon still says, by the way, that he is not a candidate for the nomination, but you can forget that unless you want to make him very angry.

Most people still seem to think Nixon will win the nomination in the end, although the pundits—who tend to be nervous in a crowd of other pundits—are striking off on another tack. They are saying Goldwater may get the nomination after all. We doubt that Goldwater considers this a particularly significant portent. The experts have given the nomination to him and then taken it back a couple of times already, and the rhythm of their thinking probably is something he takes for granted by now.

Goldwater rolls merrily along, losing polls and primaries and gaining delegates.

Every time he drops a few delegates to Lodge, Nixon, Scranton, Rockefeller or a favorite son, he picks up about as many that the others missed. If he goes on distributing his losses and consolidating his gains, he will have a huge lead on the first ballot.

This presents a dilemma to the party. Many thoughtful Republicans believe that Goldwater's nomination would wreck the party. They also believe that failure to nominate him would wreck the party. This gives them a lot to think about.

Whatever happens, the Democrats should not be allowed to say that the Republicans have not had a new idea in 30 years. Just this year they conceived the idea of the mail-order candidate. If the Lodge campaign is even moderately successful, we can expect to see both parties ordering their candidates out of catalogues in 1968.

The plain fact is that Johnson's greatest liability right now is having picked up a dog by the ears. The greatest suspense of the summer ahead will be in watching how he manages to turn it to his own advantage.

And from my seat by dripping trays I'm embarrassingly routed.

Instead of a smile and a few kind words, "WHADDAYA WANT" to me is said.

I meekly answer, "just last week's coffee and some rancid- buttered bread."

The "socialistic IN-groups" make digestion incomplete.
Along with oracles, omnipotents, and aromated heat.

Raleigh is too far away, Eastgate and Durham, likewise.
You see, for transportation means, I'm hurting (car and bike-wise).

I can't afford the Ranch House, the Rat, or even Zoom-Zoom
And I'd starve to death while waiting in the lines of our old Pine Room.

Alas! Brady's place is segregated, the Pines, and Leo's, too.
The folks at Watts will gross you out . . . . What am I to do?

The hunger pangs are coming now, GASP, all too frequently.
But I'm just a common fee-payer, I can't betray your high decree.

I've read it in the Tar Heel: "Carolina Men and Ladies.
Do Not Support Such Backwardness as Leo's, The Pines, and Brady's."

You frown upon fraternities and sororities for doing it.
Then tell me, who am I to make a practice of ensuing it?

So won't you lift your restaurant bans and let me make the rounds?
I've lost a lot—I'm sinking fast—I'm at 97 lbs.!!!

We'd like to say some nice things about America's young adult drivers

And we think we've got good reason! Last January, we selected twenty 18- and 19-year-old young men and women through the Junior Achievement program to drive our team of Chevrolets in the Mobil Economy Run, April 3-9. It was the first time any company had relied entirely on drivers with limited experience in this exacting competition.

We brought these young adults—most of them college students, some from the business world—to Arcadia, California, in late February. For six weeks, our expert teachers trained them in the skills of economy driving. Then, on April 3, they set off on the Run, 3,243 miles from Los Angeles to New York.

We were going against the grain. It takes high proficiency to win the Mobil Economy Run. Competition is tough. Why did we rely on drivers with such limited experience?

Chevrolet wanted to give the Chevy Teen Team a chance to prove in front of the nation that they and the 6.5 million licensed drivers in their age bracket are safe, sane people behind the wheel. We felt the Run offered a splendid chance.

The Corvair, Chevy IIs, Chevelles and Chevrolets driven by the Chevy Teen Team in the Mobil Economy Run did remarkably well compared with the class winners in overall miles-per-gallon figures. The final results are a tribute to the high degree of driving skill displayed by the Chevy Teen Team representing the youth of America.

No wonder we're proud of America's young adult drivers. We couldn't have a better reason.

Trackmen In Carolina AAU Meet Tomorrow

Coach Joe Hilton takes his Tar Heel trackmen to Raleigh tomorrow for the annual Carolinas' AAU track and field championships.

The Tar Heels are fresh from the ACC championships where they finished third. Four Tar Heels won their events, and co-captain Tom Clark set a new record with his high jump of 6-6¾. Besides Clark, Carolina's Nick Street won the javlin, Mike Folk the two mile and Harvey White the 100 and 220 dashes.

All four have excellent chances of duplicating their feats at Raleigh tomorrow. But the Tar Heel who may surprise everyone is freshman Jon Levin. The track record in the 220 dash is 20.2 seconds set by Dave Sime in 1956, but Levin has covered the distance in 20.4 and could do better tomorrow.

Edwin Roberts of North Carolina College is the big name in the event. Roberts has tied the officially recognized world record of 9.2 in the 100-yard dash, and has been clocked at 20.3 seconds in the 220 dash.

Mal Pender and David Williams of Fort Bragg have been clocked at 9.4 and 9.6 respectively in the 100. White, James Bates of North Carolina A & T and Norman Tate of North Carolina College have also had times of 9.6.

With this array of talent the current world records in the 100 and 200-yard dashes could be in jeopardy.

Sime also holds the world record in the 220. He ran the distance in 20.0 seconds at Sanger, Calif. in 1957.

Pender and Williams have been close to that time at Fort Bragg, and along with White, Tate and Bates could cop the honors, or at least push Roberts and Levin close to the world standard.

The State track is considered one of the fastest in the east under normal weather conditions, so Sime's two local marks in the 100 and 220 are likely to fall, even if the world records aren't topped.

Twenty-six teams, including the newly formed North Carolina Track Club featuring Jim Beatty, Cary Weisiger, and John Dunkelberg, have entered men in the meet, for a record total entry list, meet director Frank Murray announced. This year's meet is under the joint sponsorship of North Carolina State and the Raleigh Sports Club, with official Carolinas' AAU sanction.

Field events will start at 2:30, with all finals taking place at that time, except in the pole vault and triple jump. These two events start off the night portion of the program at seven p.m.

Pro Ball Big Jump Says Bull Phenom

By JOHNNY STUBBLEFIELD

Glen Mattison, business administration graduate of Seattle University, believes he has a "good future in professional baseball."

Mattison, 22, a native of Seattle, is the starting shortstop for the Durham Bulls professional baseball club. He was assigned to Durham by the Houston Colt 45's following a spring tryout in Moultrie, Ga.

What is a business administration graduate doing in baseball? "I love it," he said.

Mattison played four years for Seattle U., and during that time compiled a whopping .350 overall batting average.

"Professional baseball is much tougher than college ball. Every team in this league plays a good brand of ball."

A glance at Mattison's present batting average would show the truth in his statement about pro ball being tough. He is currently hitting an anemic .240.

Manager Billy Goodman believes Mattison's hitting will improve, but doesn't think that any player in the Carolina League will hit .350 for the year.

"This league is just too tough for that," he said. "We carry a 19 man roster: five infielders, four outfielders, two catchers and eight pitchers. We have 142 scheduled games a season. This means we'll be playing nearly six nights a week and every Sunday afternoon. If a game is rained out one night, we play a double-header the next to make it up.

"Near the end of the season, the heat and continued play begin to take their toll. A guy would have to be awfully strong to bat .350 for the whole season in this league."

Goodman thinks Mattison's fielding and ball handling will become smoother with experience.

"One thing," said Goodman, "he doesn't charge the ball like he should. He played on 'skinned' (no grass) infields in college. The ball travels much faster on a 'skinned' infield than it does on a grass one. The grass slows the speed of the baseball, therefore it is necessary to charge it.

"Mattison gets a good jump on the ball, but he just hasn't learned to charge it the way he should."

Goodman believes that anyone with the physical qualifications can be a success in baseball. "Baseball is a simple game," he said, "if you can hit the ball, if you can catch the ball and if you can throw the ball."

If the President attends, we welcome any photos or stories on the occasion written by members of the student body.

Invited To Kennedy Tribute

By HUGH STEVENS

The Daily Tar Heel learned late yesterday that a "possibility" does exist that President Johnson will be in attendance at the John F. Kennedy Memorial Service tomorrow afternoon.

Washington sources called the report of Johnson's visit "nothing more than a rumor," and declined to make comment on the basis of the report.

Hugh Morton, chairman of the Memorial Service, indicated yesterday that Johnson "might" be here, but that the decision would not be made before early Sunday.

The decision apparently rests with the President himself, and probably depends on the weather as well as the Washington political situation.

The Memorial Service, featuring an address by Rev. Billy Graham, is designed to raise more than $250,000 for the Kennedy Memorial Library in Massachusetts.

Ted Kennedy, the late President's brother, and Mrs. Rose Kennedy, his mother, are scheduled to attend. Governor Terry Sanford and Commerce Secretary Luther Hodges will also take part in the program.

Tickets sales for the event have been progressing satisfactorily in most areas of the state, according to officials of the event. A number of ticket purchasers probably will be unable to attend, however.

No official announcement is expected on President Johnson before Sunday morning. Students are urged to monitor the state radio stations closely in order to find out the final decision.

Officials of the service indi-

A Blind Man Views UNC

By KAREN PARKER

"Blind people are segregated just like Negroes. If you're different you just don't fit in."

This is the feeling of William Gupton, a blind student from Zebulon who attends the University here.

The 24-year-old Gupton was born with a form of cataracts which were removed when he was a child. For years he had 20-200 vision, the borderline for legal blindness. In 1955 he developed glaucoma, a disease caused by an excessive amount of fluid in the eyeball exerting too much pressure on the optic nerve. In 1962 he became totally blind.

Gupton knew he was going to lose his eyesight for seven years but he didn't give up hope.

"Knowing you're going to be blind is like waiting for death," he said. "You know sooner or later you're going to die, but you don't know when. You don't permit yourself to think about it."

When he learned he had glaucoma he tried to prepare himself for jobs he could handle. He applied for jobs at several radio stations but he was rejected.

In 1960 I decided to enter UNC in the field of education," he said. "I thought maybe I could teach."

He attended UNC as a pre-education student for a year. His vision was poor but he could get around. His grades were good, so he applied for formal admission to the School of Education. It was a long struggle but Gupton finally gained admittance.

In the fall of '61 the infirmary ordered him to withdraw from school because his "health wasn't good" and staying in school would be "detrimental to his physical and emotional health." He stayed out a year and attended the Rehabilitation Center for the Blind at Butner. There he learned to travel independently by cane.

"I had already learned Braille and typing at the State School for the Blind in Raleigh," he said. "My parents sent me there when I was eight. I studied the regular public school curriculum through high school level.

"I really didn't like it there," he said, "because I feel blind students shouldn't be 'segregated' from people who have normal vision. That is taking them out of the mainstream of life. If sighted children and blind children were 'integrated' at an early age it would help eliminate negative prejudices against blind people and improve the emotional attitudes of blind and sighted children. This improved concept among the adults of tomorrow would improve the future employment picture for the blind."

In June of 1962 Gupton underwent an operation for glaucoma. "There was a chance that I would keep my vision a little longer or lose it completely. The operation failed, but I knew I was going blind no matter what I did, so I decided to go down fighting." The Commission for the Blind is helping him through school by providing money for him to employ readers.

His biggest problem is social, he says. "I don't get invitations to social parties. I have to plan my own activities or not have any, except for rare invitations to dinner at private homes."

"I have problems getting dates with girls. I have dated 11 different girls on 24 occasions. All girls aren't scared away. We go to basketball and football games, shows, plays, concerts, programs of various types, and dinner. I enjoy going out with dates and groups of people just like anyone else."

He is most annoyed at people's remarks about him.

"There are always people who'll see me on the street and stop talking when I pass by, clear their throats or gasp. And there are people who make comments.

"I was dating a girl at a basketball game and I heard a boy say, 'Look. She doesn't have very good taste, does she?'

"Once at Memorial Auditorium I heard someone say, 'What is a nice girl like that doing with him? She's wasting her time. She can date anyone she pleases.'

"I asked a girl to a football game and she said, 'William I don't know if you should ask girls to football games or not.'

"I asked her, 'Why not? Girls just don't ask boys.'"

"'You know, the crowds and all,' she said."

"I thought for a minute and wondered why she was saying that. Then I told her I understood. She said she was sorry. I told her I was sorry too and hung up.

"Then there are always people who ask me if I know other blind students on campus. I ask them why, and they answer, 'Well, he's blind too.'

"Not all people act this way toward me. These people are a minority but a very vocal minority.

"The boys in my dorm section are as nice to me as they can be. They are helpful and considerate. I'm just one of the boys and that's the way I'd like it to be."

Gupton has withdrawn from the School of Education and enrolled in the College of Arts and Sciences. "I am going to major in English with emphasis on psychology," he said. "After that I plan to go to graduate school and study rehabilitation of the physically and mentally handicapped."

QUIET HOURS

Twenty-four quiet hours will go into effect Sunday at midnight in all men's residence halls.

Quiet hours will remain in effect until the end of the exam schedule.

2 More Students Put On Probation

Two more students were put on probation for falsifying class rolls and another received two semesters probation for firing a rifle at a lamp post in Men's Council trials Thursday night.

In other cases one student was given an official reprimand for a Campus Code offense at another campus and his friend was found innocent.

Another student, tried in absentia, was given indefinite probation for an auto theft. He is currently in a mental hospital.

In the first case, a sophomore signed a friend's initials to a class roll when the friend was at the beach. The friend, a junior, had asked him to sign him in the day before.

Both students turned themselves in and pleaded guilty. They said that they did not realize that the action was serious enough to be tried by the Council. They claimed they had not read the account of the previous trials on the same subject.

Both students were given one semester probation.

In the firearms case, a student fired his .22 rifle out of the window of his residence at the base of a lamp post in an open area in town.

He had been cleaning the gun late at night and had fired it three times "on impulse."

The shots and their richochets were heard by another student living nearby. He called the police who went to the house where the shots came from.

The student readily admitted that he had shot the gun and was tried and fined in civil court.

The Council found him guilty of a Campus Code offense and gave him two semesters probation, saying that the possible consequences of shooting the gun and the irresponsibility involved made it a serious offense.

In the third case, two students were charged with causing disturbances in a men's dorm at a campus they were visiting.

One was charged with using abusive language in front of a house mother and the other with throwing a waste basket down the hall. The two pleaded innocent.

The first student was found innocent of using abusive language, but the second was found guilty and sentenced to an official reprimand.

The Council told the two students that although their actions would have been regarded lightly at UNC, they had a greater responsibility to act gentlemanly while guests on another campus.

In the final case, a student no longer in school was found guilty of stealing a car and license plates and transporting both across state lines.

He is currently serving a probationary sentence from a civil court and is undergoing psychiatric treatment.

The Council gave him indefinite probation rather than suspension, because it was felt that this sentence would better aid his rehabilitation. The defendant's psychiatric difficulties played a major role in this decision.

A Correction

In yesterday's Daily Tar Heel, several statements attributed to Mike Lawler were actually a misinterpretation by the reporter.

The DTH apologizes to Lawler, Dean Henderson and anyone else who may have been offended, and to set the facts straight we reprint in whole a letter we received yesterday.

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Yesterday's DTH quotes me as charging former Dean Henderson with "lying, openly and blatantly during the proceedings" of the Apartment Rule negotiations. This statement misrepresents my conversation with John Greenbacker.

In our conversation we discussed various aspects of the Apartment Rule "controversy" and the grave difficulty of communication. I related to John that:

(1) Henry Mayer and Walter Dellinger reported a meeting with Dean Henderson immediately prior to our official negotiations; they felt that he did not truthfully answer their questions regarding an earlier meeting with the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

(2) Subsequently, I spoke with Dean Henderson about this matter and the resulting confusion. He felt that he had answered fully.

I cited this example to John of the chaos, complexity and confusion that characterized the entire situation around the Apartment Rule negotiations.

I regret if my remarks have further contributed to the misinformation, faulty communication and lack of understanding that I had intended to dispel.

14-Bill Flurry Ends SL Year

By HUGH STEVENS

Student Legislature, meeting both Wednesday and Thursday nights, acted on 14 pieces of legislation and approved a large slate of presidential appointments to wrap up its business for the year.

Several major financial bills were passed; including:

—A $600 appropriation to the Glee Club to aid in expenses for a World's Fair appearance.

—A $401.10 allotment to Avery, Parker and Teague Halls for the construction of a park near those dormitories.

—A $240 appropriation to defer expenses for the alternate delegates to the National Student Association Congress.

—A $400 appropriation to a newly - created Committee on Campus Radio for the purpose of investigating a "carrier Current" station.

The park appropriation was originally passed on Wednesday night, but was reconsidered and amended on Thursday.

Dave Rendleman (SP) and Sonny Pepper (SP) objected to the inclusion of athletic equipment in the bill as it was originally passed. They said that such action set "a dangerous precedent," as other dormitories could presumably ask to be reimbursed for such equipment.

"The purchase of athletic equipment is a normal function of residence halls," Pepper said, "and I am prepared to ask for a good deal of money to pay for such equipment if the legislature makes it a policy to pay for such things."

The bill was returned to the floor, and some $70 worth of volleyballs, horseshoes, and similar material was stricken from the appropriation. The park itself will provide a recreation area for the PTA area.

Mal King (UP) introduced separate bills to establish the Cam-

LAWLER LOOKS BACK

By JOHN GREENBACKER

As Mike Lawler sees it, Student Government faces its biggest problem in deciding what things are most vital to the Welfare of the Student Body.

"We try to do too many things in one year," he said. "We must establish priorities."

When he considered the goals his administration tried to accomplish while in office, Mike said, "There is no question that during this year we met many frustrations."

Student-Administration Relations

Mike has always felt that the students should have a more active voice in the policy-making of the University.

"The Administration and the Student Body each has an important perspective which should be utilized for the good of the University," Mike said.

"I consulted the Dean of Student Affairs about student representation on policy-making bodies and I received a negative reaction to my proposals.

"I can't accept the idea that students are too immature to evaluate problems and make decisions."

Besides the benefits that a student perspective would offer on administrative committees, Mike also emphasizes some long-range benefits.

"People who have participated in Student Government or worked with the University administration in a leadership capacity usually develop a great sense of institutional loyalty," he said. "They make the best alumnae.

"I would like to see student leaders on administration and faculty committees on a regular basis. The Student Body President should be allowed to sit in on almost every faculty meeting as a more or less permanent member."

Student Government Structure

One of Mike's biggest concerns is over the structure of various Student Government executive branches. He feels some of them, particularly the Attorney General's Staff, should be modified.

"My disagreement with Buzzy Stubbs this year was not over civil rights, as many people thought, but over the Staff and its organization," Mike said.

"I feel the Attorney General should have a smaller and more competent staff and a more active defense council.

"In the past two years judicial matters have been a concern of the students. These were my concerns and they have been manifested in the actions of Whitney Durand.

"In other areas of Student Government more simplification will occur. Bob Spearman will continue this."

Academics and the University

"I think the atmosphere of relations between students and faculty members is dismal. With some exceptions, the faculty is not transmitting itself properly to the students.

"The faculty members are like scholarly cows and the students, Danish milkmaids. The student must milk out information.

"The student must seek out the professor, but the professor must also engage the student.

Mike has observed the workings of the University for four years as a student and he has some set ideas about the University's future.

"As a state university, we must take in all kinds of students. There are many poorly prepared students who could do well here, but somehow they get lost.

"The grading in many departments is very stringent, and we flunk out too many people who have the ability to stay in. These underachievers are often truly creative persons, and too many of them can't get through our General College.

"We are trying to compete with other big state universities in the nation who can more afford to engage big name faculty members. We shouldn't enter an area in which we cannot compete.

"I think the University should strive to be a mass institution with quality, personalized education. More of our money should be diverted into guidance facilities so many of our most able students won't flunk out because college is too much of a change."

Many people on campus and in Student Government would

A Reiteration And An Apology

Yesterday afternoon we were approached by a number of legislators, mostly Student Party, who complained about two items on our editorial page yesterday.

The first was the lead editorial, which was a plea to the legislature to return next year free of partisan politics and work constructively together for the entire campus.

The second was a footnote we added to a letter from Sondra Burden, who protested a news story in Tuesday's DTH saying Arthur Hays had been the only negative vote in legislature on the boycott bill, "I dissented also!", she said. We added a footnote saying we had checked with several legislators and "we are more certain than ever that Hays was the sole vote against . . . ."

Taking them in order, several legislators on both sides, as well as members of the individual parties, felt we were a bit harsh on legislature. The main oppositon came from several Student Party members, who added that we were "obviously biased" against them. They took exception to the example we used —the fight over approval of Clark Crampton as chairman of the Communications Committee — claiming that the editorial was only intended as a slap at their party.

We can't make much comment on the charge we were harsh toward the legislature. We called it as we saw it, and our stand is the same.

As to the business of Crampton's appointment, we can only say that those who took it as a blast at their party are surely looking at everything we write through tinted glasses.

We have been more critical of the SP in the past than we have of their opponents. For one thing, they have been more active and their mistakes have been more plentiful. The University Party has certainly made foolish moves in the past few months, but all were during the tenure of the previous editors and by the time we took office the issues were dead and gone.

The editorial was in no way intended to be a slap at the Student Party alone. True, the example we gave did not put the SP in the best light, but it was the best example available. If the best example had been a "slap" at the University Party, that instead would have been used.

People who try to read between the lines usually find what they are looking for whether it is there or not, and we feel that this is true in this case. If the Student Party is so conscious of its press image, then it is best that they hold closed meetings and let no reporter attend. We further suggest they examine their opposition to Crampton.

They claim their opposition was only because they felt Crampton was not qualified. The best reason we could get from one of their leaders was that he did not have any journalistic experience.

On what this was based, we do not know. Crampton was never asked if he had experience (he does) except in a hearing before the Ways and Means Committee, which recommended his approval with but one dissenting vote.

As for our implication that Miss Burden had lied, we have little proof other than the amount we garnered previously. We made every attempt to contact her before the letter was sent to the printer's, but our paths never crossed.

She told us yesterday that she had voted for the bill. We did not hear her, and we readily admit she could have said it in a low voice, as she claims. No one heard her if she did. We were no more than 10 feet away, and several people who were even closer did not hear her.

But a voice vote is exactly that, and no minimum is placed upon the volume. Why Miss Burden did not speak loudly and clear (or even softly and clearly) on such an important issue is beyond us, and we hope in the future she will follow the lead of Arthur Hays, whose lone voice was heard by all in the tomb-like room.

In any case, we tender our apologies to Miss Burden for not hearing her quiet "nay", and we admit to having done something which was certainly not in the best of taste.

Monday's editorial page will carry several letters from irate Student Party members, and we urge you to read them carefully and consider all sides. The actions of Student Legislature effect every student, and we will continue to do our best, not only in coverage but in comment.

But, as always, we will present all sides of every issue to the students.

The Student Party should rest assured that we did not intend the editorial to be a "slap", but they should also remember, as should the UP, that we will criticize any action taken which we think is wrong or could injure the campus.

The North Carolina Volunteers Choose

After pouring through over 700 applications, the North Carolina Volunteers have finally made their decision on the 100 students who will fight the war on poverty in 10 depressed areas of the state this summer.

The ten, Carl Adams, Audrey Bunce, Steve Dennis, Whitney Durand, Dave Entin, John Freas, Darst Murphy, Katherine Parrish, Tim Ray, Suzi Sterling, Jim Stovall and Penn Szittya, are headed for a great experience.

The job they and their 88 compatriots do will determine the future of the Volunteers, which we believe to be an excellent idea and probably a benefit to the state.

The 12 chosen represent a good cross-section of the campus, and we are confident in their ability. Many qualified students were left out, but we are sure they realize the limit of 100 was bound to disappoint some.

So our congratulations, as well as best wishes, go to those who were selected, and our appreciation to the rest for their interest.

To Roland Giduz

Open Letter Cites Contradictions

(An open letter to Roland Giduz, editor of the News of Orange County and member of the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen).

Dear Mr. Giduz:

A number of persons in this community were somewhat surprised to find you heading the Kennedy Memorial Fund in Orange County. From your actions and statements, both as an Alderman and as editor of The Orange County News you scarcely seems to be in sympathy with some of the ideals for which Mr. Kennedy stood. As you know, Robert Kennedy and Ted Kennedy, and also President Johnson, have publicly stated that there could be no more fitting memorial to President Kennedy than the enactment of the present Civil Rights Bill. That bill was sent to the Congress by President Kennedy, who left no room for doubt that he considered its enactment essential to the moral integrity and the social well-being of our nation. The public accommodations section of that bill probably has more widespread support than any other section and is least objectionable to those Senators who are now filibustering against the bill's passage. Scarcely four months ago you had an opportunity to help pass a comparable public accommodations ordinance for Chapel Hill. In doing so, you would have been helping to realize, on a local level, the ideals for which President Kennedy worked so hard. Such an ordinance would by no means have answered all the deep-seated problems which are involved in racial injustice, but it would have shown that there was serious intent to bring those injustices to an end and would have constituted a most appropriate beginning of a living tribute to the memory of President Kennedy here in Chapel Hill. Rather than helping enact that ordinance, however, you were second to none in obstructing its passage.

The persistent failure of the Board of Aldermen to take effective action in dealing with racial injustice in our community led certain groups, in desperation, to resort to acts of civil disobedience. In righteous indignation, and perhaps in embarrassment as an Alderman, you proceeded in numerous editorials to denounce such actions, as well as the motives and character of some of those involved. Condemning civil disobedience is an easy way of proving one's moral sensitivity and one's appreciation for social harmony; it requires as much imagination and courage as does condemning capitalism in Moscow. Your denunciations of civil disobedience, however, were unaccompanied by any serious expression of concern for the injustices giving rise to those demonstrations. With regard to the legitimate grievances of the Negro citizens of this community, you remained conspicuously silent. Your moral izing has thus appeared superficial at best and at worst hypocritical. People who knew you as a "Tar Heel" editor considered your editorials in those days to be courageous and forward-looking. Such a past makes your present journalistic performance all the more disappointing.

It is possible that you favor civil rights legislation on a national level while opposing a public accommodations ordinance for Chapel Hill. You may be among those who prefer to have the federal government take responsibility for those matters which require more resources, of money or courage, than the leadership of small communities can muster. Possibly you feel that the problems are too difficult to yield to the efforts of local authorities. Perhaps nothing can be done but appoint committees and hope that the hearts of men shall inexplicably be changed. But can a person with serious concern find no more effective alternatives? If you are not in favor of the Civil Rights Bill, can you not attempt to explain your position so that we may interpret your actions in a more honorable light? Do you not sometimes feel called upon, between editorial sallies against demonstrators, to make known your views concerning the really serious problems that still remain in Chapel Hill? If you support the principles for which President Kennedy lived and died, then why did you vote against the public accommodations ordinance for Chapel Hill? And if you do not support those principles, would it not have been more appropriate to let fall to one who does support them the task of heading locally the fund in his commemoration?

Sincerely,

William Wynn

Goldwater Still Alive

By STU EIZENSTAT

Anti-Goldwaterites, of both Republican and Democratic persuasion, note with considerable glee that the Senator is running a poor third in the public opinion polls to Henry Cabot Lodge and Dick Nixon. They point with pride to his loss in New Hampshire, to his unimpressive win over Margaret Chase Smith in the Illinois primary, and to the fact that he will probably lose the Oregon primary.

However, Goldwater enthusiasts may yet have the last and most important laugh. The "people" do not nominate the Republican candidate for President, the Republican Convention does, and it is becoming clear that unless a major roadblock appears, Goldwater will has amassed enough initial strength to give him the 655 delegate total he needs for the nomination, possibly on the second ballot.

Working quietly and efficiently behind the scenes, the Senator's organization is concentrating on the various state conventions which nominate most of the delegates to the Republican National Convention. The delegates are generally more conservative than the Republican rank and file, and thus Goldwater is making considerable headway; he now has almost 300 of the necessary 655 in "his pocket;" this does not include many delegates who are pledged to vote for favorite sons on the first ballot, but who will throw their votes to the Arizonian on the second ballot.

The key to the nomination probably lies in the California primary in which Goldwater and Rockefeller are the sole candidates. California has a huge 86-man delegation whose weight will be greatly felt at the Convention. The psychological effect of a Goldwater win in the nation's most populous state will quite possibly throw the nomination to the Senator.

Mr. Goldwater is currently leading in the opinion polls in California, and the only chance to defeat him there may lie in Rockefeller's ability to get moderates Nixon, Scranton and Lodge to suppost him—so far they have been leary to do this.

If Goldwater does win the California primary, former President Eisenhower, the titular head of the GOP and a moderate, may be the only thing between the Senator and nomination.

Although he refuses to comment Ike knows that if the conservative Senator gets the nomination he will control the party for four years, which would spell an end to Ike's cherished Modern Republicanism.

Thus, although we might wish to, we should not take Goldwater too lightly. The fact that the Republican voters do not like him does not necessarily mean he will not emerge as the Republican candidate for President..

. . . And besides, I'd be able to hear Billy Graham for Free . . .

Slowdown In Registration

(From the Greensboro Daily News)

Any evidence of hanky-panky at the registration table is appropriate ammunition for those whose design is not so much the assurance of a ballot to all qualified persons as federal control of elections.

Recent charges and countercharges in Halifax County must be viewed in that light. North Carolina has no use for Mississippi-style voter registration; and in fact the state has laws of its own severely forbidding interference with the registration process. It ought to be able to enforce these laws without the intervention of the Justice Department, the FBI, or any federal officers other than judges. For when such intervention is needed, anywhere in the state, the more zealous proponents of the civil rights bill gain another talking point—and a valid one.

The exact merits of the dispute are unclear. At stake is the vague question, "How slow is too slow? " The head of a Negro registration project has charged that registrars at several polling places in Halifax County (where there are 11 Negro candidates for office) tried to stall Negro registration. That Judge John Larkins has now directed registrars to take no more than five minutes with each potential voter lends some weight to the charge.

If North Carolina is to have a literacy requirement—and fairly enforced, it is a sensible requirement — it ought to be stringently and uniformly applied. But it shouldn't take a diligent registrar all day long to find whether a suitable level of literacy is present.

When registrars stray from performance of duty into protraction of duty, the result can be harassment. And harassment of potential voters cannot be tolerated in this state.

War Is 'New Wine' Spring Topic

By HENRY McINNIS

("New Wine," A Christian Journal of Opinion, Issue on War, Volume 2, No. 3, Spring, 1964)

"I have chosen this time and this place to discuss a topic on which ignorance too often abounds and the truth is too rarely perceived . . . yet it is the most important topic on earth: world peace."

These ringing words begin an article by the late John F. Kennedy, contained in the magazine "New Wine," a Christian journal of opinion published by the Westminster Fellowship of the Presbyterian Church here.

In this issue, war is the subject, following previous issues on sex, race, death and love (all the things that make life worth living).

As might be expected, the Kennedy article, entitled "World Peace," leaps far beyond all the others in quality, intellect and sheer beauty of language. The article is an address he made June 10, 1963, at the American University at Washington, D. C., shortly before he was assassinated.

With the irony that comes out of that tragic event, Kennedy says: "Every thoughtful citizen who despairs of war and wishes to bring peace, should begin by looking inward — by examining his own attitude toward the possibilities of peace (for too many of us think it is impossible), toward the Soviet Union, toward the course of the Cold War and toward freedom and peace at home."

The late Presient wrote that we need not accept the view that peace is unreal because to do so is to accept a dangerous, defeatist belief. "It leads to the conclusion that war is inevitable . . . that mankind is doomed . . . that we are gripped by forces we cannot control."

The topics he ranges over eloquently include our common interests with the Soviets, cold war attitudes, the United Nations as a world security system, no special deals with the Soviets, world law and arms control, announcement of test ban treaty talks and a moratorium on arms, the incomplete nature of U.S. freedom, and the risks of the test ban treaty.

The acting chairman of the UNC Department of Political Science, Raymond Dawson, authors "The New Shape of War," a study of the Twentieth Century predicament in which the political leaders of this generation join together in deploring war and declaring that it must not happen because as Eisenhower has said, "There is no alternative to peace." Dr. Dawson discusses the perils of living in the Cold War and declares that "an informed awareness of the issues at stake and a vigorous discussion of policy alternatives is essential to our living with these problems and intelligently dealing with them. This is the task of this issue of 'New Wine.' "

"A Case for Graduated Unilateral Disengagement," by Charles Osgood, director of the Institute of Communications Research at the University of Illinois, attempts to analyze "some of the dynamics or human thinking which, paradoxically, are driving us in a direction we do not wish to go." He tries to evaluate the goals of our nation in terms of "what are we fighting for?" Distinguishing between two different wars and opponents, he cites the "hot war" with Russia as a nation and the U.S. goal of survival. Secoodly he points to the "cold war" conflict with communism and other totalitarian systems, a war fought within and across the borders of nations and in men's minds.

Osgood pleads for a "rational" policy in which the arms-race spiral is reduced and the tensions reversed. He also suggests maintaining the peace, because among other obvious values, "our way of life flourishes in peacetime and the totalitarian way in wartime."

"Question: How do porcupines make love? The answer: Carefully!" This is the provocative beginning to the article "The Church and War . . . Justice in War," by Paul Ramsey, professor of Christian ethics at Princeton.

Ramsey writes: "This is a parable of the nations in a multi-national world. They can't get along with and they can't get along without one another. They make love and reach settlements . . . all, carefully!" Examining general principles, he contends there is nothing more like a pacifist than a believer in massive deterence: both think it possible t banish the use of force from human history before banishing the "porcupine nation-states" from off the planet.

The rather ambiguously titled article, "A Christian Approach to Nuclear War," was based on a recent statement by a group of theological professors in a proposed revision of the World Council of Churches study document on war in the atomic age. Love is described as the distinctly Christian way of dealing with evildoers and overcoming injustice and violence. However, as is so often the case with theologians, they assumed what is "good" and "evil," "love" and "salvation" on a black and white basis, minus the essential grays that most nearly represent man and the human dilemma to be dragged like slaves in the wake of history plunging to its doom but to be the messengers and servants of Christ who is the Lord of history and the victor over the demonic forces in it."

This last quotation shows the difficulty involved in using religious terms and symbols that virtually no one understands, in essence, or cares about, outside the hallowed walls of Harvard, Yale and Princeton Divinity Schools. To strike out beyond the cliches and myths of the Christian ethic is to begin to pry the profound from the superficial in this typically vague but notable religious article. Readers will do well to unravel its own peculiar mysteries and expressions, too many of which are unnecessary and redundant, on close inspection.

Other articles include these subjects: "Why I Am a Pacifist," by William A. Lofquist; "Watch That First Step," by Alex McIntyre; the superb and charismatic "Why Is the Church Silent," by Presbyterian minister Vance Barron; reviews of the exceptional movies on war: "Dr. Strangelove," by Peter Harkness; and "Hiroshima Mon Amour," by Henry Woodhead; and reviews of the books: "Fail Safe" (Eugene Burdick and Harvey Wheeler), by Timothy Ray; "Morning in Antibes" (UNC's Writer in Residence, John Knowles), by Sue F. Ross, "The New Testament Basis of Pacifism" (G. H. C. Macgregor), by C. A. Webster, Jr., "The Warfare State" (Fred J. Cook), by Warren Ogden, "On Thermonuclear War" (Herman Kahn), by Fred Rawlings, "The War Game" (Irving Horowitz), by Jack Maddex, and a poem, "View from the Ark," by Norman Corwin.

"New Wine" on war can be purchased at major campus locations for $.75 and at the Student Center of the Presbyterian Church.

The bills passed with little opposition.

Several other bills and resolutions were considered. The body voted $20 for the Kennedy Library Fund, asked for better parking facilities for Ehringhaus Hall, and voted to confer with the D. Phi over the rental costs of the legislative hall.

When Mike was asked this question, he leaned back in his chair, looked at the ceiling and smiled. "I'm still analyzing the past year.

Awards Presentations End Mural Season

By BILL LEE

Award presentations have been made for the 1963-1964 intramural season to outstanding teams, players and managers.

The Annual Organizational Championship Award goes to the team leader in each division. In the fraternity blue division, the Phi Delts took the award for firsts in tag football, track, handball and badminton. DKE took the frat white division award with firsts in handball, badmiton and high finishes in all other areas of competition.

The NROTC won the award for the dormitory division, gaining firsts in wrestling and tennis and finishing high in all other events. In the graduate division, the Medical School won tag football, table tennis and softball to edge out the Physics grads for the coveted award.

The Winning Managers Award goes to the managers whose team finished first in the point system activities of each division. Richard E. Jones of Phi Delta Theta took the trophy in the frat blue division, and Norris Barnes of Delta Kappa Epsilon won the trophy in the grad division for his work with the Medical School.

The Kay E. Lewis Award goes to the manager in each division, who, in the opinion of the intramural staff, has accomplished the best job with the personnel and organizational problems with which he started the year's intramural competition.

This year, the award in the Fraternity Division went to Winston Hollingsworth of Kappa Psi. Through Winston's leadership, the intramural program at Kappa Psi developed tremendous spirit which was partly shown by the rise from tenth to third in the frat white division. In the residence halls' division, the award went to Jim Stuart of Alexander. Under Jim's management, Alexander displayed spirit and sportsmanship of the highest quality in intramural competition. Howard Homesley won the graduate division's Kay E. Lewis award by displaying fine leadership in geting the medical students into participation on a large scale.

The Grail Award is presented to the individual in each division who wins the highest number of individual participation points during the year. Max Boxley of Phi Delta Theta won the fraternity award over his own teammate Bill Link. Howard Homesley took the graduate division Grail Award, while John Burton of Alexander compiled the largest number of points in the history of the award to barely edge Tommy Dial of Everett.

The Walter Rabb Organizational Participation Trophy is awarded to the organization compiling the best participation record throughout the school year. Physics, a small but able unit, took the award for the second straight year in the Graduate division. 100% participation in winning Alexander Dormitory compiled the award for the residence hall division. In the fraternity division, Lambda Chi Alpha started early in the year and put added emphasis to participation to win the trophy.

Heels Prepare For Playoffs

The UNC Tar Heels are on a short warm-up trip this weekend as they prepare for the NCAA playoffs, meeting Davidson last night at Gastonia and VPI today at Blacksburg, Va.

The playoffs begin in Gastonia the 28th, and run as a double elimination tourney through the 30th. Carolina's opponents will be West Virginia, Mississippi and either Memphis State, Florida State, or East Carolina. The first two will come as representatives of the Southern and Southeastern Conferences, while one of the latter three will be chosen at-large.

The outlook is optimistic, especially if Spence Willard's arm is back in top shape. Bill Haywood, the Tar Heels' strong candidate for All-American, will obviously see quite a bit of action in the series.

In 1960 UNC won the area playoffs, but bowed out at Omaha where the College World Series is played.

Playmakers Present Capers And Awards

The Carolina Playmakers will present their annual Capers and Awards Program tonight. The once-a-year night, in which the Playmakers get their big chance to satirize the staff and the season, will include elaborate take-offs on all the major productions of the 1963-64 season. Included will be "Little Mary Hoo-Ha," "Long, Long, Long, Long . . .," "The Busy Measle," "B.S.," and "The Faggot Soldier."

1. I've come across a fascinating fact about the population.
Do tell.

2. There are more females than males in the U.S.A.
Where are they all hiding?

3. If you really want to find out what's going on with the population you should go see The Demograph.
The who?

4. The Demograph—it's this gigantic population counter that Equitable put up at the World's Fair.
It tells you where the girls are?

5. It gives you the up-to-the-minute story of the population explosion.
I've noticed more people around lately.

6. Tells you how many babies are being born, how fast the population is growing. Stuff like that.
Can it explain how come, if there are more females than males, I have so much trouble meeting them?

A Freudian Analysis of the Remington Lektronic II

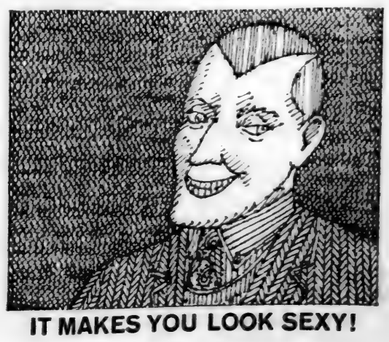
It's a mature shaver. There's no unnatural dependence upon a cord. Built-in, rechargeable energy cells let you shave cordlessly. In case you forget to recharge, there is a cord. Plug it in. Shave on the spot. That makes you feel secure.

And you'll feel secure about your appearance, too. 348 cutting edges of durable high-carbon steel slice whiskers off cleanly. They're honed on an angle so that skin doesn't get ploughed up and irritated.

The LEKTRONIC II will give you a superiority complex. It has a big head. Shaving head, that is. 756 whisker-gathering slots feed whiskers to the cutters faster. Make short work of shaving.

Now here's the part masochists hate: the Roller Combs. They make shaving pure comfort. Roll skin down. Pop whiskers up into cutters, so they're stroked off gently.

What's the greatest Freudian benefit of the REMINGTON® LEKTRONIC II?



IT MAKES YOU LOOK SEXY!

The LEKTRONIC II may cost a little more than most electric shavers. That's because it's worth more.

By Honor System Commission

Campus Code, Honor System Spelled Out

By JOHN GREENBACKER

The Campus and Honor Codes have been specifically defined by a special Honor System Commission in a report to the Student Body President.

If fully approved, the report should clear up much of the vagueness surrounding the application of the Codes.

A redefinition of the Campus Code to cover seven areas of violation was one of the most difficult tasks for the Commission, composed of former Attorney General Whitney Durand, Women's Council Chairman Sara Anne Trott, Men's Council Chairman Pete Wales, Phil Bender and new Attorney General Tim Oliver.

Assault and destruction of property were two of the violations.

Unauthorized entry into women's residences, private homes, offices and other premises is also a violation.

Profane acts, such as indecent exposure or public use of vulgar and abusive language is punishable.

Action will be taken against those accused of disorderly conduct, including participating in a riot or panty raid, using or fireworks or firearms on campus, resisting arrest or engagaing in loud or disruptive conduct.

Sexual immorality, particularly as expressed under state law, is conusidered a campus code offense.

Gambling, including such practices as participation in chain letters but not minor wagering, is prohibited.

The reevaluation does not specify any particular rules against drinking, but persons who have violated the Campus Code while under the influence of alcohol will be dealt with severely.

The Commission felt the Honor Code with respect to classroom procedure is fairly well defined, but it cautions teachers not to encourage cheating with extremely liberal practices.

An appeal for a retrial must be made seventy-two hours after sentencing, and only on the grounds of prejudicial error, excessive sentence, reasonable doubt of guilt, new evidence or procedural error.

Modifications in the penalties system have been suggested and approved by Student Legislature.

Automatic suspension does not follow after a second conviction involving definite or indefinable probation, but in some cases court reprimand and campusment will be given instead.

The general rule concerning the Honor Code and lab reports states that all submitted work must be performed and is the student's product alone, unless the teacher has specifically permitted collaboration.

The use of old lab reports is forbidden unless allowed by the instructor.

Forum Names New Heads For '64-65

Nicholson, from Chapel Hill, is vice president of the YMCA, and a member of the Carolina Political Union and the Executive Committee of the YDC.

Schwartz, from Atlanta, Ga., is currently vice chairman of the C.P.U. Both are sophomores.

The co-chairmen are very optimistic about next year's program. Persons already invited include Hugh Hefner, of Playboy fame; Ralph McGill, Pulitzer Prize winning publisher of the Atlanta Constitution; Gov. George Wallace; former Ambassador to Russia, George F. Kennan; James Reston of the New York Times; Professor Kenneth Galbraith, former ambassador to India; and hopefully Adlai Stevenson. Chancellor Aycock, President Friday, and Governor Sanford have been assisting them in issuing invitations.

In a joint statement Nicholson and Schwartz said: "One of the essential goals of a student government and a university is to encourage each student to give some thought and study to his responsiblity as a citizen and to have an alert and intelligent awareness of the affairs of politics and government.

"The Carolina Forum brings to the campus speakers representing numerous shades of political and governmental philosophy in the belief that it is essential that we hear and understand all sides, and that this will contribute to an strengthen our ideals and practices of democratic government."

Here's That McInnis Guy

By EVE HIGGINS

Yes, there IS a Henry McInnis!

Hanes Hall says his student number is 581330, and that he is a special student in the journalism school.

The DTH Review Editor, the renowned "Fuzzy-Wuzzy" is real.

McInnis majored in Religion at UNC, graduated in 1960 with an AB and went to Duke Divinity School for one year. But he found that he was getting a "preacher's education" there.

"That's bad for a liberal," he said. "I like a little healthy sin!"

The illustrious life of Henry McInnis began in Goldsboro in 1937. He claims to have broken up his old piano with a hammer so that he might get a new one, and that he ruined his father's car by pouring sand in the gas tank.

"Too, I used to find the screen much more real and exciting than things at home," Henry said. "My brother and I used to give amateur plays in the garage and invite the neighbors. He's in Santa Monica, California now, and has appeared in several movies. Both my parents died when I was an undergraduate."

The famed McInnis career has included work as a counselor at a boys camp in summer, New York City unemployment and Greenwich Village bar hopping, work in North Carolina's Unemployment Security Commission, and work with a North Carolina County Welfare Department.

"I can't stand selling people things they don't want, and I don't fit the Madison Avenue Image," McInnis added. "I had to find something different to match my interest with my abilities."

Always interested in music and the arts, Henry considers his most significant decision to go into newspaper work.

"Writing reveals as much about the writer as the subject he is writing about. It expresses passions, feelings, attitudes and prejudices, and there's something inside you that must get out," McInnis said.

In addition to playing the piano and writing witty reviews, McInnis has another favorite pasttime.

"I love to drink beer and talk to people," he said. "When I entered the University as a freshman, I weighed 118 pounds. Now I weigh 172. That should say something."

McInnis says he is highly nervous, which he feels causes one to be more introspective.

"You know what I want to say, and it makes me more articulate," he said. "My mother was a witty person, and I always admired that. When you say what you feel, someone always understands and enjoys what you write."

Henry also feels that this year is the best year of his life.

"Last year was the worst, working for the welfare department in a small town without anyone to talk to," he said. "But Chapel Hill is the closest thing to a home that I have."

McInnis feels he's fortunate in another area.

"Out of a lot of personal difficulties, I still have wit, good sense and my friends," he said. "I am a lucky guy in a lot of ways.

"And I AM me!"

Exam Schedule

The time of an examination may not be changed after it has been fixed in the schedule. Quizzes are not to be given in this semester on or after Wednesday, May 13.

Prior to taking examination to remove a grade of "Exc. Abs." or "Cond." a permit must be secured by the student from the Office of Records and Registration.

Bitner, Umberger Cop Awards

Awards totalling nearly $4,000 were presented Saturday night to outstanding students in the Dramatic Art Department. The awards climaxed the annual Capers, which pokes innocent fun at the year's past performances and also at some of the faculty members.

The Shubert Fellowship in playwriting was awarded to Randolph Umberger. The followship, worth $2500 for a year's study, is awarded to a graduate student who plans to write plays. Umberger has written several plays, one of which received excellent acclaim at the recent performance of One-Acts. Umberger is from Burlington.

An undergraduate award, given to an outstanding student in any phase of dramatic art, was presented to Ray Bitner, a junior from Asheboro. Bitner will receive $1,000 for aid in his academic pursuits next year.

Bitner has appeared in several Playmaker productions, and one day hopes to be a professional actor. He will work this summer as a technician in Greenville, N. C.

Awards for $125 each were presented to two other students.

Tom Benneson, a graduate student in the Dramatic Art Department, was awarded the Joseph D. Feldman Award in Playwriting, and Richard Philp was awarded the $125 Fredrich H. Koch Memorial prize.

The Playmakers awarded a citation to David Hooks, star of "J.B." Hooks, a New York actor from Smithfield, was awarded the "Carolina Playmakers Special Award."

The Alumni Award went to Chapel Hill novelist Betty Smith, author of "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn." Past recipiants have included Andy Griffith, Richard Adler and Kay Kyser.

Bob Spearman Is President

50 Students Receive Phi Beta Kappa Keys

Fifty high-ranking scholars were initiated into Phi Beta Kappa, the nation's highest scholastic fraternity last week. Bob Spearman, who has compiled a straight "A" average during his first three years at UNC, was named president.

Of the 50, there were 10 juniors and 40 seniors. For the juniors, a 3.6 quality average must be maintained. Any senior with a 3.3 quality point average is eligible for admission.

Dr. A. C. Howell gave the annual address to the new initiates who are:

JUNIORS

SENIORS

David Harned Banberger, Charlotte; James Herbert Barnhill, Wilmington; Carolyn McNeill Bond, Lumberton; William Roger Bowerman, Chapel Hill; Molly Ann Bullard, Fayetteville; Jane Linda Cogdill, Asheville; Richard Morrall Coaler, Walterboro, S. C.; Thomas Michael Cribben, Greensboro; Mrs. Jeanette Long Davenport, Apex; and Jerry Craig Dellinger.

Also: Foy Roberson Devine, Lynchburg, Va.; Harry Whitney Durand, Lookout Mountain, Tenn.; Norman Clifford Gorsuch, Reno Park, N. Y.; Lois Key Harvey, Raleigh; Thomas Franklin Henley, Chapel Hill; Richard Jenness Hesse, New Orleans, La.; Stephanie Highsmith, Robertsonville; Kathleen Morgan Klumpp, Port Washington, N. Y.; Emily Merriwether Klyce, Memphis, Tenn.; and Ninette Kyle, Arlington, Va.

Also: Mitchell Wooten Legler, Memphis, Tenn.; Elizabeth Jane Lillard, Blacksburg, Va.; Mary Sheila McAboy, McLean, Va.; Mrs. Pamela May Stanley McCaslin, Chapel Hill; Samuel Walter McNairy, Greensboro; Betty Nell McIntosh, W. Palm Beach, Fla.; Mrs. Marjorie Lee Wall Matthews, Chapel Hill; James Lambuth Nelson, Wilmington; Elmer Rosenthal Oettinger, Chapel Hill; and Mrs. Lyrne Ielrich Potter, Sanford.

ITEMS

CHEMISTRY AWARDS

The Alpha Chi Sigma awards for excellence in Chemistry were announced yesterday by Gilbert Merritt, president of Rho Chapter of Alpha Chi Sigma, for the past semester. The awards are presented annually to members of each undergraduate class for outstanding work in lab as well as top grades.

The senior award went to Leonard M. Stevenson; the award is the Venable Medal, named after Dr. Venable, long-time chairman of the Department of Chemistry and one of the founders of Rho Chapter of Alpha Chi Sigma. The junior award, $20 to be used for chemistry books, was awarded jointly to Everett I. Baucom and Daniel T. Hefelfinger.

The two sophomore awards, a copy of the current organic or physical chemistry text, were given to John A. Phillips and Houston H. Pittman. The four freshman awards, a copy of Lange's "Handbook of Chemistry," went to C. Scott Blackwell, Susan M. Eskillsen, James Alan Medford, and George M. Oliver Jr. Another award for outstanding work by a senior chemistry student, given by Merck Pharmaceutical Company, went to Robert S. Shue.

STUDENTS GO TO FRANCE

Twenty UNC students are among the 30 students chosen from North Carolina colleges to participate in the Year-At-Lyon (France) program. Dr. Richard Frautschi will be director of the group which will leave New York on Sept. 3, spend two semesters at the Universite de Lyon in mid-France, and return next summer.

The UNC students are: Robert Arndt, Chapel Hill; Bette Broome, Goldsboro; William Clark, Washington, D. C.; Diana Foote, Chapel Hill; Peter Formanck, Greenwich, Conn.; Betty Franklis, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. Inez Hall, Durham; Virginia Harmon, Greensboro; Rilhard Hoyt, Jacksonville, Fla.; Douglas Kelly, Lumberton; Wilton Mason, Chapel Hill; Anne Patterson, Chapel Hill; Sondra Peabody, Raleigh; Glenda Pittman, Roanoke Rapids; Chris Reed, West Medway, Mass.; Dorothy Shugart, Halifax; William Smart, Forest City; William Taylor, Raleigh; Judy Timmons, Chapel Hill; and April White, Chapel Hill.

ATTORNEY GENERAL

The Attorney General's office on the seccod floor of G.M. will be open every day during exams from 10 a.m.-12 noon and from 3 p.m.-5 p.m. to receive reports of honor code violations. In the past years the period of final exams during spring term has been the period of the most numerous violations of the honor code. This is due to the fact that many people realize that if they don't do well on their exams, they may not be able to return to school the following year. The majority of the violations are not premeditated, but are lapses of conscience in moments of panic.

Junior Edge Gets Jim Tatum Award

Junior Edge, who quarterbacked UNC's Tar Heels to one of their finest seasons during 1963, was awarded the James Moore Tatum Memorial Award during Student Legislature's Thursday evening session.

The award is given annually to the UNC athlete who "best exemplifies the qualities of an athlete sought by Jim Tatum."

In his opening remarks, Erickson noted that the late Coach Tatum "was a dedicated man who didn't spare himself, and he expected others to do likewise. I wish he could be here to present this award to a real athlete, a real student, and a real scholar—Junior Edge."

"Coach Tatum," said Erickson, "looked for many qualities in an athlete. Certainly one of them was faith. Junior is an athlete who always felt that those playing with him would deliver and that he would do likewise.

"The boys on the team tell me that in the Duke game this year, after Duke had taken a 14-13 lead with seconds to go, Junior came into the huddle and said 'we've only got 50 yards to go and 11 men to run over.'"

"Such a remark," he concluded, "is typical of a man like Junior Edge."

Spearman presented the handsome trophy to Edge, calling him an excellent student and an outstanding football player." The members of the legislature responded with a standing ovation.

"There's not much I can say," Edge said in acceptance. "This is a tremendous feeling. But without the rest of the fellows on the team, I am sure you realize that this award would have been impossible."

Those Garden Experts Are At It Again

The Vineyard Gazette

The garden experts have increased their hortatory exactions, as they do every spring, and are trying to give the gardeners a harder time than ever. This annual regimentation of what ought to be a voluntary and sometimes capricious occupation is one of the ill symptoms man has brought upon himself. These garden experts know a lot—apparently they know everything — but one would thank them now and then to keep their mouths shut about it. Why not let the experimenting amateurs find their own satisfactions? Are orthodoxy and perfection necessarily virtues when it comes to a human relationship with soil, climate, and the rest of the springtime companionship of the outdoors?

"Pinch tips of snapdragon seedlings to make them branch," says the expert of the New York Times on Sunday. "Wait till mid-May to move tomato plants to the garden. Avoid trampling dormant species in flower beds."

These are orders; the man doesn't even say "Please." Moreover he lays down a program for this week, and next Sunday there will be orders for next week, proclaiming a conformity for the entire seaboard or, it may be, for a far wider territory than that. "Lawn mowing begins; blades must be sharp for clean cut . . . Apply lawn fertilizer if it has not been done this spring, select proper grass formula . . ."

The devil with all that, say we: let the gardener look to the eastern sky in the morning and listen to the newly arrived catbirds, let him consult the whim that accompanies the sweet freshness. Who cares if the snapdragon doesn't branch? And if a man feels like speculating with his own tomato plants, who has a better right?

How dull and unrewarding would be a life in the country without casual and accidental effects, and how immaterial are the failures providing the gardener has fun and takes plenty of time to lean on his hoe or upon his rake while the sun warms and the weeds grow.

Sitterson Replies On Soph Tests

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

I read with much interest and appreciation your editorial, "Sophomore Tests and the Human Element," in The Daily Tar Heel, May 8, 1964. I am certainly in agreement with you that in our press for higher standards we may sometimes "sacrifice the human element." Also, I am glad that you recognize the importance of the University's developing a more effective means of evaluating transfer applicants than is now available. Nor do I really disagree with your contention that it would have been much better if the tests could have been given at an earlier date in the semester. At the same time, I would like to explain why this was not possible as well as how carefully the entire matter was considered.

First, the sophomore tests have just become available this spring. The University was among the ten or twelve institutions invited to use the tests for the first time. The University's Advisory Committee on Admissions considered the matter at length and concluded that, despite the many inconveniences inherent in administering the tests, the advantages to the University (and this certainly means students attending the University in the future) promised to be so great that we should give the tests this spring. We thought we would receive the tests in time to give them in early April, but unfortunately they were not available then because of a printer's schedule arranged by the Educational Testing Service. We gave them at the earliest date they were made available to us from Educational Testing Service (the College Board group).

Secondly, we explored the possibility of administering the tests during the day and excusing sophomores from regularly scheduled classes. Frankly, we would have much preferred this decision, but we found it impossible to make the physical arrangements for an administration of the tests during the daytime—the necessary rooms were simply not available.

Finally, as to the point that the University will make no use of the results so far as our own students are concerned, that is erroneous. We certainly do expect to study the results and make whatever use we can of them. We do not, however, expect to penalize students for low scores on the tests.

It may well be true that some students made little effort to do well on the tests. However, I hope and believe that such students will constitute a small minority of those taking the tests and that the over-all results will be valuable to the University.

I regret that this letter has been so long. In brief, I suppose it all adds up to the fact that much thought was given to "The Human Element," but we were simply unable to avoid the rather serious inconvenience to the sophomores if we were to accomplish what we thought to be an important University objective.

Coed Suffragette Strikes At Range

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

Yes, Mr. Range, we poor lil ole Southern Belles are so stupid that our grade averages are only a few tenths of a point above those of you big sharp Carolina Gentlemen (See "Say It Isn't True!", DTH, May 8.) Maybe if we-all work real hard next year we can remedy the situation.

Apology Is Due For Rep. Burden

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

The footnote which you saw fit to attach to Sandra Burden's letter explaining her vote on the controversial "poll" resolution is one of the most serious misuses of journalistic power I have ever witnessed. The fact that you have increasingly made use of this means of replying to letters is cause for alarm. Yet this particular instance is more blatant than most of your recent endeavors.

Miss Burden should know how she voted better than anyone else, especially in the confusion that reigned that night. It should be apparent to all that Rep. Burden would have no reason to say she voted in the negative on the student "poll" if she voted in the affirmative.

For you to tack your little footnote to her letter, openly disputing her word, raises serious questions of journalistic responsibility. If a person elected to such a responsible position because of the trust of her fellow students cannot even explain her vote without being attacked, then indeed the student press has come to a sorry state. I would submit that you owe Rep. Burden and the entire Student Body an apology for your misuse of editorial power.

Larry Abhors Our Creativity

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

This letter concerns your latest and rather frequent practice of adding Editor comments to the ends of the letters submitted to your paper. To my knowledge this practice has not been engaged upon, to the degree in which you have used it, by any of the former editors during my residence here at the University.

I feel that if you are not capable of presenting and stating your stories and editorials in such a manner that they carry the correct facts that you should either find someone who is capable of doing this or discontinue your present practice. These persons are only attempting to clarify your erroneous statements.

If you cannot accept these criticisms you should make sure that your statements are correct and stop attempting to intimidate these people.

Dickson Upholds SP Opposition

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

The Student Party in this year's spring convention endorsed Fred Seely and Hugh Stevens because it was felt by a majority of the Party that both were qualified and that both were capable of presenting an unbiased Tar Heel. It seems now that the Party was wrong in its judgement of both.

In an editorial on Friday, Fred Seely attacked the Student Party on what to me are unfounded grounds. He criticized the Party for opposing some of President Spearman's committee appointments. He said that opposition was not done in a constructive manner. Perhaps Seely doesn't understand the role of the Party out of office or the role of Student Legislature.

Committee appointments are always sent to the Student Legislature for its approval. Just because Student Legislature has in the past rubber-stamped such appointments does not mean that when there is opposition, the opposition itself should be criticized. We need more responsible criticism of appointments to better insure that qualified people hold important jobs in Student Government. The Tar Heel is not helping the situation any by criticizing such opposition when it is based on worthwhile reasons.

An example of responsible review of Presidential appointments was seen last Wednesday when, because of Student Party leadership, Spearman's appointments to the Attorney General's Staff were recommitted to the Ways and Means Committee for further study. Spearman had appointed 34 persons to work on the Attorney General's Staff for the Men's Council, a totally unnecessary number. Under Student Party prompting, Spearman saw fit to cut the fat from his appointments by withdrawing eight of the appointments. The practical result for the Student Body, because of the Student Party's alertness, should be a much more efficient Attorney General's Staff next year.

The role of a party out of office is one of responsible opposition when it feels opposition is justified in the interests of the Student Body. If President Spearman or the Tar Heel editors think that the Student Party is going to sit quietly by during the coming year when it sees mistakes made, they have another thought coming. When we feel we have grounds on which to criticize we intend to do it.

Seely said in his editorial, "Certainly the only reason the SL faction (that being certain members of the Student Party) opposed Crampton was that he had worked actively against them in the spring elections." This is not true. The Student Party, led by Floorleader Hays, opposed Crampton's appointment because it was felt that he was not qualified for the job. Crampton and Maupin were appointed as co-chairmen of the Communications Committee with Maupin to handle the campus part of the organization and Crampton to handle the state-wide releases of the Committee. It was felt that the job required an individual with good journalistic experience. In his report this spring to the Student Legislature as chairman of the Communications Committee, Seely stated: "It is suggested that in the future more emphasis be placed on getting journalism majors on the committee. This is especially important in the case of the chairman." Some of us who have had experience with State newspapers know that a newspaper won't bother to rewrite a poor release, but they will throw it in the trash can and not bother to print it which is not doing the University or Student Government any good. Crampton is not a qualified journalist and this is the main reason we opposed him.

Seely continued, "Crampton followed the presidential candidates from meeting to meeting, and he was usually there to question SP candidate Paul Dickson. . . ." Crampton showed himself to be very irrational and to have no control over his temper on several occasions in the dorm meetings. He did not question, he attacked. In Teague he was so irrational and ill-tempered that he caused one of the members of the dorm to get up and attack him for his action. This person was extremely upset and might have knocked Crampton out of the dorm had Crampton not already left.

A person who conducts himself in this manner does not seem to possess the type of leadership that Student Government is looking for as a committee head.

Seely carried on his attack by saying, ". . . several SP stalwarts managed to raise enough cain to create all sorts of suspicions on all sides and wasted enough time to have three referendums." If Seely thinks that one can pass three referendums in our Student Legislature in less than fifteen minutes, he is not very knowledgeable about legislative processes. The debate and vote on Crampton took no more than fifteen minutes at the most.

Eds And Coeds Carolina Style

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

I shall exclude Holly and Ann if they understand.

Stereotyped:

Carolina Gentlemen — concerned with:

1) Carrying umbrellas so they can tap them on the bricks.

2) Conversations of pseudo-intellectuality to impress women.

3) Wearing their cardigans to bed.

4) Monopolizing class discussions with questions they could answer themselves.

5) Joining fraternities in which they have to revolutionize their characters to fit.

6) Joining fraternities to find friends, make debuts (a few thousand times anyway) and borrow someone else's individuality.

Men who are Carolina Gentlemen who obtain:

a) Freedom from: responsibility, pressure and personality assertion;

b) Acquire: security and assuprance of acceptance;

c) Share: the psychological qualities they lack, have found in others, and consequently, can avoid developing in themselves;

d) Lose: feelings of anxiety and inferiority; and

e) Sink into passive existence that typifies mediocrity.

The word "typical" is extremely vague. The Carolina Gentleman and Coed are typical of what? It is they who establish the reputation of an institution. Then let those who have an independent mind assert their individuality for what it is worth. And those who blame environment for their character—well, they never had a chance anyway for they have been influenced by outside sources.

Conclusion: rise to the occasion—of yourself—if you can evaluate it.

The Student's Obligation

Spring is the time of graduations and farewells, but seldom a time of reality.

As each student says his goodbyes and takes his last longing looks at the campus, he seldom thinks of what tasks and responsibilities lie ahead.

This year, more than ever before in the lifetime of this generation, these tasks and responsibilities are truly critical.

I speak specifically of the Negro Revolution and the events that are in the air for this summer.

Certain persons have referred to this revolution as the "white problem" rather than the "Negro problem," and to a large extent they have a point.

Like Johnson's war against poverty, it is within the power and the responsibility of the well-off (the whites in the racial issue) to take a part in the betterment of an underprivileged group.

And in this racial issue, the student can and will play a most important role, whether it is through his action or inaction.

The civil rights struggle is coming to a head this summer, and it's going to be the responsibility of every available man, woman and child to see that this head is reached peacefully and with some meaningful degree of success.

Southern non-violent leaders fear the violence brewing in the North. Civil rights groups in the big cities are becoming more and more miltant, more and more frustrated, e.g. Brooklyn CORE and the Black Muslims.

Negroes in the North know that de facto segregation exists; they can't really put their finger on it, but they can feel it all around them. Their frustration is built up with every unsuccessful negotiation, with every incident of apparent police brutality, with every day the city councilor the United States Congress delays action on bills which themselves will not answer the problems.

Tokenism has been developed to a more sophisticated degree: in school desegregation, in job opportunities, in general attitudes within personal everyday relationships.

This modern type of tokenism is particularly strong in the South where every day, more and more of the white liberals and moderates turn to hopeful beginnings and destroy the hope by calling them solutions.

Last Sunday's editorial on Statesville on this page is an excellent example of this. As Curtis Gans pointed out in a statistical rebuttal, the apparent good feeling that exists in Statesville and possibly in other towns is a far, far cry from the achievement of real human dignity and equal opportunity among white and Negro.

The Negro does not walk down Franklin Street "with his head held high." Not as long as Judge Mallard is lurking nearby ready to pounce upon any new leader that might arise.

Not as long as there are all-Negro schools forced by inequalities in housing, can he be proud of his condition. Not as long as he is only a partial citizen economically and socially and, in many communities in the state, politically.

This advanced form of tokenism is at its most dangerous and most critical point now in the North, but the boiling point in the South is fast approaching.

Good beginnings must be followed up by continued good will and legitimate attempts to help, or the whole thing will end in bitter disillusionment and violence.

The job that is started must be finished. The disgustingly ignorant optimism and self-satisfaction shown in the Statesville editorial must be dispelled immediately as irresponsible and untrue. We have a long, long way to go.

The most important thing you, the individual student, can do is to be informal and aware . . . aware of the feeling that is reaching its most bitter and violent stages now in the North and which is the imminent danger hanging over the South.

The Civil Rights Bill, even if passed as it now stands, will not do the job. A resolution by the Merchants' Association will not be enough.

Rather, the frustration mounts with every new small and hard-fought advance, because of the fact that the few remaining holdouts are going to be that much tougher to crack and because each of them becomes a more conspicuous grain of salt in a wound three centuries old.

The second thing the student can do, more directly, is to use his influence with his fellow citizens, older and younger, to persuade and cajole them into realizing and understanding the plight of the Negro. By being constantly aware of the problem, he may add a degree of responsibility to his everyday conversations and relationships with people.

The third thing, which not as many will have time to do, is to offer your services wherever they might be needed in arbitrating, teaching, community work and even demonstrating where and when it is the necessary action.

If students can take the issue seriously in this time when it is so serious and so pressing, their very attitude will be a help.

If they can fill their roles as serious citizens, to fill the gap of so many who have abdicated their social responsibility, the problems will be met.

This is a time of crisis, this time that presses so close on the heels of comparatively worryless school days. It's a crisis for the country, and it's a crisis for you, the mature student.

Four Seniors Level 'Parting Shots'

Judy Freider

Many often question openly and or inwardly the place of Student Government in Chapel Hill. Does it and should it remain an integral part of our lives here at Carolina? Is it feasible and advisable to allow a presently growing student body of some 10,000 to govern themselves?

To answer the preceding questions affirmatively, one must be able to justify the existence of such a governing body. Indeed, we should be proud of our school and our system of government. Carolina is the largest school in the country to boast of such an accomplishment.

Yet, without valid justification the existing system is meaningless, and I emphatically contend that when student government ceases to be a learning experience it loses all value to the students. The learning experience derived is the most important factor to consider when evaluating our present system, and I fear we are in danger of losing sight of our goal.

Student government is and should be an educational experience — learning how to work with others — students, faculty and administration— learning the mechanics of making and working with a budget and last but certainly not least acquiring and learning to cope with some degree of responsibility leading to independence and maturity. Certainly no better preparation can be attained to meet the world than in a university community such as ours.

When student government ceases to be a learning experience we are aware of a factor known as professionalism. Ours is not the governing body of our country; neither is our legislature the Congress of the United States, and consequently any false analogy between the two appear utterly preposterous.

Admittedly we must be serious with a budget of $183,000 but not to the point of ludicrosity. The perennialy or professional office holder prevents us from attaining our goal by remaining in office for too long a period of time. By becoming too engrossed in the matters of student government our so-called "professionals" are apt to lose sight of their values—academics for one—for is this not our main purpose as college students?

They also deter fellow students from sharing the benefits of serving in SG, because of their efficient, professional tactics. They succeed in making others feel incompetent—others who have just as much right to reap the benefits of serving in UNC student government.

The problem of the apathetic student is often discussed. I question the validity of this terminology. Is he really apathetic not caring, or is he afraid that he will be unable to cope with such a professional situation? I believe it to be the latter.

The height of professionalism is apparent in the so-called "party politicking" on this campus. It's all very well and good to have two different parties in existence — parties with differing ideals and goals as well as with the means with which to reach these ideals and goals.

But to witness party politicking when no real difference exists, such as the recent civil rights referendum before the student legislature, is the very height of professionalism and belongs in Washington, if anywhere—not in Chapel Hill. We should never lose sight of the fact that we are striving for the betterment of our university community—not the recognition of one party or another.

To renumerate again when student government ceases to be a learning experience it loses all value to the student—loss of educational values and loss of the recognition that we have the very best potential situation here at Carolina—the biggest and best student government, if we keep our goals foremost in our mind.

Student government should be an experience that each of us can take advantage of, because it is an integral part of our education. I believe SG does have a place on our campus.

It removes a burden from the administration; a burden that I feel would prove even more distrustful to students if handled entirely by our higher-ups.

Neither should we scorn their attempt to guide us but instead should realize and appreciate their concern, interest, and experience; an experience far wider and wiser than ours. Student government, if it retains its proper place provides a facet of our learning experience totally unattainable in a classroom situation. Learning constitutes far more than can be gained from a textbook—but this facet must remain open to all students.

In conclusion, I would like to offer my congratulations and best wishes to all of our newly elected SG officers.

It would be fitting for all of you to remember that ours is a government by the student, not simply for the students.

Larry McDevitt

Tonight, I would like to deal briefly with one feature of the University which has affected each of us in some fashion during our college careers.

One aspect of the University which is now a basic consideration for many decisions made is the size of UNC. In recent years the student population has expanded dramatically. These jumps were inevitable as we "war babies" reached college age—witness the unprecedented increase in the size of this year's freshman class.

Thus we are immediately concerned with the degrees of impersonalization and loss of individuality that is an unwanted by-product of this growth. Without attempting to stereotype groups we could look at a fraternity man who in 4 years of college makes a well-beaten path from "the house" to class, from class to "the house," and then is gone. Yet, he at least has his house for some sort of identification and association. But we won't waste time discussing this problem. We could mention the boy in Ehringhaus Hall who is overwhetlmed by his tiny cell in a huge monster he is supposed to call home for 9 months; but we won't discuss that either. Perhaps one of the key points which should cross our minds is the fact that either one of these boys could go through 4 years at Carolina without knowing or being known by his professors as anything but a last name, a roll signature, or a seat number.

In all probability the size of the University will not diminish nor will it remain stagnant. It is reasonable to assume that, if anything, UNC will continue to grow both in numbers and in physical size. If this is true then the loss of identity and the degree of impersonalization will increase also. I think that most of us will agree that this is an undesirable feature for Carolina to possess.

What, then, can be the solution to this problem? We could, I suppose, suggest that the University freeze its present enrollment. This would necessitate a gradual lowering of the percentage of out-of-state students which are admitted each year for, as we know, the University has a direct responsibility to accommodate all in-state residents who are qualified for admission. However, I think most of us would acknowledge the fact that our out-of-state students and our students from foreign lands add greatly to our University community in cultural, social, and academic areas.

My friends, as a state-supported institution, this University cannot abdicate its responsibility to the taxpayers of North Carolina by freezing its enrollment and taking only a limited number of students, or confine itself to the "cream of the crop." Thus, in my view we are back where we started with no workable solution in the immediate future—say the next one, two, or three years.

In long range terms, the proposed system of community colleges offers a feasible plan. With this system UNC should be able to tighten its admissions policy and use greater care in the selection of those students who are best equipped to meet the challenges and face the problems of a large university. In doing so, the University could channel to community or junior colleges those applicants who would profit more from smaller collegiate atmospheres.

The problem with this plan is that it takes too long and our needs are immediate. It must be speeded up. The responsibility of seeing that such a plan reaches fruition as soon as possible lies in the General Assembly, the Board of Trustees, the administrations of both UNC and the Conusolidated University, and most important, this responsibility weighs heavily upon our shoulders as students. Empty words, idle chatter! You ask me "is that what this is, Larry?" No, I think not. This University was founded, grew, and is here for us today because someone cared for the education and development of those who were to come. We are not worthy of being here if we do not feel the same concern for those who will follow us here—perhaps our own children.

I propose that the students of this University undertake a massive campaign to educate the citizens of this state to the needs for immediate development of a well-grounded community college system and further to educate our citizens with regard to the problems that this University will be forced to embrace if such a system is not realized in the near future with emphasis on the impersonalization and loss of the sense of individuality which are definite detrimental results that go hand-in-hand with growth.

Gerry Good

To those of us who are leaving Carolina within a month, and to those who have left in the years before, it is very necessary to believe that receiving an education here has been somehow different and entirely unique from what we might have received at any other school.

To a large extent, this feeling is justified. Things happen in Chapel Hill that could never happen in any other southern university town. Yet, despite itself, UNC is a southern state university and is as much differentiated from its northern or western counterpart as it is from a southern one.

Visitors from eastern schools often find it hard to believe that this vital institution, with its traditions of liberalism, freedom, and individualism, is located in an economically backward state which passes gag laws and Sunday blue laws and has more than its share of Sen. Stones and Rep. Blues.

It remains a bit of riddle; this apparent inconsistency, even to those of us who have been here for four years. An explanation is offered that this state simply places a premium on higher education. But the proof of this statement is a reference to consider the excellence of the University. Thus, it is a circular argument.

Another approach would be to assume that UNC became what it is in spite of the state. Following this line of thought, it is determined that the University has built and developed itself by taking from the State's unwitting or begrudging resources. In return, it has become a symbol of enlightenment and rationality, but the state doesn't appreciate it.

The result is a state that doesn't understand the university it has created and nurtured. It is confused by the radical and disturbed rumblings of the University ;it tries to punish it and restrain it, and only succeeds in bringing on an uproar.

Paramount in this consideration is the State's direct relation to the University. The University is here to serve the state, and it does this by educating its young people. In effect, the only intimate contact the State has with Chapel Hill is through the presence of its students.

An enlightening fact about this is seen in this year's recent spring student body elections. They were extremely unusual for one obvious reason. For the first time in over four decades, and probably for the last time in a similar span, more native North Carolinians were elected to the responsible positions of leadership than out-of-state students. It is difficult to say what caused this strange phenomenon, and certainly it is beyond the capabilities of this speaker to speculate. Suffice to say, however, that this is a significant reflection on the relation of the University to the citizens of the state, those of college age, and of all ages.

This is indeed a distinguishing characteristic of this institution. It is backed up statistically; no other state university can approach this one for the relative insignificance of its in-state students compared with the leadership superiority of outsiders.

This situation is usually explained by the fact that only 15% of each entering freshman class can come from areas external to the state of North Carolina, and presumably this very small number will be inately more talented than the average in-state student. The fallacy of this excuse is twofold.

First, it admits that the limited number of out-of-state studenas are so superior to the natives that they can overcome tremendous numerical odds, and dominate the leadership of the campus.

Secondly, the entrance requirements for non-residents at UNC are lower than most state universities, yet the percentage of students accepted from this category is much higher. Clearly then, the average out-of-state student is not a genius. The reason for the great disparity between him and the average native student must rest with the latter.

The conclusion is simple and obvious. It is the painful reality that have all suspected at one time or another, but never dared accept or speak about. North Carolina has managed to develop a University too advanced, too sophisticated, and too demanding for its own citizenry.

Whether this situation is bad and undesirable is another question. Obviously, some elements in the state feel that it is. They speak of getting the University off its "high horse." The Speaker Ban Law represents a realistic attempt to bring the University down to the level of the mass of the people. The infliction of such a financial burden as self-liquidating dormitories and other needed facilities is another step in this direction of "democratizing" the elitest University.

On the other hand, it is effectively argued that Chapel Hill has every right to be as good as it can be, despite the hanging back of the citizens of the state. After all, the function of the college is not to mirror the intellectual achievements of a people, but to lead them to knowledge. It is an inappropriate application of representative institutions to think that a state university can be no better than the people who pay for its operation. If this observation sounds sarcastic, it shouldn't; it is a simple and frank viewpoint. It is held by those who realize that there is an inherent conflict in the idea that UNC should grow in its role as a national institution and at the same time be a full-time service to the people of North Carolina. The inconsistency would not exist in some states; but here the level of educational training and the general preparation of students for college makes it a hard fact.

To those who shrink from this fact, I would recall the words of Botochelli: "Quis Est Omnis Mimus, I Ad Infernum" or "It is not sufficient that people want education; they must be prepared for it."

The solution to this dilemma has been partially realized by certain fashions in the State's executive branch. North Carolina must adopt a vast system of junior and community colleges in which to channel its citizens. On this level, they will receive the calibre of training that is appropriate and the handicap of providing such instruction will be removed from Chapel Hill.

At the same time, the University can grow and develop into an institution that will rise above state or regional excellence and be prominent in national standing. Its enrollment can become more cosmopolitan, and the resultant loss of provinciality will compliment the other improvements.

In conclusion, it must be noted that we all have a natural aversion to accepting the import of facts we don't like to hear. It is not easy to realize that a majority of your human resources have no place in the state University, and that, in fact, many are proving to be a drawback to it at this very moment. Nevertheless, this is the unusual reality North Carolina faces, and it is up to the young people of the state to come to grips with it, because no one else will.

Gary Blanchard

Our "Parting Shots" are supposed to be noisy broadsides against some segment of the University which we feel is deserving of a good, hefty blast. I gave a lot of thought to what my target ought to be:

Chancellor Aycock? No, he's retiring—let's let him rest in peace.

Dean Cathey? No, he can't sing very well, but he's a pretty good fellow all in all, and his secretary is nice, too.

Well then, the YMCA? No, they're just a bunch of do-gooders master-minded by that notorious internationalist, Anne Queen.

How about President Friday, better known as "Big Bill?" No, he works pretty hard, and his secretary is nice, too.

Maybe Dean Luxon then? No, he manages the news a little now and then, but he also manages a damn good journalism school too.

How about conservative Student Legislators? No, they're not rational creatures, so it wouldn't do any good to blast them.

Maybe, then, anonymous writers of letters to The Daily Tar Heel could use a good blast . . . but then, I don't know who they are.

Well, how about Otelia Connor? No, she's good to have around, even if she does ventilate people with her umbrella now and then.

Maybe Chief Beaumont, then? No, he's just a transplanted Brooklyn Bum who'd probably knock the devil out of me anyway.

How about the School of Education? No, they're too busy teaching methods to give any attention to content.

Who then deserves a good blast? I could blast the faculty, but someone else is sure to, and they really aren't so bad. In fact, most of the profs I've met are pretty okay guys.

Well, now, someone certainly needs a blast. It certainly isn't you or me, of course. I've distinguished myself so much that the powers that be allowed me to get here and dispense with some of my hard-earned wisdom, and you all are certainly highly-intelligent creatures, because, well, you're here tonight, listening to us.

But then again, maybe us graduating seniors are the people who need a good blast. After all, we make or break this University, and we'll make or break the world we'll be helping to run in a few years.

The woeful fact of the matter, however, is that not enough of us are up to the task. Too many of us are phonies with our values all messed up.

I'm not engaging in an exercise in self-torment. Just stating a few facts. Too many of us worry far too much about doing the right things, wearing the right clothes, driving the right car, knowing the right people, and all the rest of that.

Not enough of us really care about what's going on in the world, about the big ideas and events that are shaping the world that we must try to keep in one piece until the next generation comes along.

I know all this because I'm a victim of this passion for fashion too.

And I know we've got to fight it, or else we'll end up where many of our fellow Carolina graduates have: belonging to all the right clubs, but basically unhappy, and living at only half-speed, and half-potential, with hackneyed sayings and cliches running out of our heads, and many basic problems going unsolved, and opportunities being missed out on.

We've got to try to break through the 'planned obsolescence barrier,' the 'goody-goody partition,' that separates the men from the mealy-mouthed. Remember, I'm talking about you and me. Not the guy next to you.

The biggest and best reason I can think of for trying to live a tough life is that no one has been able to prove that reincarnation is anything more than a theory. In other words, as far as we know, we all get only one chance at life, and it's in the best interests of ourselves not to muff that chance by refusing to take advantage of it.

If we go out into the world as unconsciously as most of us have lived in it up till now, then maybe we deserve to have it blown out from underneath us.

But if we go out determined to make like Napoleon when he said, "Circumstances? I make circumstances," then I think we'll pull through all right—in fact, better than most previous generations have done. Certainly we've had enough training to do well, even those who haven't drunk at the fountain of knowledge but only gargled.

Besides the training, we've got the equipment to do well. New devices and techniques are being invented everyday. But all this training and all those inventions won't do us a bit of good unless we take a good look at ourselves and see if we're still acting like phonies.

And if we are, if we're still looking at life as if it were a big football game, with all the good guys on our side and all the bad guys on the other side, if we don't see that reality is a deep shade of grey, then we'll join the ranks of the thousands of our fellow Carolina graduates and just muddle-through.

I think we ought to try to breathe new life into our country and the world, wherever we go and whatever we do. We ought to use our heads and work for the things we know are right. We ought to get out there and give it hell, admitting we are what we are and not trying to pretend we're the royalty of the Nuclear Age.

And maybe, just maybe, if we do these things, some of us will be able to look back on our lives in the years to come, and know that it can never be said of us that we lived such vapid, phony lives, that it was just as if we had never lived at all.

Student Swap Is A Success

By PETE RANGE

Efforts to re-instate UNC's student exchange program with France met with unexpected success this week when a confirmation arrived from Paris.

Beginning this year, one undergraduate from UNC will be sent on full scholarship for one year to the University of Paris. The student will be obliged to teach 4-5 hours of English, including conversation practice, to French students at the Ecole Superieure d'Electricite, the Paris college of electrical engineering. For this service, the UNC student will receive 600 francs per month, or almost twice as much as the average French student receives. His transportation expenses ($450 round-trip) are covered by the UNC Student Government.

Our student will also receive the title of "student patronized by the French Republic" which gives him certain privileges and opportunities not available to all foreign students in France.

The exchange will make for his own transportation and living arrangements in France with the funds provided him. Although he will be part of the Ecole Superieure, our student will be free to enroll for courses in any branch of the University of Paris. (Sorbonne, Institut des Sciences Politiques, etc.)

In exchange, the Ecole Superieure will choose one of its students annually to spend an academic year at UNC. He will travel by Fulbright grant and be supported here by a UNC Student Government scholarship.

The pattern for this exchange is exactly the same as that of our double exchange with Goettingen, Germany, now in its tenth successful year. This exchange is simply the relocation of an exchange made with the American University in Tours, France, during 1962-63. The exchange was dormant this year because of the sudden termination of operations at the American University last August.

Selection of our exchange student will be made on the basis of academic ability, general maturity, language proficiency, and personal adaptability. A committee chaired by Dr. Jacques Hardre, chairman-elect of the Romance Languages Department, will make selections after interviews on May 28.

All rising juniors and seniors with at least two semesters of French are eligible and encouraged to apply immediately. Application blanks are available in 216 Dey Hall and the Y-Office. They must be returned by May 25.

Students who picked up blanks entitled "French Government Scholarship" are notified that they have the wrong forms and should secure the one entitled "The Paris Scholarship" from 216 Dey Hall.

Our exchange student will be expected to spend at least two months in France taking language courses prior to beginning the French semester on Oct. 1.

Class Officers Tell Of The Year Behind

Somehow the idea of parting shots should not be confined to members of the Senior Class, and we asked the presidents of the three lower classes to write a piece for the Daily Tar Heel.

Freshman Class

On behalf of the Freshman Class I would like to thank you for your editorial of April 23. At the same time I would like to see that the right people get the credit for the Freshman Class successes.

Jim Hubbard, Freshman Class Treasurer, has done an excellent job this year. He is responsible, to a great extent, for our Merchants' Sale and Bake Sale. Working closely with Jim has been another "Jim," Jim Ogburn. Ogburn has served along with George Venters as co-chairman of the Finance Committee. The independence of this money-making threesome is exemplified by an incident that took place last week. The Class made $160.00 profit on a project originated and handled by Jim Ogburn alone. We were unaware of the project until the money was in our hands. These three boys have done a fine job, and they are responsible for most of the $1200.00 raised this year.

But a big part of that $1200 came from our Talent Show handled entirely by Teddy O'Toole and his following subcommittee chairmen: Holman Wilson, Scotty Robertson, Jimmy Fletcher, Winborne Shaffer, Mike Tonry, Joe McGirt, Brooks Roughton and Dick Forbis. Teddy and these chairmen did an excellent job; witness the $500 profit.

But the success of the Talent Show, Bake Sale, Merchants' Sales, Sock Sale and everything else must be attributed in large part to Steve Hockfield, Chairman of the Publicity Committee. Steve, working with everything from radio spots to bulletin boards, has played an important role in every activity our Class has undertaken.

The Freshman Weekend held this past weekend found its chairman in Joe Yates who did a very commendable job. Joe was ably assisted by Maureen Shannon, Freshman Class Social Chairman. Both Joe and Maureen deserve credit for the successful weekend.

Many others of our Class have served it well. D. A. Humphreys and Mary Susan Kirk have worked tirelessly as the Secretariat. They have always been willing to do whatever needed to be done. Susie Warren, John Hedrick, and Bob Wilson are others who have served well in various Freshman Class positions.

Everyone mentioned above has worked as a class officer or committee chairman this year. Many more have worked diligently as committee members. It is these committee members, chairmen, and class officers that have made this year a success for the Freshman Class, and they deserve the credit.

Sophomore Class

At long last the Sophomore Class's "Major's Handbook" is on the way to press. We have covered practically every major course of study offered at the university from anthropology to zoology in a supplementary section to be included in the Carolina Handbook for next fall's incoming Freshman Class. We have examined the vocational opportunities, interesting and informative courses, graduate study and graduate schools in an attempt to give incoming students the incentive to think seriously about their careers before they find the time for decision fast upon them.

I would like to thank Mike and Ginny Lawler for their constructive criticisms and help in typing. Ellen Allen and Sandy Pickett have also been of great help in these areas. Penn Szittya and Melanie Dauskart have been invaluable in helping to rewrite and edit hundreds of pages of material. Thanks must also go to the Student Legislature and Carolyn Bond for providing us with the opportunity for publication.

The following people are the original authors of the articles in this booklet: Scott Ackerman, Jim Ballanger, Bill Baynard, Jim Bischoff, Randy Burge, Bill Busby, Bill Campbell, Wade Chestnut, Bernard Dotson, Dave Edwards, Gordon Fitz-Simons, John Harmon, Jim Hart, Eddie Hoover, Paul Jensen, Bordon Parker, Sonny Pepper, Bob Powers, Jim Smith, Bill Taylor and Pat Taylor.

The Sophomore Class has not been very showy on the social side; however, it is the belief of the officers that we have made a lasting contribution to the university community.

Do Students Forget Their Religion?

By MARGARET FEWELL

When students come to UNC, do they leave organized religion at home?

Quite often this is the case, according to the Study of Religious Attitudes recently completed here by the Presbyterian Church under the auspices of the Danforth Foundation.

The purpose of the study mas to come to a deeper understanding of the image of the church on campus and to determine what factors increase and decrease participation in organized religious services and activities at college.

And this is what the study found:

Eighty-five per cent of the Carolina student body goes home only occasionally or for holidays. While in Chapel Hill, one of every four students attends services regularly. But while at home, half the students polled go to church weekly.

Why don't students who are active in the home church participate more while at the University?

"We started out with several theories as to who does and does not attend church—and why," said Mr. Harry Smith, administrator of the study.

"First," he said, "we felt that those who had been active participators and leaders in their home organizations would be least likely to participate here. In other words, once you've been a Cub Scout, you on't want to be an Explorer. This assumption was borne out by the fact that 50 per cent of the students report that they atten weekly when at home and only one-fourth go regularly while here.

"We also felt that perhaps there was a significantly greater number of independents participating in campus religious activities and that perhaps the independents were substituting a religious activty for a social one. This idea was found to be false. Here in our own Westminster group, over forty per cent of the members are affiliated with social fraternities and sororities.

"Then, too, it seemed that such factors as the affluence of the family and the location and size of the home church might have some bearing on the students' disenchantment with organized religion.

"We thought that the students who come from the large and affluent 'country-club churches' in the big cities would tend to gravitate toward the social groups on campus and away from the religious. This also was false. The big drop in college attendance tends to be in the smaller churches in the 150-500 member range. There might be several reasons for this. It might happen because the members of smaller churches have been exposed to less sophisticated theology and preaching than those in the larger churches. We play Bach instead of Beulah here.

"Or again, it may be because persons from the background are more anxious to 'make good' at college and thus tend to conform more to the campus norm of rejection. Also, this size church may be caught in the middle of a dilemma: it is too large for a minister to carry on effective youth work and too small to afford a full-time Director of Christian Education."

Smith feels that one of the most important reasons for the rejection of the childhood religion is the fact that organized worship is tied up with the family. Almost everyone has heard that phrase, "Take your family to church this Sunday—you'll be a better person for it." When an adolescent rejects his parents and past environment, he also rejects the ties closest to this primary relationship. A freshman boy says, "One reason for my dropping religion when I came to school was that once the pressure was off me from the community . . . I decided to forget religion until I could formulate my own ideas."

Evidently, some students see the college environment with is comparative freedom as a haven from the home and community pressures to 'go to church and believe in God.'

"Many students are rejecting organized religion because it symbolizes to them an extension of parental authority," said Smith. Here he quoted Gordon Allport who writes, "To reject the church of the parent is one way of stepping forth as an independent adult where a child is expected to outstrip his parents in occupational, social and education accomplishments."

If a child is very close to his parents, of course he has less of a tendency to rebel. This rule shows up somewhat in church attendance. Children from close homes tend to stick closer to the home religious beliefs.

Instead of showing signs of rebellion, some students demonstrate a sinecre questioning attitude—what a member of the Department of Religion calls "intellectual growth and maturation." A junior girls says, "If religion—or the belief in God—could be reasoned out, then it would be reduced to the level of a mental exercise. Typically, the college student transists from a blind faith to intellectual seeking and doubting. Yet religion by nature must be emotional. It is this new marriage between emotion and reason which is difficult to make." Perhaps students like this find no room for doubt in traditional religion.

Although over half the Carolina students polled (432 in all sent in the questionnaire) have grave criticisms of the church, saying that it is "disappointing" or "failing in its purpose," 60-65 per cent are at least partially committed to a religious faith of some kind.

Students don't go to church; yet they are committed to religion. How can this paradox be resolved?

"Although there is widespread hostility toward organized religion, there is a swing toward personal faith," explains Smith.

"Personal faith plays the major part in my life, but organized religion does not seem to be an advantage. I was moved to belief by experience . . ." says a freshman boy. A graduate student agrees: "When you qualify religion with the word 'organized,' you are not speaking of true religion at all."

According to Smith, a student who feels that obedience to the church is tied with with obedience to parents can hold personal faith without subscribing to an organized body. This fact seems to tie in with the fact that church attendance changes significantly according to year in school. The "sophomore slump" carries over into religious participtation. While a good percentage of freshmen, who are closest to previous home influence, still attend services regularly (once a month at least), anly 24 per cent of the sophomores attend regularly. The figure goes up again during the junior and senior years as the students gain increased independence; and later, when students are out forming families of their own, the rate of particiipation goes even higher. One girl anticipated this rise: "I have not realized the importance of organized religion as of yet. Perhaps when I am raising a family . . ."

What is the answer to this overt disenchantment with organized religion?

"I think," says Smith, "that this study will make people more aware of the factors which determine church participation and render them more sensitive to the needs of others. For so long, it has been assumed in theological circles that if one shouts loud and long enough, others will respond. In a culture where people don't respond, it behooves us to find the factors behind the nonresponse.

"These factors are often neglected, non-theological ones, including the relation with parents, childhood experience in the church and so on.

"I think there are very clear implications for the local churches that they must be much more open to questions and doubts. Students should not be made to feel guilty about their doubts. If the churches can fulfill this function, then, when doubts come, the student will not have to overreact."

Next Year Could Be Another Banner Year

It Was A Year We Can't Forget

By LARRY TARLETON

Sports at Carolina this year brought both thrills and disappointments. But the thrills far outnumbered the disappointments in this banner year for the athletic program.

The biggest thrill, I guess, was the football team, but sports at Carolina in '63-64 was more than one outstanding team. The year brought memories that won't soon be forgotten.

Sports at Carolina this year was . . . .

. . . . Listening to the "grandstand coaches" groan after the first two football games that this year wasn't going to be any different from the rest—But realizing that this team had something few had—class.

. . . . Gene Sigmon's inspirational leadership on the football team.

. . . . Ken Willard finding holes where there were none and picking up important first downs.

. . . .The Edge to Lacey combination clicking over and over.

. . . . Eddie Kesler opening holes for his teammates with vicious blocking.

. . . . Gary Black dropping back and throwing a touchdown pass to Ron Tuthill with two Miami tacklers trying to pull him down.

. . . . Max Chapman's game-winning field goal against Duke after Junior Edge had led the team down the field.

. . . . The vicious tackling of the defensive unit led by Chris Hanburger and Frank Gallagher.

. . . . George Beim's outstanding performances as the soccer team rolled to another winning season.

. . . . Art Maillet and Jim Meade leading the pack across the finish line, far outdistancing their opponetns.

The Kid Once Again Was Outstanding

Then winter came, and all eyes were on the basketball team. Disappointment came with the season, but so did thrills. The winter sports brought . . . .

. . . . The thrills that only an All-American could give.

. . . . The first game against South Carolina when The Kid pumped in eight straight points to begin his magnificent season.

. . . . Charlie Shaffer, never letting up even though the agony of pain could be seen as he took every step.

. . . . Notre Dame game at Greensboro when the Tar Heels played their finest ball of the season the first half.

. . . . Another loss to Bones.

. . . . The Kid's 40 points and 28 rebounds as he single-handedly disposed of Maryland's sophomores.

. . . . A 6-3 freshman from Washington with springs in his legs scoring 51 points in his first game.

. . . . Ray Hassell coming off the bench to face his cousin and lead the team to a win over Bones.

. . . . The 36.6 average of the freshman from Washington.

. . . . Mike Cooke and Ray Respess leading a Tar Heel rally which barely fell short against NYU after Cunningham had fouled out.

. . . . Dean Smith trying to bring the team out of their late season slump.

. . . . The team rebounding in the ACC tournament by trouncing South Carolina and playing even with Duke for one half.

. . . . The steady play of Ian Morrison and Tom Gauntlett.

. . . . The great defensive jobs Donnie Moe did on Dook's Bob Verga.

Merrill And Mann Were All-Americans

Then there was . . . .

. . . . Harrison Merrill and Thompson Mann performing like true All-Americans.

. . . . A Muscular freshman rising to the occasion to edge Maryland's John Dinkevitz—and setting new records in the 50 and 100 freestyle while he was doing it.

. . . .Little Paul Wellstone going undefeated, and winning the ACC championship in the 123-pound class.

. . . . Tom Clark soaring to new heights as he kept breaking his own record in the high jump.

Then it was spring in Chapel Hill and the baseball team brought even more thrills. There was . . . .

. . . . Walter Rabb waddling out to the mound a la Fred Hutchinson, and giving the motion to the bullpen for the "old leaguer."

. . . . The 27-year-old Bill Haywood giving the Tar Heels the best pitching they had ever received.

. . . . Ken Willard hitting the longest ball ever hit at Emerson Stadium.

. . . . Jim Speight coming through with game-winning hits two consecutive days while sparkling in the field.

. . . . Gary Black and Dickie Prindle making spectacular defensive plays.

. . . . The little blond from Bryn Mawr, Pa. revenging the only defeat of his ACC career by defeating Maryland's Jim Busick for his third consecutive conference championship.

. . . . The steady play of O. H. Parrish and Ted Hoehn who teamed to win the conference doubles championship.

. . . . Coach Ed Kenney's golf team taking the first round lead in the golf tournament only to fall behind the second day.

By PETE GAMMONS

North Carolina dominated the ACC in athletics this year. However, with graduation, will this domination fade into mediocrity?

The respective coaches don't think so. Their opinions all tend towards optimism, and feel that the UNC athletic program will continue to grow next year.

Marvin Allen feels that the soccer team can look forward to an even better year than the last. He cites his two fine captains, Park McGinty and Jim Talbott, as key individuals who can lead the team. He also points to the fact that he has three goalies returning, and a great prospect up from the frosh in Bob Johnson. Five or six more sophomores may give an extra needed boost.

Allen is looking forward to "a considerable better offensive punch. We should score a lot more."

Maryland will once again be the big game, but visiting teams Bridgeport and Navy reached the semifinals of the National Championships last fall.

The cross-country team, which got to the Nationals last year, should once again be the class of the region. Mike Folk and Art Maillet should once again be top threats.

This was somewhat of a disappointing season for the basketball team, which isn't used to being simply a .500 team. But last year the breaks never went the right way, and with luck things could change.

Assistant coach Ken Rosemond thinks the strength will once again be up front with Billy Cunningham, Ray Respess, Bob Bennett and Bill Galantai. However they may be heavily pressed by sophomores Bob Lewis, Mark Mirken and Tom Gauntlett. Lewis should start, and could be one of the school's greatest scoring threats, as his freshman statistics (36.6 pts., 62% shooting percentage) shows.

But Rosemond cautions that once again the team will be as good as its guards. Ray Hassell, Johnny Yokely, Bill Brown and sophs Ian Morrison and Donnie Moe will have to come through for the team to be a serious threat for the ACC title.

"Duke and UNC will probably be pre-season favorites and from there we shall have to see."

Swimming, according to Pat Earey, should be strong again. "We only lost our co-captains, but the loss of Thompson Mann is great. Wether we can compensate for his loss may be the key to next year."

The competition will be tougher, but UNC should be up to the task. All - American Harrison Merrill is just one of the many stars returning, and they will be joined by another All-American prospect, Peter Worthen. Other sophomores who may help are Jack Hayden, Tom Adams, and Alan McDonald.

Earey feels the depth will be considerably stronger, but he feels that the other teams will also be strong.

Wrestling may finally come out of its shell. Encouraged last year by the improvement throughout the season, they come back this year losing only two men, and bringing up a fabulous freshman team. Co-captains Russ Simmons and Ken Furr, ACC 123 Champ Paul Wellstone, and Steve Lister will be joined by sophs Jake Jacobson, Wayne Verlenden, and Gary Meyers.

The track outlook is pretty good, like the rest bolstered by a strong freshman team. Harvey Whitley, Art Maillet, Mike Folk, Dale White, Milt Bauguess and Richie Ambrose all return, and hope that freshmen like Joe Levin, Ed Daw, Greg Cline, and Drummond Bell can add to the team's power.

Ed Kenney loses three of his regulars of this year, but has the nucleus of a better team for next year. Ed Hoopes, Tom Arnold, John Baldwin, Les Fleischer, and Skip Tucker all are returning.

The youthful lacrosse team, with a little more experience under its belt, could be a surprise. Of the 25 players on this year's squad, only 8 had played before coming to UNC. With two years apprenticeship, they may be ready to move. Jeff Parker and Harvey Stanley are potential All-Americans. Sophomores Tim Balch, Jake Hubbard, Bob Morrison, and about twelve others all will see action next year.

Tennis Coach Don Skakle obviously will be hurt by the loss of players like three-time ACC Champ George Sokol and Ted Hoehn, but he is looking forward to next year and to "a good college tennis team." He feels it may not be as strong as the ones of the last couple years, but they won't fade away by any means.

O. H. Parrish should be the conference's top player, and is joined by Carl Evans, Ken Oettinger and Pete Myers. Skakle foresees six or seven sophomores helping him, such as Bronson Van Wyck, Nat West and Tommy Chewning.

The baseball team can scarcely afford to be looking ahead to 1965, since in a couple of weeks they will be at Gastonia for the District Playoffs. But in general it should be another good team, but it would take almost a miracle for them to go 14-0 in the ACC without all-time greats like Bill Haywood and Jim Speight.

1964-65 may well be another good year for UNC teams, and with some luck it could be an over-all better season. It will be tough to duplicate the records in football and baseball, but some others could blossom, and help recapture the Carmichael Cup.

1964 Frosh Outlook

JEFF BEAVER (1) and Danny Talbott are two of the many outstanding freshmen who give promise of helping produce more winning seasons in all sports. The combined freshmen record for last year was 85-18, .825.

Can Football Team Repeat Last Year's Performance?

By LARRY TARLETON

What can the Carolina football team do for an encore

After all they had one of their finest seasons last year and climaxed it with a smashing 35-0 victory over the Air Force in the Gator Bowl.

The 9-2 season was by far the finest of Jim Hickey's tenure at Carolina. But next year could be just as good. According to newly elected co-captain Chris Hanburger, "We have 10 opponents and we want to take them all."

Maybe Chris is being a little optimistic. While no one expects the Tar Heels to go undefeated, the return of 23 lettermen and some fine freshmen prospects gives hopes of another fine season.

The season will open September 19, one day after the start of classes, when the Tar Heels entertain NC State's Wolfpack at Kenan Stadium. Non-conference opponents next year will be Louisiana State, Michigan State and Georgia. The LSU and Georgia games will be played away, while the Spartans will play in Kenan on September 26.

On the basis of their impressive Gator Bowl victory and the returning lettermen, the Tar Heels will probably be ranked high in the pre-season polls. "I hope we aren't rated too highly," said Coach Hickey, "But I don't think the high rating would affect us too much."

"There are some excellent football players available," comments Hickey, "We have 23 lettermen returning, spirited morale and a host of promising newcomers."

"The schedule may be tougher. We play LSU instead of Miami, and they'll probably be stronger. Other than that the schedule is about the same."

A winning season can do wonders for a team. The lettermen returning this year have enjoyed the fruits of a winning season and are anxious for more.

Hickey believes that "a lot depends on how the boys approach the season." The tremendous spirit on the team, led by co-captains Gene Sigmon and Roger Smith, was a major factor on last year. Next year many of these leaders will be gone, but Hickey believes that the spirit will be just as great.

One of the reasons is the newly elected co-captains, Ron Tuthill and Chris Hanburger. Both players have been switched to new positions since coming to Carolina. Tuthill, one of the most underrated players on the team, was an all-state quarterback at Rockingham High School, but his hard-nosed running ability convinced Hickey to switch him to halfback his sophomore year.

When Ken Willard was moved to halfback last year and took over Tuthill's starting position, Ron didn't beef. He just kept fighting, and was a valuable member of last year's team. When Dave Braine was injured and couldn't play in the Gator Bowl, Tuthill played the entire game as the defensive specialist.

Hanburger an All-American candidate played end his freshman and sophomore years. His aggressive defensive play impressed the coaches, and when Hickey found himself without a center last year, he confidently moved Chris to the pivot. Casey Stengel couldn't have made a smarter move. In his first year at the position, he made the All-ACC team. His vicious tackling and blocking has earned him a reputation as one of the best pivotmen in the college ranks.

"I couldn't ask for better captains," Hickey said, "I hope all the seniors will act as captains. I can't help but think what Sigmon and the rest started this year will be carried on to next year. These seniors will want to win just as bad as last year's team."

The most glaring weakness on the squad is at the tackle positions where Sigmon, Vic Esposito and Cole Kortner will be sorely missed.

"No, we didn't solve the problem in spring practice," complained Hickey, "Our biggest problem there is the lack of experience. You just can't lose three top players and expect to be as strong at the position."

John Hill is the only tackle prospect with much experience. Bob Newman, Joe Churchill and Bob Starczewski are the prime candidates for the other position. Several freshmen, led by big Dave Erimias, who was moved from guard, also could add depth to the tackle post.

"We have a lot of players who can play the position," said Hickey, "Someone just has to move ahead of the pack."

The entire backfield, guard and center looks like the strongest positions for the Tar Heels. Clint Eudy, Ritchie Zarro, Jay Malobicky and freshman Joe Frantangelo head the imposing list of guards. Ed stringer and Glenn Ogburn will back up Hanburger at center.

The backfield is headed by the Tar Heel's' other bona fide All-American candidate, Ken Willard, the leading rusher in the ACC last season. Only quarterback Junior Edge will be missing from last year's starting backfield. Willard, Eddie Kesler and Ronnie Jackson will team with quarterback Gary Black to form an exciting backfield. Black will have the two promising freshmen, Danny Talbott and Jeff Beaver waiting to take over for him, while Kesler will have Hank Barden, injured most of last year, and Frank Bowman waiting on the sidelines.

Tuthill and Max Chapman, the hero of the Duke game, will be backing up Willard, and Tommy Ward will be pushing the speedy Jackson for a starting slot.

You can't lose ends like All-American Bob Lacey, John Hammett and Joe Robinson without weakening the position, but the Tar Heels have a list of flankmen that should give a good account of themselves. Frank Gallagher, a defensive demon, and John Atherton saw a lot of action last year. Bill Darnall, a redshirt last year, will play Lacey's wide end position next year. Although he is not a Lacey (and who is?), Hickey is expecting great things from him.

On paper they look like a powerhouse. And if the tackle problem is solved and the spirit is as great as last year, the Tar Heels' ten opponents next year will be needing all the sympathy they can get.

Frosh Compile Amazing 85-18 Record

By PETE GAMMONS

This was quite a year for all the varsity teams here at UNC, and if the Freshman records are any indication that more help is on the way, the university's athletic prowess shouldn't diminish.

The combined records of all the Frosh teams was an incredible 85-18, for a percentage of .825.

In compiling this record, there were many individuals who were very important. Danny Talbott, Bob Lewis, and Pete Worthen were probably the biggest names, and are as well known around the campus as the varsity stars.

Quarterback Talbott led the football team to a respectable 3-2 record, one which was somewhat deceiving. There were many individuals who will help Jim Hickey immensely in a couple of years. Quarterback Jeff Beaver is considered one of the finest passing prospects in the area. Running backs Tom Lampman, Leon Fonvielle, and Jim Fortune all ran well, and might all have starting shots next Fall if there weren't so many backs returning. Ends Bobby Knott, Bo Wood, and Bob Powell all took turns making spectacular catches, and are surefire prospects. Interior linemen Joe Frantangelo, Billy High, John Cornelius and Omar Bradleyq anchored the line which reached a peak against NC State, when they held the Wolflets to virtually nothing on the ground.

The soccer team compiled an impressive 7-2 record, and improved as the season progressed. Goalie Bob Johnson was spectacular at times, and John Loud, Jim Hammer, Jack Ryder, and Eddie Melmont all are good prospects.

The cross-country lost its first meet, then proceeded to roll over their remaining foes for a 4-1 mark. They will join a strong varsity team which got to the nationals.

The Winter was highlighted by the "Bobby Lewis Show," a remarkable shooting exhibition played before crowds just as good as those for the varsity. Lewis averaged 36.6 points and almost twenty rebounds a game. He wasn't the only star, however. Ian Morrison and Tommy Gauntlett took back seats in publicity only, and Talbott and Donnie Moe were more than adequate. They were just as good if not better than their 13-3 record.

The swimmers were 10-4, and boasted a future All-American in Worthen. The Herculean Worthen was joined by Tom Adams and Jack Hayden on a team which should move up and help Pat Earey.

The wrestlers had the best team in the school's history (7-1). Jake Jacobson set a new school frosh scoring record, and Jim Goodwin and Wayne Verlenden went undefeated.

The track (indoor and outdoor) teams went undefeated, running up a 9-0 combined record. Sprinter Jim Levin already has become one of the top runners in the state.

The tennis team was never even pressed as they went 11-0. Bronson Van Wyck, Tommy Chewning and Nat West all should see considerable action next year.

The golfers were 4-3, and although they were slightly disappointing in record, they have some good prospects, including Mike Chanin and Steve Kallman.

In its first season as a freshman sport, the lacrosse team went undefeated with a 4-0 record. Several of the players should start next year, including Bob Morrison, Tim Balch, and Jake Hubbard.

Baseball was the storybook sport for the varsity. What most people don't realize is that the Frosh were just as good, losing only to Louisburg and running up a 17-2 record. Lawson Baker and Talbott each hit over .400, and Jimmy Dean and Tommy Kirkman were both undefeated on the mound.

Talbott, Lewis, and Worthen were the three biggest names on the freshman teams, but there were a great many individuals who contributed to the successes. If they can improve enough to continue their proficiencies on the varsity, the Carmichael Cup may stay here for some time.

1963-64—A Review Of The Sports Year At Carolina

By Dennis Sanders

Shades of the Philadelphia Whiz Kids and the St. Louis Gas House Gang.

That's about the only way to describe this 1964 Tar Heel baseball club, and even then it's an understatement.

The same nine that breezed through a 14-game ACC slate undefeated walloped Davidson, 15-3, Friday night in Gastonia in much the same fashion they took 21 of 26 regular season opponents.

Again, it was the unbeatable combination of pitching, fielding and hitting that propelled the Carolina romp; the ringleader was a burly left fielder who hits for power like a major leaguer and looks like the Jolly Green Giant.

Ken Willard unloaded three home runs and added a single for good measure to plate four runs in an awesome display of raw power and Spence Willard whiffed 13 of the 15 batters he faced in a perfect five-frame relief stint to highlight another Tar Heel win.

Plagued with a sore arm throughout the majority of the season, Spence has come on strong to add valuable mound strength to the Carolina unit down the stretch. Jerry Davis shut out Wake Forest to wrap up the conference crown and came around in fine style for a UNC nine that set its sights on the title and steamrolled its way to the top. In seven of the nine innings he hurled at Wake, Davis threw 10 pitches or less and his game total of 85 tosses could only mean that he was sharp as a Gillette stainless steel blade.

Then there's this other guy. He doesn't start much, but when it comes to relieving, Bill Haywood has to rank with the collegiate elite. The 26-year-old ex-Marine utilized a free-wheeling motion, excellent speed and a side-arm delivery (occasionally) that would put Don Drysdale to shame.

In 75 and two-thirds innings, Haywood whipped a third strike past 69 batters while issuing only 21 bases on balls. From a 6-4 record in 1963 with a 1.65 ERA, "Old Leaguer," "Old Folks," "Bullet Bill," or whatever you want to call him came to a 9-0 slate in '64 with an 0.71 earned run average. In the process, the big righthander set an ACC record for consecutive victories.

Beattie Leonard is 2-0, Willard (Spence variety) has a 4-2 record, and Davis has posted a 4-1 mark to date. Any way you look at it, that's top-flight pitching.

But power and pitching don't win ball games alone,. and the Tar Heels are well stocked in other departments. They say a winning ball club must be strong through the middle, and Walter Rabb can smile at that one.

Shaw started like a ball of fire, tailed off, but still is flirting with a .340 average. Defensively, this trio is as good as any team can boast.

The pitching staff speaks for itself, but the double play combination of Jim Speight and Dickie Prindle is something else. Speight proved himself both as a hitter and fielder and Prindle is as steady as they come, with the bat or glove. The lightheaded shortstop has blasted three round-trippers and seven doubles while batting an adequate .274, and Prindle's .330 average leaves virtually nothing to be desired.

Centerfielder Gary Black hasn't hit for average, but covers his territory like a blanket and manages the timely hit when it's needed most. He's also clubbed three triples.

Bill Brown, the stretching first sacker, has a low average but good power going for him, and right fielder Ken Boykin's .286 mark isn't to be scoffed at.

These are the big guns on this gas house gang, but there are others who have contributed more than their share. Like third sacker Dick Fleming, a diminutive slugger who took over for injured Tom Wright and never let up. Although he doesn't hit for average, Fleming pulls well with power, as evidenced by his two home runs this year. His round-tripper to left field ignited a Tar Heel rally and sparked the Heels to a 5-2 win over Duke here Wednesday. Defensively, Fleming is A-OK.

Bill Dannemann, Bobby Cox and a strong bench have added to UNC's success formula. The Jolly Green Willard has raised his HR total to eight and has 32 RBI's. Add to this 3 tripples and four two-baggers, a bevy of singles and you've got the answer: ACC crown and . . . who knows, maybe the College World Series.

By LARRY TARLETON

This past year was a phenomenal year for UNC's varsity sports teams. Only one team had a losing season and the combined record (through the Davidson baseball game) was 106-42, .702.

The only team with a losing season was Cony Steele's lacrosse squad, who did surprisingly well in their first varsity year.

Four teams won the ACC championship, football, baseball, cross-country and swimming.

The year started with optimism in most sports, but most of the teams far exceeded their expectations. The football team, for instance.

The team was supposed to be strong, but when they opened the season with an 11-7 win over Virginia and a 31-0 loss to Michigan State, there were some doubts as to how strong the team really was.

After the State game, there was little question about the team. They smashed the favored Wolfpack, 31-10, and were on their way to the ACC championship. An 11-7 loss to Clemson was the only other blemish on their record as they marched through the regular season with an 8-2 record, and capped the season with a 35-0 win over the Air Force in the Gator Bowl.

There were stars aplenty on the team. One, Bob Lacey, made All-American, and three, Lacey, Chris Hanburger and Ken Willard, made the All-ACC team. Quarterback Junior Edge, tackle Cole Kortner and Lacey all signed pro contracts after the season.

The soccer and cross-country teams joined with the football team to give the Tar Heels a 20-5 mark in fall sports. Marvin Allen's soccer team started poorly, losing their first two games on shutouts, but they came on fast at the end of the season to finish 5-3-2.

Joe Hilton's cross-country captured first place in the ACC as they went through the season undefeated. Only Maryland came close to beating them. The team, led by Art Maillet and Jim Meade, went to the nationals before bowing out.

The winter sports brought further optimism, but the basketball team faltered, and the combined Tar Heel record was 53-26-2.

The basketball team started strong, but seemed to lose momentum after the season started and wound up with a 12-12 season. But Billy Cunningham continued to shine. He averaged 26.0 points per game and pulled down 15.9 rebounds. Look magazine aawrded him All-American honors for his fine season.

Pat Earey's swimming team breezed through the season with a 12-2 overall record and a 7-0 ACC mark. Harrison Merrill and Thompson Mann repeated as All-Americans. A third place finish in the Eastern Regionals climaxed a fine season for Earey's crew.

Wrestling had its bright spots, too. Among them was the performance of sophomore Paul Wellstone in the 123 class. Wellstone went undefeated in his class while the team compiled a 6-6 mark.

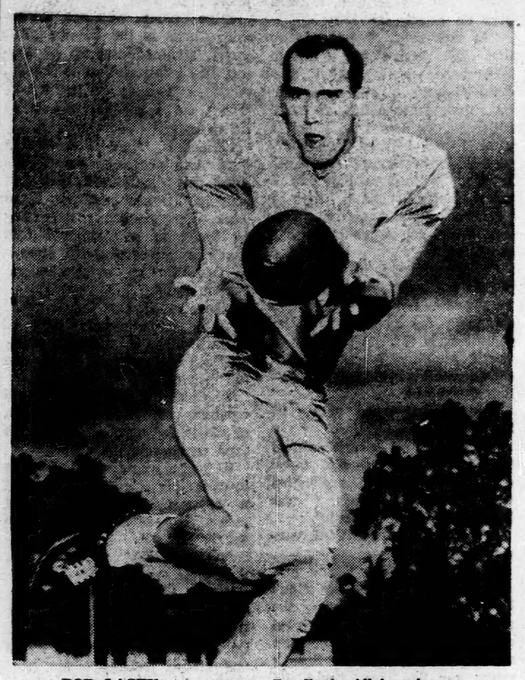
The indoor track team compiled a 3-1 mark and a 3-0 ACC record. They finished second to Maryland in the ACC Indoor Games meet.

The spring sports brought even more success to UNC. The baseball team, of course, copped the ACC championships with an unprecedented undefeated conference season. Their season isn't over yet, however, and experts give them a good chance to fare well in the College World Series.

The tennis team compiled a 16-2 record, and lost the conference chamuionship for the first time since 1957. However, they bounced back in the tournament to take first place honors. George. Sokol won his third straight singles championshiup, and Ted Hoehn and O. H. Parrish won the doubles crown.

The golf team had another successful season with a 11-3-1 record. They tied for third in the ACC tournament. The track team compiled a 4-3 record.

It was a good season all-around. Let's hope next year will be nearly as good.



BOB LACEY . . . one of Carolina's All-Americans.

Don W. Curtis—A Campus Legend 'Exposed'

By HUGH STEVENS

The University of North Carolina, as colleges and universities go, maintains a respectable share of legends. Many of them are old and fairly inanimate, like Silent Sam and Gimghoul Castle.

Some say that Don Curtis has been at Carolina longer than the Old Well or the Davie Poplar, but there's not much truth to that. Actually, he's been here only since 1959 — it just seems longer.

In the course of his remarkable collegiate career, Don Curtis has been—at various times—a disc jockey, a dorm manager, present of the student body, a corporation vice-president, and a student. A lot of people tend to think of him these days as a sort of professional undergraduate wrapped up in politics, radio stations, and women.

As a matter of fact, you can just about think up your own description, and the chances are prety dar good that it will appretty darn good that it will apply somehow to Don Curtis.

In an attempt (however inadequate) to set straight many of the twisted tales surrounding this campus legend, I sat down the other day and listened while Don Curtis did for two hours what he does better than anything else—talk.

"I want the truth," I said, and he agreed to produce it. But he reminded me that fact is often stranger than fiction. He wasn't kidding.

"Tell me about yourself," I ventured.

"Well," he said, "to begin with, I was born on December 13, 1940—it was a Friday the thirteenth as I recall—and soon after that things just sort of started happening to me."

"I don't guess I was too different from anybody else—at least not at first. About the earliest memory I have concerns my mashing up a dozen eggs in an orange squeezer at my father's drug store—I thought it was great fun then, but I don't recommend it."

"Well, that's nice, but what does it have to do with your becoming a campus legend?" I asked.

"Nothing, I suppose," he replied, "but it just sort of indicates the kind of thing I've gotten into at one time or another."

I suggested that we fill in a few more details quickly and get around to Don's career at Carolina.

"Alright," he said. "About all you need to know is that I grew up in Bessemer City, N. C.—Charlotte is near there—and went to Bessemer City High School."

"I realized right away that school was a sort of fighting proposition. You can't let school get you—you've got to beat it somehow."

"I guess I wasn't terribly affected by the usual high school boredom. I got interested in a lot of activities, such as the school paper, which I edited, and the Dramatics Club," he went on.

"It was a crazy sort of high school," he said. "I graduated with about a 97 average, and I think I was barely in the top ten in my class."

"Fine," I said, "but how about Carolina?"

"I'm coming to that. But first I want to tell you about my radio work."

"I got a job as a disc jockey when I was 16," he said, "and I worked at two or three stations around Gastonia and Kings Mountain. One year I even did baseball games for WGNC in Gastonia. I was no Mel Allen; in fact I was somewhere between Pee Wee and Diz.

"I started out doing 'pop' music shows, and I've been crazy about radio ever since."

"Now," I hinted, "Carolina?"

"Oh yes, Carolina. Well, what do you want to know?"

"Tell me about your Freshman year," I suggested.

"Not much to tell," he replied. "I lived in Aycock dorm —it was a dorm then, not a 'residence hall'—and I made the best grades I've made and I fell in love, but it didn't last long.

"Other than that, I don't remember much about it—it was a long time ago—except that Student Government seemed so big and important that I thought I'd never have anything to do with it."

"Well, how about your Sophomore year?"

"Oh, I suppose that's fairly interesting. I directed 'The Solid Gold Cadillac' for the Petit Dramatique, and I spent the entire exam period in the infirmary with measles. That sort of put the cap on my academic career—after that I just did other things.

"The wildest thing was my pro basketball team."

"Pro basketball?" I wasn't sure I had heard him right.

"Yes, Lennie Rosenbluth and I organized Lendon Productions and the 'Carolina Champions.' It was a touring basketball team that featured Lennie, Doug Moe, Joe Quigg, Pete Brennan, and a lot of the stars of the '57 national champions. We played 35 games for civic clubs and won 34 of them.

"I was the team's general manager. We put on quite a show, and the crowds were pretty good. I became a sort of expert on sports, and spoke at sports banquets during the winter. We had a radio show, too. It was called 'The Lennie Rosenbluth Show with Don Curtis.'"

He showed me bushels of press clippings filled with pictures of himself and Lennie Rosenbluth.

"You were quite a figure," I said.

"Not really," he replied. "As soon as the team folded up, nobody heard of me again. But it was great sport, and great money, too."

"But you gave it up in favor of politics, didn't you?" I asked.

"Yes, you might say that. I back for my junior year—my first one—and somehow I got interested in Student Government. I almost ran for editor of the Daily Tar Heel, but Inman Allen asked me to manage his presidential campaign instead. I figured it would be better to have Inman as president than myself as editor.

"Campus politics really got me. I've been tied up in it ever since. Everyone should take part in a campaign sometime," he said.

"You never sleep, you never study, and you never stop worrying about the opposition during a campaign. But it's great fun.

"Inman won, of course. I went to summer school that summer and for three months I was acting supervisor of dormitory managers. I had an air-conditioned office in South Building and a telephone and everything. That was just before they did away with the dorm manager system."

"Was there any connection between your job and the demise of the system?" I asked.

"I don't know," Curtis replied, "but remember, I was born on Friday the 13th.

"At any rate, I packed up that fall and went to North Wilkesboro, deciding that academics weren't everything—in fact, mine were almost nothing. I decided to learn in practice what I had learned in theory, so I did programming for WKBC in North Wilkesboro that fall. I called football games, had a housewives program, ran a record show—you name it. It was great fun."

Curtis returned to the campus in the spring of 1962. He managed Larry McDevitt's campaign for president of the student body. McDevitt lost, but Curtis found still another candidate waiting in the wings—Bob Spearman.

"Meanwhile," he said, "I formed my corporation.

"It was called 'Soundhouse of the South' and we did taped commercials and production work on the weekends. I was Executive Vice-President."

"Who was president?" I wondered aloud.

"Ah, well, we didn't have one. As a matter of fact, we didn't have anybody else—I was the whole corporation. I just called myself a vice-president because nobody would believe that a young guy like me could be president of anything."

"But you were president of the student body, weren't you?" I said.

"Yes ,last summer. That was my first term. I am going to be president again this summer, too. Mike Lawler appointed me last year, probably because there was nobody else. It was great fun."

This year, Curtis has continued his wild and woolly ways. He still turns out radio commercials as a sideline, he managed the University Party's successful campaign this spring, he acts as a consultant to WKBC, and the chances are good that right now he is cooking up another scheme or two.

Mike Chanin, who has worked with Curtis in the UP for three years, summed him up by saying, "he is the all-time idea man. Although he may sometimes be wrong, he is always right, or so he says."

Chanin is right—Don Curtis is a man of ideas. Some are good and plenty are bad, but somehow Curtis makes them work. Perhaps one reason may be found in a statement that runs through his entire story—to Don Curtis, everything is "great fun."

Who else but Don Curtis would use the entire second floor of Davie Hall as a campaign headquarters — complete with two telephones?

Who else but Don Curtis would commute to North Wilkesboro or Gastonia once a month to tape commercials?

Who else would spend months investigating a system to install a campus radio station and then fight hard for the money to get it rolling?

"Yes," he says, "I've had an unusual career at Carolina—but I've loved every minute of it. Once I went to the wrong class and stayed for the whole hour because I was too embarassed to leave. Once I helped initiate Inman Allen into an honorary society that didn't exist. Where else can you have fun like that?"

And then, he said, there are thousands of tales about campus politics, "but I can't tell about all of those."

Curtis says, "I think all students should participate in extra-curricular activities — perhaps not to the extent that you impair your academics, like I did —but to a certain extent. It makes Carolina more enjoyable and your degree more valuable."

Here, I realized, Don Curtis was speaking seriously — something he does seldom, but well.

"I don't think anybody should have breakfast at noon, lunch at seven, and dinner at mid-night, like I do," he says. "But Carolina is a great place, with many experiences to be lived, and I hate to see people miss them.

"And most of all," he concluded, "there are the people—faculty, students, and administrators—whom I'll never forget. They are the heart of the University, and you can't get to know them by sitting in your dorm — pardon me, residence hall—and avoiding them."

He spoke of professors like Walt Spearman and John Clayton and John Ehle, of campus officials like Chuck Erickson and Howard Henry, and of dozens of students.
